Mr. Holt. Sir Harry Tulse, now you are sworn, Pray, will you give an Account of what happened about this Matter within your knowledge: Pray tell the whole Story.

Sir Harry Tulse. My Lord, about four of the Clock in the Afternoon, this Gentleman, and two more, came to me to my own House, and he did arrest me (I mean, Mr. Keeling, that was sworn here before me) at the Suit of Mr. Papillon; and another of them did arrest me at the Suit of Mr. Dubois: Said I to them, I do not know that I owe them, or either of them, a Farthing. But, what must I do? He told me, It was only to give an Appearance. Said I, Gentlemen, I shall consider of that. Then, says he, you must go to my Lord Mayor: Why, where is he, said I? Said he, He is in the Custody of the Coroner at his House. Where, said I? He is gone to Skinner's Hall, said he. This is well, said I. So I called for my Man to bring my Cloak. Then they told me, If I pleased, they would take my Word till to morrow Morning, if I would promise to appear. I told them, they might do as they pleased. So they left me; and I went first to my Lord Mayor's House, but found found him not there ; so I went down to Skinner's Hall, and there I found my Lord Mayor all alone, and no Alderman, only the Officers. I asked his Lordship how he came there ? He told me, he was arrested by the Coroner. I asked him how long he had been detained ? And, he said, but a little time : And indeed I think it could not be long, for I met his Coach coming back, from Skinner's Hall when I went. After that he was detained there till about Eleven of the Clock, or thereabouts. This is all that I know of it.

L. C. J. What became of the Government of the City all that Time ?

Sir Harry Tulse. There was presently a great Noise all about the City concerning my Lord Mayor's being arrested, and abundance of People were gathered together about the Door, but there came a Company of Soldiers of the Trained Bands, and they kept all quiet. There were great apprehensions of an Uproar. I saw nothing of hurt done though. And I asked Mr. Brome the Coroner, who was by, Am I a Prisoner too ? For I was arrested to Day by a Warrant pretended to be from you. Says he, I have a Writ against you, and now you are here, I cannot let you go till you have given an Appearance. So I took my self to be detained there with my Lord Mayor in Custody, and staid as long as he staid, and went away with him.

Mr. Recorder. Swear Mr. Wells, the Common Cryer, and Sir John Peak.

Mr. Wells was Sworn.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Common Cryer, were you at my Lord Mayor's House when this Hubbub was made ? Pray tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of it.

Mr. Wells. Yes, I was there.

Mr. Holt. Then tell what pass.

Mr. Wells. I was not in the Hall where my Lord Mayor was, but in another Room by : And the Officers came running in to me, and told me, I must come to my Lord Mayor quickly, for he was arrested by some People. When I came, I found there were none of the Sheriffs Officers that used to arrest People ; but the Room was full of other Persons. My Lord Mayor bid me take the Sword and go along with him, for the Sword-bearer was not then just at hand. I asked his Lordship whither he was going ? The Coroner said, he was his Prisoner, and must go along with him to his House. My Lord Mayor bid me presently send out the Officers to summon a Lieutenancy, which I did. I desired the Coroner and his Men to be gone ; said I, Cannot you let my Lord alone, and go about your Business ? No, he said, except my Lord would give an Appearance, he must go along with him. I then asked him whither my Lord must go ? He said, he had no Place but his own House to carry him to, and thither we went ; where when we came, my Lord was put up into a little Room by himself, where were none but my self, and the Coroner, as I remember. My Lord Mayor bid me go and see for Sir James Edwards and Sir Harry Tulse, and my Lord Mayor that now is, and so I went, but I found they were arrested too before I came.

L. C. J. How did my Lord go away from thence ?

Mr. Wells. In his Coach.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you by when he went away ? And who was there ?

Mr. Wells. Mr. Brome the Coroner was not there when my Lord Mayor went away, but there was Goodenough.

L. C. J. Ay, he was in trusty Hands upon my Word.

Mr. At. Gen. The Soldiers prevented the Design, and so they let him go again.

Mr. Recorder. Swear Sir John Peak. [Which was done.]

Sir John, what can you say to this Business ?

Sir John Peak. My Lord, I had order from the Lieutenancy to raise my Regiment upon the News of my Lord Mayor's being arrested ; which I did in a very little time, and came with my Soldiers to Skinner's Hall, where I heard my Lord Mayor was, and prevented any Stir, as it was feared there would have been. But Mr. Keeling, I believe, can tell something more of the Design than he has spoken ; for I remember at the Tryal of the Traitors at the Old Bailey, he did say, That after my Lord Mayor was arrested, they did intend something, but their Hearts misgave them when the Regiment was up.

L. C. J. That is nothing to this Cause, what he said there, now he remembers nothing of it. Have you done, Gentlemen, or will you call any more Witnesses ?

Mr. At. Gen. We rest it here, my Lord, till we hear what they say to it.

L. C. J. Come then, what have you to say that are for the Defendant ?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case with the Defendant, Mr. Papillon. I see, Gentlemen, it is a Cause of great Expectation, and by that means they would make it greater by far than indeed it is in it self. But, I suppose, you who are upon your Oaths, to try this Issue, will duly weigh and consider what it really is. Gentlemen, the Record tells you what it is, an Action upon the Case, wherein the Plaintiff declares, that the Defendant did arrest him, being then Lord Mayor, without any probable Cause, and out of Malice. Now as to that, Gentlemen, I conceive and think, I may appeal to my Lord Chief Justice in it, for Direction in Point of Law, that my Lord Mayor, if he do mistake in his Office, and do not do that which belongs to him to do, he is as much subject to the Process of Law and Actions, as any private Person in the City of London. If he does any Man an Injury, or does that which is not right in his Office, by which another Person is grieved, he is liable to the Prosecution of any particular Subject the King has, that is so grieved by him. Then they alledge, that this particular Action and Arrest thereupon was prosecuted and done out of Malice, and without probable Cause. Now what have they proved of that ? They prove the Thing done, that he was arrested at the Defendant's Suit, and that he was kept in Custody six Hours. But if we can give you any Account of a probable Cause for it, that is sufficient to justify us from this Action. Gentlemen, the Question that you are to try is not, Whether this Man or that Man were duly chosen into such an Office, but whether there were any probable Cause for the Defendant to contest about the Choice. And herein the the Case will fall out to be thus. There was a difference in the City of London, as is very well known to every body, about the Choice of Sheriffs for the City, wherein the Defendant was one of the Competitors; there were upon the Nomination and Election in the Hall, a great many more Voices or Suffrages for one than for the other, which was certified to the Court of Aldermen and Lord Mayor, as is usual; but some Contest being, a Poll was demanded and granted, and upon that Poll my Lord Mayor was pleased to declare the Election on one Side against Mr. Papillon, who yet was apprehended by the first Choice, to be one that had most Suffrages. But several Meetings there were, and several Common Halls assembled, so that it was a contested Matter, and as I said, there had been a Report made on the Defendant's behalf. We insist not upon the Right of Election, that has been otherwise determined. But when he is put in Nomination by the Electors in the City, and has many Suffrages, and he conceives himself rightly chosen, and they that are the Managers of the Election give such an Account, that in their Judgment he was chosen; that surely was a probable Cause for him to proceed upon it. And if there be but a probable Cause to bring this to a Question, no doubt he might very well take the Course the Defendant took. Here is no Arrest without legal Process; nay, their own Witnesses say, there was an Offer to take an Appearance without putting it on so far as an Arrest: If my Lord Mayor would have but given an Appearance, there had been an end, but he did not think fit to do that, and so the Process of Law was executed upon him. Then here is the Case in short: A Man thinks himself rightly and duly chosen into an Office, and has probable reason so to think, for the Judges of the Election think so too, and deliver that as their Opinion; so that though he is mistaken, as the Event proves, yet he is not alone in his Mistake, nor without ground of his Apprehension; then if it be (under favour) such a Man has no other Proceedings to take in the World for settling this Matter, but to appeal to your Lordship, and that great Court where your Lordship sits, to have a Writ to command the Mayor, or other proper Officer to swear such a Man into the Office, or shew good Cause why he doth not. If the Mayor upon the Receipt of the Writ thinks fit to obey it, and swears the Man, all is well: If not, he must make a Return of the Writ, with the Cause why the Command of the Writ is not obeyed. Now the Suggestion of the Writ is, that he was duly chosen into such an Office, and therefore he had a fair way to put this Matter to an end; if he would have returned he was chosen, or not chosen, there had been an end of the business, which he ought (under favour) to have done in Obedience to the King's Writ. What then follows upon his not doing so? The Party that is grieved hereby, has no other Course, to take, but to bring his Action against the Mayor for it. This Course the Defendant took, by taking out a Writ against the Plaintiff: And what was the Effect of that Writ? It is indeed charged here by the Counsel on the other Side, That there was a Design of a discontented Party in it, and I know not what, and a great deal of Scir made, that a Coroner of the City of London should arrest my Lord Mayor. It may be it was not so reverently done; but yet if he thought he had good Cause of Action against him, he might do it lawfully. Doth this prove to you, that this was maliciously and unreasonably done? Malice must be to the Person; Zeal and Earnestness to have Right done to a Man's self or another, in a legal Course of Justice, is not Malice, nor will make the Prosecution of the Action unreasonable and groundless. Have they proved, to you, Gentlemen, any particular Discontent and Malice that is between the Plaintiff and Defendant? No truly, I think, by all the Proof that has been offered, the quite contrary does appear. The Defendant took out a Mandamus, directed to the Plaintiff, which was not duly returned: What then doth he do next? Doth he most violently arrest him? That, with Submission, he might do, and no Offence in Law: No, but he doth not do it, but only desired from time to time, as we shall prove anon, that he would but give an Appearance, that would have put a Conclusion to this Dispute. There is no Appearance given: Whereupon he is arrested and detained in Custody six Hours. If a Man be once in the Officer's Hands taken upon legal Process, how long soever the Officer keeps him, is not at all to be laid upon the Person that brings the Suit, that is to be looked after by the Officer himself. Whatsoever was the Usage in that Matter, we are not to answer for (though it is plain an Appearance would have done all presently) we shall prove we gave order to use all Deference and Respect in the World. And besides (though I would not speak it to invalidate any of the Evidence given about the Right of Election one way or other, yet) there being a Return of the Defendant's Election by the Sheriffs to the Court of Aldermen; but they being of another Opinion, gave Order, that those that thought themselves aggrieved should take their Remedy at Law: Which Order we have pursued in that regular Course that the Law has prescribed. And I hope it will never come to that, that a Man (though mistaken) conceiving himself to have a Right of Action, and suing out the King's Writ, shall suffer for so doing, unless particular Malice be made to appear. Here is a great Noise of Damage, and Disrepute, and Disgrace to the Plaintiff and his Office, and he has been pleased to reckon his own Damages at 10000 l. We say he has sustained no Damage by any thing we have done, but we are quite not guilty of this unreasonable and malicious Prosecution laid to our Charge. And that we are not guilty, the Matter that has been opened, we think will sufficiently declare. For if there was a Contest about the Election, and the Sheriffs returned it as their Opinion, that the Defendant was chosen, though they and he too were mistaken; yet that might give a probable Ground for his pursuing the Course he did take; and the very Court of Aldermen, and the Lord Mayor bidding them take their Course at Law, we sure shall not be punished for it. We did not prosecute our Question in any malicious way, but in that Course that the Law allows, by taking out the King's Writ; and we hope the Law will protect us for it.

Mr. Williams. Will your Lordship be pleased to spare me a Word on the same side with Mr. Serjeant Maynard. I am of Counsel, Gentlemen, with with Mr. Papillon the Defendant in this Action. We do not insist upon it, nor now offer any thing to assert our Election; We did apprehend we were Elected, but that is ruled against us, and we rested satisfied with it. But we come here now before you upon this Question; Whether we had any probable Cause of Action, upon which we might take out this Process mentioned in the Declaration, which is a Capias upon a Latitat. And we do insist upon it, that this Action of the Plaintiff's must fall upon the Issue joined, if we can satisfy you, and shew that it was not malicious, and without probable Cause. And tho' our Cause of Action against the Plaintiff falls out in the Event not to be a good and sufficient Cause; yet if it were probable, it will evade this Action, and that is all we labour for. They do not attempt to prove, at leastwise I have not heard any thing of it, that there was any express Malice, any thing either said or done by the Defendant, more than the causing him to be arrested upon this Writ. It is very well known, it was in the City of London a very much controverted Question, Whether Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois, or Sir Dudley North, and Mr. Rich, were chosen Sheriffs of London? I would not run over the History of it, it is but too well known and remember'd the Divisions that were in the City about it. Some were so much dissatisfied with the swearing Sir Dudley North, and Mr. Rich Sheriffs, as thinking them not duly Elected, that they would have the Court of King's Bench moved, for the Writ of Mandamus to swear Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois. This Mandamus was moved for, and granted; and to this Writ the Mayor and Aldermen, to whom it was directed, made a Return that we were not Elected Sheriff of London; which Return was apprehended to be false; and really to try the Truth of this Return, was the Action brought against the Plaintiff. A Man that is injured by a False Return, hath indeed no other way to right himself, but by bringing an Action against them that made it. Upon this Action brought, I hope you are satisfied, Gentlemen, from the Evidence that has been already given, the Defendant proceeded regularly and orderly, in a decent manner, applying himself to get an Appearance to his Action. And we shall prove he did so; For, first, he took out a Latitat against my Lord Mayor, and by the Attorney gave him notice of it, and desired an Appearance; so that the Question in dispute might come to some Determination. But he was not pleased to give us an Appearance to that Writ; so we took out a Capias, gave him notice of it, and desired an Appearance, but could have no Appearance; whereupon we took out an Alias Capias, which is the Writ mentioned in the Declaration; and the Coroner who has been named, was then told, he should be called upon to make some Return to his Writ; which he acquainted my Lord Mayor with, and desired him to give an Appearance; which he refusing to do, the Officer was constrained to arrest him, to execute the King's Writ; and you hear how he treated him, with all the respect, and carried him to his own House, where he staid some Hours and then went away. All this time were we satisfied with what was done, we expected no more than an Appearance, which at last was given. Upon that Appearance we did declare, in the Beginning of Hilary or Easter Term (83.) But it fell out, that in Easter Term (83.) there was an Information for a Riot upon Midsummer-Day before, about this contested Election, came to be tryed. And that coming to Tryal, 10. Maii, and being found to be a Riot, and the Sheriffs sworn to be duly Elected; thereupon we were abundantly satisfied that we were mistaken, and under Misapprehensions, and that our Cause of Action would not hold, and we did discontinue it. Indeed, if we had prosecuted our Action after that, it would have been more like an angry and a silly Prosecution, and the whole have had a worse Construction, than the thing in it self would bear. But when we found the Opinion of the Court to be against us about our Election, we immediately discontinued our Action. Gentlemen, We shall prove these to have been our Proceedings, and that, I hope, will satisfy you we are not guilty according as we have pleaded.

Mr. Ward. May it please your Lordship, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel on the same side, for the Defendant, and desire to be heard one Word as to some Things that have been said on the other side in this Cause. There have been some Questions asked that do very much reflect upon the Defendant, and which I would take out of this Cause. I shall take notice, first, what the Questions were, and then give them that Regard and Answer which they deserve. That which is urged, Gentlemen, by way of Crimination, in this Case against the Defendant, and an unjust as well as foreign Reflection (not at all concerning the Cause) is, as if the Defendant were acquainted with the Insurrection and Conspiracy that was intended against the King's Life, and for Subversion of the Government, and procured the Plaintiff, then Lord Mayor, to be arrested, to further and promote that Insurrection. But as that was insinuated only for Reflection's sake, so I hope you, Gentlemen, will be pleased to take notice, that not one Word of any such thing is proved at all, that the Defendant ever knew of any intended Insurrection, nor that this was done with any such Design: For even their first Witness, Keeling, from whose being employed by the Coroner in the Execution of the Writ upon Sir William Pritchard the Plaintiff, they would argue that somewhat else was designed in it, doth give a positive Denial of any such thing now upon his Testimony here. And Mr. Papillon the Defendant never knew him in his Life, nor employ'd him in this Business, nor ordered that he should be employed in it, nor ever saw him; but the Coroner gave him his Warrant to execute. If therefore Keeling and Goodenough were concerned in any ill Business, and have taken upon them to do that which they ought not to have done, that doth not signify any thing in this Case, nor ought to turn to the Defendant's Prejudice. Nor if any thing were done by the Officers that were to execute this Process, that were a Misfeasance, or a Male-execution of their Office, that ought not to be imputed as a Fault in the Defendant. But for this Matter now before you, the Case will depend upon this Point chiefly, Whether the now Defendant had a reasonable Cause, or probable Ground, to bring an Action against the the Plaintiff at the time when it was brought, and this Arrest made: For there is many a Man that, at the Commencement of his Action, doth conceive in himself he has a good probable Cause of Action against another Man, that in the Event of Things finds he was mistaken, and hath no such Cause; and thereupon desists the Prosecution of it. Therefore the Probability of the Cause at the time when this Fact was done, is the Question you now are to try. For we are not now considering, whether that probable Cause did continue and prove a good Cause; the Event of this Matter has proved it quite otherwise. Indeed the original Question of this whole Cause was, Who were only Elected Sheriffs? And that at the time of such Election made, a great Number of Votes passed for the Defendant, is, I think, very notorious, both upon the lifting up of Hands, and upon the Poll. These things we shall offer to you, and shall make it out that these gave occasion to the Defendant to contest the Election, and consequently to the bringing of the Action that the Plaintiff was thus arrested upon. If then there were such things as these that we have opened, which gave a colour to controvert the Right, and the Defendant pursued the Method prescribed by the Law to bring it to a Determination; and there was no particular Disrespect or Incivility offered to my Lord Mayor, then sure there was no reason to bring this Action against us. And that there was no indecent Behaviour used towards the Plaintiff, doth appear from the Evidence that hath been given of the whole Transaction. All that was desired of my Lord Mayor, was but an Appearance. For this was indeed an Action that did not require Bail, but an Appearance; tho', I must needs say, I never knew any one so averse to give an Appearance to an Action as the Plaintiff was; for after a Latitat and Capias taken out, and being frequently acquainted with it, and at length upon application after the taking out of the Alias Capias, and many Attendances, with all the Deference and Respect imaginable, both to his Person and Office, not so much as a bare Appearance could be obtained. Upon the opening of the Declaration and the Cause, you have been told of the great Dangers that were in the Case, as to the Infringement of Publick Peace, and the Government, which has been very much aggravated on the other Side. But had the reasonable Request of the Defendant by his Attorney, or the Officer, so often repeated, been but complied with, it had been but sending to any Attorney, and ordering an Appearance; and then, I hope, the Peace of the Kingdom had been in no Peril from such a Design as this Arrest. Which I would not have mentioned, nor should have taken to be at all concerned in the Issue now before you to be tryed, but that I find them to be taken into the question, when I hope you will consider they are no way material to the Point in Controversy. Now, Gentlemen, in our Defence against this Suit of the Plaintiff's, we shall call our Witnesses to prove what we have opened. And our Defence will be in these Steps: First, To shew the Inducement to our Action against the Plaintiff, which will shew there was a probable Cause. Secondly, Give an account of the reverent Carriage and Behaviour towards the Plaintiff in the Prosecution; how with reiterated Applications it was only desired that the Plaintiff would give an Appearance, which he was not pleased to do; and that thereupon, with great Civility, the King's Writ was executed, as indeed I see no Proof to the contrary. For neither the Coroner, nor those other People that gave their Assistance to him, were at all rude in their Carriage to my Lord Mayor; but as soon as the Arrest was made, they were all turned off, and the Coroner staid alone with my Lord, and went with him, in his Lordship's own Coach, to the Skinner's Hall, which was the Coroner's House. Neither was there any thing ill done after all this was past: For upon the Plaintiff's Appearance, the now Defendant declared in his Action, and intended to pursue it; but it happened that afterwards, in a short time, these things suffered some Debate in a Tryal that was here about a Riot at this Election, where the Question of the Right and Election, was determined on the other side, which gave the Plaintiff in that Action, the Defendant in this, satisfaction that he was in a Mistake, and so he thought fit to discontinue that Action, and proceeded no further—

L. C. J. No, Mr. Ward, that was not the Question determined then.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I humbly conceive the Issue of that Cause did determine that Question—

L. C. J. No, no, I tell you it was not the Question.

Mr. Ward. I must submit it to your Lordship.—

L. C. J. I perceive you do not understand the Question that was then, nor the Question that is now. You have made a Long Speech here, and nothing at all to the purpose; you do not understand what you are about; I tell you it was no such Question.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I was only giving an account of what we should prove as to the Fairness of our Proceedings—

L. C. J. But I must interrupt you, and tell you, all you have said signifies nothing. And as to what you mention of the Tryal for the Riot; I say, if there be any Election to an Office at any time that is controverted or doubtful, you have Forms and Methods of Law to determine the Controversy—

Mr. Ward. And we say, with Submission, my Lord, we have only pursued such Form and Method.

L. C. J. You are not to try Rights by Club-Law, by Riots, by Noise, and by Tumults. Therefore you are mistaken, to say, that was the Question upon the Tryal of the Riot. No, it was not the Question; but the Defendants there were tryed for a notorious Offence, and disorderly tumultuous Assembly, an Assembly that had like to have set us together by the Ears. Therefore you must not talk after that rate. If you will speak, apply to the Business in hand. Do not make such Excursions, ad captandum Populum with your Flourishes, for that is all that is designed by your long Harangues. But I must not suffer it, I will have none of your Enamel, nor your Garniture. The Business of the Court is, and by the Grace of God it shall always be my Business, and so it should be be the Counsel's too, Servare jus illæsum. But I see you do not understand the Question, and that makes you ramble so much in your Discourse.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I desire always to do my Duty; and do it as well as I can. I know very well, and hope to apply it to this Case, that in a Question of Right there are Forms and Methods of Law to be pursued, and I would defend my Client from this Action, by proving he did pursue that Method; and when he apprehended he had been before mistaken, he desisted from what he had begun.

L. C. J. I tell you, I perceive you do not understand the Question.

Mr. Ward. If your Lordship will give me leave to explain my self, I hope I shall satisfy your Lordship.

L. C. J. Indeed, Mr. Ward, you do not understand the Question at all, but lanch out into an Ocean of Discourse that is wholly wide from the Mark. I see you do not understand it.

Mr. Ward. Will your Lordship please to hear me.

L. C. J. Ay, if you would speak to the purpose; but I cannot sit here all Night to hear you make florid Speeches about Matters that are foreign to the Point before us. Come to the Question, Man; I see you do not understand what you are about.

Mr. Ward. My Lord.

L. C. J. Nay, be as angry as you will, Mr. Ward, I do tell you agen, all you have said is nothing to the purpose, and you do not understand the Business.

Then there was a little Hiss begun.

L. C. J. Who is that? What in the Name of God! I hope we are now past that time of day, that Humming and Hissing shall be used in Courts of Justice; but I would fain know that Fellow that dare to hum or hiss while I sit here; I'll assure him, be he who he will, I'll lay him by the Heels, and make an Example of him. Indeed, I knew the time when Causes were to be carried according as the Mobile hiss'd or humm'd; and I do not question but they have as good a Will to it now. Come, Mr. Ward, pray let us have none of your Frangancies, and fine Rhetorical Flowers, to take the People with.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I do not do any such thing; but if your Lordship would please to hear me, I would explain my self, I hope, to your Lordship's Satisfaction, and the Satisfaction of the Gentlemen of the Jury.

L. C. J. Hear you? Why, I did not interrupt you, Man, till you came to lanch out into extravagant things that did not at all concern the Cause. Keep close to the Question we come here to try, and I will hear you as long as you will. The single Question is here, Whether there were a probable Cause for your arresting the Plaintiff, or not?

Mr. Ward. My Lord, We did apprehend, I say, that we had a probable Cause; but when we found our Mistake, we discontinued our Action, paid Costs, and have a Receipt for them. This was it I was saying.

L. C. J. Say what you can, in God's Name, that will conduce to the Point in hand, but do not make the People believe as tho' the Right of Sheriffs, or not Sheriffs, were determined upon the Tryal of a Rior.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. There are these things that are proper to be considered in this Question. Whether the Cause were probable, or not probable? And if not probable, whether malicious or not?

L. C. J. True, Brother; If People will but understand their Business, it is reduced to a narrow Compass; but if they will not understand what it is they come about, they will ramble from the Point, and who can help it? But we must keep to what is before us.

Mr. Williams. We shall make it out, that nothing was done but very civilly.

L. C. J. You must make it out, that nothing was done but what you had probable Cause at least for.

Mr. Williams. We will, my Lord, apply ourselves to that which your Lordship directs. Call Mr. Brome, Mr. Courthope, and Mr. Cornish.

Mr. Brome sworn.

Mr. Ward. Mr. Brome, Are you sworn?

Mr. Brome. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Ward. Have you the Writs here? The Latitat and the Capias?

Mr. Brome. Truly, Sir, I have not; I did not bring them with me, they are at home at my House; if you please, I will fetch them.

Mr. Ward. Pray, can you tell, Sir, when the first Writ was returnable?

Mr. Brome. In Hilary Term.

Mr. Ward. When you had that Writ brought to you, Sir, what did you say to my Lord Mayor about it?

Mr. Brome. I went to my Lord Mayor with Mr. Goodenough, and desired my Lord that he would appear to it, as Mr. Goodenough told me he had desired of him himself before. But he said he would give no Appearance. If I would take him upon the Writ, I might do as I pleased, and he would consider and do as he should think fit, but he would not give any Appearance. I told him, I had Writs against several of the Aldermen upon the same account, and that I would wait upon them also; and I did so, and desired them to appear, and offered to take an Appearance from them, and gave my Lord Mayor and them time to consider of it, and came again; but they told me, they had considered of it, and would give no Appearance.

Mr. Williams. When was this, Sir?

Mr. Brome. In the beginning of Hilary Term, to the best of my remembrance.

Mr. Williams. What time did you give my Lord Mayor to consider of it?

Mr. Brome. About a Week, or some nine or ten Days time, as I remember.

Mr. Ward. Where was it that you had that Answer, that he had considered of it, and would give no Appearance?

Mr. Brome. It was at the Court of Aldermen.

Mr. Williams. Were the Writs brought agen to you?

Mr. Brome. There was not time to make a Return then, and so they let all alone till a little before the beginning of Easter Term, and then, one Day, Mr. Goodenough the Attorney brought me the Writs again, and threatened to complain to the Court of me, and acquaint them, that I had neglected the Execution of the King's Writs, two of them.

Mr. Ward. Upon your Oath, Sir, Did he threaten you, that if you did not make a Return of the Writ, he would complain?

Mr. Brome. He said I had exposed him to the Complaint of his Client; and if I did not do it, he would complain to the Court of me: If I would make a Return as I ought to do, well and good, if not——

Mr. Williams. If not, what then? Did he use any other Threatnings, pray Sir, but that he would complain to the Court?

Mr. Brome. He did threaten to complain of me.

Mr. At. Gen. You say, Sir, he threatened you; what Answer did you make to him?

Mr. Brome. I did not use to execute Writs my self, I told him: Thereupon he did propose two Persons to me, Mr. Keeling, and one Mr. Burleigh; for he told me the Sheriff's Officers would not do it.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, did you endeavour to get any of the Sheriff's Officers to do it?

Mr. Brome. He told me he could not get any of them to do it.

Mr. Ward. Mr. Brome, What did you do after he had proposed those two Persons to you?

Mr. Brome. After I had given those Warrants to the Officers he had named, I told him, I was willing to go once more to my Lord Mayor, to see if I could get an Appearance of him without arresting him; so I waited on him at his House at Grocers-hall, but found him then at Dinner; so I went away, and came again about four a Clock, and I first spoke to Mr. Gibson, and intreated him to let my Lord Mayor know, that I desired to speak with his Lordship at his leisure: Afterwards when I came up to my Lord Mayor, he asked me, what was my Business? I told him the Writs were renewed, at the Suit of Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois, and I was pressed to make a Return; and I desired his Lordship that he would be pleased to give an Appearance. He told me he was ready to submit to the KING's Writ, but would not give an Appearance; thereupon the Officers named in the Warrant by my Command did arrest him.

Mr. Ward. How often did you wait upon my Lord Mayor for an Appearance upon both the Writs, before he was arrested?

Mr. Brome. Several times, I cannot exactly tell how often.

Mr. Williams. Had you Directions, if he would please to give an Appearance, to take an Appearance, and not to arrest him?

Mr. Brome. I had Directions to take an Appearance, if he would give it.

Mr. At. Gen. From whom had you that Direction, Mr. Brome?

Mr. Brome. From the Attorney Goodenough.

L. C. J. Now, Mr. Brome, let me ask you a Question or two; how long had you been Coroner before?

Mr. Brome. About two Years before, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. Had you ever made any Warrants upon Writs of Capias before?

Mr. Brome. Yes, my Lord, several.

L. C. J. Who did you use to make your Warrants to, to be executed?

Mr. Brome. I never keep my Warrants, they that execute them have them.

L. C. J. But answer me, To whom did you make them?

Mr. Brome. To one of the Sheriff's Officers commonly.

L. C. J. Then I ask you, upon your Oath, did you before this Time ever make any Warrants to any other Person, till such time as you made these Warrants to arrest Sir William Pritchard?

Mr. Brome. I have made several to the Sheriff's Officers, that I cannot remember now particularly.

L. C. J. But mind my Question, Man, and answer me directly, for I expect you should answer me positively to it. Have you ever at any time made any Warrants to any other but the Sheriff's Officers till this time?

Mr. Brome. I cannot remember that I have.

L. C. J. How then came you at Russel's House to discourse with Mr. Goodenough, about who would be fit to execute the Writ, when you used to employ the Sheriff's Officers, and there were so many of them?

Mr. Brome. He told me he could get no one of them to execute it.

L. C. J. But there must be something more in it than ordinary, that you and Goodenough, and all those other People should come to meet about such a thing as this, to discourse and consider who should be fit to be put into a Warrant to make an Arrest upon a Capias, when before that time you used to make it to those that are versed in those Matters.

Mr. Brome. When the Attorney came with a Writ, and desired a Warrant upon it, it is usual to take whom he nominates, and make him the Officer to execute it.

L. C. J. Then give me, if you can, any one special Instance wherein you have taken the Direction of the Attorney, whose Name to put into the Warrant.

Mr. Brome. Yes, my Lord, I can.

L. C. J. Do then, let's hear it, when was that?

Mr. Brome. I did it in the Case of His Royal Highness against Mr. Pilkington: Mr. Swift came for a Warrant, and directed me whom to put into it.

L. C. J. What Directions did he give you?

Mr. Brome. He gave me the Names in writing.

L. C. J. Where is Keeling?

Keeling. Here, my Lord.

L. C. J. What was the meaning of that Word that was used by you, that the Party would be angry if you did not arrest my Lord Mayor; for that is it which makes me so inquisitive into this Matter, how these People came to be employed?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, pray consider with your self, and recollect, Mr. Keeling; when you were first mentioned to be a special Bayliff to arrest my Lord Mayor, you say you opposed it: How then came you to be drawn in, and engaged to do it?

Keeling. I will tell you, my Lord.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Ay, and tell us what number of People were there.

Keeling. There were about thirty or forty.

L. C. J. Was Brome among them?

Keeling. He was there some part of the time.

L. C. J. Well, what was the reason that you should be engaged about this Thing?

Keeling. I went away a while, and came again: Mr. Brome came in, and I was away an Hour and half, as I remember, or some considerable time. Mr. Brome cannot forget, that when I came again, I found my Name inserted in the Warrant, as a Bayliff to the Coroner, to arrest Sir William Pritchard, then Lord Mayor. I disputed it, as being never concerned in any such thing before, and was very unwilling to be employed in the Affair. Says Mr. Goodenough to me thereupon, you will disoblige the Party in case you do not do it.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Brome in the Company when Goodenough said so to you?

Keeling. I know not that truly, but he was before in the Company.

L. C. J. How many were then in the Room?

Keeling. About Twenty, or more, as near as I can remember.

L. C. J. You Brome, did you ever, when you received a Writ to arrest a Man, and were to give a Warrant upon it, call a Consult of Twenty or Thirty, how to do it, before this time?

Mr. Brome. I did not do it now.

L. C. J. No, no, a-lack-a-day, thou wert as innocent in all this Matter as a sucking Child.

Mr. Williams. Was Mr. Papillon in the Company, Mr. Keeling?

Keeling. No, he was not.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Brome, pray answer me; When you had my Lord Mayor in your Custody, how came you to discharge him out of Custody?

Mr. Brome. I was taken into Custody myself.

Mr. Ward. Did my Lord Mayor give an Appearance?

Mr. Brome. I was Committed to the Compter my self.

Mr. Williams. Were you by when it was agreed that my Lord would give an Appearance?

Mr. Brome. I believe not; it was afterwards as I have heard.

L. C. J. A-lack-a-day, it went strangely against Mr. Brome's Stomach, all this did. I know it very well, he had no mind to it at all.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Keeling, did you hear any Discourse between the Twenty or Thirty that were in that Company about this Business?

Keeling. I cannot say who in particular discoursed of it, or what was said.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it discoursed of in the whole Company?

Keeling. There was some Discourse about it in the Company.

L. C. J. You Brome, were you ever acquainted with Keeling before?

Mr. Brome. I had the Misfortune, my Lord, to be concerned with him about some Coal Works.

L. C. J. Did you know that Mr. Burleigh before, that was the other Bayliff?

Mr. Brome. I knew him by sight, I had no great Acquaintance with him.

L. C. J. Pray where lived Keeling?

Mr. Brome. At East-Smith Field.

Vol. III.

L. C. J. And where lived Burleigh?

Mr. Brome. Truly, my Lord, I know not, I think at the other end of the Town.

L. C. J. But prithee, how came you to join these two People together in this Business; the one from Wapping, the other from Westminster?

Mr. Brome. Where the Sheriffs were concerned, as they were in this Matter, and therefore it came to me, I thought it not so proper to pitch upon the Sheriffs-Officers, nor would they do it, as he told me; and especially it being to arrest my Lord Mayor, I did not think proper to imploy any one that lived in the City.

L. C. J. But there were abundance of People that were not Citizens, that were nearer at hand, and nearer together, and fitter for such a Purpose than a Tradesman fetched out of the East, and I know not who out of the West, to arrest a Man: There must be some other meaning in it.

Mr. Brome. I gave them the Nomination, as I used to do in like Cases.

L. C. J. Upon your Oath, Sir, was it you or the Attorney that named these Persons?

Mr. Brome. He told me he could get none of the Sheriffs-Officers to do it, and I did not think it indeed proper for any of them.

L. C. J. And why, good Sir?

Mr. Brome. I did think so, truly, my Lord.

L. C. J. Why? Why? What reason had you for it?

Mr. Brome. It was reasonable, as I apprehend, my Lord, for me to think so, it being in a Matter wherein the Sheriffs were so much concerned.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But did you propose it, or any one else in the Company, upon your Oath? And who was it?

Mr. Brome. The Attorney named them.

Mr. Com. Serj. It seems here were a great many Persons met at Russel's about this Business, I desire, my Lord, that Mr. Brome may name as many of them as he can that were there.

L. C. J. Ay, as near as you can, name the twenty or thirty Persons that were there; for you living in the City, and having an Acquaintance among that Sort of People, must needs know most of them.

Mr. Brome. Why, my Lord, there were both the Goodenoughs, and Mr. Nelthorpe, and who in particular else, I cannot well remember.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, I am sure you can tell more of them.

Mr. Brome. My Lord, I cannot swear that I remember any other in particular.

Mr. Com. Serj. It seems he has named some of those that are in the Proclamation; pray, Sir, do you remember any others were there that were in the Proclamation?

Mr. Brome. I do not remember any other of those in the Proclamation were there.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you remember any that were not in the Proclamation?

Mr. Brome. There were several People that I knew by sight, but I cannot remember their Names.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, pray open your Eyes a little, and recollect your Memory, and tell us who were there, I know you can do it.

Mr. Brome. My Lord, there were many Citizens that I knew by sight, but had no particular Acquaintance with them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know any of the Company besides the Goodenoughs, and Keeling, and Nelthorpe?

Mr. Brome. I had a little Acquaintance with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How come you to remember him so particularly?

Mr. Brome. I verily believe he was there.

Mr. Recorder. Was Mr. West there?

Mr. Brome. I cannot positively say whether he was or nor.

Mr. Williams. Swear Mr. Cornish then.

[Which was done.]

L. C. J. You Brome, was Mr. Cornish there?

Mr. Brome. Not that I know of.

Mr. At. Gen. It is strange we cannot learn who those Persons were that met there.

L. C. J. Oh these Fellows have strange Memories for their Purposes. Well, what do you call him for?

Mr. Ward. My Lord, we call Mr. Cornish to give an Account what he knows of this Matter, what Directions were given by the Plaintiff to his Attorney, how he should carry on this Matter.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, That which I particularly remember, I shall fully and very faithfully declare. I was with Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois at my House. The Occasion of their coming thither I knew not, nor did expect either of them there; I my self came from Guild-Hall, either from a Court of Aldermen, or from a Committee, and when I came Home, I found them there. We had not been many Minutes together, but in comes Mr. Goodenough the Attorney, and he applied himself particularly to Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois, to receive their Orders what he should do, for he said the Time was almost spent, and he had addressed himself from time to time to my Lord Mayor, and some of the Aldermen to get them to appear, but they would not. They told him then, they had given him what Orders they had to give him already; that it was fit the Matter should be brought to some Tryal or Issue, that there might be an end of it. He pressed them then earnestly to know what he should do: Said they, you are to desire an Appearance to the Action, and if he will give it, take it, and remember my Lord Mayor is the chief Magistrate of the City, and pray, carry it with all respect and regard imaginable to him.

Mr. Williams. You say, Sir, they bid him to take an Appearance, if he could get it.

Mr. Cornish. Yes, and they declared, That their Design was only to bring it to an Issue to be Tried, and they would not insist upon any thing but an Appearance, if it might be had.

L. C. J. Wonderful careful and civil they were, no doubt of it.

Mr. Cornish. This is the Truth, and the whole of the Truth, that I know of, relating to this Matter.

L. C. J. Mr. Cornish, you speak of some of the Aldermen, that he said he had been with, What Aldermen were those?

Mr. Cornish. There were several of them, that he said he had Writs against.

L. C. J. You were an Alderman then, pray had he any Writ against you?

Mr. Cornish. I know not whether he had or no.

L. C. J. But he did not require an Appearance of you, I suppose.

Mr. Cornish. If he had, I must have taken notice of it to defend to my self as well as I could.

L. C. J. Ay, no question but you would, but were you asked for an Appearance or no?

Mr. Cornish. I was told I should be sued among the rest.

L. C. J. But was there any Writ shewn to you?

Mr. Cornish. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then pray let me ask you a Question or two. Did you ever know any Man before bring an Action, or sue to be Sheriff of London? You have been Sheriff your self we know.

Mr. Cornish. This was a Matter that had been much disputed in the City, and a Question had been depending upon it, whether the Right was to my Lord Mayor, or in the Sheriffs.

L. C. J. But the Question of Right between my Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, what was that to Mr. Papillon? Did you ever know a Man bring an Action, or sue to be Sheriff?

Mr. Cornish. Truly he that experienceth the Trouble of it, will, I believe, never be desirous of it.

L. C. J. But that is no Answer to my Question, answer me directly: Did you ever know any such thing before?

Mr. Cornish. I never did hear of any such, that I know of.

L. C. J. How then came Mr. Papillon so officiously to desire it?

Mr. Cornish. I cannot answer; what his Reasons were I know not.

Mr. Williams. It was an Action to determine the Question that was at that time so much litigated in the City of London.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Cornish, Pray, will you answer me one thing; Were you never in no Company, wherein it was agreed this Suit should be brought and carried on in their Names?

Mr. Cornish. Mr. At. Gen. I never meddled nor managed it.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you never hear it was so agreed?

Mr. Cornish. It is known to Thousands, as much as I know of it; the Matter was disputed of in all Companies in the City.

Mr. At. Gen. But you do not answer to my Question, were you ever in any Company when it was agreed that so it should be?

Mr. Cornish. Sir, I tell you as well as I can, the Matter that was to be disputed by that Action, was the general Discourse of all Societies of Men whatever, in the City at that time.

L. C. J. It is a strange thing, that one cannot get a direct Answer from these People, to any thing one asks them; I desire to know one thing of you, Mr. Cornish; You have known Mr. Papillon the Defendant before this time.

Mr. Cornish. Yes, my Lord, I have known him several Years.

L. C. J. Was he ever chosen Sheriff of London before?

Mr. Cornish. Yes, my Lord, I suppose he was.

L. C. J. How chance he did not hold then?

Mr. Cornish. I have heard he Fined, as was common and usual, when Persons Occasions would not permit them to attend the Service of the Place.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. He did so, it is known to Thousands, as you say, that he did. Now, pray let me ask you another Question; was Mr. Betbel ever chosen Sheriff before that time you and he were Sheriffs together?

Mr. Cornish. I do not know that he was chosen before.

L. C. J. How is that?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I do not understand what the Question is, or else I know nothing of it.

L. C. J. How, did you never hear of that before? For, Mr. Cornish, I do not speak of a thing that no body knows; alas thousands, and ten thousands of People know that too.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, upon my Oath, I do not know that ever he was.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear it?

Mr. Cornish. I do not know that ever I did.

L. C. J. Did you never hear that Mr. Betbel swore himself off, as they call it; you know what I mean.

Mr. Cornish. I do not remember any thing of it.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, it is to the matter, I assure you, Mr. Cornish, whatever you think of it. I ask you then another Question that lies something nearer your memory: Upon your Oath, when you two were elected upon Midsummer-day, was not that Election vacated, and you chosen again within a Week, or some little time after? And was it not because you had not taken the Sacrament, and the Corporation-Oath?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I do remember there was a second Election.

L. C. J. And we remember it too well enough.

Mr. Cornish. That was so lately, that any Citizen of London, or any one that lived here, may remember the Passages of those Times.

L. C. J. And you have as much Cause to remember it as any Man, I assure you, for several Reasons that I know.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I think I have reason to remember it.

L. C. J. Least you should forget it, I will enlighten you, and refresh your Memory a little, I ask you again, upon your Oath, Was not your first Election set aside, because you had not taken the Oaths and the Sacrament?

Mr. Cornish. There were two Elections, my Lord, I say I do remember.

L. C. J. Sir, do not prevaricate with me; I expect a positive Answer: Was not that the reason, upon your Oath?

Mr. Cornish. I cannot say that was the positive reason.

L. C. J. Then I ask you upon your Oath, had you taken the Oaths and the Sacrament as the Law requires?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, Mr. Betbel was a Stranger to me, I did not know him before that time.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, Men must not think to dance in a Net, and blind all the World. As to my own self, I know these Things very well, without any of their Assistance, and I only ask these things by the by, to let the World be satisfied what sort of Men these are, that pretend to Saintship, and yet, you see, one can hardly get one Word of Truth out of them: Let the Law, in God's Name, take place, and let every Man prosecute his legal Actions; but when, under the Umbrage and Countenance of Law, Men shall desire to put themselves into Offices, and Places of Trust, on purpose to disturb the Government: Do you think the Government will ever suffer it self to be snivelled at, and overthrown by a Company of such whining Fellows? Let them hiss and hum, and make a Noise and a-do as they will; Thanks be to God, 'tis not that time of day now: Such things have pass'd too much uncontroul'd in the Body of this City heretofore. What, Gentlemen, are you baffling the Law with such pretences as these now-a-days, and do you think to sham People into Offices? No, I tell you, Villany was the Foundation of it, and Knavery the Superstructure; and it is high time it should be told out, since I hear People begin to doubt of it as a question.

Mr. Ward. Where is Mr. Serjeant? Swear him. [Which was done.]

L. C. J. Do not I know, as sure as I sit in this Place, that Betbel did once before swear himself off; and that there were two Elections of these two very Men that Year, and that one of the Reasons was, because they had not taken the Oaths and the Sacrament according to Law; nor would they ever have done it, we know them, neither Betbel, nor that very Fellow that stands there, Cornish, neither, till they found it would contribute to the Design of Subverting the Government; then these Rascals could qualify themselves for an Office, only to put the Kingdom into a Flame.

Mr. Cornish. When the City chose me, I had good reason for what I did.

L. C. J. Reason; I tell you, the City was in great happiness and quiet, ever since the late Times of Rebellion and Confusion; every one knew his Duty to his Superiors, and did it cheerfully and conscientiously, till such time as a couple of busie Fellows came to get into the publick Offices. Let the whole Party go away with that in their Teeth, and chew upon it if they will.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Serjeant, will you please to tell my Lord and the Jury, what Directions you heard the Defendant, Mr. Papillon, give about the Plaintiff, how they should treat him.

Mr. Serjeant. My Lord, I was in the Counting house at Mr. Alderman Cornish's House, when Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois were there; I went into the Parlour to them, and Goodenough coming in, they fell into a Discourse about this Action, that was brought by them against Sir Wilham Pritchard, then Lord Mayor, and some of the Aldermen; and Goodenough gave them an Account how far he had proceeded in it; he said, he could not get any of them to give an Appearance, and the Time was near spent, and he desired to know of them what he should do. Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois both, did declare to him over and over again, that it was their mind only to have the matter brought to a fair Tryal; and they charged him to look to it, to do nothing but what was Legal, and carry it with all respect imaginable to my Lord Mayor, as the chief Magistrate of the City; that he should by all means get an Appearance from him if he could, and get the Coroner, who was an Officer of the City, to go with him, and carry all Things fairly and decently.

Mr. At. Gen.

Mr. At. Gen. Who gave these Directions, Sir, do you say?

Mr. Serjeant. Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois, both of them did.

Mr. Ward. Now, my Lord, we shall shew that we proceeded so far in the Action, as to declare, but afterwards apprehending our selves to be under a Mistake, we discontinued our Action.

Mr. Williams. And the Costs upon the Discontinuance were received by my Lord Mayor's Attorney. Here is the Declaration as it was filed.

L. C. J. Ay, it may be there was a Declaration filed, but not regularly.

Mr. Williams. My Lord Mayor after appeared.

L. C. J. How doth that appear in Evidence? For the Coroner says he himself was in Custody, and knows no more of the matter afterwards.

Mr. Williams. I believe your Lordship doth remember there were many Motions made in Court about this matter, on the one side and the other, and at length in Court it was compromised, and my Lord Mayor promised to give an Appearance.

L. C. J. Prove what you can; prove the Appearance enter'd, and Declaration received.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I only offer this as an Evidence of an Appearance.

L. C. J. A Record, I know, is a good and fair Evidence, shew that if you can.

Mr. Ward. It is not usual to declare till the Defendant appears.

L. C. J. A Declaration may well be upon an Appearance, but because it cannot be good without an Appearance, therefore it cannot be a sufficient Evidence of it.

Mr. Ward. We will prove the Costs of the Discontinuance paid and accepted. Swear Mr. Baker. (Which was done.) What do you know, Sir, of any Costs that were taxed and paid for a Discontinuance in this Case?

Mr. Baker. My Lord, Mr. Aston told me he appeared for Sir William Pritchard, then Lord Mayor, and had a Declaration from the now Defendant's Attorney: So I enter'd up a Discontinuance, and paid the Costs, and have Mr. Aston's Receipt for them.

L. C. J. He says well. Go on then.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, It is a thing that hath frequently happened, that after a Man has brought an Action against another, he finds he was mistaken, and hath no Cause of Action, and thereupon relinquisheth his Suit: But sure that will not make him liable to a Suit.

L. C. J. Well, pray go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, We are not now offering to try the Right of Election, tho' that really was the Foundation of the Action that we brought, but we apprehended that Question to be determined, and we acquiesced in it when that Tryal was over. Now, my Lord, we shall shew that apprehending our selves really chosen, we did in a due Course of Law sue forth our Mandamus, directed to the Plaintiff and the Aldermen; and there is a Return made. I pray these may be read.

The Mandamus and Return were read.

Mr. Williams. Then that which we shall next shew, is the Grounds and Reasons why we thought this Return was false, and thereupon brought our Action. We shall shew that at a Common Hall, held for the Election of Sheriffs, the Defendant was in Nomination, and had a great number of Hands and Voices for him. Pray call Mr. Gilbert Nelson, Mr. William Wightman, and Mr. Leonard Robinson.

Who all appeared, and were sworn.

Mr. Ward. Mr. Nelson, Pray, were you at the Common Hall for Election of Sheriffs, in the Year 1682.

Mr. Nelson. I was at the Common Hall in June 1682. on Midsummer-day.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, will you tell us who were then in Nomination, and how they did proceed.

Mr. Nelson. There were in Nomination for Sheriffs, he that is now Sir Dudley North, then Mr. North, Mr. Box, Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois.

Mr. Ward. Pray, Sir, who had the Majority of Hands?

Mr. Nelson. I did see the Poll-Books after they were cast up.

Mr. Williams. But did you observe the holding up of the Hands?

Mr. Nelson. Upon the holding up of the Hands, the Election was by the Sheriffs given to Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois.

Mr. Williams. Put pray, Sir, upon your View, and in your Judgment, were there many Hands for Mr. Papillon?

Mr. Nelson. I guess there were the most Hands for him and Mr. Dubois.

Mr. Ward. What say you then to the summing up of the Poll-Book that you spoke of.

Mr. Nelson. I did see the Books after they were cast up.

Mr. Ward. Was there a great Number for Mr. Papillon?

Mr. Nelson. Yes, there was the greatest.

Mr. Com. Serj. What Books do you mean, Mr. Nelson?

Mr. Nelson. The Books in the Sheriffs Custody, Sir.

Mr. Com. Serj. But did you see my Books?

Mr. Nelson. That was upon the second Poll.

Mr. Ward. Then which is Mr. Wightman?

Mr. Wightman. Here I am, Sir.

Mr. Ward. Were you present at this Common Hall? Did you see this Election?

Mr. Wightman. I can say nothing to the Election.

Mr. Williams. Were you at the Common Hall on Midsummer-day, 1682?

Mr. Wightman. I cannot say that, Sir.

Mr. Ward. Then what is it you can say to this Matter in question? Did you take any Poll?

Mr. Wightman. I did take the Poll in one of the Books.

Mr. Williams. Was there any Number for Mr. Papillon?

Mr. Wightman. There were 2400 and odd for Papillon and Dubois.

Mr. Thompson. Who were in Nomination, Sir? Who were the Persons poll'd for?

Mr. Wightman. Sir Dudley North, Mr. Papillon, Mr. Dubois, and Mr. Box.

Mr. Ward.

Mr. Ward. What say you, Mr. Robinson, Were you at this Common Hall in 1682?

Mr. Robinson. Yes, I was.

Mr. Williams. Who were named to be Sheriffs then?

Mr. Robinson. Mr. North, now Sir Dudley North, Mr. Ralph Box, Mr. Thomas Papillon, and Mr. John Dubois, they four.

Mr. Williams. What Number had Mr. Papillon for him?

Mr. Robinson. I never saw the Poll.

Mr. Ward. But upon the View in the Hall, in your Opinion, did you look upon it as a doubtful Case which was Elected?

Mr. Robinson. By the Hands, I judged the majority was much more for Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois, than for the other two.

Mr. Williams. So you think in your Judgment?

Mr. Robinson. Upon my Oath, that was my Opinion.

Mr. Williams. Well, my Lord, we must rest it here unless they give us further Occasion.

Mr. At. Gen. You say, the majority was for Papillon and Dubois: Pray, was the Election declared at that time by the Mayor and Aldermen, or was there a Poll demanded?

Mr. Robinson. Mr. Attorney, First the Question was put for the Persons; then the Sheriffs declared their Opinion, and a Poll was demanded, and a Poll was granted, and the Sheriffs went with the Common Serjeant up to the Court of Aldermen, and acquainted them with it, and then they all came down again, and declared that there should be a Poll.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who were Sheriffs then, pray, Sir?

Mr. Robinson. Mr. Alderman Pilkington, and Mr. Samuel Shute; and in the Evening, after the Poll was closed, the Books were number'd up, the Sheriffs came down upon the Hustings and declared the Numbers, and then, as I remember, the Number declared for Mr. Papillon, and Dubois, was above 2000, and the Number declared for the other two, was some Hundreds under 2000.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, We leave it here.

L. C. J. Will you that are for the Plaintiff, say any thing more to it?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord, We have more Evidence to bring in answer to what they have brought here. My Lord, that which they would excuse themselves by, is, that there was a probable Cause; but that will fail them, if it be but observed what doth appear upon their own Evidence. It is true, where a Man hath a probable right he may sue. But this matter here contended for, was never such a right as a Man may sue for. No Man can ever shew that for the Shrievalty, an Office of Burthen, an Office of Hazard, and an Office of Charge and Expence, any Man did ever sue; so little ground of Reason had they to bring this Action for this Office. And then for their Title to the Office, that will appear but very weak. They pretend that my Lord Mayor and Aldermen could not try the right who was Elected truly and rightfully; and they bring this Action to try it; and then they produce some of the Men that held up their Hands, and in their Opinions, Gentlemen, they say, the Election fell upon Papillon and Dubois. But, Gentlemen, that my Lord will tell you is nothing at all of Title, but a Poll was demanded, and by that it must be decided. Then one of their Witnesses tells you a Story of what the Sheriffs did upon the Poll: But all that is nothing too. For we tell you, and shall prove it, That those Sheriffs did in a riotous manner, assume, and take upon themselves the Supreme Government of the City, and would have excluded my Lord Mayor from it. But all their Proceedings, and all that they call a Poll, was void, and can make no Title to any thing at all. It was a bare Dispute of a factious Party, to subvert the orderly Government of the City. There was no probability of Title or Right could be gained by it. For the Chief Magistrate of the City, for the time being, ever did direct the Poll, and all the Proceedings upon Election of Officers. And when he did so in this Case, we shall prove to you there was not any considerable Number (that is, not twenty Men) to give any pretence of Title to this Gentleman that thus sued for this Office. But indeed in that most riotous Assembly one of them that ever was, they do pretend to be Elected: But we shall shew that for that riotous Assembly they were Convicted here as Rioters upon an Information, and fined to the King for it. And I could tell them of a like Case of an illegal Title, a Man goeth by a false Oath to get a Possession of Goods, takes out a Capias, and with others, getting into a House to arrest the Party, he then carries away all the Goods, and upon this Possession would set up a pretence of Title. But upon an Information for a Riot, he was severely punished for it. Mr. Papillon, if he had thought he had had a good Title or Cause to bring this Action, he would have employed better Instruments to have proceeded in it. The Attorney he makes use of, who is it but Mr. Goodenough? One who did not live within the City, nor had any thing to do in it, till brought into Office as the great Instrument of Mr. Bethel in his Actions, and a great Plotter in the late horrid and dreadful Conspiracy. And this Cause, how is it managed? Not by any Counsel of worthy Men of the Robe, or grave Citizens; but by a Cabal of thirty or forty Rioters, most of them in the Proclamation, proscribed as Traitors, and run away from Justice upon the Discovery of the Plot. All this speaks Malice, and the worst of Malice; the thing it self speaks it, to pretend a Title with so little or no ground. For you plainly observe, there is no Title but this riotous Assembly to ground their pretences upon. In the Prosecution of this Action, there was no Order, whatsoever they pretend, for to take an Appearance; I mean by those that really were at the bottom of the Design. For the forty Men at the Consult at Russel's, did not meet to be sure to give Order for an Appearance. No, they had other Work to do. An Appearance would not do their Work: For, as Mr. Keeling at large could explain it, they took all Opportunities to rise and make a Mutiny, and take Advantage of the Mobile and Disturbances to bring about their main Plot. They did not care five pence for the Appearance: But when the Soldiers were up, then the Plot was spoiled, and then my Lord Mayor may go home if he will. Gentlemen, We shall prove what I have opened to you, tho' I am perswaded not one of you but know it as well as I.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew the Records of the Conviction of the Riot.

L. C. J. Hold Mr. Solicitor, I tell you before hand, that as I stopped them from urging the Tryal for the Riot, as any Determination of the Right of Election, or as any ways tending to the Question now before us; So I must not let you neither enter into that matter. The Business of the Indictment, Conviction and Sentence upon the Rioters makes nothing, either to the Right of Election, or this Right of Action. And therefore, as I said to Mr. Ward, it was nothing to the Purpose to mention it on that side: So it is to no Purpose, I must tell you, to mention it on the other side. For it was no Determination of the Point of Right one way or other. And he could not give it in Evidence, that that was a Litigation of the Matter in Dispute, and upon the Decision of that Indictment (till which he apprehended he had a Right) he found it was against him, and so desisted. No, the Right I say was not at all affected by that Tryal one way or other. For admitting they had a Right, or you had a Right; yet the gaining your Right must not be attempted in a wrongful manner; but they had a lawful Way to come by their Right; and if they pursued that, well and good; if not, then they must take what comes of it.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, that Right was insisted on by them as the probable ground of their Action, and that we say was no Right.

L. C. J. Therefore it is to no Purpose to urge it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But, my Lord, with Submission, our Answer to their Title is, That there was no Colour of Pretence, and this Conviction proves it.

L. C. J. No, Mr. Solicitor, that is not any Evidence one way or other.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If your Lordship please, it destroys their very Title, which is the Number of the Poll.

L. C. J. Lord! the thing is as plain, Gentlemen, as any thing can be. You or they may have a good Title, and yet do a thing that is unlawful to bring the Title into Possession. But then the punishing you for that unlawful Act, is not an Evidence, either against or for the Title, nor doth determine it for you, or against you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we submit to your Lordship's Directions in it. But then this we say to it; the Question now is reduced to this Point: Whether there were any probable Cause for the Defendant's Suit against the Plaintiff? They have insisted upon it that there was, from two grounds. They call Witnesses, who declare they were of Opinion, that the Defendant had the Right of Election by the holding up of the Hands. That is one of the probable Causes of their Suit. Now that is clearly gone by this single Point, whether the Election was determined upon that holding up of the Hands, or they went to a Poll to decide it? If they went to a Poll, then it is clear the Right of Election was not determined; and he could have no Right to be Sheriff upon the holding up of the Hands. Then they went a little further, and offered in Evidence the Sheriff's Poll-books, or the Numbers taken out of them; wherein they say, the Majority was for Mr. Papillon; and so thereupon, say they, we brought our Action. Now, to that Objection it is proper for us, with Submission, my Lord, to answer it, that that can be no manner of Cause of Action in the World; because, say we, that was no Part of the Election at all, nor was it at all to govern the Question of Right one way nor other; 'twas a Number of Names taken out of the regular Course upon Elections by Persons that had no legal Authority; nor was it such a Method, as was a Foundation to ground any Opinion upon one way or other; much less, such a one, as would be a Cause of Action. These are all the grounds they went upon. The first, by their own shewing, was no ground at all; for there was no Determination of the Right upon the View, but a Poll was agreed upon: The other, we shall call Witnesses to prove was irregular, and so not legal. Swear Mr. Town-Clerk.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account, who is to govern the Poll upon the Election of Sheriffs, or other Officers at the Common-Hall?

Mr. Town Clerk. My Lord, I never knew a Poll about Sheriffs till about five or six Years ago, and that was the first Poll that ever I knew, and it was between Mr. Jenks and Sir Simon Lewis; and indeed, it was the first that ever I did read of in any time within the City of London. I think, I have seen the Entry of all the Elections of Sheriffs, that are extant in our Books in all times; and I think, I did never see in any of those Entries one Poll that was ever taken for Sheriffs; it is only mentioned, Such an one elected by the Mayor, by Prerogative; and such an one, by the Commonalty. Among other Books of the City's, there is an old Book, that is called by the Name of Liber Albus, which, speaking of the Constitution of the Common-Hall for Election of Sheriffs, says, First of all the Mayor shall chuse one of the Sheriffs for London and Middlesex, for whom he will answer; and then the Commonalty shall chuse another to join with him, for whom they will answer. And if there arise any Difference between them, who is elected, or not elected, it shall be determined in the same manner, as it is in Common-Council. This is all the Notice, that I find in any of the City-Books, that looks like a deciding the Election, when disputed, by a Poll. Now in another Chapter of that Book where the Common-Council is mentioned; it is said, If there be any Division of Opinions in the Common-Council, the Common-Serjeant and the Town-Clerk, shall examine every Man severally, what their Opinion is, which is by way of Poll at this Day when we had a Common-Council. But till that time that the Poll was between Mr. Jenks and Sir Simon Lewis, I never knew any Poll for Sheriffs, and that Poll was taken immediately by telling one and the other. For my Lord Mayor and Aldermen as soon as ever they come upon the Hustings, make Proclamation to have the Liveries attend for such Elections; and then withdraw and leave the Sheriffs and the Common Serjeant.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir, the Course is very well known, I suppose, to the Gentlemen of the Jury. But pray, did any Persons poll at my Lord Mayor's Books for Dubois and Papillon?

Mr. Town-Clerk. Not that I know. As to this Poll, my Lord Mayor caused the Common-Hall to be adjourned to such a Time ; and after that sent for the Common Serjeant, and my self, and required us to go get Books, to take the Poll for Mr. Box, Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois ; as for Sir Dudley North, he was not to be Polled for, he being chosen before, by the Prerogative of the Lord Mayor, and my Lord Mayor and Aldermen declared him fully Elected, and upon that he was called out by publick Proclamation upon the Hustings, to come and take the Office upon him, as is usual in such Cases. But we had Directions to provide Books to take the Poll for Mr. Box, Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois ; and we did so, and took the Poll for these three Gentlemen, and upon closing of the Poll, we all of us sealed up our Books, and delivered them to my Lord Mayor ; and at a Common-Hall afterwards, he did declare Mr. Box to be chosen the other Sheriff, to be joined with Sir Dudley North : The Poll was, as it always ought to be, by the Direction of my Lord Mayor ; and the Sheriffs are but Officers, and not the Judges and Managers of the Poll, without my Lord Mayor's Direction.

L. C. J. What say you to it, Gentlemen ? Have you any more Evidence ?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, and Gentlemen, Here has been much said in this Cause that is nothing to the Purpose. As particularly, that which the Plaintiff's Counsel did last insist upon, who took the Poll, and who had right to take the Poll or not, is not any thing to this Question : This Action is not at all concerned in that matter. For whatsoever the Dispute was, and which soever had the right (and because it was a Dispute, some it may be could not poll at the one, and others would not poll at the other) yet the lifting up of two Thousand Hands, might make him think that he was chosen Sheriff ; and there lies the Cause of his Action, his apprehension of a Right : Your Lordship did object this to us, Who ever before brought such an Action as ours, and did sue to be Sheriff of London, a Place of Charge and Trouble ? —

L. C. J. No, I did not make it as any Objection. I asked your Witness Cornish, that Question indeed, for some Reasons that I know.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. That may be objected indeed to the Prudence of my Client, Mr. Papillon, to desire such an Office : But that proves nothing of Malice in him against the Plaintiff ; for if he were never so unwise as to desire it, if he had a Right to it, or thought he had, it is not a malicious thing in the Eye of the Law, for him to take his Legal Course for it ; and then the Objection that is made of the Instruments that were used. Our Attorney Goodenough is in a Plot : What is that to us ? There is not the least Suspicion upon us. He is a bad Man : But that doth not make all his Clients bad. But the Question now before you is, First, Whether there were any probability of a Cause of Action. Secondly, If there were not a probable Cause ; yet whether that Action was grounded upon Malice ? What Malice I pray is there in this against my Lord Mayor, to desire an Appearance of him, when it is conceived, though upon mistake, that there is Cause of Action against him ? We did not press him to give us Bail to our Action, or threaten else to arrest him : No, it was a decent rather than an irreverent Application to him. If then there be not both concurring, want of Title, or probable Cause and Malice too, this

Vol. III.

Action of the Plaintiff's is without ground. No Man that has any Sense, if he knows he has a clear Title against him, will bring an Action ; but though it should be clear against him, yet if he do bring an Action, but not vexatiously and maliciously, that cannot subject him to an Action ; that would frighten Men from bringing Actions upon doubtful Matters, which certainly is lawful for any Man to do. Now what Malice is proved in the Defendant against the Plaintiff, the Jury here are Judges of. If we were Criminal in the manner of our Proceedings, they might come before your Lordship in another way ; but sure this is not the way ; and if it should be actionable, and we likewise subject to be punished as a Criminal, then we should suffer twice for the same Fault. Now, Gentlemen, upon this Action we are not to be fined ; but they, if they can, are to shew what Damages the Plaintiff sustained by our Action ; and if what we have said do not satisfy you, that we had probable Reason for what we did, then you upon your Oaths, are to give him what Damages you in your Consciences think he has received by it.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, if your Lordship please, I would ask one Question of Mr. Town-Clerk, as to the Right of managing the Election. Sir, You have observed many Common Halls for Elections.

Mr. Town-Clerk. Yes, Sir, I have for this twelve Years.

Mr. Williams. Did the Common-Hall ever go to a Poll upon an Election, before this time, that you know of ?

Mr. Town-Clerk. Never but once for the Election of Sheriffs, I say.

Mr. Williams. I speak, Sir, of any sort of Poll ; for I suppose you do not call the holding up of Hands a Poll.

Mr. Town-Clerk. Mr. Jenks's Poll was the first that ever I knew for Sheriffs.

Mr. Williams. Well, Sir, Was that managed by the Sheriffs, or by my Lord Mayor, or by you, and the Common Serjeant ; or who was it by ?

Mr. Town Clerk. Sir, The Mayor and Aldermen withdraw, and leave the Sheriffs to view the Election by the Hands ; and the Common Serjeant propounds the Question, So many of you as will have, &c. —

Mr. Williams. By whose Direction doth he propound the Question, pray ?

Mr. Town-Clerk. By the Direction of the Common-Hall, I take it.

Mr. Williams. But if a Question do arise upon an Election, so that it cannot be decided by the view, but they go to a Poll, Who is to manage that Poll ?

Mr. Town Clerk. The Officers of the City, by Direction of the Lord Mayor.

Mr. Williams. That Poll you speak of, for Lewis and Jenks, Was that managed by any body but by the Sheriffs ?

Mr. Town-Clerk. It was managed by the Sheriffs and the Common Serjeant, in the accustomed manner.

Mr. Williams. How ! in the accustomed manner, when you say that was the first that ever you knew ?

Mr. Town Clerk. It was so for Sheriffs ; but there have been Polls for other Officers.

L. C. J. Why Mr. Williams, every body knows that well enough, that the Sheriffs are concerned in the management of the Election or the Poll, as all the rest of the Officers of the City are, under my Lord Mayor, and the Common Serjeant consults with the Sheriffs Officers and People about him, upon the view.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, do you remember the Election of Mr. Bethel, and Mr. Cornish?

Mr. Town Clerk. Yes, Sir, There was a Poll there too, that was the Year after.

Mr. Williams. Who managed that Poll?

Mr. Town Clerk. The Sheriffs, and the Common Serjeant, and I, did agree to take it thus in two Books, whereof one was with the one Sheriff, and the other with the other Sheriff, at the two ends of the Hall.

Mr. Williams. That was taken in Writing, Sir, Was it not?

Mr. Town Clerk. Yes, Sir, That other of Jenks was only by telling.

Mr. Williams. Were you concerned in taking that Poll?

Mr. Town Clerk. I did assist at it one Day.

Mr. Williams. Who ordered you to take the Poll that Day?

Mr. Town Clerk. Truly, I did concern my self as little as I could in those Things: What Report was made to the Court of Aldermen, I cannot tell; but one Day coming into the Hall, I had no mind to concern my self in it; but some Gentlemen, did pray me to go up to the Poll; and I did go up.

Mr. Williams. Sir, upon your Oath, Did the Sheriffs direct you to take it?

Mr. Town Clerk. I really think they did not.

Mr. Williams. Did my Lord Mayor direct you?

Mr. Town Clerk. No, Sir.

Mr. Williams. Did the Sheriffs manage it?

Mr. Common Serj. I did it by Sir Robert Clayton's Order, who was then Lord Mayor.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, all that we say to it is this, We are not now proving our Right upon which we brought our Action, that we submit unto, it is against us, we must agree it: But be the Right one way, or other; yet we might from a supposed Right, have a probable Cause of Action. It seems to be a doubtful Business, by all that Mr. Town Clerk has said, who has the Right, for all he knows of the Constitution, is from Liber Albus, and that is somewhat dark. You, Gentlemen, hear what is said; the Thing was a Question of five or six Days, and a puzzling one it seems, and therefore we might be misled into an apprehension, that what the Sheriffs did was right, and so not at all concern our selves with what my Lord Mayor did. —

L. C. J. Mr. Williams, you talk of that you do not understand; for my Lord Mayor was not there at that time of Jenks's Poll: I was Common Serjeant my self, and I know the Sheriffs have nothing to do with it.

Mr. Williams. It should seem by Mr. Town Clerk to be doubtful, sometimes one, and sometimes another did direct the taking of the Poll.

L. C. J. But you are out still: But for all that, this is nothing to your Right of Action, one way or other.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I must lay it here, it was a doubtful Thing, and we brought our Action to try the Right; but afterwards conceiving we were out, and had no Right, we discontinued and desisted.

L. C. J. It was so far from being their Right, that I desire you to call me any one Witness, that can say, before Jenks's time, there was ever a Poll for Sheriffs, or such a thing thought of.

Mr. Williams. We were under an apprehension of a Right in them.

L. C. J. There could be no Colour for any such apprehension in the World.

Mr. Williams. We must submit it to your Lordship's Directions.

Mr. At. Gen. So do we.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Whether this Action brought by us, was malicious.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, Mr. Attorney doth challenge the Defendant, to shew that his Action was brought by advice of Counsel; we shall shew it was with good Authority of Counsel.

Mr. Baker. can you tell whether it was by any Advice, and whose?

Mr. Baker. It was by the Advice of Mr. Thompson, Mr. Pollexfen and Mr. Wallap, as I have heard.

Mr. At. Gen. But you hear what Keeling says, there was a Party that were at a Consult about it, and that were concerned in it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We have done on both Sides, I think, and submit to your Lordship's Direction in it.

L. C. J. Will any of you say any thing more?

Mr. Williams. No, my Lord, we have done, we leave it upon this Evidence to your Lordship and the Jury.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We have no more to say for the Plaintiff.

L. C. J. Then, Gentlemen of the Jury, as my Brother Maynard said in the beginning of his Defence in this Cause; so I say now to you, to set all Things strait and right; God forbid, that any heat or transport of the Times, should bring us into that Condition, but that every Subject of the King's that hath a right of bringing an Action at Law against another, should have free Liberty so to do. And the Courts of Justice are now, and I hope always will be so open, that every one that would take a Remedy prescribed by the Law for a Wrong done him, may be received to bring his Action, which is a legal Remedy.

And I am to tell you, Gentlemen, that much has been said in this Case (which I perceive is by the Concourse of People a Cause of great Expectation as my Brother likewise said) which is not at all to the Case. I am sorry truly at this time of Day, that we should stand in need of such Causes as these, to settle and keep People in their due Bounds and Limits. But though many Things have been said in the Case that are quite besides the natural Question; yet, they having been made Dependancies upon that Question, and because it seems to be a Case of such Expectation, I think it will become me in the Place wherein I am, to say something to you, and according to the best of my Understanding, tell you what I apprehend to be the legal Part of it, stripped of what hath no Relation at all to it. And if I shall omit any thing that is material on the one Side or the other, there are Gentlemen that are learned in the Law, who who are, of Counsel both for the Plaintiff and the Defendant; and I shall not think my self under any sort of Prejudice in the World, if they take the liberty, as they may freely do, to interrupt me and enmind me of what I forget, or wherein I may mistake.

For, Gentlemen, I assure you for my own part, I would not have the Law made subservient to any Purpose, but the exact Rule of Justice. I would to the best of my understanding in all Cases servare jus illasum, preserve the Law and the Right of every Man inviolable. I would have the Law of the Land to be the Measure of my own and all other Men's Actions. And I hope no Man can justly (I am sure I do not know they can) complain of any Breach or Invasion that is made in the Courts of Justice, either upon Law or Right. But all those that have the Administration of Justice committed to them by the Government, do behave themselves with all Equity and Impartiality towards all the King's Subjects; And the Law has as full and free a Course, and Justice doth every where take place as much as can be desired by any honest and good Man.

Gentlemen, In this Case that you now are to try, I must first of all tell you, that this Business of the Right of Election one way and the other, hath been too much insisted on on both sides. And I speak it, because tho' I my self in my own mind know what of it is true, and what not; yet I conceive it not so proper to be mentioned in this Case, it being no legal Evidence to the Point in question. Now it is a Duty incumbent upon you to observe; and upon the Court to suffer nothing to be urged so as to have any weight with you, but what is legal Evidence. That you are only to mind, Gentlemen. So that if I mention to you any Point of Fact that hath not been given in Evidence, as having a true Relation to this Issue, you are not to mind what I say to you about it. On the other side, I must likewise acquaint you, if there be any Difficulty in Point of Law in the Case; you are to observe the Directions of the Court, who will be always ready to assist and direct you in it. Or the Gentlemen that are of Counsel on the one side, or the other may have the Matter found; specially, if they think there is Fact enough to be found to ground a Question upon.

Therefore, Gentlemen, for the Customs of the City of London; As to the manner of Elections, or who hath the Right to manage them, they are not at all material to this Business; and if they were, there is never a one of you but know it as well as we or any body doth. I my self had the Honour to serve the City of London in the Places of Common-Serjeant and Recorder several Years: So long ago, that not above one or two that sit upon the Bench in the Court of Aldermen have been longer conversant in Guild-hall, or know the Customs of London in those matters better than I do.

It is notoriously known to all that have had any Dealing in London, or been acquainted with any thing there, that till within these six or seven Years last past, the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen, and the Common Hall used to go a birding for Sheriffs, (you very well know what the Phrase means) and perhaps it was not once in ten times, that those that were chosen Sheriffs, held; but generally every Year there were I know not how many Elections upon fining off, or swearing, or some reason or other; so that now and then there was but one Sheriff chosen for a great while together; and now and then never a one from Midsummer-day till near Michaelmas. And the way was, to consider, such a one hath most Money in his Pocket; Oh, then put him up for Sheriff: And then, if he went off, then another would be found out. And there was one old Deputy Savage, that used to keep a black Book that would furnish Names for I know not how many Elections. And who should be Sheriff, so as to divide into Parties, and Poll, was never a Question before such time as Mr. Jenks that they speak of came to be put up, and there the Dispute began; then the Faction began to appear.

Now, if any Man offers to tell me, I apprehended always it was the Sheriff's Right to manage the Poll; I would ask him how that can be a Right that never was done before? Let them shew me any one Instance of a Poll for Sheriffs before that time. No, it was notoriously known when the Polls began, Persons did not think the Shrievalty such an Office, that it was so earnestly to be coveted and desired. Polls indeed used to be heretofore for the Bridgemasters Places, that are Places of Profit and Advantage; and so for Aleconners and the like, those have been often in your Time and mine, Gentlemen, we may very well remember them. But this Office of Sheriff, People were not heretofore so ambitious of as to poll for it; but the City was glad if they could get any worthy and fit Person to accept of it.

And for the Management of the Election, we all can tell the manner of it as well as any thing in the World. After my Lord Mayor and the Aldermen were gone off the Hustings and retired to this Place, the Common-Serjeant staying there with the Sheriffs, used to make a Speech to the Common Hall, a Rehearsal of what had been before said by the Recorder; and then received the Nomination of such Persons as were to be put to the Question for Election from the Common Hall. And upon the putting of the Question, every Man held up his Hand for those that he desired should be chosen; and if it could be decided by view of the Hands, well and good; and the Common Serjeant consulting with the Sheriffs and those about him, declared their Opinion, that the Election fell so and so, on the one side or on the other; but if doubtful, or a Poll demanded by any one; then they used to acquaint my Lord Mayor what was done in the Common Hall; and thereupon they gave Order for declaring the Election, or granting the Poll, and used to come down to the Hustings for that purpose; and no one ever thought that either the Common-Serjeant or the Sheriffs, or any body else but my Lord Mayor had the Power of those Courts. For the Common Hall was always summoned by Precept from the Lord Mayor, and when the Business was done, or was to be put off to another Day, the Common Cryer by Command from the Lord Mayor makes Proclamation, You good Men of the Livery, &c. may depart for this time, and give your Attendance here again such a Day, or upon further Summons. No body ever talked of summoning a Common Hall by any body but my Lord Mayor. He did it by virtue of his Office, and he dissolved it, or adjourned it by virtue of his Office. All this is as notoriously known to all Men that know any thing of London, as the Faces of you of the Jury are to the People here, or to one another. And this never came to be a Question, till the Business of the Poll between Sir Simon Lewis and Jenks came about, which you have heard of. Mr. Papillon himself, when he was chosen Sheriff before, and fined for it, was chosen in this manner and no other.

Mr. Cornish, he comes and gives Evidence that the Common Serjeant was reckoned to be the Man that managed the Choice by Command and Direction of the Sheriffs. And some of those Gentlemen, that have been produced on the Defendant's side, they say, they have looked upon it as the Sheriff's Business. But alas-a-day it belongs to neither of them, they are but Officers to the Lord Mayor. The Common Serjeant's Business is but to put the Question into the Mouth of the Common Cryer. In so much, that when I my self was Common Serjeant, as I used to pass by the Shops in London, they used to cry, There goes So many of you as would have. It was as plain a Road of things, that every body knew it before these things untowardly have come to be imbrangled by our Factions and Divisions, and the Heat of some busy Fellows. Here are a great many ancient Citizens, that I see that know, and so you do all, Gentlemen, that this is true. So that all the Discourse of this Matter is but Flourish and Garniture, and doth not affect this Case at all one way or other.

Another thing, Gentlemen, hath been mightily talked of, and urged and insisted upon both by Plaintiff and Defendant; and that is the Defendant's Right, or not Right of Election to the Office of Sheriff, and that the majority was on his side, say his Counsel: On the other side, say the Plaintiff's Counsel. And for the settling that Right, he brought his Action against the Plaintiff; but it being determined upon the Conviction for the Riot. There is no such thing, Gentlemen, as that it was therein determined: That cannot be a Determination of any Right at all. For tho' I may have a Right to an Office, or any such thing; yet I must pursue a legal Method to attain to that Right, and not go irregular Ways to work.

As if I have a Right to come into your House, because you have not paid me your Rent, (to make my Thoughts and Meaning intelligible to you by a familiar Instance, which will shew what I intend) I must not make a Riot, and turn you by Violence out of Possession. For I have a legal Course to come by my Right; to wit, by bringing an Action and evicting you. But if any Man attempt to get a Right in an unjust manner, and he be punished for it by an Indictment or Information, that, I say, doth not determine the Question of Right one way or other.

To come then to the Issue that here you are to try, the Point of this Action before us resolves it self into a narrow Compass, and is only this in short, which you are to enquire of, Whether or no the Plaintiff was arrested by the Defendant without probable Cause, and maliciously?

Now matters of Malice are things that remain in a Man's Heart, and it is impossible for me to discover whether another Man hath a Malice against me, if I do not see it in his Actions. Malice being a thing that is internal, is not else discernible.

Therefore you must consider the Circumstances that do attend this Action of the Defendant, and if so be they are malicious, then you are to find for the Plaintiff: But if they for the Defendant have offered to you any Circumstances that can prove or convince you, that he had any Probability of a Cause of Action, and that not attended with a malicious Prosecution of that probable Cause, then the Issue is with the Defendant.

This is the right Question, and the Law of this Action; and the Fact to make it out one way or other is now in Judgment before you, upon the Evidence that hath been given on both sides.

Now, in point of Law, I am to tell you, and that you must observe, That tho' I have a probable conjectural Cause of Action against another Man; yet if, to obtain my End in that, I prosecute him maliciously, with a Design to ruin him, or to put an Indignity upon him, or the Character he bears in the Publick, or put a Hardship or Difficulty upon him (I mean Hardship and Difficulty in point of time) when it is probable the Remedy may be had at another time, and the same thing done with less Injury and less Trouble; then an Action will lie against me, for bringing my Action in such a manner; tho' it be true, that I had a conjectural Cause of Action against him.

As in the Case that was here in this Court the other Day, of Mr. Swinnock against the Serjeant, that came to him and told him in his Ear, that he had an Action against him, and this was upon the Exchange; thereupon Mr. Swinnock brings his Action for this against this Man, for whispering this in his Ear: If he had proved any malicious Intention to disgrace him, no doubt the Action would have lien. For tho' there might be a Cause of Action against Swinnock; yet if that be maliciously pursued to get him arrested, and held to Bail, where no Bail is required by Law; or with an intent to disgrace him upon the Exchange, when it might have been done elsewhere, or at another time, this irregular malicious Proceeding will bear an Action. The pursuing malicious ways to obtain a Right, makes a Man obnoxious to the Action of the Party so prosecuted. I desire to express my self by Words, that may declare my Meaning as plainly as can be: And I hope I do so.

Then, Gentlemen, taking it thus as the Counsel for the Plaintiff say, to shew that the Defendant had no probable Cause of Action against the Plaintiff; they endeavour to answer what is alledged on the other side, as their probable Cause. And therefore that we must consider first what is said by the Defendant.

They tell you, here was an Election for Sheriffs of London at Guild-hall, where those Persons that they have nominated, were Candidates, and put in Nomination for that Office. And upon that Nomination, as say those three Witnesses; we were the Persons that had the majority of Voices, and thereupon we apprehended our our selves chosen, which gave us the Right of Action : So the Defendant, say they, sheweth some Probability of a Cause of Action ; and if he have not pursued it with Malice, but in a regular way, the Probability of the Cause doth take off from the Malice, that else the very bringing of an Action without Cause would imply in it self. And they say true, for I must repeat it again ; if I have prima facie, a probable Cause, and pursue it legally, no Action will lye against me for it.

But then say they on the other side for the Plaintiff, That is no probable Cause ; for you could from those Transactions have no such Apprehensions of a Right ; for that is not the measure of a Right of Election, or a Rule to guess who is elected by : For there being no Decision of the Election upon the holding up of the Hands, and a Poll being demanded, whereas the usual method is to have by the Lord Mayor's Order and Direction, the Poll taken by such as he shall appoint ; you went another way to work, you go your ways and take Books to your selves, and come not to the fair Determination of the Question : And they bring Mr. Town-Clerk to prove. You have heard what the Evidence is, and you are Judges of it.

Now take it, that this were in the Case of an Office of Profit ; as suppose it were a Question between me and John a Styles, for the Place of Bridgemaister, for the purpose, and a Poll is demanded, and granted ; if they that have no Authority shall go after the Court is adjourned by him that has Power, and take a Number of Names in the way of a Poll by themselves, and upon that come and say, J. S. has four and twenty hundred, and I have but so many ; that sure is not any probable Cause, nor a Right ; for you have gone here out of the known and usual method of such Matters, and depend upon that which can give no Foundation of Right at all. This is the Answer that is given to that by the Counsel for the Plaintiff.

You may have fifty thousand Names for you after that rate, and yet not to be Elected, nor have probable Cause of any such Apprehension. We all remember Sir Samuel Sterling's Case, which was upon the Denial of a Poll for a Place of Profit, that is to say, the Bridgemaister's Place : But this is upon a wrong Poll.

Suppose there had been a Poll granted (as there was) in this Case, and upon that Poll thus managed, Sir Dudley North and Mr. Box had had the majority but by a very few, and there had been an Action brought in such a Case ; here was a probable Cause as good as in this Case, as it now stands, because some of them might happen not to have legal Suffrages ; yet the taking the Poll by Persons of their own Heads, after the Court was adjourned, avoids all : so that that would have signified nothing. You are to consider of this Answer of theirs.

Then the great thing, Gentlemen, that you are to observe, is this : To bring an Action alone, will scarce amount to a Proof of Malice ; therefore Malice being in this Issue a great Point of Fact, you must weigh the Evidence whether the Circumstances do shew it, that there was Malice in Mr. Papillon. If the Circumstances are enough to amount to a Proof of Malice, you then are to find for the Plaintiff ; and you are the Judges what Damages it is fit to give him for that Injury : He has laid Ten Thousand Pounds ; but you must do what you that are Judges of it think fit in it.

Come, Gentlemen, it is best to be plain ; and no Man needs to be thought wanting of an Apprehension, what is the meaning of all these things. It is commonly and universally known to all Mankind :

First, That no Man ever did pursue such an Action as this is, to be Sheriff, till these unhappy Times wherein we are, and wherein we have lost that Quiet and Felicity, which I pray God we may be restored unto. And tho' it is true, a Man may lawfully sue for such an Office, and it is no Offence ; yet it looks somewhat extraordinary, and that a Man has a mind to do something unusual in the Place ; 'tis for some strange purpose or other, especially when a Man has sined for the Office once before, as we all know Mr. Papillon did.

Again, It is notoriously known, That for several Years last past, the Government hath been beset : And that which is a baser Thing than ever was thought of, or acted in the highest times of Villany in these Kingdoms (I mean those of the late Rebellion) the very Methods of Justice have been corrupted, and all to serve the main Design of subverting the Government.

Gentlemen, This is so black a Wickedness, that no honest Man that has any Sense of Loyalty, Religion, or common Justice, but must tremble at the very thoughts of it : When we see such Fellows as are obnoxious to the Government, known Dissenters from the Established Worship, and that never thought of conforming to the Government, or the Laws Civil or Ecclesiastical, or complying with the Church, but only to capacitate them to destroy it ; nay, when Men that are taken notice of to be common Reproaches to the Government under which they live, shall get into Office to make Ignoramus Furies, and to enable People to commit and be guilty of all the Falsties and Basenesses that Human Nature is capable of ; no Man living, that has any Ingenuity or Goodness in him, but must cry out against it.

When Men begin to take Oaths to sanctify Villany, and enter into Clans and Clubs, and Cabals, to destroy the most Merciful of Kings, and to disturb, distract, and overthrow the best of Governments, What shall we say ? And all this you, All of you, Gentlemen, know to be true. Was it not more safe to commit Treason in the City, than to sit upon a Bench of Justice to bring the Traitors to Judgment ? Was it not more safe to Conspire the Death of the King and his Brother, than to give the least Frown or Look of Displeasure against one of these snivelling Saints ? Did not we know that Men were sanctified to be Jury-men, to enquire of Conspiracies against the King's Life and Government, that before that time were never thought fit to be trusted with the common Discourses or Society of honest Men ?

When Men were thought fittest for Offices of such high Trust, according to their being thought capable of, and well-intended to the overthrow of the Government : Do not we all know this to be as true, as that the Sun shines at Noon-day ? When Traitors at the Bar were in less danger of being convicted of their Treasons, than the Judges were of their Lives ?

Mr. Papillon knows all this to be true eminently. When pack'd Juries were grown to that height, that though seven or eight Witnesses came and swore positive down-right Treason, the Traitor could not be by these Men so much as thought fit to be accused by an Indictment; to that Stupidity in Villany were Things brought by these Fellows: Nay, so far were the Proceedings in Courts of Justice tainted, that in no common Action whatsoever that came here to be Tried, but cropp'd Hair, and a demure Look were the best Signs of a good Evidence; and the Business of an Oath signified nothing, provided the Party were to be prop'd up, and the Faction to receive an Advantage by it.

For God's sake, Gentlemen, let any Man but seriously consider and believe that there is a God in Heaven, and a dreadful Day of Judgment, when every one of us must answer for every Thought of our Hearts, every Word of our Mouths, and every Action of our Lives; and then tell me what horrid Impieties these are, such as any ordinary ingenuous Person would blush and tremble at.

And I would have Mr. Cornish to consider, whether ever till that Time of famous, or rather infamous Memory, that he and his Fellow-Sheriff Mr. Bethel came into that Office, there were ever in London such Things as Tavern>Returns of Juries, or Clans and Cabals how to pack Fellows together, for such wicked Purposes as these?

Do not most of you here know this? And doth not every one of your Hearts and Consciences agree with me in it? How far unlike the Proceedings of those Times, in reference to Juries, were from what they anciently were? I have had the Honour to practice in this Place among you in my Profession, when without any disturbance or mixture of Faction and Sedition, we were all quiet, and every one knew his Duty; and Justice was done in this Place so regularly, that it was grown to a common Proverb, if there were any Cause of any Difficulty, they would use to say to one another, Come, we will be so fair with you, as to try it by a London Jury. So far was it then from being thought, that in the City of London, Justice should be corrupted, that the Ordinary Juries of London were thought the best Judges, and most impartial of any in the Kingdom. I appeal to all the Practicers of those Times that hear me, if what I say be not true.

But when once they had begun to pick and cull the Men that should be returned for a Purpose, and got this Factionous Fellow out of one Corner, and that pragmatical, prick'd ear'd, snivelling, whining Rascal, out of another Corner, to prop up the Cause, and serve a Turn; then truly Peoples Causes were Tried according to the Demureness of the Looks on the one Side or the other, not the Justice of the Cause.

Gentlemen, I take my self bound to tell you of these Things, and I wish I had no reason for it; and especially in this Case I should not do it, it being a private Action between Man and Man, were it not for the Ingredients that are in the Case, and that any Man that has any Sense may perceive.

Now then for this Case before you, Gentlemen, I desire if possible to be satisfied in one Thing or two: My Lord Mayor of London, it is true, is not, nor no Person whatsoever, be he of never so great Quality, is exempt from the Law: If he owe any Man any thing, he is bound to answer it to him, as much as any the meanest Citizen of London, or poorest Subject the King has: But is he to be arrested just at such a Time, because he is chief Governor of the City, and the Action will sound the greater? And the Court of Aldermen, are they to be arrested, because they are his Ministers, and necessary subservient Assistants to him in his Government, in a such time as this was, when the Government both in the City and elsewhere, was surrounded with Difficulties, and in great Danger on all Sides? What occasion was there for such hast and speed in this Action to be done just then? Would Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois have starved, if this Action had been suspended for a while? Sir William Pritchard would have been as answerable to this, or any Man's Action, when the Year of his Office had been out: But it carrieth Vengeance and Malice in the very face of it; it speaks, that therefore they would do it, because he was then Lord Mayor, the chief Person in the City for the Time; and thereby they should affront the Government, in arresting and imprisoning the King's Lieutenant, in one of the highest Places both of Trust and Honour. And this would be sure to make a great noise, and the Triumph of the Action would make their Party then to be uppermost, having got the chief Governour of the City in their own Clutches.

Nay, and because they would be sure their Malice and Revenge should take place, they take the very Scoundrels of the Party to be employed in this great Work. For before that time, the Coroner (as he tells you himself) used to make his Warrants to the Officers that usually are versed in that Business; but here he must have the Direction of the Attorney, and who is that but Goodenough, a Man we have all heard enough of; and then Burleigh and Keeling must be employed; and by whose Advice, but by Goodenough's and Nelbors's? And all these Rascals, who now stand attainted of Treason, must be fetched in to consult about a fit Man to make an Arrest. And there they pitch upon this Man Keeling for one, who was one of the principal Conspirators in that damnable, hellish Plot against the King's Life, and that of his Royal Brother; but by the Blessing and Providence of Almighty God, was made use of as a great Instrument of preserving those precious Lives, and with them our Government and Religion, and all that is dear to us, which by that Conspiracy was undermined; and I wish we had not Reason to say, and think the Conspiracy still to be going on. But I hope in God, the Government, as established both in Church and State, will always be able to prevail, maugre all Designs, and those that are engaged in them for its Destruction.

Now Keeling tells you he scrupled the Employment; No, said he, I desired not to have my Name put in, because I was never concerned in any such Thing before, and my Business was of another Sort. But then, Mr. Goodenough (and Mr. Brome the Coroner no doubt had a Hand in it, though now he has a very treacherous Memory, and has forgot all that was done) comes and tells him, you must concern your self, and do this thing ; for you have a Trade with the Party, and it will be ill taken if you do not do it. And being asked whom he meant by the Party ? He tells you, the discontented Party, and he explains their Discontent to be such, that they would have killed the King and the Duke. Now how far he was engaged with that Party is pretty well known ; and therefore if he boggled at such a thing as this, which that Party it seems was engaged in, they would suspect him ; and so, for the Parties sake he was drawn in.

But then, when this Thing is done ; Pray, Gentlemen, do but consider what the Consequences might have been, and which perhaps (nay upon what has happened to be discovered since, doubtless) they did design it. But God be thanked, those Consequences were prevented, and they themselves have Cause to be thankful to God Almighty for it. For here all the Magistrates of the City, that had any Care for the good Government of it, were to be taken up ; and then, here was a Body without a Head, a Town full of Faction without any Government ; and if the heady Rabble had been once up, without those that had Authority to restrain them, where then had been your Liberties or Properties, Gentlemen, or any Man's ; Nay, theirs that were engaged in this Design, if they had any, for those were Things much talked of by them ? In what Danger had you, and all you had, for Life, Estate, Relations, and every thing been ? But it pleased God in his infinite Mercy to shewre down upon us, and upon this City, and the Government, in a mighty Preservation, putting it into the Hearts of some in Power, to bring the City Militia some of them together, and prevent this Mischief ; or else God knows, this whole City might have been by this time once more in Ashes, and most of the King's Subjects wallowing in their own and one another's Blood. And their Party too would have felt the sad Effects of it, no doubt, as well as others. So that the Consequence of it was to destroy the Government, and that appears by the Parties being engaged in it ; it could not be to gain a Right, to make this Hubbub, and Ado to arrest the Magistrates of the City ; and then take Advantage for some other wicked Purpose.

Another Point of Circumstance, that is considerable in this Case, is the particular Persons that were to be sued. The Mandamus, that was directed to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen ; and there is a Return made, not by this, or that, or the other Man, but in the Name of them all, the whole Court. How comes it then to pass, that my Lord Mayor, Sir Henry Tulse, and those other Gentlemen, must be sued and arrested ; but I warrant you, Mr. Cornish, or his Party, were not to be meddled with ? No, he had so much Zeal for Justice, and to do the Defendant Right, that if he should have been called upon to appear, he would not have stood out an Arrest ; so just a Man he is, and such a lover of Right without all doubt ; but he was in no danger I dare say, they loved one another too well to sue one another. That, I say, Gentlemen, is another Circumstance, that carrieth Malice in it. For I must tell you, these Things cannot be smothered, they are as apparent as the Light. And though it falls to my Turn in this Cause, to enmind you of them ; yet, they are as well known to you all, as the Passages in your own Families.

No, Gentlemen, there was not a Pursuit of Right in the Case ; it was a designed Piece of Villany, on purpose to affront the Government ; nay, to destroy it, and set us all together by the Ears. And if he were ten thousand times Mr. Papillon, I would and must tell him so ; and if it were not for some such devilish End and Purpose, he would never have been so greedy of an Office, he had before declined and fined for ; and which he was only called to by a turbulent, seditious, factious Party, that had further Aims in it. Otherwise, I know Mr. Papillon's Humour so well, that I am confident, he would much rather have been contented to sit in his Counting-house, than in Guild Hall in a Scarlet Gown. Alack-a-day, I know Mr. Papillon knows how to spend his Time to better Advantage to himself.

Ay, but say the Counsel for the Defendant, We did go on very tenderly and civilly, and respectfully ; for there met at Mr. Cornish's House, Who, I pray ? Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois, and Goodenough, the prime Attorney in this Cause : And there, forsooth, they tell Goodenough, be sure you do nothing, but what is exactly according to Law ; and be sure you carry it very civilly and respectfully to my Lord Mayor, good Mr. Goodenough. Alack-a-day, how wonderful pious and considerate these People are ! If Mr. Cornish had gone to my Lord Mayor, as it was his Duty to do, being then an Alderman, (we know it full well) and said to my Lord Mayor, there were such Persons at my House talking of such a matter, and I come to advertise you of it, and desire you would consider of it, he had shewn his Piety and Zeal, and Love for Justice, much more in that than in admitting such Cabals in his House. But we know very well, as well as if we were in them, that they must go hand in hand in all these seditious and factious Business.

It is plain, Gentlemen, what the Design was from the Beginning to the End, nothing but to cause a Tumult and Confusion in the City, in Order to put that damned hellish Conspiracy for the Destruction of the King and his Brother, and every Man that was honest and loyal in Execution. This is certainly known to you all ; and that there should be such a Parcel of People untowardly linked together in this Matter, not one Man of which that they can pretend to be in any wise a Well-wisher to the Government, or to any that have any share in it : No, they are all Persons that are obnoxious to the Government that had any Hand in it ; but none of them Church of England-men, or Friends to her Established Worship ; notorious Dissenters, or profligate Atheistical Villains that herd together.

This, Gentlemen, is plain English, and necessary to be used upon all these Occasions : So that it remains now upon your Consciences, whether upon all these Circumstances that have been mentioned, you think, the bare obtaining of a Right in a Legal Course, or some worse Thing was designed.

We all know Mr. Papillon to be a wealthy Man, an able Merchant ; one that had rather have minded his Affairs Abroad, or at the Exchange, than than the expensive, troublesome Office of Sheriff of London; but, that something was to be done to wreak a damned Malice and Revenge upon the Government. And sure, he must think, as his Party it seems did, that they would not be sufficient to subvert the Government, unless he could get into that Office.

This I tell him openly, and let him or his Party make their Remarks upon it as they please. But you are to Judge whether these Things be a sufficient Evidence of Malice, to support the Plaintiff's Action.

There was questionless a Devilish Malice fixed in his Heart and Mind, and he wanted an Opportunity to effect it; and he thought it for his own Security to be best to take this Course, and nothing else was in it. For abundance of People have a mind to do Mischief, but want Opportunity and safe Ways to do it in: And, Oh, they rejoyce, if they hit upon a Project, that shall carry a specious Pretence and Colour of Law, for then they think they are safe enough.

As in Case, I have a mind to do any particular Man an Injury in his Reputation and Business; the Business must not be done down-right, by going to every body, and saying, Such an one is Poor, or a Beggar, and do not trust him; but I must cunningly and slyly insinuate it, I am sorry for such a Man, I believe he is an honest Man, but however he oweth Money; and under this Sort of Sniveling, Canting, Whining, sly rate, do a Man an Injury whatsoever: And yet forsooth he shall have no Advantage against me for it: I shall strike a Dart into the very Heart of that Man's Credit, and yet he have no Remedy.

So if I have a mind to talk against the Government, I will not do it aloud, and speak what I mean openly; but I will Whine, and Snivel, and Cant, and make People believe I have dreadful Apprehensions of what is designing, and yet not bring my self in any Danger; for I will keep within Bounds all the while, though I do more Mischief than if I dealt fairly and above-board. Alack-a-day (as Mr. Pilkington said) I am for the Preservation of the Liberty and Properties of the Subject, and I am for the Law; but I find the City is strangely run down in their Rights and Privileges, and there are very Arbitrary Proceedings. And I am a Citizen, and have taken my Oath to preserve the Privileges of the City, and I will rather submit to the Inconvenience of a troublesome Office, than let all run thus: And immediately he sets himself Cock-a-boop, as if there were no one that took care of the City besides himself, and he were such a Patriot that there were none like him: And he and Mr. Bethel and Mr. Cornish forsooth, are the only Men of the Times, the only good Men; Men that are for the Liberties and Properties of the Subject, and the Rights of the City: Whereas these are the only Men that have made an Invasion upon them, and done what they could to destroy them; and God knows we might all of us have enjoyed very quietly every Man his own, if these contesting Riorers, and busy Factionous Fellows had not come among us. Every honest Man, I tell you, knows this to be true.

Gentlemen, As to the Business concerning the Damages, that, if you find for the Plaintiff, is left to your Judgments to consider of, and give what you shall think fit upon such an Occasion. It is very true, it is not so easie a matter to ascertain particular Damages in such a Case; nor is it in an ordinary way so easie to prove, that because Sir William Pritchard was in Prison but five or six Hours there, he could suffer so much Damage as comes to ten thousand Pounds. As in the Case of a Person of great Quality and Honour, it is not easie to prove his particular Damage; nor in the Case of any of you, that are wealthy, able, sufficient Citizens, to say you are a Bankrupt, when we all know it is impossible to be true, and so no particular Damage doth ensue that can be proved; yet however, if the thing for which the Action is brought were designed with Malice, tho' the ill Design be not effected, that is no thanks to the Party, nor is to weigh with you, but the malicious Design must govern you.

Now, here I have taken notice to you, that the Malice of this Design here, was not against Sir William Pritchard as such a particular Man, but against my Lord Mayor, that this Clan that met at Russel's was an Overflowing of that Gall or Malice that was in his Heart.

If Mr. Papillon had brought an Action upon a Bond only, certainly it had been nothing but what he might very well do; or if he had pretended to sue for a bad Debt, that if he had staid would have been lost, it had been something: But you see what it was, and it is as apparent why it was, in that Mr. Goodenough said to Keeling, threatening him with the Displeasure of the Party, if he did not do it; and Mr. Goodenough and Mr. Brome were such Strangers to one another, that he must threaten Brome to complain of him, if he did not execute his Writs presently. Do they think all Mankind are so dull or blind, as not to see through such thin artificial Stuff as this?

Gentlemen, this is the Matter, The Government is a Thing that is infinitely concerned in the Case, that makes it so popular a Cause: The Government of the City, the Honour of your Chief Magistrate, and indeed the Honour of the King, whose Substitute he was, is concerned, and that puts a Weight upon your Inquiry into the Damages of this Case. You are to consider you give Damages to the Plaintiff, not as Sir William Pritchard, but as Lord Mayor: And your Severity in this Case, will deter all People from entering into Clans and Cabals, to make Disturbances, and affront the Government.

It is a thousand times better to keep within their own Bounds, mind their Callings and Employments, and concern themselves with their own Affairs, and leave the Administration of the Publick to them to whom it belongs, and is intrusted with. And according as we say in the Law, Maxime; so say I to Mr. Papillon and all the Party, Ad Consilium ne accedas antequam voceris. And do not be scared with imaginary Dangers, and groundless Jealousies, into tumultuous and disorderly Courses. You had much better keep in your Counting-House, I tell you again, and mind your Merchandize. Nay, and I do not doubt but you would much rather have done so, if there had not been some further fetch in it. It was not, I dare say, out of a frank, generous Humour to oblige the City, that Mr. Papillon would would have spent his Time and Money in the Office of Sheriff; no, I know he had better ways to employ both.

It was not the generous Mind of Mr. Bethel, that called him on to be Sheriff of London, to entitle him to spend his Money; but on purpose to be one of the first that should turn all things upside down in the City, and disturb the Government: And they that succeeded him, carried on the Project, and they that would have been in, but could not, had a mind no doubt to follow so Worshipful an Example as he laid before them.

Then the Jury withdrew to consider of their Verdict, and after half an hour's Stay, returned, and found for the Plaintiff, and assessed Damages to Ten Thousand Pounds, and Costs to Four Marks.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, You seem to be Persons that have some Sense upon you, and Consideration for the Government, and I think have given a good Verdict, and are to be greatly commended for it.

The TRYAL and PROCESS of High Treason, and Doom of Forfaulture against Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviswood Traitor.

Curia Justiciariæ S. D. N. Regis tenta in prætorio Burgi de Edinburgh vicesimo tertio die mensis Decembris 1684. Per Nobilem & Potentem Comitem Georgium Comitem de Linlithgow, Dominum Livingstoun, &c. Justiciarium generalem totius Regni Scotiæ, & honorabiles viros, Dominos Jacobum Foulis de Colintoun Justiciariæ Clericum, Joannem Lockhart de Castlehill, Davidem Balfour de Forret, Rogerum Hoge de Harcarfs, Alexandrum Seaton de Pitmedden, & Patricium Lyon de Carfs, Commissionarios Justiciariæ dicti S. D. N. Regis.

Curia legitime affirmata.

Intran

Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviswood Prisoner,

Indited and accused, that where notwithstanding by the Common Law of this, and all other well-governed Nations, the Conspiring to overturn the Government of the Monarchy, or of the Established Government of this Kingdom, or the concealing, and not revealing of any Treasonable Design, Project, or Discourse tending thereto; or the assisting, aiding, or abating such as have any such Designs, does infer the Pains and Punishment of Treason. And by the third Act of the first Parliament of King James I, The Rebelling openly against the King's Person; and by the threety seventh Act of His second Parliament, The Refecting, Maintaining, or doing Favours to open, or notour Rebels against the King's Majesty, is declared Treason, and punishable by Forfaulture. And by the hundred fourty and fourth Act of the twelfth Parliament of King James VI, It is declared Treason to Refet, Supply, or Intercommune with Traitors. And by the first Act of the first Session of His Majesty's first Parliament, It is declared, That it shall be High Treason for the Subjects of this Realm, or any number of them, less or more, upon any ground or pretext whatsoever, to rise, or continue in Arms, to make Peace or War, without His Majesty's special Approbation. And by the second Act of the second Session of His Majesty's said first Parliament, To Plot, Contrive, or Intend Death, or Destruction, or to put any Restraint upon His Majesty's Royal Person, or to Deprive, Depose, or Suspend Him from the Exercise of His Royal Government, or to levy War, or take up Arms against His Majesty, or any Commissionated by Him, or to intice any Strangers or others, to Invade any of His Majesty's Dominions, or to Write, Print, or Speak any thing that may expresse or declare such their Treasonable Intentions, is declared Treason, and punishable as such. Likeas, by the second Act of His Majesty's third Parliament, It is declared High Treason in any of the Subjects of this Realm, by Writing, Speaking, or any other manner of way to endeavour the Alteration, Suspension, or Diversion of the Right of Succession, or debarring the next lawful Successour. Nevertheless, it is of verity that the said Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviswood, shaking off all Fear of God, Respect and Regard to His Majesty's Authority and Laws; and having conceived most unjustly, a great and extraordinary Malice and Hatred against His Majesty's Person and Government, and having designed most Traiterously to debar His Royal Highness, His Majesty's only Brother, from His due Right of Succession, did amongst many other Traiterous Acts, tending to promote that wicked Design, endeavour to get himself Elected one of the Commissioners for negotiating the Settlement of a Colony of this Nation in Carolina, in one or other of the Days of the Moneths of January, February, March, April, or May, One thousand six hundred and eighty three Years; and that he might thereby have the freer and better Access to treat with the Earls of Shaftsbury and Essex, the Lord Russel and others, who had entered into a Conspiracy in England against His Majesty's Person and Government, and with Colonel Rumsey, Walcot, West, and Ferguson, and others who had likewise Conspired the Murder of his Majesty's Sacred Person, and of the Person of His Royal Highness; and finding that he could not get himself Elected one of the said Commissioners, he resolved to go to London upon his own Expences, and declared to severals (whom he took great pains to draw in to be his Accomplices) that his Design was to push forward the People of England who did nothing but talk, that they might go on effectually; and after he had settled a Correspondency here, he did go up to London in one or other of the saids Moneths, with Sir John Cockran and Commissar Monro, and did then, and there, transact with the saids Conspirators, or one or other of them, to get a Sum of Money to the late Earl of Argyle, a Declared Traitor, for bringing home of Men and Arms, for raising a Rebellion against His Majesty, and Invading this his Native Countrey; and so earnest was he in the said Design, that he did chide those English Conspirators, for not sending the same timeously, and lamented the Delays used in it; and perswaded the late Earl of Argyle and others in his Name to accept of any Sum, rather than not to engage; and amongst the many Meetings that he had at London, for carrying on the said Traiterous Design, there was one at his own Chamber, where he did meet with the Lord Melvil, Sir John Cockran, and the Cessnocks Elder and Younger, and amongst others, with Mr. William Veitch a Declared Traitor, and there he did treat of the carying on of the said Rebellion, and of the Money to be furnished by the English for Argyle, for buying of Arms. And that if the Scots would attempt any thing for their own Relief, they would get Assistance of Horse from England; and from that Meeting, he or ane or other of them did send down Mr. Robert Martin to prevent any rising, till it should be seasonable for carying on of their Designs which Mr. Robert, after he came to Scotland, did treat with Polwart and others, for carving on of the said Rebellion, by securing His Majesty's Officers of State, his Castles and Forces, and by putting his Correspondents here, and their Associates, in readines to assist the late Earl of Argyle; and after the said Mr. Baillie had engaged many of his Countrey-men in England, and had assured his Correspondents here, that the English were resolved to seclud His Royal Highness from his due Right of Succession, thereby to encourage them to concur in the said Rebellion, and Exclusion, he flew to that hight, that he did particularly and clossly correspond with Mr. Robert Ferguson, Sir Thomas Armstrong, Colonel Rum- say, and Walcot, who were accessory to that horrid Part of the Conspiracy, which was designed against the sacred Life of His Majesty, and the Life of His Royal Highness, and did sit up several Nights with them, concerting that bloody Massacer; at least the said Mr. Robert Baillie of Ferviswood was, and is guilty of having Correspondence with the late Earl of Argyle, and Mr. William Veitch declared Traytors, and of being art and part of an Conspiracy, for assisting of these who were to rise in Arms against His Sacred Majesty, and for Exclusion of His Royal Brother, and of concealing and not revealing the Accession and Proposals of others for that effect. Wherethrow he has committed, and is guilty of the Crymes of High Treason, Rebellion, and others above specified, and is art and part of the same, which being found by ane Assize, he ought to be punished with Forfaulture of Life, Land and Goods to the Terror of others to commit the like hereafter.

His Majesty's Advocat produced an Act, and Warrant from the Lords of His Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, for pursuing, and insisting against the said Mr. Robert Baillie of Ferviswood, whereof the Tenor follows: Edinburgh, the twenty two Day of December, one thousand six hundred and eighty four Years. The Lords of His Majesty's Privy Council, do hereby give Order and Warrant to His Majesty's Advocat, to pursue a Process of Treason and Forfaulture, before the Lords of His Majesty's Justiciary, against Mr. Robert Baillie of Ferviswood, to morrow at two a Clock in the Afternoon preceisly, and the said Lords do hereby Require and Command Sir George Lockhart of Carnwath, and Sir John Lauder Advocats, to concur, and assist in the said Process with His Majesty's Advocat, from the intenting until the End thereof, as they will be answerable upon their Alledgance. The Pannal's Procurators produced ane Act of His Majesty's Privy Council, in their favours, whereof the Tenor follows: Edinburgh, the twenty third of December, one thousand six hundred eighty four Years, The Lords of His Majesty's Privy Council, having considered ane Address made to them, by Mr. Robert Baillie of Ferviswood, now indited at the Instance of His Majesty's Advocat, before the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, of Treason, do hereby Require and Command Sir Patrick Hume, Mr. Walter Pringle, Mr. James Graham, Mr. William Fletcher, Mr. James Falconer, Mr. William Baillie Advocats, to Consult, Compear, and Debate for the Petitioner, in the Process of Treason, mentioned in his Address, without any hazard, as they will be answerable at their Peril; Extract by me, sic subscribitur.

William Paterson, Cls. Sti. Concilii.

After

After reading of the Inditement, the Lord Justice General required the Pannal to make answer thereto.

The said Mr. Robert Baillie Pannal pleaded Not Guilty.

Mr. Walter Pringle Advocat, as Procurator for the said Mr. Robert Baillie of Ferriwood Pannal, alleadges that he ought not to pass to the knowledge of an Assize; because he had not got a Citation upon fyfteen Days, or at least on a competent time, which is usual, and absolutely necessary in all Actions, and much more in Criminal Pursuits, especially, seeing, if a competent time be not allowed to the Pannal, he is precludit of the Benefit of an Exculpation, without which he cannot prove his Objections against Witnesses, or Assyzers, or any other legal or competent Defences; And by the late Act of Parliament concerning the Justice Court, all Pannals are allowed to raise Precepts of Exculpation, and thereupon to cite Witnesses for proving the Objections against Witnesses, and Assyzers, which necessarily presupposeth, that a competent time must be allowed to the Pannal to execut his Diligence, or otherwise, how is it possible he can prove a Defence of alibi, or any other just Defence; and as this is most consonant to that clear Act of Parliament, and to material Justice, and to the Rules of Humanity, so this Point has been already fully and often decided, and lately in the Case of one Robertson in July 1673. the Instance whereof is given by His Majesty's Advocat in his Book of Criminals, and Title of Libels, where the Lords found, that albeit Robertson got his Inditement in Prison, yet he behoved to get it upon fyfteen Days.

His Majesty's Advocat oppons the constant Traët of Decisions, whereby it is found, that a Person incarcerated may be Tryed upon twenty four Hours; and the late Act of Parliament is only in the Case where a Summons or Libel is to be raised; but here there is no Libel or Summons, but only an Inditement; nor was any Exculpation sought in this Case, before the Tryal, which is the Case provided for by Act of Parliament.

The Lords, Justice General, Justice Clerk, and Commissioners of Justiciary, repel the Defence, in respect the Pannal is a Prisoner, and that it has been the constant Custom of the Court, and that the Pannal made no former application for an Exculpation.

Sir Patrick Hume for the Pannal alleadges (always denying the Libel, and whole Members, and Qualifications thereof) that in so far as the Libel is founded upon harbouring, maintaining, and intercommuning with the Persons mentioned in the Dittay, the Pannal ought to be affoylized, because it is res hæcenus judicata, he having been formerly pursued before the Lords of His Majesty's Privy Council for the same Crimes, and fined in a considerable Sum; and therefore that Crime cannot now be made use of as a ground of Treason against the Pannal.

His Majesty's Advocat answers, That he restricts his Libel to the Pannal's entering in a Conspiracy, for raising Rebellion, and for procuring Money to be sent to the late Earl of Argyle, for carrying on the said Rebellion; and for concealing, and not revealing; neither of which is referred to his Oath; and consequently was not res judicata, there being nothing referred to his Oath; but his Converse and Correspondence with some Ministers, and others within the Kingdom, and his own Gardiner, and his writing Letters to my Lord Argyle; and oppons the Decreet of Council it self, and restricts the Libel to all the Crimes not insisted on in the Decreet.

Sir Patrick Hume replies, That as to the Corresponding with the late Earl of Argyle at any time since his Forfaulture, was expressly proposed as an Interrogator to the Pannal in that Pursuit, at His Majesty's Advocat's Instance against him, before the Lords of His Majesty's Privy Council, and that not only his own Correspondence by himself; but also by Major Holms, Mr. Carstares, Robert West, Thomas Shepherd, Richard Rumbold, and Colonel Rumsey, as the Interrogator bears, as appears by a double of the Act of Council, written by the Clerk of Council's Servant, and is offered to be proven by my Lord Advocat's Oath: And as to any Correspondency with Mr. Veitch, it is not relevant, since he was not declared Rebel.

Sir John Lauder for His Majesty's Interest, answers, That he oppons the Decreet of Privy Council, where no such Interrogator was put to the Pannal, and the Decreet must make more Faith than any pretended Scroll, and cannot be taken away by His Majesty's Advocat's Oath, to His Majesty's Prejudice; and for Mr. William Veitch, he stands expressly Forfault in anno 1667. and the Doom of Forfaulture, is ratified in the Parliament 1669.

Sir Patrick Hume oppons the Reply, That as to the Corresponding with Mr. Veitch, it does not appear that he is the Person mentioned in the Act of Parliament; and albeit he were, as he is not, he having thereafter come home to Scotland, all the Punishment inflicted upon him was Banishment, not to return under the Pain of Death, which did take off any former Punishment; and it was no Crime in any Person to intercommune with him, especially in another Kingdom; and by the late Act of Council in anno 1683. even the Conversing and Intercommuning with declared Traitors, is restricted to an Arbitrary Punishment.

His Majesty's Advocat oppons the standing Doom of Forfaulture against Veitch, and the Proclamation, or Act of Council it self.

The Lords, Justice General, Justice Clerk, and Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the Libel pursued by His Majesty's Advocat, against Mr. Robert Baillie of Ferriwood, with my Lord Advocat's Declaration, whereby he restricts the same to the Crimes not insisted on in the Decreet of Council formerly pronounced against the Pannal: They find the same Relevant as it is restricted, to infer the Pain of Treason, and remits the same to the knowledge of the Assize, and repels the remnant Defences proponed for the Pannal, in respect of the Decreet of Council produced, bearing no such thing as is alleadged, and of the Answers made by His Majesties Advocat thereto.

THE Affize lawfully Sworn, no Objection of the Law in the contrary.

His Majesty's Advocat for Probation adduced the Witneses and Writs aftermentioned; and first, Walter Earl of Tarras.

Sir Patrick Hume Procurator for the Pannal, objects against the Earl of Tarras, that he cannot be a Witness, because he is socius & particeps criminis; and it is clear by the 34. Chap. Stat. 2. Rob. 1. Concerning these that are excluded from bearing of Testimony, that Socij & particeps ejusdem criminis, vel incarcerati & vinculati, cannot bear Testimony: As also, the Earl of Tarras being presently under an Inditement of High Treason, and under the Impressions of Fear, and Death, no Person in his Circumstances can be admitted a Witness, as is not only clear from the foresaid Statute; but from the Common Law.

His Majesties Advocat answers, That it is an exception from that Rule, both by the Common Law, and ours, that in the Crime of lese Majestie, and especially that Branch thereof, which we call a Conspiracy, socius criminis may be a Witness, and which is introduced very reasonably by Lawyers, to secure the common Interest of Mankind, which is the chief of all Interests; and because Conspiracies cannot be otherways proved, and not to allow this manner of Probation, were to allow Treason, since no Man can prove a Plot, but he that is upon it, and how can a Man object against him as a Witness, whom himself trusted with his Life, his Fortune, and their common Plot, nor is the intenting of the Lybel any stronger Qualification, since every Man that is socius criminis, is under the same Impression, and it would rather seem the greater and nearer apprehensions a Man has of Death, he will be the more sincere and faithful; nor has the Earl of Tarras, nor did he ever seek any Security, in order to his deposing. And this has been constantly, and latlie, conform to the Common Law, as may be seen in the hundreds of Citations set down by Mascard, de probationibus, Vol. 4. conclus. 1318. Num. 21. and the contrary Citations prove only, that regularly socius criminis cannot be a Witness.

Sir Patrick Hume replies, That the Statutes of Robert the first is opposed, and non est distinguendum ubi lex non distinguit, and not only was he socius criminis, which is acknowledged, but he is incarceratus, and lying under an Indytment of High Treason, and has thrown himself on the King's Mercy, and it is not proper he should be a Witness, seeing he is in the King's Mercy, who may give him his Life or not, and there was never a Person in these Circumstances, that ever was admitted a Witness.

Mr. Walter Pringle adds, That the Earl of Tarras, is not only in the Case of a Person who stands Indytred for High Treason; but must be looked upon, as a Person condemned for the said Crime, seeing he fully, and amply confest the Crime; & confessus habetur pro convicto, and never any Lawyer asserted, That damnatus criminis lese Majestatis could be admitted as a Witness, and there is nothing more clear, then that by the Common Law, and the Law of all Nations, this Objection ought to be sustained, for the Civil Law is clear, leg. 11. cod. de testibus and Matheus in his Title, de probationibus, cap. de testibus, doth assert positivlie, that the Cryme of lese Majestie, Heresie, and generally all these Crymes que sine sociis non possunt facile admitti, are not accepted. And he asserts, that the Lawyers, viz. Gomefius, & Decianus, who are of another Opinion, do acknowledge, nominatum a reo damnandum non esse, and that they contravert only, An nominatio rei sit indicium sufficiens ad torquendum nominatum.

Sir George Lockhart repeats, and oppons the Answer, and the Cryme lybelled, being a Conspiracy of Treason, which of it's own nature is managed, and carried on by Secresie and Contrivance; and which is only known to the Complices of the Treason, and which cannot be committed sine sociis, the Law of this Kingdom, and of all Nations, do allow socios criminis to be testes habiles, and not only are they admitted in the Case of such Conjurations, but generally in omnibus criminibus exceptis, amongst which the Crime of Perduellion, and lese Majestie is the chief, and it is absolutely impossible, that Plots, and Conspirations of Treason can be otherways proven, then per socios, and such as are participes criminis, and which is the common Opinion of all Lawyers, as may appear by Farin. Quest. 45. And the Authorities cited by him, and which is the inviolable pratique of this Kingdom: And as to that Pretence, That the Earl of Tarras is under a Process of Treason, and has submitted to His Majesties Mercy, and that confessus habetur pro convicto, it imports nothing, and infers no more then that he is socius criminis, and is still a habil Witness, as to Conjururation of Treason socius criminis hoc ipso, that it is acknowledged, or proven, being still under the hazard of Process, or Condemnation, which Law regards not in regard of the Secrecie involved in the nature of the Crime, that either Witnesses neque actu neque habitu, can be present, so that the Objection amounts to no less then that that Conjurations of Treason cannot at all be proven: And as to the Law cited from the Majestie, it imports no more than that the Objection regulariter procedit, in Crimes, which of their own nature are not perdifficilis probationis, and are not inter crimina excepta, such as the Cryme of Conspiracy and Treason is.

Mr. William Fletcher oppons the Objection, and Reply, and further adds, that albeit crimen læsæ Majestatis be reckoned inter crimina excepta, and so have some Priviledge, as to the qualification of Witnesses; yet it cannot be denied, but there are some Objections competent against Witness adduced for proving Conspiracies, and Treason, verbi causa, that a Witness is a Capital Enemy, or that he is sub potestate accusatoris, and the Objection now pleaded, being taken complexlie, viz. That the Earl of Tarras is not only socius criminis, but also, that he is publico judicio reus, upon the same Crime, and that as means to procure His Majesties Favour, he has submitted himself, and come in His Majesties Mercy, by an acknowledgment of the Cryme, before the Dyet of Citation, he is obnoxious to a most just Objection, viz. That he is sub potestate, and by the Submission and Confession, his Life and Estate is now in His Majesties Hands, so that he is not only in the Case of a reus confessor, but in the Case of a Witness, who does absolutely depend upon His Majesties Advocate the Pursuer; and as a private accuser could not adduce his own Servants to be Witnesses, because they are testes domestici, and depend upon him, so far less ought a Witness to be adduced, who not only depends, as to his Estate, but as to his Life, and the Law gives a very good reason, and which is mentioned by Paulus, Lib. I. receptarum sententiarum, cap. 12. parag. ult. in these Words, De se confessor non est audiendus ut testis, ne alienam salutem in dubium deducat qui de sua desperavit; and as to the Pretence that a Conjuraton is a Crime so occult, that it must either be proven by such Witnesses, or otherways the guilty Person will escape: It is answered, That in this Case, His Majesties Advocate had an easie Remedy, for he might have pursued the Pannal, before he pursued the Witness, and the Terror and Apprehension of the event of a Proceſs for Treason cannot be constructed otherways, then to have influence upon the Deposition of the Witness; and as to the Citation out of Farinacius, it is only in the Case of socius criminis, but when he comes to treat de teste accusato vel carcerato, Quæst. 56. articulo quarto, he says, Regula sit in accusato quod is pendente accusatione à testimonio repellitur. And by the second Rule of the same Article, he says, it is a Principle quod carceratus testimonium ferre prohibetur, and he gives this reason, quia præsumitur, quod falsum testimonium diceret pro aliquo qui ei promiserit se liberare à vinculo, and limits this Rule, that he must be carceratus propter crimen.

Sir Patrick Hume adds, That it is a certain Principle, that any Person that is guilty infamia juris, cannot be a Witness, no more than a Person that is Convict, and Condemned of Treason; and if he were Convict, and Condemned of Treason, he could not be a Witness, even in the Case of Treason: So neither can the Earl of Tarras in this Case be received a Witness, for he being adduced a Witness after he received his Inditment, and confessed the Crime, is equivalent as if he had been actually Convict; and whatever may be pretended, that testes infames may be admitted; yet it was never asserted by any Lawyer, that a Person Convict of Treason can be admitted a Witness.

Nota, That the Earl of Tarras deponed nothing against Jerviswood, but what the other two Witnesses deponed against himself before the Tryal, and upon which thereafter they being renewed, the Earl was forfeaulted, so that there could be no ground of Suspicion from his Circumstances.

The Lords Repelled the Objection against the Earl of Tarras, and ordains him to be received a Witness.

Walter Earl of Tarras, aged forty Years, married, purged, and sworn; being Interrogat, if about the Time that Sir John Cockram, and Commissar Monro got their Commission from the Carolina Company for London, the Pannal Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviswood did not desire the Deponent to speak to Commissar Monro, to try if he could get him the said Pannal added to that Commission, Depones affirmative. Being Interrogat, if the said Jerviswood, the Pannal, did not tell the Deponent that he was resolved to go to London however upon his own Expenses, and that his and their going about the Carolina Business, was but a Pretence, and a blind; but that the true Design was, to push forward the People of England, who could do nothing but talk, to go more effectually about their Business, Depones affirmative. Depones that the Pannal did settle a Correspondence with the Deponent whereby he was to give an Account to the Deponent of what should pass betwixt the Countrey Party in England, and the Scotsmen there: And on the other Hand, the Deponent was to write to him what occurred here; Depones that the Pannal did say to the Deponent, if the King would suffer the Parliament of England to sit, and pass the Bill of Seclusion, that that was the only way to secure the Protestant Religion. Depones that the Pannal said to him, that the King might be induced to do so, if the Parliament would take sharp, or brisk Measures with him, or the like. Depones these Words were spoke to him by the Pannal, since the holding of the last Session of this current Parliament; and before the Pannal and Commissar Monro went for London. Depones that after the Pannal went to London, he did give the Deponent an Account by Letters, that Things were in great Disorder there, and that he hoped there would be effectual Courses taken to remeid them. Depones that Mr. Robert Martin did come to Mr. Pringle of Torwoodlies House in May 1683. or thereby, and brought a Letter to the Deponent's Lady unsubscribed, but the Deponent knows it was Jerviswood's Hand-writing, who was then at London, and that Mr. Martin told the Deponent, that Things in England were in great Disorder, and like to come to an hight, and that the Countrey Party were considering on Methods for securing the Protestant Religion. And

And that Archibald, sometime Earl of Argyle, was to get Ten thousand Pounds Sterling, whereas Thirty thousand Pounds Stirl. was sought by the Scotsmen at London; which was to be sent over to Holland to provide Arms; and that the late Earl of Argyle was to Land with these Arms in the West-Highlands of Scotland, and that the Deponent's Friend Jerviswood the Pannal, was to be sent over with the Money. Depones that Philipbaugh and he went to Gallowshiels House, where they met with Polwort and Gallowshiels, and that it was talked amongst them there, that in case those in England should rise in Arms, that it was necessary in that Case, that so many as could be got on the Borders, should be in a readiness to deal with Straglers and seize upon Horses, and that thereafter they should joyn with those that were in Arms on the Borders of England. Depones, That in the Case foresaid, it was said, it was convenient the Castle of Stirling, Berwick, and some other Strengths should be seized upon; and it was likewise spoke amongst them, That some Persons should be employed, to inquire what Arms was in that Countrey. Depones, That it was spoke then, that the best time for Argyle was to land in the West, when there was a Stur in England or Scotland, or Words to that purpose. Depones, That every one desired another to speak to such particular Persons as they could trust, by letting a Word fall indirectly upon supposition, in case of the Rising in England, concerning the Affair for preparing of them: And that he was told by Philipbaugh thereafter, that there was a Word and Sign to be used amongst them, viz. the Sign was by loosing a Button on the Breast, and that the Word was Harmony. Depones, the Pannal spoke to the Deponent, to advertise Torwoodlie, that he might acquaint Mr. William Veitch a forfault Traytor, who was in Northumberland, that he might keep himself close, and be on his Guard, lest he should be catched; which was since the Pannal was Prisoner in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to GOD.

Linlithgow. I. P. D.

Alexander Monro of Bear-crofts, aged forty five Years, or thereby; solutus, solemnly sworn and purged. Depones, That the Earl of Tarras proposed to the Deponent, that Jerviswood might be made one of the Commissioners for the Affair of Carolina, for that he could not safely stay at Home; and that the Deponent's answer was, that he had no Interest in the Affair, and so could not be a Commissioner. Depones, That the Pannal did wait for the Deponent at Wooler, and did go alongst with him to London, and that by the way he heard him regrave his own hazard and others, because of Blackwood's Sentence; and that he heard him regrave the hazard our Laws, and Liberties, and the Protestant Religion were in. Depones, That the Pannal spoke to the Deponent and others, more than once at London for getting of Money from the English, to be sent to the late Earl of Argyle, for bringing home Arms for the said Earl's Use, as he understood, for carrying on an Insurrection and Rebellion in Scotland. Depones, That at the time libelled, in Jerviswood's Chamber in London, Mr. William Veitch, a forfault Traytor was present; and that Sir John Cochran did at that Meeting, expressly speak of Money to be sent to Argyle, for bringing home Arms for invading the Kingdom of Scotland; and that at another Occasion he heard some of them say, That there would betwenty Thousand Men in Scotland who would assist the Rebellion, and that he heard Sir John Cochran and Jerviswood speaking of it, but cannot be positive which of the two said it. Depones, That at the Meeting he heard Jerviswood speak, but did not hear him oppose that Treasonable Proposal, or contradict the Overture proposed by Sir John Cochran. Depones, That Mr. Robert Martin was sent down from that Meeting which was at Jerviswood's Chamber, to Scotland, to try what the People of Scotland would do for their own Safety: And that it was understood that the People of Scotland should not rise till there should be a rising in England, and that the Commission was granted to Mr. Robert Martin, by all the Persons present, whereof Jerviswood was one, and that there were present the Lord Melwill, Sir John Cochran, Cessnock's elder and younger, Mr. William Castares, Mr. William Veitch, Jerviswood, and the Deponent; and Depones they did contribute Money for Mr. Martin's Journey. Depones, That at his return, he meeting with the Deponent, told him, that Matters were in that Condition in Scotland, and that the Countrey was in such a Condition, as little would kindle the Fire in order to the Rebellion. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to GOD.

James Murray of Philipbaugh, aged 30 Years, married, purged and sworn, produces four Leaves of Depositions, emitted by him before the Lords of the Secret Committie; and all written and subscribed with his own Hand, which being publicly read, in Presence of the Justices, and Assize, he adheres thereto, in all Points, whereof the Tenor follows. Upon the 10th Day of May, 1683. Upon a Letter from Mr. Pringle of Torwoodlie, I came to his House in the Morning, and he presently led me to a Chamber, where I found Mr. Robert Martin, who was lately come from London, with whom we stayed a little, and discoursed of the News, and about the present Condition, and Temper of England, and in particular of London, which Mr. Martin said, was much irritated through some Attempts upon their Priviledges, either as to the Concern of the Sheriffs, or their Charter, but that all honest Men were of good Heart and very brisk, and after some general Discourses to this purpose, Torwoodlie and I left him and walked out a little, and he told me, he was expecting the Earl of Tarras presently, for he had sent to him; and Mr. Martin had a Letter to him from Jerviswood, then he told me that there were great Matters in agitation at London, and that Mr. Martin had come down with a Commission from our Friends there (I do remember he named any) but but that I behoved not to expect he would impart his Instructions to me, for he was to communicate them only to Polwart and himself; (at least for these Shyres) and they were to pitch on such as they thought fit to intrust with the Affair, whereupon he assured me, that he had great Confidence in me, and his Kindness to me obliged him to send for me, to acquaint me that Matters were now come to a crisis, and that he had reason to think England would shortly draw to Arms, and stand by them, till they were satisfied anent the Bill of Exclusion, and what other Security they could propose for the Protestant Religion, and their Liberties, and that it was no Project of any considerable Party but a Design through the Kingdom, and that many of the finest Men, and of the greatest Interest and Credit there, had adjusted almost every thing necessary for the purpose, and had concerted Matters with our Friends there, in order to Concurrers from this, and had agreed to advance Money for furnishing Arms here, (I do not remember he told me more Particulars at this time) but said, Polwart would be at Gallow-sheils that Night, and it would be necessary that the Earl of Tarras and I should confer with him fully on the Business, about this time the Earl of Tarras lighted, and Torwoodlie having left us for a little time, being gone to bring Mr. Martin, the Earl of Tarras asked me, what News, I told him of Mr. Martin's being there, but that he had given me no account of the Design of his down-coming, which perhaps he would acquaint him with, but by what I had heard from Torwoodlie, I understood it to be, to engage us to rise in Arms shortly, whereat the Earl of Tarras hummed, and said, he would look ere he leapt such a Leap, or some such Expressions, presently Mr. Martin came, and the Earl of Tarras and he retired a little, after the reading an Letter he gave him, the Contents whereof was (as the Earl of Tarras informed me) only an Order from Ferwiswood, to deliver some Money to the Bearer, which he had left with him, and the Earl of Tarras called for his Servant, and bad him bring up the Money; in the mean time, Torwoodlie asked me, if I had acquainted the Earl of Tarras with what he spoke to me, and I told him, I had let something of it fall to him, but it was not to be thought, that Persons of Sense and Quality would engage in such Designs at random; so Torwoodlie said, that (tho' Mr. Martin would not commune with us upon his Commission directly) yet he thought it would be fit we conferred, and without taking notice of his Commission, discoursed of things upon Suppositions, and as our own privat Notions, abstract from any Prospect of a present Design, so after Dinner we four went to a Chamber, and after some general Discourses of the Discontents of both Kingdoms, these Suppositions following were discoursed, (and as I remember Mr. Martin started them all, or the most part) viz. What if the Countrey-Party in England should have Thoughts of going to Arms (whereof he knew nothing but only supposed such a thing, for discoursing a little freely, and to know our Sentiments, what we thought could be expected here in such a Case) would it not be expedient to have a settled Correspondence betwixt that Party there and here, and might not Matters be so adjusted; that both Kingdoms should draw out in one day, and might not as many be expected to undertake in these Shires, and about Edinburgh, as would serve to surprize, and seize our Rulers (I do not remember any named, but the then Chancellor and Treasurer) and some to joyn with these on the English Borders, to assist them to surprize Berwick; and if for that effect, any Horse, or Dragoons, that should be in the Bounds might not be surprized, that their Horse and Arms might be gotten to furnish the Country People, and Stirling Castle; and if Argyle should at the same time land in the West, and raise that Countrey, would not these Measures contribute much to the Advancement and Security of the Interest of that Party here, since thereby the Government would be disordered, and such Steps would encourage all that had an Inclination to the Countrey-Party, to draw to them frankly, and scar many of the other side to act against them, and so they might have leasure to joyn from all Places; and might it not be expected, there would be as many in this Kingdom, as would be able to deal with the Forces here, at least divert them from troubling England. This is the Sum, as I remember, of what was proposed, and discours'd of, tho' I cannot distinctly say, it was in this Method and Expression, nor was all moved at once, but droped now and then, as the Discourse seemed to give Rise to it; and tho' I cannot fully recount all that was spoke on these Heads, and tell distinctly what this and that Man said; yet I remember these following Answers were giving, and (as I judged) acquiesced to by the whole Company; and they were certainly the Earl of Tarras his Sentiments and mine, and every one that spoke, used this or some such Precaution, that if they were concerned, or to give Counsel in any such Case, (as they were not, &c.) 1. As to the settling a Correspondence, it was confess'd to be very convenient for those of a common Interest; but the present Circumstances of Affairs were such (as we thought) that none could be found here who was fit to manage it, and would undertake it. 2. As to the trysting at the same time it could not be done without the devulging the Design to all Ranks of People, which none would undertake, except these already in desperat Circumstances, and they could not have generally much Influence. 3. The thing was not at all adviseable for this Kingdom, since if any of England's own Measures miscarried, they would not stir for any such Trust; and the spring of their Motions being always at London, there might happen an Interruption near the Appointment, whereof these here could have no timely Notice, and so might keep Tryst, whereby they would be exposed a Prey; and if they should subsist any time, or prevail (which was hardly possible) the multitude that must be employed, are tainted with such wild and unruly Principles, that if once they got the Sword in their Hands, they would never be brought to Order without a greater Force to overawe them; neither would any Expectation of Argyle's landing, be a just ground for such a Tryst, considering the Uncertainty of Sea-Voyages; and if Argyle were to be the Head, undoubtedly many People would conclude that he were to be suspected of private Designs, and that restoring him might lay him aside : As also, that Despair might blind his usual Prudence, and prompt him to unsolid, and undigested Methods ; and so it was to be expected, that few of the Gentry (except such as he had special Influence on, or such as were under hard Circumstances) could embarque with him. 4. As to the surprising Rulers, &c. It was inveigh'd against, as an Action not to be thought of amongst Protestants (especially when the very Design of it was pretended to secure that Religion, which taught its Professors to abhor and detest such Principles as Popish, yea Unchristian) since it could not be effectuat without Bloodshed of People, secure in Peace, which being by all approv'd Divines and Casuists condemned as unlawful, and meer Assassination ; it was not to be doubted, that as such a Practice would cast a blot upon the whole Affair, and quite take off any pretence of Defensive Arms, so it would scar many from joyning. These things were reasoned again and again ; but I do not remember there was any formal Conclusion made, but the Discourse was let fall ; and Mr. Martin told us, if any of us had a mind for a Suit of Armour, he could provide as many as we pleas'd, from one who had made a great many lately to honest Men at London, of a new fashion, very light, and at an easy rate ; so Torwoodlie and I gave him our Measures, Earl of Tarras told he had a Suit already ; then Torwoodlie said to the Earl of Tarras and me, we would meet Polwort at Gallowshells, and desired we might commun with him, anent what we had been discoursing, so we hast'd away, that if possible we might both get home that Night, it being Saturday, and we unfurnished for staying abroad, and Torwoodlie whispered me just as I was mounting (as I think) that he was not clear we should commune before Gallowshells, for he was sometimes too much Good-fellow, or the like ; so the Earl of Tarras and I rod away together, and upon the way we were both of Opinion, that the Suppositions we had discours'd of, were in effect Propositions, and resolv'd if they were insist'd on by Polwort as we suspected, we would adhere to the former Answer, and would undertake nothing in these Methods. When we came to Gallowshells, the Laird was abroad, and Polwort was not come, so we had Thoughts to go away, being both damped with what had pass'd, and inclining to be free of farder meddling ; but the Lady would by no means hear of our going till her Husband came, who, she assur'd us, was about the Doors, and she having sent to call him, he would be in presently ; yet it was so late ere he came, that the Earl of Tarras could hardly have day enough to go home with ; so Gallowshells would not let him go, and he would not stay, unless I stay'd, so we both stay'd ; and not being resolv'd to discourse with Gallowshells on what pass'd, we went to the Tavern, on pretence I might call the Baillie, and seek Horses or Lime, and stay'd there till Polwort came (which seem'd unknown to Gallowshells) then we return'd to Gallowshells House, and after Supper Polwort whisper'd the Earl of Tarras and me, and enquir'd if we had seen Mr. Martin ; and we having told him we had, he enquir'd if we were free to commun on the Affair before Gallowshells, we told, as he thought fit, for we could trust him ; Then he whisper'd Gallowshells, and (as I understood afterwards) ask'd if he was free to commune on Matters of great Secrecy and Importance with that Company, to which he assented, then we sat down clos together, and as I remember, Polwort began the Discourse ; but since I am not able to follow exactly the Method of our Conference, or keep the very Expressions us'd, or repeat all that was spok'd, or to tell distinctly what was every Man's part of the Discourse ; I shall set down the Heads, and most remarkable Passages thereof, that I remember in some Articles following ; 1. Polwort signified that he was credibly inform'd (but I do not remember he nam'd his Informer) that the Countrey Party in England would draw to the Fields shortly, as he heard before Lambast, wherewith Gallowshells seem'd visibly surpriz'd ; and being ask'd, if his Heart fail'd him already, he said he did love it better truly to be walking in his own Parks in Peace and Quiet, than to be meddling in such Matters ; however he assur'd the Company, that if there came any troublesome World, he would joyn with them firmly ; and the Earl of Tarras said, he wonder'd to hear of any such Resolution in England, for he took it for a Principle amongst that Party there, that they should make no Stir in the King's Life (which the whole Company own'd to be their Opinion and Desire) because that might strengthen the Duke's Interest ; and he suspected it was the Project of the Commonwealth's Men, with whom he believ'd few Scots Gentlemen would joyn ; and he was almost perswaded the Duke of Monmouth would not concur in any Rising during the King's Life, to which it was answer'd by Polwort, That he had indeed heard that Principle had been generally agreed to, but it seem'd they found they behov'd either to do their Business now, or lay aside Hopes of doing it hereafter, which might be, that if the Charter of London were let fall, they would not only lose all safe opportunity of digesting Matters ; but a great part of their Strength, and he heard all things were concert'd mutually, betwixt Monmouth's Friends and the Heads of the Commonwealth Party ; and tho' he heard Monmouth was shy on that account, yet it was hop'd he would engage, for otherways he would be desert'd by that Party. 2. Polwort told us the Suppositions above-written as Overtures concert'd betwixt our Friends at London, and the principal Men of that Party there ; so the Earl of Tarras and I renew'd our former Answers also above-written, and maintain'd them with all our Vigour, wherein Gallowshells joyn'd forwardly with us ; and Polwort assert'd, we went on very good grounds, and he was fully of our Opinion, if things were entire, but referr'd it to be consider'd, whether it were better to comply with some of these Methods, tho' not so proper and justifiable as were to be wish'd, than to disappoint the Business totally, which might be of the best consequence to all the Party, yet we did not condescend as I remember to undertake any of these Methods. And there was a further Argument adduc'd against the trysting above-written, viz. That it was talk'd there was a Day appointed in England latly in Shaftsbury's Time, which did not hold, so they were not to be rely'd upon. 3. It was propos'd to be be considered what Methods were most proper in the Company's Opinion for Scotland to follow in case of England's Rising, whereanent it was said, that all that could be expected or desired from Scotland, was, that upon the certain News of England's being in the Fields, those in the Southern Shyres who would own that Party, should presently rise, and (how soon they could get as many conven'd as would be able to deal with stragling Parties, or any sudden Rising in the Countrey) march to joyn them, and that it would be fit these in the Northern Shyres of England waited near the Borders for such, and that they had Officers trysted there to command, and that then it would be seasonable for Argyle to land in the West, and these Parties on the Borders might divert the Forces till he had time to put himself in a Posture. These things seem'd to be the Sentiments of the whole Company, but were not finally determined till the Opinion of others who were to be communed with by Polwort were known: And it was represented, there behoved not to be any wilful and obstinate adhering to our own Thoughts of things, (but an mutual Condescendance to others concerned) otherwise it were not possible to bring a publick Design to any good Issue.

4. All the Company seem'd to agree, that they should undertake nothing or move in that Affair, till they had a full and certain account what England propos'd, what Methods they resolv'd to follow there, who were to be their Heads, and that if they design'd any Attempt on the King's Person, or overturning Monarchy, they would not be forward or clear to joyn: And it being here insinuated, that the most they could do (at least for which there could be any plausible pretence to justify) was to draw together, and without any Act of Hostility, send Addresses to His Majesty for Redress of the present Abuses of the Government, and for obtaining sufficient Security against the Hazard they apprehended to their Religion and Liberties. It was said by Polwort, that he was apt to think, that was their very Design, for he had heard it was generally believed by that Party in England, that if once they were in a Body, the King would be prevail'd with to quite the Duke, to be tryed for Popery, Correspondence with France, and Accession to the Popish Plot, and then if the King were once free from the Influence of the Duke's Counsels, they were confident he might be moved to reform their Abuses, and secure their Religions and Liberties for the future to their Contentment.

5. It was resolv'd, that till we got the foresaid Account from England, and were satisfisd thereanent, and knew others here (who were to be communed with) their Sentiments of what Methods were most proper for us, in case we should undertake, we should not meddle further; only it was left to the Earl of Tarras and me, if we thought fit to acquaint Sir William Scot younger with some of the Matter of this Conference overly, without taking notice of our Informers, or such an Conference; and it was recommended to all to be enquiring (at such as they had some Trust in) indirectly about the Affection of our Neighbours, and what Arms there was amongst them; that if we should get an satisfying account, and resolve to joyn, we might know where to seek Men and Arms suddenly; here it was said by Polwort, as I think, that if the Earl of Tarras, Torwoodlie, Gallowshells, and I once took Horse; he thought the most part of the West end of Tiviotdale and Selkirkshyre would soon come to us, especially, when they heard England was risen, then we trysted to meet there against Midsummer Fair, betwixt and which the foresaid Account was expected, but in case it came to any of our Hands sooner, we promised to advertise the rest, that we might meet presently, if the Case required; this is the Substance and Sum of what pass'd at the foresaid Conference, that I can now remember; but I remember, I was likewise told these following Particulars in privar, by Polwort or Torwoodlie, (which of them, I cannot distinctly tell) the Day of the foresaid Conference, or within a short time after.

1. That Polwort keepest the Correspondence with our Friends at London, I remember not positively of any of them that was named, to be on the Entrigue there, except my Lord Melvil, Sir John Cochran, Ferwiswood, and Commissar Monro (for I hardly knew any of the rest) and, as I think, Commissar Monro was call'd his Correspondent there.

2. That the Money to be advanced by the English Partie to Scotland was ready when Mr. Martin came from London, and it was expected, that within few Days after, it would be dispatched with some Confident to Holland (whether by Bills, or in Cash, I cannot say) it was call'd Ten Thousand Pound Sterlin, and was to be employed (as I was told) by that Confident, at Argyle's Sight, for buying Arms, providing Ships to transport them with Argyle, to the West here, and such other Charges.

3. That how soon our Friends at London got notice of the safe Arrival of the Confident foresaid, and all other things were finally concluded there (which was expected would be about the middle of June, as I remember) they would come home, and, as they pass'd, would give them, or one of them, an particular Account of all Resolutions taken to be communicat to the rest, that it was not to be expected by Letters, that behoved to be under Figures and dark Expressions, and, as I remember, they were written as it were about the Carolina Business, or some Household Furniture, as I was told, for I never remember I saw any Letter, either direct to London, or sent from it on that Head.

4. I was told there was a Sign and a Word agreed on by that Party, so that Men might know with whom they might use Freedom, the Word, as I remember, was Harmony, and the Sign, the opening two Buttons in the Breast-coat and shutting them presently; this I communicat to the Earl of Tarras, but does not mind I ever saw it used, except when I visited Park-Hay here in Town, about the End of June; we discoursing a little freely, he asked if I had the Word and Sign of the Carolina Men, and I having given them, he said something to this purpose, that he was afraid that the Carolina Business did not go well, for there had been some of the Managers expected here (as I think he named Ferwiswood or Commissar Monro) these eight Days past, but there was none come, nor could he learn that any of their Friends had heard from them for several Posts. Polwort, Torwoodlie, and I met at Gallowshells, on Midsummer Fair, but I mind nothing pass'd but private Whisperings. The said James Murray further Depons, That at their meeting at Gallowshells, it was resolved, that they should keep up their Cefs unpaid till their next meeting at Midsummer, which was to be at Gallowshells, and should deal with all these they had influence upon to do the like, and that upon the Supposition mentioned in his Oath given in. It was spoke amongst them, that the Troopers Horses should be seized upon when they were grazing. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to GOD.

Hugh Scot of Gallowshells, aged 36 Years, married, purged, &c. and sworn. Depons, That the Earl of Tarras and Philipbaugh did come to the Deponent's House, in May, 1683. and Polwart came likewise there, where there were Discourses and Proposals, that if the English would rise in Arms, their Friends in the South Shires should rise with them; and that they should seize the Horses belonging to the King's Troops where they grazed; and the Town of Berwick, and the Castle of Stirling: And likewise it was there discoursed anent the late Earl of Argyle's coming to invade Scotland, but because of the uncertainty of Sea Voyages, there was not much stress laid upon it. Depons, It was also proposed, that some of the South Countrey whom they trusted in should be acquainted with it, and that Endeavours should be used to learn what Arms was in the Countrey. Depons, There was some such Discourse there, as that the Earl of Tarras, Philipbaugh, Torwoodlie, Polwart, and some others should draw to Horse with the first when the rising should be in readiness, that it might be expected that the South Parts of Teviotdale and Selkirk Shire would joyn with them. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to GOD.

and Philipbaugh, being in his House in May, 1683. Discoursed of an intended rising in England, and of Proposals made to Scotsmen, to rise with them, and of London in particular, and that Polwart was present at that Meeting, and told he was sure the Englishmen intended so, and that it was Discoursed at that Meeting amongst them, that it were fit to seize Berwick and Stirling; and that it was talked amongst them of bringing the Duke of York to Tryal, and that the King would abandon him.

The Laird of Gallowshells, Prisoner in the Tolbuich of Edinburgh, being called and examined upon Oath, Depons, That in the Moneth of May, 1683. The Earl of Tarras, Hume of Polwart Elder, and Laird of Philipbaugh, came to the Deponent's House, himself being absent, at his coming Home, they were speaking of the Security of the Protestant Religion; and of a Party in England, who would secure, or seize the King or Duke, and that if any should rise in Arms to defend them, or to rescue the King and Duke: There was another Party who would rise in Arms against them; it was proposed, that some Countrey-men should be spoken to, to try their Resolutions, and that the Resolutions of England should be told them, to see if they would concur. But the Deponent does not remember that this Proposition was approved, or undertaken to be done by any present; nor does he remember who managed the Discourse. It was likewise proposed, to seize the Officers of State, especially the Chancellour and Thesaurer, and the said Sir John Cochran was to come to the West from England, for advancement of the Design; and that the Earl of Argyle was to land in the West-Highlands, and to raise that Countrey. Of these Matters, all these who were present discoursed, as of an Affair that they were agitating, and wherein themselves were particularly concerned, though at that time they did not conclude what their Carriage should be; The reason why the Deponent cannot be more particular is, because he was sometimes going out, and sometimes walking up and down the Room; and though the Deponent cannot be positive of the very Words; yet he is positive they were either these Words, or Words to that purpose.

The Deposition of Mr. William Carstares, when he was examined before the Lords of Secret Committee, given in by him, and renewed upon Oath ; upon the 22d. of December, 1684. in presence of the Lords of His Majesties Privy Council.

Edinburgh-Castle, September 8. 1684.

Mr. William Carstares being examined upon Oath, conform to the Condescention given in by him, and on the Terms therein mentioned ; Depons, That about November, or December, 1682. James Steuart, Brother to the Laird of Cultnefs, wrote a Letter to him from Holland, importing, That if any considerable Sum of Money could be procured from England, that something of Importance might be done in Scotland : The which Letter, the Deponent had an inclination to inform Shepherd in Ab-Church-Lane, Merchant in London of ; but before he could do it, he wrote to Mr. Steuart above-named, to know from him, if he might do it ; and Mr. Steuart having consented, he communicat the said Letter to Mr. Shepherd, who told the Deponent that he would communicat the Contents of it to some Persons in England ; but did at that time name no body, as the Deponent thinks : Sometime thereafter, Mr. Shepherd told the Deponent, that he had communicat the Contents of the Letter above-named, to Colonel Sidney, and that Colonel Danvers was present, and told the Deponent, that Colonel Sidney was averse from imploing the late Earl of Argyle, or meddling with him, judging him a Man too much affected to the Royal Family, and inclined to the present Church-Government ; yet Mr. Shepherd being put upon it by the Deponent, still urged, that one might be sent to the Earl of Argyle ; but as Mr. Shepherd told him, he was suspected upon the account of his urging so much ; yet afterwards he pressed, without the Deponent's knowledge, that the Deponent being to go to Holland however might have some Commission to the Earl of Argyle, which he having informed the Deponent of, the Deponent told him, that he himself would not be concerned, but if they would send another, he would introduce him ; but nothing of this was done : Upon which the Deponent went over, without any Commission from any body to Holland, never meeting with James Steuart above-named : He was introduced to the Earl of Argyle, with whom he had never before conversed, and did there discourse what had past betwixt Mr. Shepherd and him ; and particularly about remitting of Money to the said Earl from England ; of which the said Mr. Steuart had written to the Deponent, namely of 30000 Pounds Sterling ; and of the raising of 1000 Horse and Dragoons ; and the securing the Castle of Edinburgh, as a matter of the greatest Importance : The Method of doing this was proposed by the Deponent, to be one Hour, or thereby, after the relieving of the Guards : But the Earl did not relish this Proposition, as dangerous ; and that the Castles would fall of consequence, after the Work Abroad was done. James Steuart was of the Deponent's Opinion for seizing the Castle, because it would secure Edinburgh, the Magazines and Arms ; as to the 1000 Horse and Dragoons, my Lord Argyle was of Opinion, that without them nothing was to be done ; and that if that number were raised in England to the said Earl, he would come into Scotland with them ; and that there being so few Horse and Dragoons to meet them, he judged he might get the Country without trouble, having such a standing Body for their Friends to Rendezvous to ; and the said Earl said he could show the Deponent the convenient Places for landing, if he understood ; and as the Deponent remembers, where the Ships could attend. The Deponent remembers not the Names of the Places. The Deponent spoke to the Lord Stairs ; but cannot be positive that he named the Affair to him, but found him shy : But the Earl of Argyle told him, he thought Stairs might be gained to them : And that the Earl of Lowdown being a Man of good Reason, and disoblged, would have great influence upon the Countrey, and recommended the Deponent to Major Holms, with whom the Deponent had some Acquaintance before, and had brought over a Letter from him to the

Vol. III.

Earl

Earl of Argyle ; but the Deponent had not then communicate any Thing to the said Holms, James Steuart laid down a way of Correspondence by Cyphers and false Names, and sent them over to Holms, and the Deponent, for their use (which Cyphers and Names, are now in the Hands of his Majesties Officers, as the Deponent supposes) and did desire the Deponent earnestly to propose the 30000 Pound Sterling abovenamed to the Party in England, and did not propose any less ; for as the Earl told the Deponent, he had particularly calculate the Expence for Arms, Ammunition, &c. But James Steuart said, that if some less could be had, the Earl would content himself, if better might not be ; but the Earl always said, that there was nothing to be done without the body of Horse and Dragoons above-mentioned. During the time of the Deponent his abode in Holland, tho' he had several Letters from Shephard, yet there was no satisfactory Account, till some time after the Deponent parted from the Earl of Argyle, and was making for a Ship at Rotterdam, to transport himself to England. James Steuart wrot to him that there was hopes of the Money. The next Day after the Deponent came to England, he met with Sir John Cochran, who, with Commissar Monro, and Jerviswood, was at London before he came over ; and Depons, That he knows not the account of their coming, more then for the perfecting the Transaction about Carolina : And having acquainted Sir John Cochran with the Earl's Demands of the 30000 Pound Sterling, and the 1000 Horse and Dragoons, Sir John carried him to the Lord Russel, to whom the Deponent proposed the Affair, but being an absolute Stranger to the Deponent, had no return from him at that time ; but afterwards having met him accidentally at Mr. Shephard's House, where he the Lord Russel had come to speak to Shephard about the Money above-named, as Mr. Shephard told the Deponent. The Deponent (when they were done speaking) desired to speak to the Lord Russel, which the Lord Russel did, and having reiterate the former Proposition for 30000 Pound Sterling, and the 1000 Horse and Dragoons, he the Lord Russel told the Deponent, they could not get so much raised at the time, but if they had 10000 Pound to begin, that would draw People in, and when they were once in, they would soon be brought to more ; but as for the 1000 Horse and Dragoons, he could say nothing at the present, for that behoved to be concerted upon the Borders. The Deponent made the same Proposal to Mr. Ferguson, who was much concerned in the Affair, and zealous for the promoting of it. This Mr. Ferguson had in October or November before, as the Deponent remembers in a Conversation with the Deponent in Cheape-side, or the Street somewhere there about, said, That for the saving of innocent Blood, it would be necessary to cut off a few, insinuating the King and Duke, but cannot be positive whether he named them or not, to which the Deponent said, that's Work for our wild People in Scotland, my Conscience does not serve me for such Things ; after which the Deponent had never any particular Discourse with Ferguson, as to that Matter ; but as to the other Affair, Ferguson told the Deponent that he was doing what he could to get it effectuate, as particularly that he spoke to one Major Wild- man who is not of the Deponent his acquaintance. Ferguson blamed always Sidney, as driving Designs of his own. The Deponent met twice or thrice with the Lord Melvil, Sir John Cochran, Jerviswood, Commissar Monro, the two Cessnocks, Montgomery of Landshaw, and one Mr. Veitch, where they discoursed of Money to be sent to Argyle, in order to the carrying on the Affair, and though he cannot be positive the Affair was named ; yet it was understood by himself, and as he conceives by all present, to be for rising in Arms, for rectifying the Government. Commissary Monro, Lord Melvil, and the two Cessnocks were against meddling with the English, because they judged them Men that would talk, and would not do, but were more inclined to do something by themselves, if it could be done. The Lord Melvil thought every thing hazardous, and therefore the Deponent cannot say he was positive in any thing, but was most inclined to have the Duke of Monmouth to head them in Scotland, of which no particular Method was laid down. Jerviswood, the Deponent, and Mr. Veitch, were for taking Money at one of these Meetings. It was resolved, that Mr. Martin, late Clerk to the Justice-Court should be sent to Scotland, to desire their Friends to hinder the Countrey from rising, or taking rash Resolutions upon the account of the Council, till they should see how Matters went in England. The said Martin did go at the Charges of the Gentlemen of the Meeting, and was directed to the Laird of Polwart and Torwoodlie, who sent back Word that it would not be found so easie a matter to get the Gentry of Scotland to concur : But afterwards in a Letter to Commissar Monro, Polwart wrote that the Countrey was readier to concur than they had imagined, or something to that purpose. The Deponent, as above-said, having brought over a Key from Holland, to serve himself and Major Holms : He remembers not that ever he had an exact Copy of it, but that sometimes the one, sometimes the other keepest it, and so it chanced to be in his Custody, when a Letter from the Earl of Argyle came to Major Holms, intimating, that he would joyn with the Duke of Monmouth, and follow his Measures, or obey his Directions. This Mr. Veitch thought fit to communicate to the Duke of Monmouth, and for the understanding of it was brought to the Deponent, and he gave the Key to Mr. Veitch, who as the Deponent was informed, was to give it and the Letter to Mr. Ferguson, and he to shew it to the Duke of Monmouth ; but what was done in it, the Deponent knows not. The Deponent heard the Design of killing the King and Duke, from Mr. Shephard, who told the Deponent some were full upon it. The Deponent heard that Aaron Smith was sent by those in England to call Sir John Cochran, on the account of Carolina, but that he does not know Aaron Smith, nor any more of that Matter, not being concerned in it. Shephard named young Hamblen frequently as concerned in these Matters.

Edinburgh-Castle, 18th September, 1684.

Mr. William Carstares being again examined, adheres to his former Deposition, in all the Parts of it, and Depones he knows of no Correspondence between Scotland and England, except by Martin before named; for those Gentlemen to whom he was sent, were left to follow their own Methods. Veitch sometimes, as the Deponent remembers, stayed sometimes at Nicolson, Stabler's House at London-wall; sometimes with one Widow Harcastle in Moor-fields. The Deponent did communicate the Design on foot to Doctor Owen, Mr. Griffil, and Mr. Mede, at Stepney, who all concurred in the promoting of it, and were desirous it should take effect; and to one Mr. Fretb in the Temple, Councillor at Law, who said that he would see what he could do in reference to the Money, but there having gone a Report, that there was no Money to be raised, he did nothing in it; nor does the Deponent think him any more concerned in the Affair. Nelsbrop frequently spoke to the Deponent of the Money to be sent to Argyle, whether it was got or not, but the Deponent used no freedom with him in the Affair. Goodenough did insinuate once, that the Lords were not inclined to the Thing, and that before, they would see what they could do in the City. The Deponent saw Mr. Ferguson, and Mr. Rumsay, lurking after the Plot broke out, before the Proclamation, having gone to Ferguson, in the back of Bishopsgate-street, at some new Building, whether he was directed by Ferwiswood, who was desirous to know how Things went. Rumsay was not of the Deponent his Acquaintance before, but they knew as little of the Matter as the Deponent. This is what the Deponent remembers, and if any thing come to his Memory, he is to deliver it in betwixt the first of October. And this is the Truth, as he shall answer to GOD.

His Majesties Advocat for further Probation, adduces the Examinations of Mr. Shephard, taken before Sir Leolin Jenkins, Secretary of State for England, with the Information or Deposition of Mr. Zachary Bourn, relating to the Plot, signed by him and Secretary Jenkins, of which Depositions the Tenors follow.

The Examination of Thomas Shephard of London, Merchant, taken upon Oath, before the Right Honourable Sir Leolin Jenkins Knight, His Majesties Principal Secretary of State, the 23d. Day of December, 1683.

The Deponent saith, That Ferguson told him, on, or about the Moneth of April last, that an Insurrection was intended both in England and in Scotland, and that for the settling that Affair betwixt the two Nations, Mr. Baillie, Mr. Monro, Sir John Cochran, Sir Hugh and Sir George Campbells, with some others (whose Names this Deponent heard not) were come to London.

That the Deponent had some acquaintance with Mr. Baillie, Mr. Monro, and Sir John Cochran, and none at all with Sir Hugh and Sir George Campbells; that Mr. Baillie told the Deponent, that the Earl of Argyle demanded thirty Thousand Pounds of the English to capacitat him to begin the Business effectually in Scotland, and that he the said Baillie likewise told the Deponent, that having concerted Things with the Lord Russell and others, he the said Baillie found an impossibility of raising that Sum; after which the said Baillie had acquainted the Deponent, that they were certainly promised ten Thousand Pounds, which Sum was agreed to be payed into the Deponent's Hands, in order to be remitted into Holland, for the providing of Arms; and that the said Baillie told the Deponent at divers times, that the said Sum, or at least one half of it would be payed such a Day, and such a Day; and sometimes asked the Deponent, if he had received any Part of the said Money, to which the Deponent replied that he had not, and that he the Deponent scarce thought any would be payed.

And the Deponent also saith, that having had some little Conversation with Sir John Cochran, he remembers well, that both of them did sometimes lament the Delays in not paying in the Money, and said, that although the said ten Thousand Pounds were payed in, they, the said Sir John Cochran and Mr. Monro, feared it would be too little; and this Deponent further sayeth not as to any new Matter. But the Deponent being asked to explain what he thought was meant by the Words above-written, viz. to capacitat him (the Earl of Argyle to begin the Business) he, this Deponent sayeth, that he did understand by the Word Business, an Insurrection in Scotland.

The Information of Zachary Bourn, of London, Brewer, taken upon Oath, the tenth Day of December, 1683. before the Right Honourable Mr. Secretary Jenkins.

The Informant Deposeth, and sayeth, That Mr. Baillie set up one Night, if not two, with Mr. Ferguson, and went several times in the Evening ing with him to the Duke of Monmouth, and the chief Managers of the Conspiracy ; That Ferguson told the Deponent, that he the said Baillie was the chief Man for the Scots, next to the Lord Argyle ; that the said Baillie did sit up the greatest part of one Night with the said Ferguson ; at which time this Deponent believeth they were busie in preparing the intended Declaration, which the Deponent has the more reason to believe, in as much as the said Ferguson did go about to show him the Deponent such a Paper, wherein the said Ferguson was hindered by the coming up stairs of some Person, to speak with the said Ferguson, that the said Ferguson told the Deponent, that the main Business of the said Baillie, in meeting the saids Conspirators, was in order to get from them the ten thousand Pounds, promised for the buying of Arms, for the Insurrection intended in Scotland.

That the Deponent saw Mr. William Carstares come often to the Lodgings of the said Ferguson ; but that the said Ferguson never told the Deponent of any Discourse held by him with the said Carstares ; and further this Deponent saith not.

His Majesty's Advocat likewise produced several Warrants, and Papers to prove, that those Depositions are sign'd by Sir Leolin Jenkins.

His Majesty's Advocat also produced the Books of Adjournal, bearing Mr. William Veitch to be a Forfault Traitor, and the Act of Parliament whereby the Forfaulture is ratified.

His Majesty's Advocat's Speech to the Inquest.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

YOU have now a Conspiracy against His Majesty's Sacred Person and Royal Government, so fully discover'd, that they must want Reason as well as Loyalty, who do not believe the Discovery ; and they must be Enemies to Sincerity, as well as to the King, who do not acknowledge it. Beside, That the Councils of all the three Nations thought the Proof sufficient for Indicting a General Thanksgiving through all these Nations ; and that the Judges of England thought the same strong enough to infer Forfaulture of Life and Estate against some of all Ranks there ; you have a Discovery made here from the late Earl of Argyle's own Letters, and the Confession of his own Emissaries, the two surest Proofs that Law ever invented, or the Nature of Humane Affairs can allow ; and I am this Day to add to all this, a new Sett of Proofs in the Process that I now lead against this Pannal, from the Confessions of Noblemen and Gentlemen, who have been engaged in this wicked Conspiracy ; and who, from a Sense of their Guilt, are content freely to depose against their nearest Relation, and their most intimate Friend, in which having thus cleared to you, that there was really such a Conspiracy, I shall, in the next place, proceed to prove this Pannal's Accession to it.

It cannot be imagined, that we would willingly involve our Countrey-men in it, without a Conviction stronger than our Kindness to Scotland ; nor did His Majesty's Servants accuse this Pannal, without the Opinion of the ablest Lawyers of the Kingdom, who did with them concur to think that there was not the least occasion of doubting left to the most indifferent Inquest of his Guilt, after they had seriously, and with Reflection read over and pondered the Probation now laid before you.

The Person accused of Accession to this Cryme, is the Ringleader of all those who in this Kingdom concur'd with the English Conspirators, as you may see by the Testimonies of all who have deposed ; and it was indeed fit and just to begin with the most guilty, so that if he be not convicted, there should no Man be punished for this Conspiracy ; all the Noise we have heard of it, is but a Cheat, the King's Judges have been Murderers, all the Witnesses have been Knaves, and such as dyed for it have been Martyrs.

The Accession charged on the Pannal, is not an accidental Escape, nor is it proved by Witnesses who can be suspected of Unkindness to his Person, or his Cause, for it is a long Tract of a continued Design, gone about with the greatest Deliberation and Concern imaginable, and proved by his nearest Relations, and Persons so deeply engag'd in that Cause, (for which he suffers,) that they were content with him to venture their Lives and Fortunes in that Quarrel. He is not accused of a Crime that can amount only to a single Murder, tho' that be a dreadful Cryme, but a Rebellion, which was to draw upon us a Civil War, that Murder of Murders, in which hundreths of thousands were to fall ; and to crown all, he was to begin, and to be the chief Promoter of a Rebellion, in which one of the first Steps was to kill His Sacred Majesty, and His Royal Brother ; and one of the chief Witnesses which I have led against him, is Bourn, which Bourn confessed that he was to kill the King, and who confesses the Pannal sat up several Nights with Ferguson, the other Contriver of the King's Murder, and so familiar was he with him, that Bourn deposes, that the said Pannal had been with Ferguson at the drawing of the Manifesto, whereby he was not only to be an Actor, but to be the Justifier of that horrid Villany ; and therefore Bourn deposes, that Ferguson (the best Judge in that Case) looked upon him as the chief Man, next to Argyle ; but because no Man is presumed to go to such a height, without previous Inclination and Motives, I shall, to convince you that this Gentleman was very capable of all that was lybelled against him, remember you, that he is Nephew and Son in Law to the late Waristoun, bred up in his Family, and under his Tutor ; about the time of this Plot it was undenyably known, and is now sufficiently proved proved by two present Witnesses, the Earl of Tarras and Commissar Monro, that he thought himself desperat, knowing himself to be guilty of Treason by Blackwood's Case; and as it's presumable, that a Man that's guilty of one Point of Treason, will commit another; so when a Man is desperat as to his Life and Fortune, he is capable of any thing; he was likewise animated to commit this Cryme, by the Intelligence he had that there was a Plot in England, carryed on by Men of so great Parts, Fortune and Influence, and by the too probable Hopes, that they would get all the Western Shyres to joyn with them here, because of the common Guilt in which they had engag'd themselves, by their late Extravagances, they made an account of an Assistance of twenty thousand Men; and by Philiphaugh's Deposition, that these Gentlemen expected the Concourse of the Southern Shyres; and thus I am to prove to you a Cryme, which is in it self so probable and liklie, that it should need little Probation, tho' I have adduced for your Conviction sufficient Evidences, albeit the Cryme were in it self very unliklie.

The Crymes which I hope I have proved, are, That Ferviswood the Pannal transacted for Money to the late Earl of Argyle, a declared Traitor. 2. That he designed to raise a Rebellion. 3. That he intercommuned with the Earl of Argyle and Mr. Veitch declared Traitors. 4. That he was present, where it was treated, either that Argyle should have Money from the English, and Assistance from Scotland, or that a Rebellion should be raised, and that he did not reveal the same; and all these being found relevant separatim, it is sufficient for me to have proved any one of them. And if a Gentleman was lately found guilty of High Treason by the Opinion of all the Lords of Session, for not revealing, that Sir John Cockran sought fifty Pounds Sterling from him, tho' he refused the same, and tho' he believed it was sought for a charitable Subsistence to preserve him from starving; what deserves this Pannal, who sought thirty thousand Pounds Sterling, to buy him Arms, to invade his Native Countrey?

That Ferviswood was designing to carry on a Rebellion, or at least was accessory, or (as our Law terms it) was Art and Part thereof, is clearly prov'd; but that in this occult and hidden Crime, which uses not to be prov'd by clear Witnesses, I may lead you thorow all the Steps of the Probation, which like the Links of a Chain, hang upon one another: You will be pleased to consider, that 1. It is proved that he desired a blind Commission to go to England, not to manage the Affairs of the Carolina Company, as he confess'd, but to push the People of England to do something for themselves, because they did only talk and not do; and what he would have them to do, appears too clearly, because he tells the Earl of Tarras it was probable, that if the King were briskly put to it by the Parliament of England, he would consent to exclude the Duke from the Succession; here is not only a Treasonable Design, (tho' a Design be sufficient in Treason) but here are express Acts of Treason proved, viz. The treating with the Earl of Tarras upon this Design, the settling a Correspondence with him for the Prosecution of it, and the writing Letters from London to him concerning it, and the sending down Mr. Martin to compleat it by a general Rising; As he design'd to push on the English, so he prosecutes closely this Design upon all occasions. On the Road he complains cunningly and bitterly, that our Lives, Laws and Liberties, and the Protestant Religion were in Danger, the Style and Method of all such as design to rebel; after he arrives at London, he engages the Conspirators there to assist the late Earl of Argyle, a declared Traitor, with Money to buy Arms; this was indeed to push the English to do the most dangerous things by the most dangerous Man, and in the most dangerous methods. He enters also in a strict Correspondence with Ferguson the Contriver, with Shepherd the Thesaurer, and Carstairs the Chaplain of the Conspiracy.

Alexander Monro another present Witness, proves that he argued with him that it was necessary to give Argyle Money expressly for carrying on the Rebellion, and that they did meet at Ferviswood's Chamber where this was spoke of, and from which Mr. Robert Martin was sent to their Friends in Scotland to know what they would do; and tho' the silly Caution was, that they sent him to prevent their Rising, yet a Man must renounce Common Sense, not to see that the Design was to incite them to Rebellion, and to prevent only their doing any thing in this rebellious Design, by which they might lose themselves in a too early and abortive Insurrection here, till things were ready in England. For, 1. This Commission was given him in a place, and by a Company who had been themselves treating immediatly before of sending Money to the late Earl of Argyle to buy Arms, and certainly those Arms were to be bought for Men, and not for a Magazine. 2. They were treating how many Men could be raised in Scotland. 3. Carstairs Deposition bears, that Martin was sent to hinder rash Resolutions, till they saw how Matters went in England, and the Return to their Embassy bore, that it would not be an easie matter to get the Gentry of Scotland to concur; but afterwards better Hopes of their Rising was given, which could not have been, if the true Commission had not been to raise Scotland. 4. That Sir John Cochran made a Speech to that purpose, is expressly prov'd, and that Ferviswood spoke to the same purpose, is prov'd by a necessary consequence; for since it's prov'd that he spoke, and that he did not speak against it, it must necessarily follow that he spoke for it, tho' the Witness is so cautious, that he cannot condescend upon the Words now after so long a time; and it is against Sense to think, that Ferviswood who in privat press'd the same so much upon Commissar Monro, and who was the Deacon-Conveener here, and who, as Mr. Martin their Envoy declared, was the Person who was to be sent for the Arms, should not himself have been the most forward Man in that Design, but above all exitus acta probat, this Commissioner, (who being a meer Servant, durst not have propos'd any thing from himself, being a mean Person, and being one, who, as the Earl of Tarras deposes, would say nothing, but what was in his Paper :) does expressly declare, that he came from Ferviswood and others; and in the meeting with him, a Rebellion is actually formed, and it is resolved, they should seize the King's Officers of State, Garrisons, and Forces, and that they should should joyn with the late Earl of Argyle, and put their own Forces in a Condition to joyn with these Forces that were to come from England, and they gave a Sign, and a Word, which uses only to be done in actual War? so here is Treason clearly prov'd, by two present Witnesses, from the first Design to its last Perfection.

Nor can it be objected, that they are not concurring Witnesses, but testes singulares upon separat Acts, for in reiterable Crimes, Witnesses deposing upon different Acts, do prove if the Deeds tend to the same end; as for instance, if one Witness should depose, that they saw a Traitor sit in a Council of War, in one place, and in another place, they saw him in Arms, or that one saw him assist at a Proclamation in one place, and saw him in Arms in another; or that one saw him writ a Treasonable Paper, and another saw him use it; These Witnesses are still considered as Confestes, or concurring Witnesses, and ten or twelve Inqueists have so found, and upon their Verdict, Rebels have been lately hang'd. The learn'd Judges of England being all met together did expressly find, that one Witness proving, that A. B. said, that he was going to buy a Knife to kill the King, and another deposing, that he saw him buy a Knife, without telling for what, that these two Witnesses were Confestes, and prov'd sufficiently the Cryme of Treason, yet there the one Witness prov'd only a remote Design, and the other an Act, which was indifferent of its own nature, and became only Treasonable by the Connexion; but no Witnesses ever deposed upon things so coherent, and so connected together, as these do, for they depose still upon the same Person, carrying on the same Design of a Rebellion; as to which, in one place, he is exciting his own Nephew, and telling him his Resolutions, and settling a Correspondence with him; at another time, he presses Commissar Monro to the same Rebellion. At a third, He holds a Meeting at his own Chamber, and speaks concerning it, and from that Meeting he sends a Trusty, who forms the Rebellion. Besides all this, tho' two Witnesses be sufficient, I have adduced Mr. William Carstares Chief Conspirator, and who choos'd rather to suffer violent Torture, than to disclose it, he likewise deposes upon all these Steps, and connects them together, and this his Deposition is twice reiterated, upon Oath, after much Premeditation. And I likewise adduce two Depositions taken upon Oath, by Sir Leolin Jenkins, who was impower'd by the Law of England, and at the Command of the King, and the Council of England, upon a Letter from His Majesty's Officers of State here, in which Deposition, Shepard, one of the Witnesses, deposes, that Baillie came frequently to him, and desired him to advance the Money, and lamented the Delays, and that there was so little to be advanced; and who should be better believed than one who was his own Trusty, and a Person who was able to advance so great a Sum? Bourn, another of the Witnesses, deposes, that Ferguson told him, that the Pannal spoke frequently to him concerning the same Money, and that he sat up several Nights with Ferguson upon the said Conspiracy; and who should be better believed than Ferguson's Confident, and one who was so far trusted in the whole Affair, that he was to take away that Sacred Life, which Heaven has preserved by so many Miracles?

Against these three Depositions, you have heard it objected, that non testimonia sed testes probant, especially by our Law, in which, by an express Act of Parliament, no Probation is to be led, but in presence of the Assise and Pannal. To which it is answered, that these Depositions are not meer Testimonies; for I call a Testimony a voluntar Declaration, emitted without an Oath, and a Judge; but these Depositions are taken under the awe of an Oath, and by the Direction of a Judge. 2. Shepard was confronted with the Pannal himself, and he had nothing to say against him; whereas the great thing that can be objected against Testimonies (and by our Statute especially) is, that if the Party who emits the Testimony had been confronted with the Pannal; the Impression of seeing a Person that was to die, by his Deposition, would have made him afraid to depose laxly; and the Pannal likewise might, by proposing Interrogators and Questions, have cleared himself and satisfied the Judges in many things depos'd against him: But so it is that Mr. Shepard having been confronted with the Pannal, before the King Himself, who is as far above other Judges, in His Reason and Justice, as He is in His Power and Authority; He deposes that the Pannal was the chief Mannager of this Conspiracy, next to Argyle, and that he was so passionate to have this Money to buy Arms, that he lamented the Delays; and can it be imagined that Mr. Shepard whom he trusted with his Life and his Fortune, and whom all their Party trusted with their Cash, would have depos'd any thing against him that was not true, especially when he knew that what he was to depose, was to take away his Life and his Fortune; or that if the Pannal had been innocent, he would not, when he was confronted with Mr. Shepard before the King Himself, have roar'd against Mr. Shepard, if he had not been conscious to his own Guilt? There is a Surprise in Innocence, which makes the Innocent exclaim, and it inspires Men with a Courage which enables them to confound those who depose falsely against them; and in what occasion could either of these have appeared, more than in this, wherein this Gentleman was charg'd to have Conspir'd with the greatest of Rascals, against the best of Princes; and that too in Presence of the Prince himself, against whom he had Conspir'd? But Guilt stupifies indeed, and it did never more than in this Gentleman's Case, whose Silence was a more convincing Witness than Mr. Shepard could be. Mr. Carstares likewise knew when he was to depone, that his Deposition was to be used against Ferwiswood, and he stood more in awe of his Love to his Friend, than of the Fear of the Torture, and hazarded rather to die for Ferwiswood, than that Ferwiswood should die by him: How can it then be imagin'd, that if this Man had seen Ferwiswood in his Tryal, it would have altered his Deposition; or that this Kindness, which we all admir'd in him, would have suffer'd him to forget any thing in his Deposition, which might have been advantageous in the least to his Friend: And they understand ill this light of Friendship, who think that it would not have been more nice nice and careful, than any Advocate could have been: And if Carstares had forgot at onetime, would he not have supplied it at another; but especially at this last time, when he knew his Friend was already brought upon his Tryal? And that this renewed Testimony was yet a further Confirmation of what was said against him; and albeit the King's Servants were forced to engage, that Carstares himself should not be made use of as a Witness against Ferviswood; yet I think this kind scrupulosity in Carstares, for Ferviswood, should convince you more than twenty suspect, nay than even indifferent Witnesses; nor can it be imagined, that the one of these Witnesses, would not have been as much afraid of GOD, and his Oath at London, as at Edinburgh; and the other in the Council-Chamber in the Forenoon, as in the Justice-Court in the Afternoon.

3. The Statute founded on; does not discharge the producing of Testimonies, otherways than after the Jury is inclosed; for then indeed they might be dangerous, because the Party could not object against them: But since the Statute only discharges to produce Writ, or Witnesses, after the Jury is inclosed; it seems clearly to insinuat, that they ought to prove when they are produced in Presence of the Party himself, as now they are. And though the Civil Law did not allow their Judges to believe Testimonies, because they were confined to observe strict Law; yet it does not from that follow, that our Juries, whom the Law allows to be a Law to themselves, and to be confined by no Rule, but their Conscience, may not trust intirely to the Depositions of Witnesses, though not taken before themselves, when they know that the Witnesses, by whom, and the Judges, before whom these Depositions were emitted, are Persons beyond all Suspicion, as in our Case. But yet for all this, I produce these Testimonies, as Adminicles here only to connect the Depositions of the present Witnesses, and not to be equivalent to Witnesses in this legal Process; albeit, as to the Conviction of Mankind, they are stronger than any ordinary Witnesses.

When you, my Lords, and Gentlemen, remember, that it is not the revenge of a privat Party, that accuses in this Case; and that even in privat Crimes, such as Forgery, or the murder of Children, &c. many Juries here have proceeded upon meer Presumptions, and that even Solomon himself, founded his illustrious Decision, approved by God Almighty, upon the presumed Assertion of a Mother; I hope ye will think two Friends Deposing, as present Witnesses, adminiculated and connected by the Depositions of others, though absent; should beget in you an intire belief, especially against a Pannal, who has been always known to incline this way, and who, though he was desired in the Tolbooth to vindicate himself from those Crimes, would not say any thing in his own Defence, and though he offers to clear himself of his accession to the King's Murder; yet says nothing to clear himself from the Conspiracy entered into with the late Earl of Argyle, for invading his Native Countrey, which is all that I here Charge upon him, and which he inclines to justifie, as a necessary mean for redressing Grievances; I must therefore remember you, that an Inquest of very worthy Gentlemen did find Ratbillet guilty, though there was but one Witness led against him, because when he was put to it, he did not deny his Accession: And two Rogues were found guilty in the late Circuit at Glasgow, for having murdered a Gentleman of the Guard, though no Man saw them kill him; but the Murderers having been pursued, they run to the Place, out of which the Pannals then accused were taken, none having seen the Face of the Runaways; and the Pannals being accused, and pressed to deny the Accession, shuned to disown the Guilt, but desired it might be proved against them. This may convince you that there are Proofs which are stronger then Witnesses; and I am sure that there were never more proving Witnesses then in this Case, nor were the Depositions of Witnesses ever more strongly adminiculated. Remember the Danger likewise of emboldening Conspiracies against the King's Sacred Life, and of encouraging a Civil War, wherein your selves and your Posterity may bleed, by making the least Difficulty to find a Man Guilty, by the strongest Proofs that ever were adduced in so latent a Crime as a Conspiracy is. And I do justly conclude, that whoever denies that a Conspiracy can be thus proved, does let all the World see, that he inclines that Conspiracies should be encouraged and allowed. Our Age is so far from needing such Encouragements, that on the other hand in this, as in all other Crimes, because the Guilt grows frequent and dangerous, the Probation should therefore be made the more easie, though in this Case, the King needs as little desire your Favour, as fear your Justice. And I have insisted so much upon this Probation, rather to convince the World of the Conspiracy, than you that this Conspirator is Guilty.

Thereafter the Lords Ordained the Affize to inclose, and return their Verdict to Morrow, by Nine-a-Clock in the Morning.

THIS Day being appointed for the Tryal of one of the Causes between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Titus Otes for Perjury; the same began between eight and nine in the Morning, and proceeded in the manner following.

First, Proclamation was made for Silence, then the Defendant was called, who appeared in Person, being brought up by Rule from the King's Bench Prison, where he was in Custody, and was advised to look to his Challenge to the Jury that were impannelled to try the Cause.

Otes. My Lord, I am to manage my own Defence, and have a great many Papers and Things which I have brought in order to it, I pray I may have some Conveniency for the managing my own Tryal.

Sir George Jefferies. L. C. J. Ay, ay, let him sit down there, within the Bar, and let him have Conveniency for his Papers.

Clerk of Cr. Cryer, Swear Sir William Dodson.

Otes. My Lord, I except against Sir William Dodson.

Mr. At. Gen. What is the Cause of Exception, Mr. Otes? Sir Robert Sawyer.

L. C. J. Why do you challenge him?

Otes. My Lord, I humbly conceive in these Cases of Criminal Matters, the Defendant has liberty of excepting against any of the Jurors, without shewing Cause, provided there be a full Jury besides.

L. C. J. No, no, that is not so, you are mistaken in that Mr. Otes.

Otes. My Lord, I am advised so, I do not understand the Law my self.

L. C. J. But we tell you then, it cannot be allowed; if Mr. Attorney will consent to wave him, well and good.

Mr. At. Gen.

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord, I know no reason for it, I cannot consent to any such thing.

L. C. J. Then, if you will not have him sworn, you must shew your Cause presently.

Otes. My Lord, I cannot assign any Cause.

L. C. J. Then he must be sworn.

Cl. of Cr. Swear him.

Cryer. Sir William Dodson take the Book, You shall well and truly try this Issue between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Titus Otes; and a true Verdict give according to the Evidence; so help you God.

Otes. My Lord, I challenge him.

L. C. J. For what Cause?

Otes. My Lord, he was one of the Grand Jury that found the Bill.

L. C. J. Was he so, that is an Exception indeed; what say you, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I believe he was upon one of the Indictments, but I think it was not this.

L. C. J. But if he were in either of them, he cannot be so impartial.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we will not stand upon it, we'll wave him.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas Fowlis.

Otes. Pray let me see that Gentleman. [Who was shown to him.

Are you not a Goldsmith in Fleet-street, between the two Temples?

Fowlis. Yes, I am.

L. C. J. You speak too late, he is sworn already.

Otes. My Lord, they are so quick, I could not speak, but he was one of the Grand Jury too.

L. C. J. We cannot help it now.

Mr. At. Gen. I did not know that he was so, but to shew that we mean nothing but fair, we are content to wave him.

L. C. J. You do very well, Mr. Attorney General; let him be withdrawn.

Cl. of Cr. Mr. Kempe, you may take your ease; swear Ambrose Isted. [Which was done.

Ambrose Isted
Henry Collier, and Richard Howard.

Otes. Before the Counsel opens the Cause, I desire to move one Thing to your Lordship.

L. C. J. What is it you would have?

Otes. My Lord, I have three Witnesses that are very material ones to my Defence, who are now Prisoners in the King's Bench, for whom I moved yesterday, that I might have a Rule of Court to bring them up to Day, but it was objected, that they were in Execution, and so not to be brought; I humbly move your Lordship now, that I may have a Habeas Corpus for them, to bring them immediately hither.

L. C. J. We cannot do it.

Otes. Pray, good my Lord, they are very material Witnesses for me, and I moved yesterday for them.

L. C. J. You did so, but we told your Counsel then, and so we tell you now, we cannot do it by Law, it will be an Escape.

Otes. My Lord, I shall want their Testimony.

L. C. J. Truly we cannot help it, the Law will not allow it, and you must be satisfied.

of London, in the Parish of St. Sepulchre, in the Ward of Faringdon without, London aforesaid, the seventeenth Day of December, in the thirtieth Year aforesaid, before the Justices of our said Lord the King, then and there being present, held by Adjournment for the County of Middlesex aforesaid, before whom the Indictment aforesaid was then depending, came the aforesaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove under the Custody of Sir Richard How, Kt. Sir John Chapman Knight, Sheriffs of the County of Middlesex aforesaid, into whose Custody, for the Cause aforesaid before that were committed, being there brought to the Bar in their proper Persons, and immediately being severally spoken unto concerning the Premises above charged upon them, how they would acquit themselves thereof; the aforesaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove did say that they were not thereof guilty, and for the same, for good and bad, they severally put themselves upon the Country, and by a certain Jury of the Country on that behalf, in due manner impannel'd, sworn and charged, then and there, in the same Court before the Justices of Goal-delivery aforesaid were tryed, and that upon that Tryal between our said late Sovereign Lord the King, and the aforesaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove at London aforesaid, to wit, at Justice-Hall in the Old Bailey aforesaid, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, the Defendant Titus Otes, by the Name of Titus Otes, late of the Parish of St. Sepulchre aforesaid, in the Ward aforesaid, Clerk, was a Witness produced on the behalf of our late Sovereign Lord the King upon the Tryal aforesaid, and before the aforesaid Justices of Goal-delivery in the Court aforesaid, then and there held, upon the Holy Evangelists of God, to speak and testify the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, of, and in the Premises between our said late Sovereign Lord the King, and the aforesaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, put in Issue, was duely sworn, and that he, the aforesaid Titus Otes, then and there, in the Court of Goal-delivery aforesaid, upon his Oath aforesaid, upon the Indictment aforesaid, at the Parish and Ward aforesaid, by his own proper Act and Consent, of his most wicked Mind, falsely, voluntarily, and corruptly did say, depose, swear, and to the Jurors of the Jury aforesaid, then and there sworn, and impannel'd to try the Issue aforesaid, between our said late Sovereign Lord the King, and the aforesaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, did give in Evidence, that there was a traiterous Consult of Jesuits that were assembled at a certain Tavern, called the White Horse Tavern in the Strand, (in the White Horse Tavern in the Strand, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, meaning) upon the four and twentieth Day of April, in the Year of our Lord 1678. At which Consult, Whitebread, Fenwick, Ireland, (the aforesaid Thomas White, alias Whitebread, John Fenwick, and William Ireland, meaning) and he the said Titus Otes, were present, and that the Jesuits aforesaid did separate themselves into several lesser Companies, and that the Jesuits aforesaid came to a Resolution to murder the said our late Lord the King, and that he, the said Titus Otes, did carry the Resolution aforesaid from Chamber to Chamber, and and did see that Resolution signed by them (the aforesaid Jesuits meaning) whereas in truth and indeed, the aforesaid Titus Otes was not present at any Consult of the Jesuits at the White Horse Tavern aforesaid in the Strand, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, upon the 24th of April, in the Year of our Lord 1678. nor did carry any Resolution to murder our said late Lord the King, from Chamber to Chamber by any Persons to be signed; and so he, the aforesaid Titus Otes, on the 17th Day of December, in the thirtieth Year aforesaid, at the Justice-Hall aforesaid, in the Court aforesaid, upon the Tryal aforesaid, upon the Indictment aforesaid, between our said late Lord the King, and the aforesaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, so as aforesaid, had by his own proper Act and Consent, and of his most wicked Mind, falsely, voluntarily, and corruptly in Manner and Form aforesaid, did commit voluntary and corrupt Perjury, to the great Displeasure of Almighty God, in manifest Contempt of the Laws of this Kingdom of England, to the Evil and Pernicious Example of all others in like case offending, and against the Peace of our said late Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. Upon this Indictment he has been arraign'd, and thereunto hath pleaded not Guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himself upon the Country, and His Majesty's Attorney General likewise, which Country you are, your Charge is to enquire, whether the Defendant be guilty of this Perjury and Offence whereof he is now indicted, or whether not guilty: If you find him guilty, you are to say so, if you find him not guilty, you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Otes. Hold, Sir, I beg one Favour of your Lordship, to give me leave to have that part of the Record, wherein I am said to have sworn such and such things, read distinctly in Latin.

L. C. J. Let it be read in Latin.

Mr. Just. Withins. Now, you have read it, go on, Sir, to make your Proclamation.

Cl. of Cr. Cryer, make an Ho-yes.

Cryer. Ho yes, If any one can inform our Sovereign Lord the King, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney General, or this Inquest now taken concerning the Perjury and Offence, whereof the Defendant Titus Otes stands indicted; let them come forth, and they shall be heard, for now he stands upon his Discharge.

Mr. Phipps. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury——

Otes. My Lord, I desire your Lordship and the Court would be of Counsel for me in one thing, which I take to be a Fault and Error in my Indictment.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Otes, Whatever you have to say of that nature, you must not speak to it now, you will have your time as to that hereafter, in case you be Convicted.

Otes. My Lord, I have but one small Exception to open to you.

L. C. J. We are now upon the Fact only.

Otes. My Lord, I beg you would give me leave only to tell you of a Mistake in the Indictment, which I hope, when I have opened, will satisfy your Lordship, that it ought not to be put upon me or the Court to try this Cause; or to be sure, if there should be a Conviction, I hope I may move an Arrest of the Judgment.

L. C. J. So I tell you you may, but not now.

Otes. Good my Lord, hear me but a few Words, the Indictment charges me to have given such and such Evidence, that there was such a Consult of the Jesuits at the White Horse Tavern in the Strand, the 24th of April 1678. that the Jesuits did afterwards divide themselves in several lesser Companies, that they came there to a Resolution to murder the late King, and that I swore that I carried that Resolution from Chamber to Chamber, and saw the Resolution signed by them, so the Word is, Signat'; now the Perjury assigned is, that I was not present at that Consult, nor did carry the Resolution from Chamber to Chamber to be signed, and there the Word is Signand'; now I conceive if Signat' be the Word, that is used in setting forth the Oath that I made, The Assignment of the Perjury ought to follow that Form, and the Word there ought to be Signat' too, being Signand', I take that to be an Error.

L. C. J. Look, that is not proper at this time, as I told you at first, but wisth I do not think there is any great Matter in what you say.

Mr. At. Gen. Either I do not understand Mr. Otes, what he means by the Objection, or he will find himself much mistaken in it.

L. C. J. Well, well, We have nothing to do with that now, go on with the Cause.

Mr. Phipps. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment against Titus Otes for Perjury, which Indictment sets forth, that Thomas White, alias Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering

Pickering and John Grove, the 16th of December in the thirtieth Year of the late King, at the Old Bailey, were indicted of High Treason for Conspiring the Death of the King, and that Ireland, Pickering, and Grove were tryed the 17th of December in that Year, and upon that Indictment Titus Otes was produced as a Witness on the behalf of the King against the said Ireland, Pickering and Grove, being sworn to give Evidence to the Jury that were impanelled and sworn to try that Cause; he did swear and give in Evidence that there was a treasonable Consult of the Jesuits at the White Horse Tavern in the Strand, meaning the White Horse Tavern in the Strand, in the County of Middlesex, the 24th of April, 1678. at which Consult, Whitebread, Fenwick, and Ireland, and the said Titus Otes were present, and that they separated themselves into several lesser Clubs, and came to a Resolution to murder the King, and that he, the said Titus Otes, carried the said Resolution from Chamber to Chamber, to be signed by them, meaning the Jesuits; whereas in truth and in fact, he, the said Titus Otes, was not present at any such Consult, the four and twentieth of April, 1678. nor carried any such Resolution from Chamber to Chamber to be signed, and he, the said Titus Otes, the 17th Day of December, in the thirtieth Year aforesaid, at the Old Bailey aforesaid, upon the Tryal aforesaid, on the Indictment aforesaid, between the King, and the said Ireland, Pickering, and Grove; so as aforesaid had by his own proper Act and Consent of his most wicked Mind, falsely, voluntarily and corruptly in manner and form aforesaid, did commit wilful and corrupt Perjury, and this is laid to be to the Dishonour of God, in Contempt of the Law, to the evil Example of others in the like case offending against the King's Peace, Crown and Dignity; to this he has pleaded not Guilty, and that is the Issue that you are to try; if we prove him Guilty, we question not but you will find him so.

Mr. At. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn, I am of Counsel in this Cause for the King, and our Case stands thus; The Defendant stands indicted for corrupt and wilful Perjury, for what he swore at the Tryal of Ireland, and that which he swore was this, in order to convict the Prisoners then at the Bar of the High Treason they were accused of; Otes did swear, that upon the 24th of April, 1678. there was a Consult of Jesuits held at the White Horse Tavern in the Strand, where Ireland and several other Jesuits were present, and their Business was to consult how they might murder and destroy the King, and subvert the Government, and there they came to a Resolution that Pickering and Grove should kill the King; and he was present at the Debate, and he carried the Resolution from Chamber to Chamber, where they had separated themselves in lesser Numbers; and there he saw the Resolution signed; and this is the Matter that he swore, upon which this Indictment is founded. And, Gentlemen, we do charge that this was a false Oath, and in a point expressly to the Matter then in Controversy before that Court, for we shall prove he was beyond Sea at that time, and on that day, and in order to his Conviction we shall make out by clear Evidence to you as full and plain as ever was given, that from Christmas before, which was in December, 1677. till Midsummer after, which was the latter end of June, 1678. Otes, that swears this Consult in April, was at St. Omers, and in all that time was not absent from the College there above 24 Hours, and that but once only, which was in January when he played Truant, and went to Watton, which is about two Miles from St. Omers, but otherwise he was all along in the College. And, my Lord, that we may give such a satisfactory Evidence as may make it undeniably plain to the Jury, I desire your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, would please to observe some particular Periods of Time, that I shall open for the better clearing our Evidence methodically; and the first Period of Time is from Mr. Hilsley's leaving St. Omers; now he left St. Omers the 14th of April Old Stile, which is the 24th of April New Stile, and then when he came away, he left Otes there at St. Omers; Mr. Hilsley, when he came into England, in Kent in his Journey to London, meets one Mr. Burnaby; this was I say in Mr. Hilsley's Return into England from St. Omers, which he left ten Days before the time assigned by Otes for this Consult, at the White Horse Tavern in the Strand, and the next Period is, Mr. Burnaby was going to St. Omers, and there he arrives in Time the 21st of April Old Stile, and there he finds Mr. Otes, who swore he was then in London; and by the Evidence you will hear, that Mr. Otes, according to his usual Custom, and according to that Virtue he is endowed with, very boldly insinuates himself into this Gentleman's Company, as he uses to do with all new Comers; and you will hear from Mr. Burnaby himself, and many others, that from the time of his coming to St. Omers, which was the 21st of April, he convers'd with Mr. Otes several Days, every Day till after the 24th of April Old Stile at St. Omers. Then, my Lord, another Period of Time that I would desire you to observe, is, from Mr. Pool's coming from St. Omers, which was in Time the 25th of April Old Stile, the very Day after the Day that this Consult was sworn to be on, and when he came from St. Omers, you will hear from many Witnesses that he left Otes there, and there he stayed. For, my Lord, we shall, besides these particular times of these Gentlemen's coming over who left him there, prove the very Day when he left St. Omers, and that was the end of Midsummer-day following, which was the 23d of June; then was the time when Otes came first from St. Omers to England, and we shall prove he took his leave of them then: My Lord, We have many other Circumstances that will unanswerably strengthen this Evidence, and shew that our Witnesses testify nothing but the Truth; one particularly is this; this Gentleman being a Novice of the House, was Reader in the Sodality, as they call it, we shall prove that, for every Sunday and Holiday throughout all April and May, he did officiate in that place, and did read to the Society according as the Custom there is; and we shall prove another particular thing, that upon this 24th of April he was in the College, by a particular Circumstance, and that by several Witnesses; so that, Gentlemen, not to detain you with any long Opening of the the Matter, if we prove this that I have opened, as we shall with a Cloud of Witnesses, it will make an end of the Question. We shall first call our Witnesses to prove that he swore at that Tryal, that such a Consult was, and he was at it, and then if we prove that he was at another Place beyond Sea, at such distance that it is impossible for him to be here; I do not doubt but the Court and the Jury will conclude, he hath wilfully and corruptly forswore himself; the said effects of which we are all Witnesses of; it was to take away the Lives of his fellow Subjects wrongfully; and it will appear to the World, he has been one of the greatest Impostors that ever did appear upon the Stage, either in this Kingdom, or in any other Nation.

Mr. Finch. Mr. Sol. Gen. We will now go on with our Evidence, and prove all the Parts of the Indictment, and first produce the Record of the Tryal of Ireland, and then by Witnesses, Viva voce that were present at that Tryal, we shall prove what he swore, and then prove that Oath of his to be false; swear Mr. Swift.

[Which was done.

Where is the Record of Ireland's Tryal?

Mr. Swift. Here it is, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. Is that a true Copy, Sir?

Mr. Swift. Yes, I examined this from the Record, it is a true Copy.

L. C. J. Read it.

Mr. At. Gen. If Dr. Otes does desire the whole may be read, let it be so; otherwise a Word of it may serve, it being only an Inducement.

Otes. Yes, I desire it may be all read.

L. C. J. It must be read, if he will have it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well I submit it, I did only offer it to save the time of the Court.

Otes. I would save the time of the Court too, all that I can; but I think it may be material for me to have the whole read.

L. C. J. In God's name let it be read, we will not hinder you in any thing that may be for your Defence.

Cl. of Cr. Memorandum quod—

Mr. At. Gen. Now this long Record in Latin is read, I would fain know whether it be to any great purpose, but only to spend Time?

L. C. J. Nay, I think it has not been very edifying to a great many; do you think, Mr. Otes, that the Jury, who are Judges of this Fact, do understand it?

Otes. I cannot tell, may be they may, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Withins. Do you understand it yourself, Mr. Otes?

Otes. That's not any Question here; but to oblige the Court and the Jury, I desire it may be read in English too.

L. C. J. No, the Court understands it well enough, and they can tell the Jury what it is, it is only the Copy of a Record, to prove that Ireland was tried for High Treason at the Old Bailey, the 17th of Dec. 1678.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, my Lord, we will call our Witnesses, to swear what Otes did at that Tryal swear: Pray swear Mr. Foster.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Mr. Foster, will you acquaint the Court and the Jury, whether Dr. Otes was produced as a Witness at Ireland's Tryal, and what he did there depose about a Consult in April 78.

Mr. Foster. My Lord, I was so unhappy as to be one of that Jury, by whom Mr. Ireland, Mr. Pickering, and Mr. Groves was try'd.

Jury men. My Lord, we desire that Mr. Foster would lift up his Voice, for we cannot hear him.

Mr. Foster. Truly my Lord, I have been very sick of late, and am not now very well, and therefore cannot speak louder than I do.

L. C. J. Go nearer the Jury, and speak as loud as you can.

Mr. Foster. My Lord, I say, I did see Mr. Otes produced as an Evidence at the Sessions in the Old Bailey, where I was so unhappy as to be a Jury-man, when Mr. Pickering, Mr. Ireland, Mr. Grove, and Mr. Whitebread were try'd.

Mr. At. Gen. When was that?

Mr. Foster. It was in December 78.

Mr. At. Gen. And what did Otes then swear?

Mr. Foster. I did see Mr. Otes sworn as an Evidence there, in behalf of the King, against the Prisoners; and he did then swear, that there was a Meeting of several Jesuits at the Whiteborse Tavern in the Strand, upon the 24th of April 78. and that Mr. Whitebread, Mr. Ireland and Mr. Fenwick were present at the Meeting, and there they did consult the Death of the King, and the altering of the Religion; and some went away and others came; at last they reduced themselves into several smaller Companies or Clubs, and they came to a resolution, that Pickering and Grove should go on to assassinate the King, for which the one was to have 1500 Pound, and the other 30000 Masses, and that this Resolution was drawn up by one Mico (if I am not mistaken in his Name) I have it in my Notes I then took of the Evidence; and he swore further, that he himself went with this Resolution to several of their Chambers, he went to Whitebread's Chamber, and saw Whitebread sign it, he went to Fenwick's Chamber, and saw Fenwick sign it, and went to Ireland's Chamber, and saw Ireland sign it, and this was upon the 24th of April 78. My Lord, I am positive in this, for I had the good hap to take the Notes at the Tryal, for my own help, being a Jury-man, and I never looked upon those Notes afterwards, till the printed Tryal came out, and then I compared my Notes with the Print, and found them to agree, and I have kept them ever since by me, and this is all under my own Hand as I have testified.

Otes. My Lord, may I ask this Gentleman a Question?

L. C. J. Ay, if the King's Counsel have done with him.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord, we have done with him.

Mr. Foster. Pray my Lord, give me leave to sit down, for I am not able to stand.

Otes. My Lord, I desire you to ask that Gentleman, whether in the Oath that I took, I called it a Consult, or I called it a Traiterous Consult.

Mr. Foster. Truly I think you called it both, if I am not mistaken, but if your Lordship please, I will look upon my Notes.

L. C. J. You may look upon your Notes to refresh your Memory, if you will.

Mr. Just.

Mr. Just. Withins. Truly I think if it were a Consult to murder the King, it must be a traitorous one without doubt.

Otes. Sir, that is not to the Purpose, my Question is, what I swore it was.

L. C. J. He tells you, he believes you did swear both ways.

Mr. Foster. At that Consult he said such a Resolution was taken, and I think he called it a Traiterous Consult.

Otes. If you please, I'll tell your Lordship the Reason, why I asked that Question.

L. C. J. No, you may save your self the trouble of that, you best know the reason of your own Questions; he has given you a satisfactory Answer.

Otes. Then if your Lordship please, ask him this Question, whether I swore that all these three Jesuits were present at one time, or how many of them?

L. C. J. You hear the Question, what say you to it?

Mr. Foster. Sir, you swore that Ireland, Fenwick and Whitebread were at that Consult, but whether they were all three of them there at one time, I cannot tell, or which of them were together; but this you did swear, that they were there, and came to such a Resolution, and you carried it to all their Chambers, and did see them sign it.

Mr. Just. Withins. He gives you a plain Account, what you did swear, I think, Mr. Otes.

Otes. Very well, my Lord, I would ask him a third Question, if you please.

L. C. J. Ay, in God's Name ask him as many Questions as you will.

Otes. Whether did I swear that it was resolved to kill the King at the White Horse Tavern, or whether that Resolution was made after they separated themselves into lesser Clubs?

L. C. J. Mr. Foster, this is his Question, whether you did apprehend by what he swore, that he affirmed, the Resolution to kill the King was made at the White Horse Tavern, or afterwards when they were divided?

Mr. Foster. They came to a Resolution, you said, at the White Horse Tavern, and the Resolution was there drawn up by one Mico, I think, and it was carried by you, for every one to sign it from Chamber to Chamber; for I remember you were asked the Question, whether you saw them sign it, and you answered that you did carry it, and saw them sign it.

Mr. Just. Withins. He speaks very plain, Mr. Otes.

L. C. J. He answers your Question very fully.

Otes. Ay, my Lord, so he does, I am glad of it.

L. C. J. Have you any more Questions to ask him?

Otes. I would ask him another Question; whether I did swear, that I did carry this Resolution from Chamber to Chamber to be signed, or that I carried it from Chamber to Chamber and saw them sign it?

Mr. Foster. You did swear, that you carried the Resolution from Chamber to Chamber, and saw them sign it.

Otes. But did you remember it so particularly, as to say which you swore, whether I did carry it to be signed, or carried it, and saw them sign it?

Mr. Foster. You said, you carried it to be signed, and you saw it signed.

L. C. J. He tells you for a Satisfaction in that Point, that he does remember you did swear it both ways.

Otes. He does say so indeed, but whether it was so or no, is a doubt.

L. C. J. That will be a Question by and by it may be, if he be in the wrong, I suppose you can rectify him.

Otes. We are now my Lord upon my Oath, and therefore it concerns me to enquire whether I swore as is laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. You say right, it does so.

Otes. And I the rather ask these Questions, my Lord, because it is six Years ago since that Tryal.

L. C. J. I hope you have not forgot what you swore, have you?

Otes. My Lord, I think it is fair for me to ask the Witnesses what they remember after so long a time.

L. C. J. 'Tis very fair, no body says any thing to the contrary.

Otes. Then my Lord, I hope I may ask this Gentleman how he comes to remember all this after so long a time?

L. C. J. He has told you already, but tell it him again Mr. Foster.

Mr. Foster. Truly it is so long ago, that had I not taken all these Notes at the Tryal, I had not been able to have given so good an Account.

L. C. J. 'Tis a very good reason.

Otes. 'Tis so my Lord, I have subpoena'd others of the Jury, and they will, I suppose, give you as good an Account.

L. C. J. Have you done with him then?

Otes. I have one Question more to ask Mr. Foster, and that is, whether I swore they met all in one Room, at the White Horse Tavern, or in more than one?

Mr. Foster. You swore they were in several Rooms.

Otes. Then I would ask him this Question, my Lord, whether he were then satisfied that Ireland was guilty of the High Treason he was then indicted?

L. C. J. The meaning of the Question is, I suppose, whether you did believe Mr. Otes at that time.

Mr. Foster. Yes, my Lord I had no reason to the contrary.

L. C. J. But I would ask you a Question then Mr. Foster. Do you believe him now? Do you think, Mr. Otes, he would have found him guilty, if he had not believed the Evidence against him?

Otes. We know how Juries have gone alate.

L. C. J. Ay, very strangely indeed, Mr. Otes, and I hope so as we shall never see them go again.

Mr. Foster. My Lord, I have lived so long in the City of London without any Blemish, that I hope it will not be thought I would give corruptly a Verdict against my Conscience.

Otes. My Lord, I speak of later Times than Ireland's Tryal.

L. C. J. He is an honest Man, I know him.

Otes. Good my Lord, be pleased to hear me.

L. C. J. Nay, you shall hear me, as well as I shall hear you; I'll assure you that, Mr. Otes in plain English, ask as many Questions of the Witnesses as you will, that are proper to be asked; but I'll have no Descants, nor Reflections: I know him, and he is very well known in the City of London, he is a Man of very considerable Quality, and very good Repute.

Otes. I beseech your Lordship to forgive me, if I mistake in my Questions, I do assure you I design no Reflections on Mr. Foster.

L. C. J. Ask what Questions you will, but do not reflect.

Otes. I desire to ask Mr. Foster one Question more, and that is, that he would be pleased to tell the reason why at the beginning of his Evidence he said, it was his unhappiness to be a Jurymen at that time?

Mr. Foster. Really Sir, I think it not a happiness for any Man to be of a Jury, where the Life of a Man is in Question. I assure you for my self, I never accounted it so, and if I could have avoided it, I should have been very glad to have been excused.

Otes. I have done with Mr. Foster.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, thus we prove what Mr. Otes swore at the Tryal, which Mr. Otes himself will not deny, for the Fact, Mr. Otes has printed in his Narrative, as we have now proved it.

Otes. I intend to produce some others of the Jury-men by and by.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we shall call our Witnesses to prove, that what he then swore was false.

Mr. At. Gen. We call no more to the Point, what he did swear; but go on to disprove what he did then swear.

Otes. My Lord, I would put this Question to the Court, Whether this be a Proof sufficient for this Point?

L. C. J. I leave that to the Jury, it is a Point of Fact that they are to try.

Otes. I beseech your Lordship, that the Court would be pleased to give me an Answer.

L. C. J. If you ask impertinent Questions, the Court is not obliged to answer them. Go on Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Call Martin Hilsley, Esq; and Henry Thornton, Esq; Swear Mr. Hilsley. [Which was done.]

Come Mr. Hilsley, pray acquaint my Lord and the Jury what time you came from St. Omers, in the Year 78.

Mr. Hilsley. My Lord, I came from St. Omers, the 24th of April New Stile, where I left the Prisoner, Mr. Otes.

L. C. J. From whence did you come, say you?

Mr. Hilsley. From St. Omers the 24th of April, New Stile.

L. C. J. What Year?

Hilsley. In the Year 78. that is the fourteenth of April here, and the three and twentieth of April New Stile; I saw the Prisoner at St. Omers, and went to School with him, and on the four and twentieth I came from St. Omers, and went to Calais, and from thence into England; but he was never in my Company all the while I was coming, for England, though he swore he came over with me.

L. C. J. The three and twentieth of April you say you saw him?

Mr. Hilsley. Yes, I was with him, that was the Day before I came from St. Omers.

L. C. J. You left him there the Day before you came away, you say?

Mr. Hilsley. I did not see him that Morning that I came away, but here are others that did.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he a Scholar there?

Mr. Hilsley. Yes, my Lord, he was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know him very well?

Mr. Hilsley. Yes, my Lord, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he come over into England with you?

Mr. Hilsley. My Lord, I came from St. Omers to Calais, and never saw him, from Calais to Dover; I never saw him from Dover to London, I never saw him all the way, and I am confident, he was not in the same Ship I came over in, for I should have seen him if he had.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he for some time before that constantly at St. Omers?

Mr. Hilsley. We went perpetually to School together.

L. C. J. What time did you take shipping after you went from St. Omers?

Mr. Hilsley. The very next Day; the Day I went from St. Omers was on the Sunday morning: On Monday I took shipping from Calais to Dover, and I arrived at England at Ten of the Clock the same Night.

Otes. When does he say he arrived in England?

L. C. J. He says, he went from St. Omers on the Sunday, he came that Night to Calais, and the next Day went on Board from Calais, and came that Night to Dover, that was Monday night.

Mr. Hilsley. Yes, I came that Night to Dover, and I lay there that Monday night, the next Day was the 26th of April New Stile.

Mr. At. Gen. Where came you then, from thence?

Mr. Hilsley. I came as far as Bockton-street, and there I lay 4 or 5 Days, and then I came to Cittenbourn, and by long Sea from thence to London.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you meet Mr. Burnaby?

Mr. Hilsley. I met him hard by there, at a Relations of mine.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember what Day you met him?

Mr. Hilsley. I think it was a Day or two before I came away from thence to London.

Mr. Just. Withins. Had you any Discourse with Mr. Otes, about your coming into England?

Mr. Hilsley. Nothing at all, Sir Francis, that I remember.

L. C. J. What time did you come to London?

Mr. Hilsley. I came within a few Days to London, I stayed 4 or 5 Days there by the way; and I saw Mr. Burnaby within 4 Days, I think, after I came into England. It was about Monday seven-night after I came from St. Omers, that I came to London.

Mr. At. Gen. That was May New Stile.

Mr. Hilsley. That is their Stile. It was so.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In our Stile it was the 21. of April.

Mr. Hansfys. Pray did you give an account to any body, after you came to London, that that you left Otes at St. Omers when you came away.

Mr. Hilsley. What say you, Mr. Hanseys, I did not well understand your Question.

L. C. J. Then mind me, Sir, It was asked of you whether you had any Discourse with any body, after you came hither, that you had left Mr. Otes behind you at St. Omers?

Mr. Hilsley. I did tell some Persons I left an English Parson there, at the same time I came away.

L. C. J. Did you not name him, who it was?

Mr. Hilsley. Yes, I named him by the Name he went by there, and that was Sampson Lucy.

Mr. At. Gen. To whom did you tell it?

Mr. Hilsley. To one Mr. Osbourne.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he go by that Name of Sampson Lucy in the College?

Mr. Hilsley. Yes, he did sometimes, he had three or four Names, he was called sometimes Titus Ambrosius.

Otes. Now, my Lord, I desire I may ask that Gentleman a Question or two.

L. C. J. Ay, if they have done with him.

Mr. At. Gen. We have, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then ask him what you will.

Otes. I desire, my Lord, that you would be pleased to ask that Gentleman what Religion he is of; for it is a fair Question, and an equitable one, and that which very nearly concerns me; and I desire to know where he lives.

L. C. J. What Religion are you of, Sir?

Mr. Hilsley. I am a Roman Catholick.

L. C. J. Where do you live?

Mr. Hilsley. I live in London, I am of the Inner Temple.

L. C. J. He says that he is a Roman Catholick, and Lives in London.

Otes. Pray be pleased, my Lord, to ask him when he went to St. Omers first, and how long he stayed there?

Mr. Hilsley. My Lord, I was there about six Years, I presume it was about the Year 1672. when I went there first.

Otes. Pray ask him what he did there, what was his Business?

Mr. At. Gen. That is not a pertinent Question at all, with submission, my Lord.

Otes. I beseech you, Mr. Attorney, give me leave to ask my own Questions.

L. C. J. Ay, but you must ask fair and pertinent Questions.

Otes. My Lord, I would know what was his Employment there at St. Omers?

Mr. Hilsley. I know not my self of any particular Employment I had, any more than any of the rest that were there.

L. C. J. But, Mr. Otes, you must not ask any such Questions; what know I, but by asking him the Question, you may make him obnoxious to some Penalty, you must not ask him any Questions to ensnare him.

Otes. My Lord, It tends very much to my Defence to have that Question truly answered.

L. C. J. But if it tends to your Defence never so much, you must not subject him to a Penalty by your Questions.

Otes. The nature of my Defence requires an Answer to that Question.

L. C. J. But shall you make a Man liable to Punishment, by ensnaring Questions? If a Man should ask you what Religion you are of, — Otes. My Lord, I will tell you by and by my Reason; and I hope a good one; why I ask it.

L. C. J. I do not believe you can have any Reason, but to be sure we must not suffer any such entangling Questions to be asked.

Otes. Pray ask him, my Lord, when I came to St. Omers?

L. C. J. When did Otes come to St. Omers?

Mr. Hilsley. As well as I remember, he came to St. Omers either the latter end of November, or the beginning of December, in the Year 1677. I think it was that Year.

Otes. I desire you would ask him, whether they were not Priests and Jesuits that govern'd that House?

L. C. J. What a Question is that, I tell you 'tis not fit to be asked.

Otes. I demand an Answer to it, upon the Oath he has taken.

L. C. J. And I tell you, upon the Oath you have taken, you are not bound to answer any such Question.

Otes. Good my Lord, let my Questions be answered.

L. C. J. No, Sir, they shall not: How now, do not think to put Irregularities upon us, if you will behave your self as you ought to do, and keep to that which is proper, well and good?

Otes. If your Lordship pleases, I think this very proper for me.

L. C. J. What, to ask such improper Questions as these are?

Otes. Truly, my Lord, I think they are fit Questions to be asked.

L. C. J. But we are all of another Opinion.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know, whether they are not set on by their Superiours to do this?

L. C. J. That is not a fair Question neither.

Otes. Give me leave to make my Defence, my Lord, I beseech you.

L. C. J. Ay, in God's Name; but I pray you then make it in a regular and becoming way; for I know of no Privilege you have more than other People, to use Witnesses as you do.

Otes. My Lord, I look upon my self as hardly used in the Case.

L. C. J. I care not what you look upon your self to be, if you will ask Questions, ask none but fair Questions, and while you keep within Bounds you shall be heard as well as any of the King's Subjects; but if you will break out into Questions that are impertinent, extravagant, or ensnaring, we must correct you, and keep you within proper Limits.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I ask whether he was not a Witness at the Tryal of the five Jesuits, and at Langborn's Tryal?

L. C. J. Ay, that is a proper Question, what say you to't, Sir?

Mr. Hilsley. I was so, Sir.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Credit he received at those Tryals?

L. C. J. What a Question is that to ask any Man!

Otes. My Lord, I think it is a fair Question.

L. C. J. No, indeed, it is not a fair one at all.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know what induces him to come here as a Witness now, since it appears that now he comes to give an Evidence that he gave six Years ago, and was not believed?

Mr. Hilfley. My Lord, I am subpoena'd.

L. C. J. He has given you an Answer to the Question, tho' I think it was an idle Question, and not at all to the purpose.

Otes. It may be he may have some particular reason to induce him to it now.

L. C. J. Well, he tells you he came because he was subpoena'd, and that is sufficient: He is not compellable to be a Witness, unless he be subpoena'd; but if a Man will come without a Subpoena, and give Evidence in a Cause; that is no Objection to his Testimony.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know of him, whether he is to have any Reward for swearing in this Cause?

L. C. J. What say you, Sir, are you to have any Reward for your Evidence?

Mr. Hilfley. None at all as I know of, my Lord, I assure you.

Mr. Just. Withins. He is not paid for his Evidence, Mr. Otes.

Otes. If he be or be not, I cannot tell, nor do I know who ever was paid for it.

L. C. J. Have you any more Questions to ask him?

Otes. Pray my Lord, I desire to know what was the occasion of his coming away from St. Omers?

Mr. Hilfley. I had finished my Studies.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask him, if he never heard of any Consult of the Jesuits here in England, in the Month of April 78. and from whom he did hear of it?

Mr. Hilfley. I did hear of it among the rest of the Students of the College.

L. C. J. What did you hear of?

Mr. Hilfley. I did hear of a Consult of the Fathers in April 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, there was, but not such an one as Mr. Otes speaks of, nor was he at it.

Mr. Just. Holloway. For what was that Consult, I pray you?

Mr. Hilfley. It was nothing but a Triennial Congregation about the Affairs of the Society.

L. C. J. What were they to do there?

Mr. Hilfley. My Lord, I was informed among them there, that it was only what they used to have once in three Years for ordinary Affairs.

Otes. My Lord, He pretends to tell when I came thither, I desire to know of him from what time it was he saw me there, and how often?

Mr. Hilfley. Generally every day, as near as I can remember, I think, Mr. Otes; you and I, Mr. Otes, went to School in the same place.

Otes. Pray, how many Days was I absent from thence in that time you were there?

Mr. Hilfley. You were there generally as often as I, I do not know whether ever you miss'd a Day or no.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, will you ask this Gentleman one Question more, whether he can particularly tell that he did see me every Day at St. Omers? For 'tis not enough for him to swear that he saw me there; but he ought to give an account how he comes to know it by some particular Circumstances.

L. C. J. He has given you several Circumstances of his Knowledge, for he says he was there all the while from your coming, till the 23d of April New Stile, that he came for England; he says he was a Scholar in the same Form and Class with you, and because he does not remember himself to have been absent, he does not remember you to be absent neither.

Mr. At. Gen. And he swears particularly to the very time he came over, which was April the 14th Old Stile.

Otes. Well, I have no more Questions to ask this Gentleman.

L. C. J. Then call another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Cryer, Call Mr. John Dorrel.

[Who was sworn.]

L. C. J. Look ye, Mr. Attorney, you did open things at the first for Method's sake by Periods of Time; the first was Hilfley's coming over, the next was the meeting with Burnaby, now pray observe that Method, and call that Burnaby next.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We shall call him by and by; but we have not done with this Business about Hilfley, we have some Witnesses that will give an Evidence to strengthen and back his Testimony. Come, Mr. Dorrel, What have you to say to this Matter?

Mr. Dorrel. My Lord, In April 1678. I came from Brussels to England, where presently after I came, I was with one Mr. Osbourn and my Mother, and there was a Discourse between my Mother and him about Religion.

L. C. J. Where was that?

Mr. Dorrel. It was here in England.

Mr. At. Gen. Now tell the time when that was.

Mr. Dorrel. As near as I can guess, it was the 15th or 16th of April Old Stile, in the Year 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, Sir, go on with your Story.

Mr. Dorrel. My Mother was laughing at his Religion, and telling him some ridiculous Stories, and he replied, there are a great many that are so ignorant, that are bred up in the Religion of the Church of England, that they are forced to be sent to the Colleges abroad to be taught, even some of the Clergy of that Church, and particulariz'd in one Sampson Lucy aliàs Otes, that was a Scholar at that time at St. Omers, as he was assured by a Gentleman that was newly come from thence: My Mother is now sick, or else she would have been here, and would have testified the same I now do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This Gentleman is a Protestant, Mr. Otes.

Otes. What is your Name, Sir, I pray?

Mr. Dorrel. My Name is John Dorrel, Sir.

Otes. Were you never at St. Omers a Student there?

Mr. Dorrel. I was there, but before your time, Doctor; I had not the Happiness to be there, while you were there.

Otes. I pray, Sir, what Religion are you of?

Mr. Dorrel. I am a Papist now.

Otes.

Otes. I desire, my Lord, the Court would be pleased to take notice of it, he owns he was reconciled to the Church of Rome.

Mr. Dorrel. Mr. Otes, To satisfy you, I went over when I was a Child of 12 or 13 Years old, and so was bred in that Perswasion.

L. C. J. Well, well, We all observe what he says.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray swear Mr. Osbourn.

[Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We call'd this Person only to this Matter. Pray, Sir, will you give the Court and the Jury an account what Discourse you had with Mr. Hilsey about Otes, and pray, Sir, tell the time when it was.

Mr. Osbourn. My Lord, I went out of Town the 30th of April, the Year before the pretended Plot was discovered by Mr. Otes, and I met with Mr. Hilsey two or three Days before, and enquiring of him about the Affairs of St. Omers, he told me of a Minister of the Church of England that was come thither to be a Student there, who went under the Name of Sampson Lucy, but his right Name was Otes; I asked him what he pretended to; did he intend to be of that Order? He told me, he did believe that he would not be admitted for his irregular and childish Behaviour, and that he had left him in the College; and this I afterwards in Discourse told to Madam Dorrel, who is a Protestant, and to my Mother, who is since dead?

Mr. At. Gen. Will Mr. Otes ask this Gentleman any Questions?

Otes. I only ask him what Religion he is of?

L. C. J. What Religion are you of, Sir?

Mr. Osbourn. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, my Lord, we come to call Mr. Burnaby. Pray swear him.

[Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Burnaby, Pray will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, of the time when you came from St. Omers to England; and when you met with Mr. Hilsey?

Mr. Burnaby. I met with Hilsey on the 18th of April Old Stile, in the Year 78. then I pursued my Journey the following Day to St. Omers.

L. C. J. Where did you meet him?

Mr. Burnaby. Between Cittenbourn and Canterbury, and afterwards I pursued my Journey from Canterbury to Dover, from thence to Callis, and from thence to St. Omers. I arrived at St. Omers the 21st of April Old Stile, which was the 1st of May New Stile, upon the 2d of May Mr. Otes was in my Company, I was walking in the Garden, and he came into my Company.

L. C. J. When was it?

Mr. Burnaby. The 2d of May New Stile, and the 3d of May again I went into the Garden, and there he was with me again, and the 5th of May I saw him again.

L. C. J. Where?

Mr. Burnaby. In the Rhetorick Form.

L. C. J. But where, in what place?

Mr. Burnaby. At St. Omers.

L. C. J. You speak of your own Knowledge, you are sure you saw him there at those times?

Mr. Burnaby. Yes, in the Rhetorick School and in the Garden.

Mr. At. Gen. What more do you know of him?

Mr. Burnaby. I saw him again the 8th of May New Stile, that is the 28th of April Old Stile; I mean by New Stile, that Stile which was used in the Place where I was then.

Mr. At. Gen. How long was he there before he went away?

Mr. Burnaby. I know he was there from the 2d of May, the Day after I came thither, to the 20th of June, and then I went away, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. Did you see him daily all that time?

Mr. Burnaby. Yes, from Day to Day he was not out of the House.

L. C. J. Were you a Scholar there with him?

Mr. Burnaby. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. What Year was that?

Mr. Burnaby. In the Year 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Otes may ask him what Questions he will.

Otes. My Lord, He says he went away; I desire to know whether he did go?

Mr. Burnaby. I went away the 20th of June from St. Omers, it is no matter whither I went.

Otes. I desire he may give an account what Religion he is of.

Mr. Burnaby. I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know whether he be not of that Order?

L. C. J. That I will not ask him, I'll assure you.

Otes. Truly, my Lord, I think it is a very hard matter for me to have Jesuits admitted as Witnesses in such a Cause against me.

L. C. J. I have told you already, you are not to ask any Questions of any Witnesses that may subject them to any Penalty, or make them accuse themselves of any Crime.

Otes. My Lord, I humbly desire he would give an account, whether he were not admitted into the Society.

L. C. J. I tell you, he is not to be ask'd that Question.

Otes. He has own'd it before.

L. C. J. Do you take your Advantage of it, if you can prove it.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I desire to ask him, whether or no he did appear as a Witness at the Tryal of the five Jesuits?

Mr. Burnaby. No, my Lord, I did not.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him whether he was not summon'd to appear then?

Mr. Burnaby. No, I was not.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Reward he is to have for coming, and giving this Evidence?

L. C. J. Are you to have any Reward for being a Witness in this Cause?

Mr. Burnaby. None, my Lord, that I know of.

L. C. J. That was a proper Question to be asked, and you have a fair Answer to it.

Otes. Pray, Mr. Burnaby, by what Name did you go at St. Omers?

Mr. Burnaby. By the Name of Blunt.

Mr. At. Gen. And what Name did he go by there?

Mr. Burnaby. Who, Sir?

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Otes.

Mr. Bur.

Mr. Burnaby. By the Name of Sampson Lucy.

Otes. My Lord, I desire you to ask him whether he did know of any Consult that was to be held here in London, in April 78. and by whom he knew it?

L. C. J. What say you, Sir, did you know of any Consult?

Mr. Burnaby. No, I neither heard of it, nor knew any thing of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Now my Lord, we shall go on to another Period of Time, and that is concerning Pool. Swear Mr. Pool. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, whether you knew Mr. Burnaby at St. Omers.

Mr. Pool. Yes, I did, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know the time when he came to St. Omers?

Mr. Pool. No, I do not remember it.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you come over from St. Omers?

Mr. Pool. The 25th of April.

Mr. At. Gen. What Stile?

Mr. Pool. Old Stile.

Mr. At. Gen. In what Year?

Mr. Pool. In the Year 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know Mr. Otes at St. Omers?

Mr. Pool. Yes, I did know that Gentleman there.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he at St. Omers that time you were there?

Mr. Pool. Yes, he was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you leave him there when you came away?

Mr. Pool. Yes, I did leave him there when I came away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell the Court some particular Thing why you remember it, and upon what account you came away.

Mr. Pool. Upon the Occasion of my Brother's Death I came over, and I can tell several Particulars of my Journey, I came away upon the Thursday, and I came to London upon the Sunday following.

Mr. At. Gen. You are sure you left Mr. Otes there then?

Mr. Pool. Yes, I am sure I did leave Mr. Otes there when I came away, and I came away thence the Fifth of May New Stile, the Twenty Fifth of April Old Stile.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray how long did you know Mr. Otes there?

Mr. Pool. I knew him there from Christmas before that.

L. C. J. You were of the Colledge, were you not?

Mr. Pool. Yes, I was a Student there.

L. C. J. You are sure he was there all the while?

Mr. Pool. I do not remember he was a Day absent, and if he had gone away, particular notice would have been taken of it.

L. C. J. Did you see him there two or three Days before you came away.

Mr. Pool. I saw him that Morning I came away.

L. C. J. And what time before?

Mr. Pool. I saw him two or three Days before that.

L. C. J. Can you name any particular Days?

Mr. Pool. I saw him the first of May, and the second of May, and the fifth of May, which was the 25th of April Old Stile; and then I came away.

L. C. J. Are you sure you left him there, then?

Mr. Pool. I am sure I left him there, I can swear it without any Difficulty at all.

L. C. J. What do you ask him, Mr. Otes?

Otes. I desire to know what Religion he is of?

L. C. J. What Religion are you of?

Mr. Pool. I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. I desire your Lordship would ask him, whether he was a Witness at the Tryal of the 5 Jesuits, or at Langhorn's Tryal?

Mr. Pool. No, I was never an Evidence before in my Life.

Otes. Pray my Lord ask him, whether he was not admitted into the Sodality of the Virgin Mary?

L. C. J. No, indeed, I shall ask him no such Question.

Otes. Pray my Lord, let him answer it.

L. C. J. Prove what you can when it comes to your Turn, but ask him no entangling Questions.

Otes. He has made himself liable to a Penalty by being in that Seminary.

L. C. J. I hope a Man may be at St. Omers, and yet not be punished for it, Mr. Otes.

Otes. It is my Defence to disable the Witnesses against me.

L. C. J. But they must not be asked what may make them accuse themselves.

Otes. My Lord, it is hard that the Witnesses shall not be made to answer my Questions.

L. C. J. Pray Sir be quiet, we have told you often enough already, you must not think to govern us, it must not be allowed.

Otes. My Lord, I desire he may be asked then, what Reward he has to come, and swear in this Cause?

Mr. Pool. My Lord, I do not know that I am so much as to have my Charges born.

L. C. J. Are you to have any Reward?

Mr. Pool. No, my Lord, that I know of.

Otes. Pray my Lord, I desire he may be ask'd, what was the Occasion of Mr. Hilsley's coming away from St. Omers?

Mr. Pool. Indeed I did not examine into the Occasion at all, for I was never a Man that meddled or made on any Side, but lived quietly in the Colledge, and minded my Studies.

Otes. My Lord, I desire your Lordship to ask him whether he did know of any Consult of the Jesuits in April 78. and from whom he knew it?

Mr. Pool. I know not of any particular Consult, I heard something in general of a Triennial Congregation, but I cannot speak any thing of my own Knowledge.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know of him, if he can tell when I came to St. Omers?

L. C. J. Do you know when Otes came to St. Omers?

Mr. Pool. About Christmas, as near as I can remember, it was the latter end of November.

Otes. How much before or after Christmas was it?

Mr. Pool. I cannot tell exactly.

Otes. What Year was it in?

Mr.

Mr. Pool. In the Year 77.

Otes. I desire to know of him, my Lord, whether he saw me every Day at St. Omers at Dinner?

Mr. Pool. I cannot say, that ever I knew he was absent any one Day, never three Days I think I may affirm, but only when he was in the Infirmary.

Mr. At. Gen. That's the Place where they go when they are sick?

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him by what Name he went, when he was there in the College.

Mr. Pool. By the Name of Killingbeck.

Mr. Sol. Gen. By what Name did he go by, I pray you?

Mr. Pool. By the Name of Sampson Lucy.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Henry Thornton.

[Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Thornton, Pray where were you in the Year 78?

Mr. Thornton. At St. Omers, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Otes there, do you know him?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, I know him very well.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come thither?

Mr. Thornton. He came there about Christmas 77.

Mr. At. Gen. How long did he continue there?

Mr. Thornton. He staid there till St. John Baptist's Eve in June 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Midsummer you mean?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, the Eve of St. John Baptist.

Mr. At. Gen. What Stile?

Mr. Thornton. New Stile.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see him there all the while?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, I did see him every Day, I believe, in the Refectory at Dinner time, and at Night in the Dormitory, where all the Collegians have their Beds: I lay over against him every Night, I saw him particularly upon the Day of Hilsley's Departure, which was the 24th of April New Stile, and I saw him the 1st of May New Stile, upon the coming of Mr. Burnaby to the College; and particularly again I remember him there the 2d of May, when my Schoolfellows exhibited an Action or Play.

Mr. At. Gen. Was Mr. Otes there then?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, I saw him present at it, and I know it by this particular Circumstance, there was a Scuffle between him and another about a Place to see the Play.

Mr. Jones. Did you see him the 23d of April Old Stile, that is, the 3d of May New Stile, which was the Day after your Play, that you remember?

Mr. Thornton. I do not remember that I did see him that Day, by any particular Circumstance, tho' I believe I did.

Mr. Jones. Do you remember when Mr. Pool came away from St. Omers?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, I do.

Mr. Jones. When was that?

Mr. Thornton. The 5th of May New Stile.

Mr. Jones. Was Otes at St. Omers at that time?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, he was there then, I am sure.

Mr. At. Gen. Was not he Reader there in the College?

Mr. Thornton. He was Reader in the Sodality, and to my knowledge, he did not miss once from the 24th of April New Stile, to the 24th of May New Stile, from being there, and reading in the Sodality.

L. C. J. What did he use to read?

Mr. Thornton. Some spiritual Book or piece of Divinity, or the like, as it was usual to have read every Sunday and Holiday.

L. C. J. And that is one reason why you conclude he was there all that while, because every Sunday and Holiday he was to read, and did read.

Mr. Thornton. Yes, my Lord.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask this Gentleman, what Religion he is of?

Mr. Thornton. A Roman Catholick.

Otes. Where does he live?

L. C. J. Where do you live, Mr. Thornton?

Mr. Thornton. I am a Northumberland Man, that's my Country.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know of him, when he did come from St. Omers?

Mr. Thornton. I came from St. Omers, my Lord, about two Years after that Otes went away from thence.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask him, who it was that was Rector or Governour of that House or College?

Mr. Thornton. It was one Mr. Richard Ashby.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask him, what School he was in there?

Mr. Thornton. I was in Syntax, my Lord.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I would ask him another Question, and that is this, whether he was not a Witness in behalf of the five Jesuits and Mr. Langborn?

Mr. Thornton. No, I was not, my Lord.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know, if he can tell the occasion of Mr. Hilsley's coming away from St. Omers?

Mr. Thornton. It never concerned me at all, and I never enquired into it.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I would ask him this Question, why he is so precise as to his Remembrance of what was done in April and May, when he does not give any account of any other time, nor did the other Witnesses?

L. C. J. Yes, but they do; they give you a particular account from the time of your coming thither, which was about Christmas, some say the latter end of November, or the beginning of December, they are not positive to any particular time, but thereabouts, and so from that time all along till June.

Otes. I beg your Lordship's Pardon, I did not hear that he said any such thing.

L. C. J. If you will, I'll ask him that Question again for your satisfaction.

Otes. If you please, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then mind what is said; Do you remember that Otes was there in March before, and in February before?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, I particularly remember in March before, he did read a ridiculous Book in the Sodality, and he was remarkable in the House by twenty ridiculous Passages.

Otes. I do acknowledge I did in March read a pleasant Book, called, The Contempt of the Clergy.

L. C. J. By whose Order did he read that Book in the Sodality?

Mr. Thorn-

Mr. Thornton. I do not know, whether it was by his own Election that he was Reader there, or by the Command of the Prefect of the Studies, that has the Care of the Students, and appoints them their Business.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask him how long he was resident at St. Omers?

Mr. Thornton. I was there seven Years.

L. C. J. You said he was there in June till Midsummer Eve.

Mr. Thornton. Yes, he was so.

Otes. I own that I was there in June, but that was after I returned from England.

L. C. J. When do you say he left the College first?

Mr. Thornton. He never left the College from the time of his coming thither first till Midsummer Eve, only one time that he was at Watton, and that was but a Day or two at most, which is not a League out of Town.

L. C. J. Do you remember him there about Christmas time?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, my Lord, very well.

L. C. J. When was it he went to Watton?

Mr. Thornton. About the latter end of January, as I do remember, and in February above Shrove-tide I remember him particularly to be there.

L. C. J. Now, Mr. Otes, you see he speaks to other times besides April and May, and he brings, upon my Word, very notable Circumstances.

Otes. He says he went to School with me there, I think, my Lord?

Mr. Thornton. No, I say he was in the same College.

L. C. J. But not in the same Classis, for it seems you were in the Rhetorick Form, and he in the Syntax.

Mr. Thornton. My Lord, He went there by reason of his Age, and upon no other account; he might have gone elsewhere with us who were of a lower Form, for any great Store of Learning he had.

L. C. J. You hear him, I suppose, Mr. Otes, he gives no great Commendation of your Scholarship.

Otes. That is nothing to this Question; but pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask him, whether he did not hear of a Consult of the Jesuits held here in England in April 78?

L. C. J. What say you, Sir? Did you hear of any such Consult?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, my Lord, I did hear of a Triennial Congregation, such as used to be held by them, but that did not belong to me to enquire into it.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know of whom he did hear it?

L. C. J. How do you know there was such a Consult, who told you of it?

Mr. Thornton. I heard of it in the House, and I had read that it was the Custom of that Society of People, to have such a meeting once in three Years.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray for what purpose did they so meet?

Mr. Thornton. As I have been told, It was to send a Procurator to Rome, and for their managing their other Affairs, which concern'd their Society.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have the Jesuits usually such a Consult once in three Years, Sir?

Mr. Thornton. I was never present at any such Congregation, I was not capable of it.

L. C. J. But was it us'd to be said so?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, my Lord, I have heard it said so, and read of it.

L. C. J. Mr. Otes, Will you ask him any more Questions?

Otes. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well then, go on Mr. Attorney, and call another Witness.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. William Conway.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Conway, Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an account where you were in the Year 1677, and in the Year 1678.

Mr. Conway. I was then at St. Omers, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Otes there at any time?

Mr. Conway. Yes, my Lord, I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, at what time was he there, as you remember?

Mr. Conway. He came in December before Christmas 1677, and did not go away till June 1678.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time in June did he go away?

Mr. Conway. About the twentieth of June, I think.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you there all that Year?

Mr. Conway. Yes, I was there a Scholar in the College.

Mr. Jones. Was he all the time you speak of in the College?

Mr. Conway. He lay out one Night.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time was that?

Mr. Conway. In January, to the best of my remembrance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Could he be out of the College any time and not be miss'd?

Mr. Conway. No, my Lord, he could not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you miss him at any time?

Mr. Conway. No, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he there in April 1678?

Mr. Conway. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell any particular Passages that can make you remember it?

Mr. Conway. Yes, my Lord, I can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Tell my Lord and the Jury how you can remember it.

Mr. Conway. I remember Mr. Hilsey's Departure, which was the 24th of April New Style, and soon after Mr. Burnaby came, but I do not know the time exactly, I was desirous to know of Mr. Burnaby whether he met Mr. Hilsey upon the way, and he told me he did meet him, and the next Day I saw Mr. Otes and Mr. Burnaby walking together very familiarly, and I took particular notice of it at that time, Mr. Burnaby being but newly come, so that I took him to have known Mr. Burnaby before, or else I concluded him to be a little impudent by his intruding into his Company.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember him in March before?

Mr. Conway. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Particulars do you remember of his being there then?

Mr. Conway. I remember him to be there on the Thursday in Mid-Lent, the Scholars in the College had a particular Recreation, which they they call, Sawing of the Witch, and Mr. Otes was among them, and I was one of them that broke a Pan about his Head for Recreation.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember the 1st of May, that there was in your College a Play acted?

Mr. Conway. As for the Play, I remember what Part Esquire Pool acted in it, but I remember not any Particulars that can make me so sure as to swear that Otes was there.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember any scuffling for a Place there?

Mr. Conway. I do not remember it of my own Knowledge, I heard of it afterwards.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say that you saw Mr. Burnaby and him walking together the next Day after he came.

Mr. Conway. Yes, I did so, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Otes use to read in the Sodality?

Mr. Conway. My Lord, There was another chosen according to the Custom to read, but Mr. Otes took the Book, and did read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he read constantly?

Mr. Conway. I did never miss him any Sunday or Holiday all the time.

L. C. J. From what time to what time did he read?

Mr. Conway. From a little after Easter till he went away.

Mr. At. Gen. Is it usually taken notice of in the College when any Person who is a Student goes away from the College?

Mr. Conway. There is nothing more discoursed of among Scholars, than that when it happens any one goes out of the College.

L. C. J. And pray when did he go away?

Mr. Conway. In June, about the twentieth, as near as I can remember.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you observe him at Dinner there constantly?

Mr. Conway. Yes, he sat by himself.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came that to pass?

Mr. Conway. He sat at a little Table in the Hall by himself, for he pretended, being a Man in Years, he could not diet as the rest of the young Students did, and therefore obtained leave to sit alone at a little Table by himself, and he sat next to the Table of the Fathers, to which all the Students were to make their Reverence before they sat down.

L. C. J. He was a very remarkable Man by his sitting by himself; Did he sit there always?

Mr. Conway. He changed his Table once, and I took notice that he sat on the other side of the Refectory.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was that I pray, can you remember?

Mr. Conway. That was a little after Easter.

Mr. At. Gen. Will Mr. Otes ask him any Questions?

Otes. Pray, my Lord, will you ask this Gentleman what Religion he is of?

Mr. Conway. I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. Pray, ask him where he lives?

L. C. J. Where do you live, Sir?

Mr. Conway. Where now at present, my Lord?

L. C. J. Where do you usually live?

Mr. Conway. I am a Flintshire man, my Lord?

Otes. Pray, ask him what Name he did go by at St. Omers?

Mr. Conway. By the Name of William Parry.

Vol. III.

Otes. Pray ask him by what Name he gave his Evidence in at the five Jesuits Tryal?

L. C. J. Were you a Witness at the Tryal of the five Jesuits?

Mr. Conway. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. By what Name did you give your Evidence there?

Mr. Conway. By the Name of Parry.

Otes. Then I desire the Court to take notice he represented himself by a feigned Name in a Court of Record.

Mr. Conway. I went by both Names, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, make what Advantage you can of it by and by.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, if ever he heard of any Consult of the Jesuits held here in England in April 1678?

Mr. Conway. Yes, I did.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, who inform'd him of that Consult?

Mr. Conway. I heard it among the rest of the Scholars, and seeing some of the Fathers go over to it, I was told so.

Mr. At. Gen. Is it an usual thing for them to have such Meetings?

Mr. Conway. They have a Congregation ordinarily once in three Years.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Does it go by the Name of a Consult, or what Name has it?

Mr. Conway. Some call it a Congregation, and some a Consult.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is the end of such Meeting, as you have heard?

Mr. Conway. They say it was to chuse a Procurator to send to Rome, and give an account of the Province.

Otes. My Lord, I would ask him another Question, whether he is to have any Reward for giving this Evidence here?

Mr. Conway. No, not that I know of, but what I expect from Almighty God.

Otes. Pray, ask him how long he lived at St. Omers?

Mr. Conway. Five Years.

Otes. My Lord, I have done with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then call Mr. Haggerstone, and swear him. [Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Haggerstone, Pray will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, were you at St. Omers in the Year 1678 with Mr. Otes?

Mr. Haggerstone. Yes, I was, my Lord, I had the Honour to be of the same Bench with the Doctor of Salamanca.

L. C. J. You mean you were of the same Class with him.

Mr. Haggerstone. Yes, my Lord, of the same Class.

L. C. J. In what Year was it?

Mr. Haggerstone. In the Year 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. In what Form were you?

Mr. Haggerstone. In the same Bench with Dr. Otes in the Rhetorick Form.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Otes in April 1678?

Mr. Haggerstone. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. What time?

Mr. Haggerstone. He spoke unto me on the 25th of April.

Mr. At. Gen. What Stile do you mean?

Mr. Haggerstone. New Stile, Sir; to avoid Confusion, I speak of the Stile of the Place where where I was; he asked me concerning our School-fellow Mr. Hilsley, who was then gone from the College, whether I had heard any thing from him since he went away, and he spoke of an Indisposition he had, for which he prescribed him a Medicine of Poppy, and he thought it would do his Business effectually.

L. C. J. Who said so?

Mr. Haggerstone. The Doctor of Salamanca, he was called Sampson Lucy in the College, and likewise he forbid him to chew Tobacco, which he us'd to do very much; he was called Titus Ambrosias, he had twenty Names.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he there all April, Sir?

Mr. Haggerstone. Yes, he was, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know him in March before?

Mr. Haggerstone. Yes, he was there all March before.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he there in February?

Mr. Haggerstone. Yes, as near as I can remember, he was absent but one Day, and then he went to Watton in February, or else in January.

L. C. J. Do you remember when he came thither first?

Mr. Haggerstone. Yes, my Lord, he came in December near Christmas, as I remember.

L. C. J. Was it about that time, upon your Oath?

Mr. Haggerstone. I speak it upon my Oath, it was.

L. C. J. When did he go away?

Mr. Haggerstone. About the latter end of June.

L. C. J. Was he absent any time between December and June?

Mr. Haggerstone. I do not remember that he was absent, save only in January or February, and that was not for above a Night, when he went to Watton.

L. C. J. Might not he be absent, and you not mind it, or know it?

Mr. Haggerstone. Sure if he had been absent, we could not but have known it.

L. C. J. How so, pray you?

Mr. Haggerstone. If any goes away, 'tis so publick, that it cannot be without notice being taken of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you remember by any particular Token he was there in April or May?

Mr. Haggerstone. He spoke to me on the 29th of April New Stile, and told me, that there was a Craving Englishman had been there to beg an Alms, and there was a Collection made for him among the Scholars, but he said he would give him nothing, for he told me he had been cheated by such an one of some Pieces of Eight in Spain; this I remember was the 28th or 29th of April New Stile, I saw him there the 1st of May, upon the 2d of May there was an Action of the Scholars, and he was present at it; the 5th of May I was at School with him, when Mr. Pool went away for England, and I heard him about that time preach a pleasant Sermon, for he would undertake sometimes to preach, and he said in it, That the late King Charles II. halted betwixt two Opinions, and a Stream of Popery went between his Leggs.

L. C. J. Was this in May?

Mr. Haggerstone. Yes, just after Mr. Pool went away for England, and he had some pretty Reflections in his Sermon about Toby's Dog wagging his Tail.

L. C. J. Well, Do you ask this Witness any Question, Mr. Otes?

Otes. Pray be pleased to ask him, my Lord, what Religion he is of?

Mr. Haggerstone. I am a Papist, my Lord, I am not ashamed of it.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask where he lives?

Mr. Haggerstone. At London.

Otes. Pray ask him what Country-man he is?

Mr. Haggerstone. I am a Northumberland-man, my Father is Sir Thomas Haggerstone, a Man better known than your Father, Dr. Otes.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, do not be in a Passion, Man.

Otes. Pray ask him, how long I was with him at St. Omers?

Mr. Haggerstone. For half a Year at least.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know, how long he stayed there himself?

Mr. Haggerstone. I studied my whole Course of Humanity there.

L. C. J. How long were you there in all?

Mr. Haggerstone. Seven Years.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, whether he knows of any Consult held, or to be held here in England in April, 1678?

Mr. Haggerstone. Yes, my Lord, I saw two of the Fathers go from St. Omers to the Congregation, and was there at their Return, but all that time I frequented Dr. Otes's Company, and he remained in the College.

Otes. Pray, who were these two Fathers?

Mr. Haggerstone. Mr. Williams and Mr. Marsh; and when they return'd, Otes asked me about it, whether they had been at the Consult, and I told him there was such a thing, but he never knew it till afterwards; but this I am sure of, he was never missing all the while, I sat on the same Bench with him.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, what Name he went by at St. Omers?

Mr. Haggerstone. I went by the Name of Harry Howard, my Mother was a Howard, Doctor.

Otes. Pray ask him, whether he came into England when he went away from thence?

Mr. Haggerstone. No, I went and studied my Philosophy at Doway.

Otes. I desire to ask him one Question more.

Mr. Haggerstone. Twenty, if you please, Doctor.

Otes. I desire to know of him the occasion of Mr. Hilsley's coming away?

Mr. Haggerstone. I do know it, but truly I cannot tell whether it be fit for me to speak of it, it was upon some unhandsome account, but I must not blemish any Gentleman, I think.

Otes. My Lord, I will ask him one Question more, whether ever he was admitted into the Society?

L. C. J. I will not ask him that Question, how often have I told you no such Questions are to be ask'd? Must I make him liable to Penalty? No, ask Questions that are fair, and you shall have a fair Answer.

Otes. My Lord, I have done then with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then swear Mr. Robert Beeston.
[Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, were you at St. Omers in the Year 77 and 78?

Mr. Beeston.

Mr. Beefston. Yes, my Lord, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you see Mr. Otes there then? Do you know him?

Mr. Beefston. Yes, I know him very well, I did see him there.

Mr. At. Gen. What Months did you see him there?

Mr. Beefston. He came there in December, the beginning as I remember, and he stayed there to June the latter end.

Mr. At. Gen. What Year was that in?

Mr. Beefston. He came in 77, and went away in 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you observe him to be there in April and May 78?

Mr. Beefston. The latter end of April, and the beginning of May I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Tell the Court particularly how you remember it.

Mr. Beefston. My Lord, I saw him the 1st of May at St. Omers, where he played at Nine-pins, and I laid a Wager upon the same side that he did, and lost my Money as well as he.

L. C. J. Do you remember any other time?

Mr. Beefston. I saw him the 2d of May, by the same token that I met him in the College that Day, when our School exhibited an Action in the Hall, and I met him after Supper; now in this Action I had both acted and sung, and they came and congratulated me for my singing; Mr. Otes said, If I had paid for learning to sing, I had been basely cheated; and then in the Morning I was chosen Reader in the Scholarship, the 25th of April, or thereabouts, for a Fortnight, and Mr. Otes by his own Submission was admitted to read, only with this Condition, that if ever he were wanting, I was to read again; but this I say, I never supplied the Place; therefore I am sure he did continue there all the while, and if he had been out, I must have been called upon to read.

L. C. J. Were you in the College all the time he was there?

Mr. Beefston. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. C. J. Did you miss him at any time?

Mr. Beefston. No, I never miss'd him.

L. C. J. Are you sure he was not away all that time?

Mr. Beefston. I am sure, as much as a Man can be certain of one that is of the same Family with himself; nay, I am as sure of it, as that I was there my self.

L. C. J. Can you speak any thing particularly of his reading?

Mr. Beefston. My Lord, I was to have read, if he was absent, but I was never called upon to read, and therefore I may well conclude he was there all the while.

L. C. J. He gives a material Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Mr. Otes such a remarkable Man that he must be miss'd?

Mr. Beefston. He was very particular, both for Age, and that he had a particular Table to eat at.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you remember any thing else?

Mr. Beefston. I remember too, that when Mr. Burnaby came first, he was often with him the 2d, 3d, and 4th of May, I saw him there with Mr. Burnaby, and I took particular notice of the Friendship between them, which I thought strange between Persons that I supposed never saw one another before.

L. C. J. Have you any Questions to ask this Man, Mr. Otes?

Otes. My Lord, I desire to ask this Gentleman what Religion he is of?

Mr. Beefston. I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask him, when he went to St. Omers, and when he came away from thence, and how long he was resident there?

Mr. Beefston. I know not exactly what Year it was I came, but I stayed the greatest Part of seven Years there.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, what Jesuits went from St. Omers to the Consult of April 78?

Mr. Beefston. There was some that pass'd by, I did not take much notice of them.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, who it was informed him of that Consult?

Mr. Beefston. I do not know who particularly, I only heard of such a Rumour.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it an extraordinary thing?

Mr. Beefston. No, it was but an ordinary thing as they used to have once in three Years.

Otes. You say you saw me every Day there?

L. C. J. He says he believes he might, because you were Reader in his stead, and if you had been absent, he must have been called upon to read, which he was not, he says.

Otes. Very well, my Lord, I desire you would ask him, whether he does not remember such a thing as an Eight-day's Exercise, wherein those that perform the Exercise, are separated from all Company during that time.

Mr. Beefston. Yes, my Lord, I do remember that he was once in that Eight-day's Exercise, and during the eight Days I saw him walk in the Garden several times.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, if he were an Evidence at the Tryal of the five Jesuits, or Langhorn, and whether he gave this Evidence long ago?

Mr. Beefston. No, I did not, I was not there.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Reward he is to have?

L. C. J. Are you to have any Reward for your Testimony, Mr. Beefston?

Mr. Beefston. No, my Lord.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know of him, how he comes to be pick'd out among the rest of the Students there, to come here, and be an Evidence in this Cause?

Mr. Beefston. My Lord, I was subpoena'd by His Majesty, if I knew any thing of this Matter, that I should come here and testify my Knowledge.

Otes. Pray, by what Name did he go by at St. Omers?

Mr. Beefston. By the Name of Beefston, as I do now.

Otes. And is that his own Name?

Mr. Beefston. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray, go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Clement Smith.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, were you at St. Omers in the Year 77 and 78?

Mr. Smith. Yes, I was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Otes there at that time?

Mr. Smith. Yes, I was in the same Class with him.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray when came he thither, and how long did he stay there?

Mr. Smith.

Mr. Smith. He came a little before Christmas, and stayed till June.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he not absent at any time all that while?

Mr. Smith. No, he was not, except one Day.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Watton's Business, his going thither in January?

Mr. Smith. He told me of it, and that he design'd to ask the Rector leave to go.

L. C. J. Was he absent any other time till June?

Mr. Smith. No, my Lord, for I will tell you, I every Day dined with him, eat a Collation with him in the Afternoon, and breakfast and sup'd in the same Refectory, during all that time, except when he or I was in the Infirmary.

L. C. J. When ever he was absent, he was in the Infirmary, was he?

Mr. Smith. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did not he miss his Breakfast at any time all that while?

Mr. Smith. If he did, we us'd to enquire after him.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray when were you in the Infirmary?

Mr. Smith. The 21st of April New Stile, I fell sick, and I remained sick till May the 7th, and was in the Infirmary, and then he visited me almost daily, or every other Day in the Infirmary; and on the 2d of May I saw him and one Mr. Burnaby together, and on the Day Mr. Pool departed, which I take to be the 5th of May, Mr. Otes came to me as soon as he was gone out of the House, and told me of it; and he did the same too that Day that Mr. Hilsley went away, which was the 24th of April New Stile.

Mr. At. Gen. Was not he in the Infirmary himself?

Mr. Smith. Yes, during this time he came into the Infirmary, and was sick there.

Mr. At. Gen. When was that?

Mr. Smith. A Day or two after Mr. Hilsley went away, and continued there two or three Days, and I remember it particularly by this Circumstance, that he propos'd a Question to the Physician about himself in Latin, and spoke a Sollecism, which was this, he said, Si placet Dominatio vestra.

Otes. Who did say so?

L. C. J. You did, he says, speak that false Latin to the Doctor.

Otes. That's false Latin indeed.

L. C. J. We know that, but it seems it was your Latin.

Mr. At. Gen. When came he away from St. Omers?

Mr. Smith. About the 20th of June, something after the 20th of June, as I remember.

L. C. J. Are you sure he was not out of the College so long as to make a Journey to London, and back again?

Mr. Smith. No, I am sure he could not without being miss'd; and going to School with him, and eating Dinner and Supper with him constantly always at the same place, I must needs know if he had gone.

Otes. When went I away from St. Omers does he say?

Mr. Smith. After the 20th of June 78.

L. C. J. He is your old Acquaintance and School-fellow, Mr. Otes; you visited him when he was sick.

Otes. What Religion is this Gentleman of, my Lord, I would know?

Mr. Smith. I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. I desire your Lordship to ask him how long he liv'd at St. Omers?

Mr. Smith. Above six Years.

Otes. Pray ask him, when he came away?

Mr. Smith. A little after Dr. Otes came away.

Otes. Did he come directly for England?

Mr. Smith. No, I did not.

Otes. Whither did he go then?

Mr. Smith. I went about a little. —

Otes. Where, my Lord?

Mr. Smith. I went about to take some Turns in the Low-Countries; I went to Watton, and up and down.

Otes. He is a Jesuit, my Lord, and that the World knows, and must know.

L. C. J. I know nothing of it, I do assure you.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to ask him, whether he did not hear of a Consult of Jesuits in April 78, and what Jesuits went from St. Omers to it?

Mr. Smith. I heard it as a Rumour in the College, that there was to be a Congregation at that time, but I know not where particularly it was to be kept; but I know that then there pass'd by St. Omers two Fathers, Mr. Marsh, and Mr. Williams.

Otes. What were they?

Mr. Smith. Jesuits.

L. C. J. He told you they were Fathers.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, was it an extraordinary, or an ordinary Meeting that?

Mr. Smith. They us'd to say in the College, that it was an ordinary thing to have such a Congregation every three Years.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, swear Mr. Edward Price.
[Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Mr. Price, will you give my Lord and the Gentlemen of the Jury an account, whether you were at St. Omers in the Year 77, and 78.

Mr. Price. I was there both these Years.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Otes there?

Mr. Price. Yes, my Lord, I do.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come, and when did he go away?

Mr. Price. He came there about December 77, and he continued there till June 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he absent from St. Omers at any time all that while?

Mr. Price. Never, that I know of, but one Night at Watton, when he came back the following Day, and that was in January.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember particularly that he was there in April and May 78?

Mr. Price. I remember Mr. Hilsley, according to the foreign Stile, left St. Omers upon the 24th of April 78. I was told the following Day that Mr. Otes went into the Infirmary, which was Monday the 25th, and stayed there a Day or two, and upon Wednesday the 27th I saw him going to Mals; then upon the Sunday following, which was the 1st of May New Stile, came Mr. Burnaby to St. Omers, and I saw him in Otes's Company that Day, and I saw him on Monday

Monday again the 2d of May in his Company; I saw him the 3d of May at the Table, which I particularly remember, because it was the Feast of the Invention of the Holy Cross; the 4th of May I have no Circumstance to remember him by; but the 5th of May I saw him take his leave of Mr. Pool, and I likewise saw him the 10th or 11th of May at another of our Actions, wherein Mr. Watson had a Quarrel with him, and beat him; I should have mis'd him above any other Man, because he was so noted a Man.

Mr. At. Gen. What was he noted for? For any thing else but his distinct Place in the Refectory?

Mr. Price. Yes, he was very absurd, and always quarrelling with the Students there.

L. C. J. Do you remember him read in the Sodality?

Mr. Price. I was not of that Bench that he was of.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know what this Gentleman's Religion is?

L. C. J. What Religion are you of, Sir?

Mr. Price. If your Lordship please to know, I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to ask him; when he went first to St. Omers, and when he came away?

Mr. Price. I was six Years at St. Omers; I was there a twelve-month before Mr. Otes came thither, and came from thence about three Years ago.

Otes. Did you come directly to England when you came away?

Mr. Price. My Lord, I went to Leige to study Philosophy, and I live now with my Father at home.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to ask him, whether he did not hear of a Consult to be held in April 78?

Mr. Price. I did hear there was a Congregation which was their usual Triennial Meeting, and particularly I remember about that time there came Mr. Williams, and Mr. Marsh, and it was reported that they were going to the Congregation.

Otes. I desire to ask him, if he was not a Witness at the Tryal of the five Jesuits, or at the Tryal of Langborn?

Mr. Price. No, I was not.

Otes. Pray, what Name did he go by at St. Omers?

Mr. Price. By my own Name, which is Edward Price.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then swear the next, that is, Mr. James Doddington.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, were you at St. Omers in the Year 77, and 78?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know that Gentleman Mr. Otes there?

Mr. Doddington. I know him very well.

Mr. At. Gen. What time did he come to St. Omers, and how long did he stay there?

Mr. Doddington. He came about Christmas, and stayed about the latter end of June.

Mr. At. Gen. How do you remember he stayed there so long, what Circumstances have you to make you remember it?

Mr. Doddington. In general his Conversation and Canting Stories after Dinner and Supper, and times of Recreation, made him so remarkable, that no body could miss him all the time he was there.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you observe him to be in the Hall, or at the Exercises?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, I saw him several times.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember the time Mr. Hilsey went away?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, it was a little after Easter, and I do remember that two or three Days after I went into the Infirmary, and saw Mr. Otes there, and had Discourses with him.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Burnaby's coming to St. Omers, and when was it?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, the 1st of May Mr. Burnaby came to St. Omers, and the next Day I saw Otes with him, and for ten or twelve Days successively they were in one another's Company, and then of a sudden the Correspondence broke off, but I know not upon what account.

L. C. J. Was he Reader there, as you remember?

Mr. Doddington. I do remember he did read in the Sodality.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Doddington. I remember he read at Shrove-tide.

Otes. Did you hear me read there?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, that I did, Sir.

Otes. Were you of the Sodality?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, I was, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember the time he came away from St. Omers?

Mr. Doddington. It was about Midsummer, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you out of the College your self at any time when he was there?

Mr. Doddington. No, I was not.

L. C. J. Come, I will ask you a plain Question; Was he so long at any time out of the College as to come to London and stay here two or three Days, and come back again?

Mr. Doddington. My Lord, He was so remarkable by his Stories and ridiculous Actions, and falling out with every one of the College, that if he had been absent, we must needs have missed him.

L. C. J. Did you miss him at any time?

Mr. Doddington. My Lord, I never mis'd him but one Day.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Doddington. They said he was gone to Watton.

L. C. J. What time was that?

Mr. Doddington. In January, about six Weeks after he came first.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Religion he is of?

Mr. Doddington. I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. And a Scholar of St. Omers.

L. C. J. Make your Remarks by and by.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Name he went by at St. Omers?

Mr. Doddington. By the Name of Hollis, my Lord.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him how long he was resident there?

Mr. Doddington. Near upon five Years.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him the occasion of his coming over at first?

Mr. Doddington. I had Business in England, and I had a mind to see my Friends.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, whether he did not pretend at the five Jesuits Tryal, that he came over upon the King's Proclamation, to call home those that were in the Seminaries?

L. C. J. Were you at the Tryal of the five Jesuits?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, I was; but if I came over upon the King's Proclamation, what Hurt is there in that?

L. C. J. None at all, as I know of.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, whether he did return again to St. Omers, or no?

Mr. Doddington. My Lord, I pass'd by St. Omers once, but I never stay'd a Day in the College since.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to ask him, whether he ever heard of a Consult of the Jesuits in April 78?

Mr. Doddington. I did hear of a Congregation.

Otes. Call it a Consult or a Congregation, it is all one.

L. C. J. He says he did hear of it.

Otes. Ask him by whom he did hear of it?

Mr. Doddington. I saw the Provincial when he came back from England.

Otes. Who was that Provincial, what was his Name?

Mr. Doddington. Mr. Whitebread.

Otes. Was not Mr. Whitebread a Resident sometimes at St. Omers?

Mr. Doddington. Yes a while he was.

Otes. Pray, was not that House under his Government?

Mr. Doddington. My Lord, I can give no account of that, but it is generally under the Government of the Rector of St. Omers.

Mr. Hanseys. Pray, Sir, give me leave to ask you one Question; Mr. Otes speaks of Mr. Whitebread; Pray, how did Mr. Whitebread use Otes, when he came back from England?

Mr. Doddington. I heard say, he did check him very severely for his many Miscarriages.

L. C. J. He heard it, he says, but he does not know it of his own Knowledge; that is no Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray swear Mr. William Gerrard.
[Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. Were you at St. Omers, Mr. Gerrard, in the Years 77 and 78?

Mr. Gerrard. Yes, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know Mr. Otes there?

Mr. Gerrard. Where is he, Sir?

Mr. At. Gen. There he is in that Corner, do you know him?

Mr. Gerrard. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. When came he to St. Omers?

Mr. Gerrard. He came to St. Omers in the Year of our Lord 77, and he went away in June 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he there all the time?

Mr. Gerrard. I never remember'd to have mis'd him, but only once when he went to Watton for a Night.

Mr. At. Gen. By what Tokens do you remember him at any time there in April or May?

Mr. Gerrard. The 2d of May we had a Play, and he was there then, and I remember the 26th of May he was confirm'd, and so was I, it being St. Augustin's Day, and in the Refectory he had a Table by himself, and I used always at Meal-times to pass by that Table and make a Bow to the Fathers above before I sat down at Table; and I do not remember that ever he was absent, and if he had, I should surely have mis'd him.

L. C. J. When was St. Augustin's Day, that you say you and he were confirm'd?

Mr. Gerrard. It was the 26th of May.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember him in April there?

Mr. Gerrard. I cannot tell any particular Circumstance in April, but I do not remember to have mis'd him at all in April.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But you saw him there the 2d of May, you say?

Mr. Gerrard. Yes, I did so, and the 26th of May.

Otes. The 26th of May Old Stile I was there, my Lord.

L. C. J. Ay, but he says the 26th of May New Stile.

Otes. I was not there then, my Lord.

L. C. J. He swears you were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, between the 2d and 27th of May New Stile was he absent from St. Omers at any time?

Mr. Gerrard. I never remember to have mis'd him at all in that time.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Pool's and Mr. Hilsley's going away?

Mr. Gerrard. I do remember Mr. Hilsley's and Mr. Pool's going away, but I cannot speak particularly and exactly what time that was.

L. C. J. Is it usual to have Scholars go away without being mis'd?

Mr. Gerrard. No, my Lord, and he had a particular Place by himself.

Otes. Pray, ask him, my Lord, how he came to know that I went away in June?

Mr. Gerrard. We mis'd him in his Place then, and 'twas discours'd of all over the Town, that when the Provincial came he was to be dismiss'd.

Otes. I desire to know what Religion this Gentleman is of?

Mr. Gerrard. My Lord, I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Name he went by at St. Omers?

Mr. Gerrard. By the Name of William Cловell.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, when he went to St. Omers, and how long he was resident there?

Mr. Gerrard. I came there about two Years before he came, and was there about two Years after he went away.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, whether he came directly for England when he left St. Omers?

Mr. Gerrard. No, my Lord, I was four Years in Low Germany and France, and came into England the last Year.

Otes. Pray, Sir, were you a Witness at the five Jesuits Tryal, or at Langborn's Tryal?

Mr. Gerrard. No, I was no; I came but last Year to England, I tell you.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask this Gentleman, whether he did not know or hear of a Consult of Jesuits that was to be in April 78, and from whom he heard it?

Mr. Gerrard. My Lord, I know it is the Custom of the Fathers of that Order to have a Congregation.

gregation once in three Years, about the Affairs of their Society, but then no Person is admitted to be one of that Congregation, but them that have been eighteen Years Jesuits, and he not having been so much as a Novice, I know not how, if he had been here, he could have been present at it.

L. C. J. He says, that there us'd to be a Triennial Congregation for the Business of the Society, but you could not be present at it, because you had not been eighteen Years a Jesuit.

Mr. Gerrard. An. decimo octavo Currente, is the Word of the Rule.

Otes. Pray my Lord ask him this Question, how he knows that to be the Rule?

Mr. Gerrard. You or any Man may read them in their Books.

L. C. J. It seems he has read them, and he says, you must pass through eighteen Years before you be admitted of the Congregation, and he believes you were not there, for you were not capable of so much as a Noviceship.

Otes. I desire your Lordship to ask him, whether or no he heard me Read in the Sodality?

Mr. Gerrard. Yes, I did.

Otes. Were you of the Sodality?

Mr. Gerrard. Yes, I was.

Otes. Pray my Lord, ask him, what Oaths are there taken before they be admitted into the Sodality?

L. C. J. No, by no means, I will not do it.

Otes. Why my Lord, may not I ask it, to shew what kind of Men these are?

L. C. J. No, indeed, it is but the same Question again, that I told you before is not to be asked, for it may make him liable to a Penalty; if you come to be a Witness, no Man should ask you a Question that might make you obnoxious to a Penalty, no more must you ask them any such Questions.

Otes. I have done with him, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where is my Lord Gerrard of Bromley?

Lord Gerrard. Here I am, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray my Lord, do you remember Mr. Otes at St. Omers in the Year 77, and 78?

Lord Gerrard. He was disguised in another Habit, and another colour'd Perriwig, the Hair was blacker than that he has on now, but I remember his Face very well, and know him again by the Tone of his Voice, which was very remarkable, but I never remember that he was absent from St. Omers after he came thither. I remember his Coming exactly, which was about Christmas; nor did I ever hear that he was absent till June 78. New Stile, when he went away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember, my Lord, when Mr. Burnaby came?

Lord Gerrard. I do remember Mr. Burnaby's coming, but what time it was I cannot exactly tell.

L. C. J. Is my Lord Gerrard sworn?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I think so.

Lord Gerrard. No, my Lord, I am not sworn.

L. C. J. You must be sworn, my Lord. [Which was done.]

Now if you be pleased to ask my Lord any Questions, do.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we desire to know of my Lord Gerrard of Bromley, whether he knew Mr. Otes at St. Omers?

Lord Gerrard. My Lord, I remember he came in 77. as I take it, it was the beginning of December, and never heard he was absent or miss'd till June 78. I remember particularly upon the 25th of March, there was a new Lector to be Reader of the Sodality, and Mr. Otes desiring it, he was appointed to Read; I was there myself, and I never missed him; I heard him Read, that I do remember several Sundays and Holidays, and never knew him absent any one; however, for five or six Weeks he was constant at Reading, and I can the better remember it, because he had a particular Cant in his Tone, which all Men may know which ever conversed with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Otes please to ask my Lord Gerrard any Questions, he may.

Lord Gerrard. Pray my Lord let me speak a Word or two more.

L. C. J. Ay, my Lord, pray go on.

Lord Gerrard. I remember I heard Mr. Otes was at the Confirmation, which was upon St. Austin's Day, there was a Confirmation by a Catholick Bishop about the 26th of May, New Stile, I remember I heard Mr. Otes was there, and the Bishop did particularly note him as a Person of elder Years than the rest of the Students.

L. C. J. Do you know this, my Lord, of your own knowledge?

Lord Gerrard. I do, my Lord.

L. C. J. Because you say you heard it.

Lord Gerrard. My Lord, further I remember this, when the News of the Plot being discovered by Otes, came to St. Omers, where he went by the name of Sampson Lucy, and sometimes Titus Ambrosius, it was wondered by all the Scholars that knew him there, how he came to be so impudent to pretend that he was at such a Consult the 24th of April 78. when all the College saw him every Day, in April and May at St. Omers, as much as a Man can be seen in a Family, and was never known to be absent so much as one Day; besides, my Lord, 'tis a thing as generally noted as a thing can be; that no Scholar goes away from, or comes to the College of St. Omers, but it is particularly known to the whole House; it is the common News and Discourse as much as any new Occurrences are here about the Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Otes be pleased to ask him any Questions, he may.

Otes. My Lord, I desire this Noble Lord may be asked a Question or two; I do not remember his Lordship there.

Lord Gerrard. I do very well remember the Man by particular Remarks.

Otes. Yes, my Lord, you have occasion to remember me, and so have your whole Party. Pray my Lord, let my Lord Gerrard be asked what Name his Lordship went by at St. Omers?

Lord Gerrard. Mr. Otes, I am not difficult in telling the Name I went by there. It was Clovel.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, I desire to know what Religion his Lordship is of?

Lord Gerrard. Neither am I ashamed to own my Religion, Mr. Otes, I am a Catholick.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, if you please, because this Noble Lord pretends he heard me Read, I desire to know of him whether he was of the Sodality?

Lord Gerrard. I remember you particularly by your Voice, and that is one thing that particularly brings you to my Remembrance now.

Otes. Pray ask this Noble Lord, if he was a Witness at the Jesuits Tryal?

Lord Gerrard. No, I was never a Witness in my Life before; By the Oath that I have taken.

L. C. J. 'Tis very well, my Lord.

Otes. Pray my Lord, ask this Nobleman, whether he did not know of a Consult in April 78. and from whom he knew it.

Lord Gerrard. No, I know of none, nor heard of any but by Rumour, after that you pretended to discover such a thing.

Otes. Did his Lordship see me every Day, does he say?

Lord Gerrard. I cannot say every Day, but I saw him at the Refectory generally, and I remember it particularly, because he sat at a Table by himself; I believe he could not be absent without being miss'd, because we knew every Person that came in and went out.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then Swear Mr. Samuel Morgan.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Morgan, were you at St. Omers in 77, and 78?

Mr. Morgan. I was my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you observe Mr. Otes to be there at that time?

Mr. Morgan. Yes, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray give an account when he came, and when he went away.

Mr. Morgan. He came 14 or 15 Days before Christmas, as I remember, and went away in June.

Mr. At. Gen. What Christmas do you mean, Mr. Morgan?

Mr. Morgan. Christmas 77.

Mr. At. Gen. And when did he go away?

Mr. Morgan. In June 78. he went away.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he absent any time during that space?

Mr. Morgan. My Lord, I know not that he was ever absent above one Night in all that time.

Mr. At. Gen. What time was that one Night?

Mr. Morgan. Truly my Lord I cannot tell what Month it was very exactly.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither was he gone that Night?

Mr. Morgan. He went to Watton, three miles off from St. Omers.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember the time when Mr. Hillsley came away, and when Mr. Burnaby came to St. Omers?

Mr. Morgan. Yes I do, my Lord, very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Mr. Otes there when Hillsley went away?

Mr. Morgan. He was there then.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he there when Mr. Burnaby came?

Mr. Morgan. He was there when Mr. Burnaby came thither.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he there when Mr. Poole came away?

Mr. Morgan. Yes, my Lord, he was so.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I will ask you this short Question, do you believe in your Conscience that he was absent any particular time all that while?

Mr. Morgan. No, my Lord, I have no reason to believe so.

Otes. Pray my Lord, ask him what Religion he is of?

Mr. Morgan. I am of the Church of England.

Otes. When were you reconciled to the Church of England?

Mr. Morgan. Five Years since.

Otes. I desire to know of him, what induced him to be reconciled to the Church of England?

L. C. J. That is not a pertinent Question, nor fit to be asked. Is he to give an account of his Faith here?

Mr. Just Withins. It seems Mr. Otes is angry when the Witnesses are Papists, and when they are Protestants too.

Otes. When was it that I came to St. Omers do you say?

Mr. Morgan. You came thither in December, 77.

L. C. J. So he told you before, why do you repeat Things over and over again?

Otes. When was it I went away from thence, say you?

Mr. Morgan. In June 78.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember the 24th of April Old Stile, that Year?

Mr. Morgan. Yes, my Lord, I do remember it very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember him to be at St. Omers that Day?

Mr. Morgan. Yes, I do, by this Circumstance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, pray tell my Lord and the Jury that Circumstance, how you come to remember it.

Mr. Morgan. We had the Tryal of Ireland brought over to us soon after it was printed, and there we found mentioned, that Mr. Otes had deposed, That the 24th of April, 78. there was a Consult of the Jesuits, and they met at the White Horse Tavern; where they resolved to kill the King, and he carried that Resolution from Chamber to Chamber, and he did nominate the Day, and having it then fresh in my Memory, though he swore that he was the 24th of April Old Stile in London at that Consult; yet I found him to be at St. Omers by a very particular Circumstance: My Lord, I was playing at Ball that Day, and struck it over into a Court, into which I could not get over my self, but I saw Mr. Otes then walking in the Court, and I came and borrowed his Key, and so went in, and there passed between us Words of Friendship.

L. C. J. When was this, do you say?

Mr. Morgan. The 24th of April 78. Old Stile.

Otes. I desire to let his Orders be seen.

L. C. J. No, he shall not be put to shew any such thing.

Otes. He is a Minister of the Church of England, my Lord.

L. C. J. Sir, we tell you, we will not do it, what ado is here with your impertinent Questions, have not I told you, you shall not ensnare the Witnesses?

Otes. He was a going to pull out his Orders himself.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Otes may see them if he will, he is a Beneficed Minister of the Church of England.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Does he mean those Orders?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, he does, and here they are.

L. C. J. Let him see them.

[Which was done.]

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know of this Gentleman, what Name he went by at St. Omers?

Mr. Morgan. By the Name of Morgan.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Arundel.

[Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Sir, will you give an account in short, whether you were at St. Omers in 77, and 78. and the Time when Otes came thither, and when he went away.

Mr. Arundel. I was there when Dr. Otes came, and when he went away.

Mr. At. Gen. When was that?

Mr. Arundel. Sir, I cannot be positive to the Time exactly, but I think it was about January 77. that he came there, and he went away about June 78. I cannot be positive to the time exactly.

L. C. J. He does not particularly remember the Time, but he thinks it was about January 77, he came thither.

Mr. Arundel. I beg your Lordship's Pardon, he came there about December.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember any particular Circumstances, that you saw him there at any particular time?

Mr. Arundel. Upon St. Augustine's Day I saw him Confirm'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Day is that?

Mr. Arundel. The 26th of May according to the foreign Account.

L. C. J. Did you know him there, then?

Mr. Arundel. Yes, my Lord, I say I saw him Confirm'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Hilsley's going away?

Mr. Arundel. I do not remember the time particularly, but I do remember Mr. Otes was actually there then.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember when Mr. Burnaby came to St. Omers?

Mr. Arundel. No, I do not remember the time, but he was there then too.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember when Mr. Pool went away?

Mr. Arundel. No, I cannot tell what Day it was, but he was there at the time of his going away, upon my Oath.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell any other particular time?

Mr. Arundel. The 11th of May New Stile, there was an Action exhibited in the College.

L. C. J. Was Otes there then?

Mr. Arundel. To the best of my remembrance he was.

L. C. J. He does not affirm any Particular, but only speaks in general.

Otes. Are you a Protestant too, Sir?

Mr. Arundel. No, Doctor, I am not.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, I desire to know what Religion he is of?

Mr. Arundel. I am a Papist, my Lord.

Otes. Pray ask him by what Name he went at St. Omers?

Mr. Arundel. I believe you know that as well as I Doctor Otes.

L. C. J. You must answer his Question.

Vol. III.

Mr. Arundel. I went by the Name of Spencer, my Lord.

Otes. I do remember him, my Lord, to have been there.

Mr. Arundel. Sir, your humble Servant.

Otes. It is almost seven Years ago, my Lord, and I may not so well remember them as they do me, but I desire to know when he went to St. Omers first, and how long he was there?

Mr. Arundel. I was there seven Years.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, whether he was of the Sodality?

Mr. Arundel. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. C. J. Was he Reader of the Sodality?

Mr. Arundel. Yes, my Lord, in my time he was Reader.

Otes. Then my Lord, I desire to ask him, whether ever he heard of a Consult of the Jesuits, that was to be held in England, in April 78. and from whom he heard it?

Mr. Arundel. Yes, my Lord, I did hear in the College of a Congregation.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that an extraordinary one, or of course?

Mr. Arundel. It was only of course, as they told us, once in three Years they have one.

Otes. Pray my Lord, be pleased to ask this Gentleman what Studies he followed at St. Omers?

L. C. J. He was of the Sodality, he says.

Mr. Arundel. My Lord, I studied to the end of Rhetorick.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know whether when he came from St. Omers, he did come directly for England?

Mr. Arundel. No, I went from thence to Paris, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Christopher Turberville.

[Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Mr. Turberville, will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, whether you were with Mr. Otes at St. Omers, and when?

Mr. Turberville. Yes, my Lord; he went by the Name of Sampson Lucy there, and there I saw him, and there I was with him all the time; I was there before him, and I remained there after he went away.

Mr. At. Gen. What time did he come to St. Omers, I pray you?

Mr. Turberville. Before Christmas.

L. C. J. In what Year?

Mr. Turberville. In the Year 77.

Mr. At. Gen. What time was it he went away?

Mr. Turberville. In June 78.

L. C. J. Were you there all that while at St. Omers?

Mr. Turberville. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. And to the best of your apprehension, you think he was there all that while?

Mr. Turberville. Yes, I do so, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you speak of any particular Days you can remember?

Mr. Turberville. Yes, I do remember him upon the 4th, 5th, and 6th of May, for two or three Days together; for my Lord, I do remember this Circumstance, Mr. Pool about that time went away, and that very Day Mr. Pool went from the College, I changed my Lodging, and went into his Lodging, and that Day I saw Doctor Otes in the Chamber, and by the Chamber Door.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he continue in the College from the time he came about Christmas to the time he went away in June?

Mr. Turberville. Yes, he did, all the while except it were one Night in January when he went to Watton.

L. C. J. What time in June did he go away?

Mr. Turberville. I am not positive, but I am morally sure he went away the 23d of June, as near as I can remember.

Otes. I was there in June that is very well known.

L. C. J. What do you remember of his reading in the College?

Mr. Turberville. I do remember he was Reader there on Sundays and Holidays for a great while; I cannot swear upon what Sunday he began, but he left off the Sunday before he went away.

L. C. J. As near as you can remember, when did he begin to read?

Mr. Turberville. It was the beginning of April, or latter end of March, I cannot justly swear which it was.

Mr. Molloy. Did he read on Holidays as well as Sundays?

Mr. Turberville. Yes, he did.

Otes. I must ask this Gentleman one Question, if your Lordship please, and that is this, what Name he went by at St. Omers?

Mr. Turberville. I went there by the Name of Farmer.

Otes. Pray you, my Lord, ask him what Religion he is of?

Mr. Turberville. It is a hard Question to answer that.

Otes. Nay, my Lord, I desire to know what is his Religion?

Mr. Turberville. I am, my Lord, a Roman Catholic.

Otes. Ask him when he went to St. Omers first, and how long he stayed there?

Mr. Turberville. I was there seven Years very near.

Otes. I desire to know whether he did come away directly to England when he came from St. Omers?

Mr. Turberville. No, my Lord, I went into Italy.

Otes. Pray you, my Lord, I desire to know whether he did go to Rome?

L. C. J. What if he did, what then? That is not at all to the purpose, he went into Italy.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to ask him this Question further, Was he a Witness on the behalf of the five Jesuits, or of Langhorn at their Tryals?

Mr. Turberville. No, my Lord, I was not.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to ask him then what Reward he has been promis'd, or is to have for giving this Evidence?

Mr. Turberville. None at all, my Lord.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, whether or no he heard of any Consult of the Jesuits in April 78, and from whom?

Mr. Turberville. There was a Congregation, as I heard, but I do not remember that any of the Fathers went from the College to it; several came by there, and lodged there as they went, and as they came back.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him how he came here to be a Witness in this Cause?

Mr. Turberville. I was subpoena'd.

Otes. Who serv'd the Subpoena upon him?

Mr. Turberville. The Managers; it was sent to me by the King's Counsel, I suppose; a Man brought it to me.

L. C. J. 'Tis no matter who brought it you, you were subpoena'd, that's enough.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Anthony Turberville. [Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. Were you at St. Omers in 77 and 78?

Mr. A. Turberville. Yes, my Lord, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you observe the Defendant Mr. Otes there at that time?

Mr. A. Turberville. Yes, I observ'd him all the while he was there.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come to St. Omers?

Mr. A. Turberville. In the Year 77, about Christmas.

Mr. At. Gen. When went he away?

Mr. A. Turberville. A Gentleman who was formerly sworn, (Mr. Thornton) and I were at Breakfast with him the self same time when he went away.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. A. Turberville. I suppose about the latter end of June 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you observe him to be there in April or May 78?

Mr. A. Turberville. He was not absent above one Night in January that I can remember from his first coming thither, for it was impossible he should be absent and not mis'd, he sitting at a distinct Table by himself, and his Conversation being so remarkable for a great many ridiculous Actions, and a great many pretty Jestts that he us'd, so that he was like a silly Person, as I may call him, that us'd to make sport, and no body could be mis'd so soon as he; And I saw a little Boy in the College beat him up and down with a Fox's Tail. Indeed, my Lord, all his Actions were very remarkable: I see him very much abusive to Persons that liv'd with him in the College; and Mr. Otes could not be a Person of this Note, but all the World must take notice of him, and all that knew him must mis him, if he were away.

L. C. J. You hear him, Mr. Otes; he gives you a particular Character; he says you were a very notorious Person in many Instances.

Mr. A. Turberville. My Lord, I was a Person then the youngest in the whole Company, and Mr. Otes being very abusive to me, I did what became me to right my self upon him.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to ask this Gentleman what the Name was he went by at St. Omers?

Mr. A. Turberville. By my Grandmother's Name, which was Farmer.

L. C. J. Do you remember the time when Mr. Hilsey went away from St. Omers?

Mr. A. Turberville. He went away upon a Sunday. Mr. Otes remain'd afterwards there: I am positive I saw him several Days after.

L. C. J. Do you remember when Mr. Burnaby came thither?

Mr. A. Turberville. Yes, my Lord; and Mr. Otes was there then.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any Questions? If you are not ready, I will ask him some for you. Come, what Religion are you of?

Mr.

Mr. A. Turberville. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, and how long were you at St. Omers?

Mr. A. Turberville. Six Years and upward, my Lord.

L. C. J. When you came away from thence, did you come directly for England?

Mr. A. Turberville. I took a Circumference round.

Otes. My Lord, I do find my Defence is under a very great Prejudice.

L. C. J. Why so? Because we won't let you ask impertinent Questions, or such as may render the Witnesses obnoxious to a Penalty.

Otes. No, my Lord, it is not fit they should, for there is a Turn to be serv'd.

L. C. J. What do you mean by that? Ay, and a good Turn too, if these Witnesses swear true: 'Tis to bring Truth to light, and perjur'd Villains to condign Punishment.

Otes. Good my Lord, be pleased to hear me.

L. C. J. If you behave not your self with that Respect to the Court as you ought, pray get you gone. Do you think you shall give such Language as this in a Court of Justice?

Otes. My Lord, I did not design—

L. C. J. If you behave your self as you should, you shall have all due Regard; but if you fly out into such abusive Extravagancies, we'll calm you as you ought to be calm'd.

Otes. I would vindicate my self, I meant it not of the Court.

L. C. J. So you had need. Don't think we sit here to let you asperse the Justice of the Court and of the Nation, as if the Judges sat here to serve a Turn.

Otes. I say, these Men do come to serve a Turn; but I laid no Asperision upon the Court, nor meant it of them.

L. C. J. Behave your self as you ought, and you shall be heard with all the Fairness can be desir'd.

Otes. I did perceive your Lordship and the Court made your selves pleasant with my Questions.

L. C. J. I did not make my self pleasant with your Questions, but when you ask impertinent ones you must be corrected: You see we do the same thing with them; I find fault with nothing but what is not to the purpose.

Otes. My Lord, I desire it may be observ'd, that these Men that come now, are the same Witnesses that appeared at the Old Bailey, and were not believed there.

L. C. J. Observe what you will by and by.

Mr. At. Gen. No, they are other Men, but they bear the same Testimony indeed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Clavering.

[Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. Come, Sir, I'll ask you a short Question: Were you at St. Omers with Mr. Otes, and when?

Mr. Clavering. Yes, I was: I came the 10th of December 77 to St. Omers, he told me he came thither that Day too, and I liv'd there all the time that he was there, which was till towards the middle of Summer: I do not remember that he ever was absent, but once at Watton.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Burnaby's coming thither?

Mr. Clavering. Mr. Otes was there when Mr. Burnaby came there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he there when Pool came away?

Mr. Clavering. He was there when Mr. Pool went away, and likewise I remember his being there at the time of the Congregation.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray tell the Circumstance how you know he was there then?

Mr. Clavering. There came a Gentleman there that desir'd a Charity of the Students, and I was the Person that made the Collection for him in the House; and I remember he did ask if there was any one that was a Student there that had been in Spain: We told him there was one, and describ'd him, upon which he knew the Gentleman in Spain; upon that I told Mr. Otes, that there was one there that knew him, but he deny'd to come and speak with him. Now I remember that it was the time of the Congregation, for some made Enquiry why he got so little Money at Watton, and it was said it was because the Fathers were gone to the Congregation in England. And he ask'd me particularly, what was done at the Congregation in England?

L. C. J. Did Otes ask that Question?

Mr. Clavering. Yes, my Lord, he did.

L. C. J. Whom did he ask it of?

Mr. Clavering. Of me.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Clavering. I think it was about the time of the Congregation.

L. C. J. How came he to enquire after it?

Mr. Clavering. I was talking with him, and said he to me, Know you nothing what the Business is that they are to do at the Congregation? Said I, Mr. Lucy, I know not what they do; I think not much: For I hear at those Meetings many times they stay an hour or two, and have done when they have chosen their Procurator.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you believe he was there all the time?

Mr. Clavering. Yes, my Lord, I do believe it.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, let me ask him a Question or two.

L. C. J. Ay, what you will.

Otes. What Religion is this Gentleman of?

Mr. Clavering. I am a Catholick.

Otes. A Roman Catholick you mean, I suppose?

Mr. Clavering. Yes, I always understood it so, Mr. Otes.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know how he came not to be produc'd at the Jesuits Tryal, to give this Evidence he gives now?

Mr. Clavering. I can give a very good Reason perhaps: I was then, my Lord, in Germany.

L. C. J. That's Reason good enough of all Conscience.

Mr. Just. Witbins. That was a new Question, and you have a satisfactory Answer, I think.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. John Copley.

[Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. Were you at St. Omers in 77 and 78?

Mr. Copley. Yes, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Was Otes there then?

Mr. Copley. I saw him all the time he was there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did he come thither?

Mr. Copley. He came a little before Christmas, to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When went he away?

Mr. Copley. In 78.

Mr. Sol.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In what Month in 78?

Mr. Copley. In June 78.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he absent any part of that time?

Mr. Copley. I was there, and he was there too.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he absent any part of the time from Christmas to June?

Mr. Copley. Nay, I am sure he was there all the time, except that Night that he was absent at Watton, and that was in January.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Religion he is of?

Mr. Copley. Does your Lordship ask me that Question?

L. C. J. Yes, I do ask you, Mr. Otes would know it.

Mr. Copley. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear, Mr. Cook:

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know Mr. Otes at St. Omers, and when?

Mr. Cook. He came there a little before Christmas 77.

Mr. At. Gen. How came you to know him there?

Mr. Cook. I liv'd in the House then.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he there all April and May?

Mr. Cook. Yes, he was till the latter end of June.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you see him every Day?

Mr. Cook. Yes, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you tell any particular time?

Mr. Cook. I am positive he was the 30th of April.

Mr. At. Gen. What Stile?

Mr. Cook. New Stile.

L. C. J. How do you know he was there then?

Mr. Cook. It is a remarkable time; there is a Procession that they keep there on that Day from the Sodality to the Church, and I saw him go among the rest at the latter end among the Rhetoricians.

L. C. J. What say you, was he there on that Day Mr. Hilsley went away?

Mr. Cook. I do not remember that.

L. C. J. Do you remember Burnaby?

Mr. Cook. I was there when Mr. Burnaby went away.

L. C. J. But when he came was Otes there?

Mr. Cook. I cannot speak particularly to that.

Mr. At. Gen. What was your Place in the College?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, He is a Lay-man be sure.

Mr. Cook. I was a Servant in the House.

Otes. In what Place do you serve?

Mr. Cook. I was a Taylor.

Otes. I do not remember him.

Mr. Cook. But I remember you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Jo. Wright, Esq;

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Otes at St. Omers?

Mr. Wright. Yes, I do.

Mr. At. Gen. When was it?

Mr. Wright. The Winter before the notice of the Plot was.

Mr. At. Gen. What Year was it in?

Mr. Wright. In the Year 77.

Mr. At. Gen. What Month in that Year did he come thither?

Mr. Wright. I cannot tell, it was Winter-time.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he go away?

Mr. Wright. He went away in Summer, I cannot tell just the time.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he absent at any time, from his coming in Winter, to his going away in Summer?

Mr. Wright. The Scholars said he was once at a Place call'd Watton.

L. C. J. Come, this says nothing to the purpose.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We leave it here.

L. C. J. What say you to it then, Mr. Otes?

Otes. Has Mr. Attorney done?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, we have done for the present.

L. C. J. Then are you to make your Defence.

Otes. My Lord, Here is an Indictment brought against me for Perjury; and this Indictment sets forth, That I should upon the 17th of December appear at the Old Bailey, and there swear, That there was a Treasonable Consult of the Jesuits met at the White Horse Tavern in the Strand, and that this Treasonable Consult did divide it self into lesser Companies and Meetings, and that I carried about a certain Resolution, which the Jesuits came to, concerning killing the King, from Chamber to Chamber to be sign'd. My Lord, I have a great Exception to make to this Indictment, and that is, my Lord, as to the Form. For, by your Lordship's Favour, I think the Perjury is not well assign'd, and according as I am advised I offer this to your Lordship's Consideration. It says in the Assignment of the Perjury, Ubi revera & in facto prædictus Titus Otes non præsens fuit ad aliquam Consultationem Jesuitarum apud le White Horse Tavern prædict' in le Strand in Com' Midd' prædict' super vicesimum quartum diem April' anno Dom' Millicesimo.

L. C. J. How Millicesimo?

Otes. My Lord, It is Law-Latin, I suppose it may serve in a Court.

L. C. J. No, it is true Latin there.

Otes. I cannot tell how to read it better.

L. C. J. I do believe that.

Otes. It is written in such a Hand, I cannot read it; but the Substance of it is, it says here, That I did not carry any Resolution from Chamber to Chamber signand'. Now, the Evidence charged upon me to be given, is, That I did not see it signat'. So that the Assignment of the Perjury does not pursue the Oath as it is set forth; for if it be signat' in the Evidence that was given, it ought to be signat' in the Perjury that is assigned; and I humbly crave the Opinion of your Lordship and the Court upon this Point.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Otes, That you offer'd before, and I gave this Answer, which I must now repeat, That now we are upon the Fact, and this Exception will be sav'd to you for its proper time, if you be convicted. It is not proper now; but suppose there were that thing which you say is an Objection, yet you must know, that there are two Perjuries that are assign'd; the one is upon the first part of your Oath, which was, that you were present at a Consult Consult of the Jesuits the 24th of April 78, at the White Horse Tavern in the Strand, Ubi revera you were not there. Now, Do you admit in the first place, that you were forsworn in that particular.

Otes. No, my Lord, I do not.

L. C. J. If the Jury find that you were forsworn in that first Point, that you were not there, it will be easily believed you swore false in the other Point, that you did not carry the Resolution from Chamber to Chamber.

Otes. But, my Lord, it is not well assign'd, I think.

L. C. J. That will be sav'd to you after the Verdict, I tell you, if there be occasion for it.

Otes. My Lord, I suppose the Proof ought to be according to the Record, and the Record makes the Perjury differ from the Oath.

L. C. J. I tell you that is to the Form, and that will be sav'd to you after the Verdict one way or the other.

Otes. Then will your Lordship be pleased to consider there was a Record brought in, which is almost the same with that I am to offer to be read on my behalf, and which is the first Proof that I have to offer of the Consult that was held in London in April 78. And I desire Mr. Perciville may be called, I forget his Christian Name, and Mr. Vaughan who is my Solicitor: But pray, my Lord, let me first have the Opinion of the Court, whether they did prove the Words that I am said to swear as they are laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Yes, very fully, we think so; but the Jury are to try that, that is a Point of Fact; but if you will, you shall have our Thoughts about it; We think they are fully proved.

Cryer. Here is Mr. Perciville.

Otes. Pray swear him. [Which was done.]

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Otes. Mr. Perciville, You examin'd the Conviction of Mr. Ireland, pray put it in: Is it a true Copy?

Perciville. Yes, it is.

Otes. My Lord, I desire that the Conviction and Attainder of Mr. Ireland may be read.

Mr. At. Gen. It has been read already.

Otes. My Lord, I will not take up the Court's time any more than is necessary for my Defence.

L. C. J. Nay, do as you will, as long as you offer things pertinent and decent, the Court will hear you with all Patience, and you may take what time is necessary for you.

Otes. I thank your Lordship: I design'd nothing at all of Reflection upon the Court, but a Reflection on the Witnesses that came in against me.

Cl. of Cr. This is a Copy of the same Record that was before read.

Otes. Well, if that be allowed for Evidence for me, I am contented to spare the time of the Court, not to read it again; but, my Lord, I offer this, and desire to have Counsel assign'd me to argue this Point in Law; that is, Whether or no the Convictions and Attainders of Ireland, Whitebread, and the rest of them, of a Treasonable Consult of the 24th of April 78. where it was resolved to murder the late King, ought not to be taken as a sufficient Legal Proof of the Fact, so long as those Attainders remain of Force? And whether the Averment of that being false, is to be received against those Records?

L. C. J. There is no difficulty in that at all in the World, Mr. Otes.

Otes. My Lord, I do not know the Law, and therefore I pray I may have Counsel assign'd to argue that Point.

L. C. J. There is no question in it. God forbid, if a Verdict be obtain'd by Perjury, that that Verdict should protect the perjurd Party from being prosecuted for his false Oath. There were no Justice in that; nor is it an Averment against a Record, for this is not a Writ of Error in Fact that will reverse it, but the Record remains a good Record and unimpeached still: But tho' it be a good Record, yet it is lawful to say this Verdict was obtain'd upon the Testimony of such an one, that forswore himself in that Testimony, and for that particular Perjury he may surely be prosecuted.

Otes. Is not that Attainder an uncontrollable Evidence of the Fact, till it be revers'd?

L. C. J. Yes, it is against the Party attainted; but if that Attainder was founded upon a Verdict that was obtain'd by Perjury, God forbid, but he should be told so that did perjure himself.

Otes. Well, my Lord, if your Lordship rules that for Law, then I will go on; and I must now observe to the Jury in the opening the Evidence two things. First, That the Indictment upon which Ireland was try'd, was found the 16th of December 78, and on the 17th of December, the next Day Ireland was try'd at the Old Bailey; and then I find this Indictment brought against me for Perjury, is found at the Old Bailey six Years after the Fact by special Commission. Now, I submit it to your Lordship's and the Jury's Consideration, why the Presentment and the finding of this Bill for Perjury has been so long delay'd, since it appears by the Evidence, that the Witnesses that have been produc'd to prove the Perjury, were either at the Tryal of the five Jesuits, or might have been produced then; and tho' they are not all the same Persons, yet they all bear the same Testimony that was then offered, but were not credited; and I hope when my Evidence is heard, they will have the same Reputation with this Jury that they had with those others. My Lord, I must acquaint your Lordship and this Court, That in this Indictment for which Mr. Ireland was convicted, Mr. Whitebread and Mr. Fenwick did undergo part of the Tryal, and did hear the whole Body of the Evidence that the Witnesses testified against them; but there being but one Witness against them two at that time, which was my self, (Mr. Bedloe being then upon an Intrigue, as your Lordship may remember) my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs, who was then the Mouth of the Court, did discharge the Jury of Mr. Whitebread and Mr. Fenwick, and remanded them to Prison, which Mr. Whitebread six Months after did remark to the Court, and urg'd it as a Plea for himself to be discharged; but that being over-ruled by the Court, he was try'd. Now, he had six Months time to provide himself with new fresh Evidence to asperse me, and to endeavour to falsify that Testimony I gave in against Whitebread and Fenwick, when Ireland was try'd, and so he knew what it was. I must further observe to you, my Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, That my Case is very hard, that since the Substance of my Testimony was with Credit receiv'd, and the Jury upon convicting them were acquainted, " That they had found an " unexceptionable Verdict; That all the Ob- " jections against the Evidence were then fully " answer'd; That there was nothing that the " Prisoners had been wanting in to object, " which could be objected; and that the thing " was as clear as the Sun. And yet after six Years time, I must come to be called to an account for Perjury in my Testimony of that part of the Popish Plot, with which the King and Kingdom, four successive Parliaments, all the Judges of the Land, and three Juries were so well satisfied. I shall therefore offer to your Lordship and the Jury's Consideration the unanimous Votes of three Houses of Commons; I shall offer the Proceedings of the House of Lords, that is the highest Judicature in the Kingdom; I shall prove what I have open'd by the Testimony of several Noblemen that are here, who will testify this for me. My Lord, I shall prove, that several Attempts have been made to baffle this Testimony, as that of the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, who took my Depositions, the Contrivance of Paine, Farewell, and Thompson, made in the Year 81 or 82, I forget which; I shall then produce Evidence that I was actually here in Town at the time in question; and then upon the whole I shall submit it to your Lordship and the Jury. But to prepare your Lordship and the Jury the better for my Evidence, I would again urge the strangeness of this Prosecution, and the Hardship that is put upon me, to be try'd for Perjury in an Evidence given six Years ago, and formerly very industriously, tho' not successfully, endeavour'd to be falsified by sixteen St. Omers Youths that were produced and examined before all the Judges in the Kingdom, and that not only once at Whitebread's Tryal, but a second time at Langborn's Tryal, in neither of which would the Jury believe them, because of their Religion and Education, and the Persons under whom they were educated, who were Men of known Artifice. Then, my Lord, I would argue this: If at that time my Evidence were true, it must be true still; for Truth is always the same; and if it were then true, and I can prove it to be true, it will be thought a hard thing without all doubt, that this should be put upon me. Then, my Lord, I would fain know from my Prosecutors, Why this Indictment of Perjury has been deferred so long? Why these Witnesses that come now to testify this Matter, and could then have been brought, did not come before, to justify at the Tryals of these Persons what they now say, which might have sav'd their Lives, if true, and had been credited. Then I shall offer to your Lordship what I desire You and the Jury would please to observe, That tho' the King's Counsel are now against me, yet they are also against themselves, for they were of Counsel for the King in those Cases; particularly Mr. Solicitor at Langborn's Tryal, Sir Robert Sawyer at Sir George Wakeman's Tryal: They were of Counsel before for the Truth of my Testimony; they are now against it: I only mention that, and pass it over. But this is not the first Attempt that has been made to discredit the Testimony of the Popish Plot, as I told you before. Now, can it be supposed that the Love and Desire of Publick Justice can be the Cause of this Attempt to falsify my Evidence after so many Tryals, in which it has been credited and confirmed? Can any thing, my Lord, more plainly tend to destroy and subvert the Methods of Justice, to frighten all Witnesses from henceforth from ever appearing to discover any Conspiracies? And does it not tend to expose and vilify the known Understanding and Justice of the late King of ever Blessed Memory, to arraign the Wisdom of His Privy Council, His Great and Noble Peers, His Loyal Commons in three successive Parliaments, His Twelve Judges, and all those several Juries that were upon those Tryals? Had not those Juries Sense? Had they not Honesty? Had they no Consciences? And the Judges before whom those Conspirators were try'd, were they Men of no Justice, nor Honour, nor Integrity, nor Conscience, nor Understanding? Shall those Juries be said to have drawn the innocent Blood of these Men upon their own Heads and the Nation? As, if I were perjur'd it must be innocent Blood that was shed upon it.

L. C. J. No, no, that goes a great deal too far, Mr. Otes: The Jury have no share, nor the Judges neither, in that Blood which was shed by your Oath.

Mr. Just. Withins. No, that is your own most certainly, and not theirs.

Otes. But this, I say, makes it most plain: The Evidence was then true, and I hope I shall make it as evidently plain 'tis as true now; and I do not question, but upon the Evidence I shall now give, both positive and collateral, the Jury will believe me, and acquit me of this foul Accusation. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to consider, that when the Jury brought in Ireland guilty of the High Treason of which he was accused, and convicted him, Pickering and Grove; says my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs (that then was) to them, " Gentlemen, you have done like very " good Subjects, and very good Christians, that is, " like very good Protestants; and now much good may " do them with their Thirty Thousand Masses; as I shall prove he did say. Then I insist, in the second place, That Whitebread's Conviction does reinforce the Conviction of Ireland, because of the Attempt by the St. Omers Witnesses to have overthrown my Evidence: But since I am attack'd again in the same kind by the Violence of the Popish Interest, and by the Malice of my Popish Adversaries, I am contented to stand the Test with all my Heart. And then, to conclude all, I shall shew the Court, That 'tis in vain for the Popish Party to expect and think to wipe their Mouths, with Solomon's Whore, and say, they have done no wickedness: No, I question not but thousands of Protestants in this Kingdom are fully satisfied and convinced of the Truth of the Popish Plot, all and every part of it. Now, my Lord, if you please to give me leave to proceed on in my Evidence, I shall beg that these Records of Conviction may be read, which are my first Proof of the Consult; and I shall then bring Witnesses, viva voce, and shall make it appear, that what I did swear at those Tryals was true.

L. C. J. Not to interrupt you in your Defence, or the Method you will take for it, I would put you upon that which is proper for you to apply your self to, because the Question now is not, Whether there was a Consult or Congregation of the Jesuits here upon the 24th of April 78? But the Question that toucheth you is, Whether you were present at any such Consult here in London the 24th of April 78? These Gentlemen, some of them, do say, there was a Consult, and others that they heard of it, and believe there was such an one, because it was usual to have a Triennial Congregation for some particular Purposes: But the Question is, Whether you have sufficient Proof to prove your self to be here on the 24th of April 78, at which time it is agreed of all Hands there was a Consult?

Otes. But will your Lordship be pleased to take notice of the drift of the Evidence, how they are consistent one with another? These Gentlemen that have now been sworn to prove that I was not at this Consult, do attempt to prove that I was at St. Omers: Now, to answer this, I shall not go about to prove that I was not then at St. Omers, but that I was actually then, and about that time, here in London; and then all that Proof that Mr. Attorney General has brought, must be laid aside.

L. C. J. You say well; prove that.

Otes. Now, my Lord, to introduce and prepare the Jury for this, it will be necessary, I humbly conceive, to read the Records of the Conviction of Whitebread and Ireland.

L. C. J. Well, go your own way. We are not to direct you: I only tell you where the Question lies.

Otes. Sir Samuel Astrey, Pray be pleased to read them in English, that the Jury may understand them. First read Ireland's Record.

[Which was done.]

Otes. Now read Whitebread's Record: Read but the Attainder, I will not trouble the Court with the whole Record.

Cl. of Cr. "Thomas White alias Whitebread, William Harcourt alias Harrison, John Fenwick, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, were found guilty of High Treason, and attainted, and Execution awarded against them upon that Attainder.

Otes. Does not the Record say, The Jurors say upon their Oaths they are guilty.

L. C. J. Yes, I'll warrant you.

Cl. of Cr. It is Dicunt super sacramentum suum.

Otes. Very well. These, my Lord, I do produce as my first Evidence, to prove that there was a traitorous Consult, held upon the 24th of April 78, at the White Horse Tavern in the Strand, it having been believed and affirmed by two Verdicts. Now give me leave to offer but this to the Court, That at the Tryal of Mr. Ireland I gave so full and ample a Testimony against Whitebread and Fenwick, accompanied with all the Circumstances of Time and Place, That my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs said, The Evidence might be sufficient to have satisfied a private Conscience, tho' it was not a legal Proof then to convict him, there being but one Witness against them: And for this I call Mr. Robert Blayney.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray swear Mr. Blayney.

[Which was done.]
L. C. J. What do you ask Mr. Blayney?

Otes. Mr. Blayney, Have you your Notes of Ireland's Tryal here?

Mr. Blayney. Yes, Sir; I have.

Otes. Pray, will you look into what my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs said when he discharged the Jury of Whitebread and Fenwick.

Mr. Blayney. Whereabouts is it, Sir, in the Printed Tryal?

Otes. It is Page 55.

Mr. Blayney. I have found the Place, what is it you would ask me about it?

Otes. Whether my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs did not use these Words to the Jury? "I do acknowledge that Mr. Otes has given a very full and ample Testimony accompanied with all the Circumstances of Time and Place, against them all; That may go far with you, all things considered, to believe there is a Plot: Yet I do not think they have proved it against Whitebread and Fenwick by Two Witnesses, tho' the Testimony be so full as to satisfy a private Conscience, yet we must go according to Law too. It will be convenient from what is already proved, to have them stay till more Proof come in; 'Tis a great Evidence that is against them, but it not being sufficient in Point of Law, We discharge you of them. It is not a legal Proof to convict them by, whatsoever it may be to satisfy your Consciences.

Mr. Blayney. I have look'd upon my Notes, and I cannot find exactly those Words.

L. C. J. He says he cannot find that Passage as it is there.

Mr. Blayney. There is something to that purpose, my Lord.

Otes. Pray, Sir, will you look into your Notes in the very same place, what my Lord Chief Baron said: "You must (speaking to the Jaylot) understand they are no way acquitted: The Evidence is so full against them by Mr. Otes's Testimony, that there is no Reason to acquit them; it is as flat as by one Witness can be.

Mr. Blayney. There is such a Passage, I find, in my Notes.

L. C. J. He says there is such a Passage.

Otes. Then I desire Mr. Blayney would look into his Notes, what my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs said in his summing up the Evidence against Ireland? He mentions the Evidence of Sir Dennis Ashburnham, who was produced to discredit me, and then he adds, "When the Matter is so accompanied with so many other Circumstances which are material things, and cannot be evaded or deny'd, it is almost impossible for any Man either to make such a Story or not to believe it when it is told:— It is Ireland's Tryal, page 72.

Mr. Blayney. My Lord, I do find such a Passage in my Notes.

L. C. J. He says there is such a Passage in his Notes.

Otes. Then I would ask Mr. Blayney another Question at the bringing in the Verdict of the Jury against Ireland, Pickering and Grove, my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs (that then was) had this Expression: You have done, Gentlemen, like very good Subjects, and very good Christians, that is to say, like very good Protestants; and now much good may their 30000 Masses do them.

Mr. Blayney. Yes, my Lord, there is in my Notes such an Expression of my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs.

Otes. Pray you, Mr. Blayney, have you Whitebread's Tryal? The Tryal of the five Jesuits, I mean.

Mr. Blayney.

Mr. Blayne. My Lord, When I received a Sub-pœna from Mr. Otes to be here this Day, and to bring my Notes of Ireland, Whitebread and Langhorn's Tryals, I did (as I did before upon another occasion, make a Search for all my Notes, but could not find any but those of the Tryal of Ireland and Langhorn, and those I have brought here, but have not Whitebread's.

L. C. J. He says he has not the Notes of Whitebread's Tryal; he cannot find them.

Otes. Then I must desire, my Lord, that the Printed Tryals may be read.

L. C. J. No, they are no Evidence: If you can prove what was said at any of them, you may by Witneses, but not by the Printed Books.

Otes. Then will your Lordship be pleased to give me leave to mention what was said by your Lordship at that time, when you were Recorder of London, about your Satisfaction with the Evidence?

L. C. J. Ay, with all my heart, and whatever I said, I will own, if I can remember it.

Otes. Will your Lordship be pleased to be sworn then?

L. C. J. No, there will be no need for that; I will acknowledge any thing I said then.

Otes. Then, if your Lordship pleases, I will read those Passages out of the Books.

L. C. J. Ay, do so.

Otes. Says Mr. Recorder of London, (in particular to that part of the Prisoners Defence, at the Tryal of the five Jesuits, and the full Scope given them of making Objections to the Evidence) when he gave Judgment of Death upon these five Jesuits and Langhorn, (for I now speak of your Lordship in the third Person) "Your several Crimes have been proved against you; you have been fully heard, and stand convicted of those Crimes you have been indicted for."

L. C. J. I believe I might say something to the same purpose as you have read now.

Otes. I thank your Lordship for that Acknowledgment.

L. C. J. Ay, I'll own any thing I did say.

Otes. My Lord, I have one Passage more to urge, and that was, my Lord, after the Jesuits had been convicted, when the Jury brought in their Verdict, and found Whitebread, Fenwick, Harcourt, Gaven, and Turner guilty, your Lordship applying your self to the Jury, said thus to them; "Gentlemen, you of the Jury, there has been a long Evidence given against the Prisoners at the Bar; they were all indicted, arraigned, and tried, for High Treason depending upon several Circumstances: They can none of them say the Court refused to hear any thing they could say for themselves, but upon a long Evidence, and a patient Hearing of the Defence they made, they are found guilty, and for any thing appears to us it is a just Verdict you have given."

L. C. J. I believe I might say something to that purpose too at that time; and no doubt the Jury did (as the Case then stood) find an unexceptionable Verdict.

Otes. There is another place, my Lord, that I would instance in, for your Lordship's Opinion of the Evidence of the Popish Plot, and that is this: Now, my Lord, I bring your Lordship as you were of Counsel for the King at Mr. Colledge's Tryal at Oxford, the 17th of August 81. There you, my now Lord Chief Justice, directing your self to the Jury, had this Expression; "We come not here to trip up the Heels of the Popish Plot, by saying that any of them who suffer'd for it did die contrary to Law; for if Mr. Dugdale was not a Person fit to be believed, or if the rest of the Judges who try'd Gaven were out in the Law, then that Man died wrongfully; for he had as much right to be try'd according to Law as any other Person whatsoever." This was your Lordship's Opinion of the Matter then, and your Lordship, as Counsel for the King, did there deliver the Law as well as Fact to the Jury. If then they went against Law that would go to trip up the Heels of the Popish Plot——

Mr. Just. Withins. We are got into an endless Wood of Sayings of People, I know not where and when; and when all is done, it is to no purpose.

Otes. My Lord, it is a part, and a great part of my Defence, to shew what credit has been given to the Evidence of the Popish Plot.

L. C. J. Ay, but what Counsel says at the Bar, or what Judges say in the Court of their Opinion, is no Evidence of a Fact, of which the Jury are Judges only.

Otes. My Lord, Every Judge is upon his Oath, and delivers his Judgment according to his Oath.

L. C. J. Not as to the Fact, but only in Points of Law, so as to tell the Jury what the Law is, if the Fact be so and so.

Otes. My Lord, It goes a great way with the Jury to have the Judge's Opinion.

L. C. J. Mr. Otes, Deceive not your self; all this you have insisted on hitherto, has not been to the purpose, nor is any sort of Evidence in this Case; and therefore do not run away with an Opinion of this as Evidence; a Judge's Opinion is of Value in Points of Law that arise upon Facts found by Juries, but are no Evidence of the Fact; for Judges only do presume the Fact to be true, as it is found by the Jury; and therefore say they, Out of that Fact so found, the Point of Law arising is thus or thus. Then in case, after a Jury has given a Verdict of the Fact, a Judge's Opinion of the Fact, (which may be perhaps contrary to the Verdict) should be an Evidence as to that Fact, that would be to overthrow and nullify the Jury's Verdict: No, that is not the Judge's Province. Surely you would not have a Judge's private Opinion, that Twelve men have found a Verdict against the Fact, to be an Evidence as to that Fact: No; but admit the Fact to be so or so, then the Person convicted of the Fact ought to suffer so or so. And by the same reason as this, a Jury of honest Gentlemen here, when I tell them here is a plain Fact either to convict you or to acquit you upon this Indictment, are not bound to go by what I say in Point of Fact, but they are to go according to their own Oaths, and according to the Evidence and Testimony of the Witneses: It is not my Opinion that is to weigh at all with them, whether you are guilty of this Perjury, or are innocent, but the Evidence that is given here in Court. Therefore what my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs said at any of those Tryals; or what I said, or any other Person, that either was of Counsel, or a Judge on the Bench, said as our Opinions, is but our Opinions on the Fact as it occurred to our present Apprehensions, but is no Evidence nor nor binding to this Jury. I must tell you, there is no doubt but that those Juries did every one of them believe the Evidence you gave, or they would not have convicted the Prisoners. Do you think they would have found a Verdict against their own Belief, and being upon their Oaths to make true Deliverance between the King and the Prisoners, have perjured themselves to hang others? If they had so done, they had committed wilful Murder, and the worst of Murders too, being under colour of the Process of Law; but yet all this is no Evidence. I do not discommend you for insinuating these things as introductive and preparative to what Evidence you have to offer; but it is no Evidence one way or other. Alack-a-day! how many times have we Causes here in Westminster-hall, wherein we have Verdict against Verdict? And yet no Imputation to either of the Juries, which might give different Verdicts upon different Grounds. There was a notable Case lately of my Lady Ivies at this Bar: We all thought upon the first Tryal, that she had as good a Title to the Land as could be; all the Judges and the Counsel went away (I believe) satisfied with the Jury's Verdict for her: But when the Cause came to be heard again, we found all the Witnesses to prove her Title, were guilty of notorious Perjury, and the same Persons which did believe before that she was in the right, and the Jury had done well, when they heard the second Tryal did believe she was in the wrong, and accordingly the second Jury found it so; and we believe that last Verdict to be good, without any Reflection on the Credit of the first Jury, because the Evidence was as strong on her side then, as it was afterwards against her. In these Cases we give our Opinions always according to the present Testimony that is before us.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I offer this to your Consideration, That those Men that were thus charged by me with High Treason, were Priests and Jesuits most of them, and particularly Mr. Ireland, in whose Tryal I am said to have committed this Perjury, and you shall find him to have been by others proved a Priest and a Jesuit, and actually engaged in a Design against the Life of the King: If I then do prove that Ireland was engaged in a Design against the late King's Life, and was a Priest and a Jesuit, I desire to know, Whether this be not a Collateral Evidence to render me of Credit sufficient, and support my Testimony?

L. C. J. By no means upon this Indictment. It's true it may give some Credit to your Testimony, but is not of it self sufficient: Nay, I'll go a great way further than that; I will suppose that there was a Consult of the Jesuits upon the 24th of April 78, at the White Horse Tavern in the Strand, where those you say were present, were all present, Ireland, and Whitebread, and Pickering, Grove and Fenwick, were all there, and that they did there come to a Resolution to destroy the late King: Suppose all this to be true, and yet you all this time are not innocent of the Fact imputed to you, because you swore directly, That you were there at that Consult too, which you were not, if these Men swear true, for then you were at St. Omers at that time; and therefore give us some sort of Testimony to satisfy us that you were here, and then you will set all right again. If the Jesuits and Priests did plot, that is nothing to make your Evidence true, if you swore that which you did not know of your own Knowledge.

Otes. Shall it be allow'd then that Ireland was a Jesuit and a Papist?

L. C. J. If it should, that will be to very little purpose for your Turn.

Otes. There is the Evidence of a Record for it, my Lord; but if that be not sufficient, I can call Witnesses to prove it. Pray call Mr. Miles Prance.

Which was done, but he did not appear.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. He was subpœna'd, my Lord, to come hither.

L. C. J. I can't help it, if he will not come; but I'll tell you, for method's sake, not to prescribe to you, but to tell you what I think may be more for your Advantage than any of these Inferences that you are making. If you did call two or three Witnesses to prove that you were in Town the 22d, 23d, or 24th of April, it would be the best Defence you can make, and would give the best Answer to all that is objected against you.

Otes. I will do that, my Lord, then, and follow your Directions.

L. C. J. Do so, that is the best way.

Otes. Cryer, call Cecilia Mayo.

Cryer. Here she is.

Otes. Swear her.

[Which was done.]

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask this Witness?

Otes. Pray, Mrs. Mayo, give my Lord and the Jury an account, whether you did see me in London the latter part of April or the beginning of May 78? For that is the Question now before the Court.

L. C. J. Ay, what say you? When did you see him in 78?

Mrs. Mayo. My Lord, I saw him the latter end of April: He came to Sir Richard Barker's House, where I did then live, and afterwards he came again thither within a few Days. By this Circumstance I remember it; Sir Richard Barker my Master was sick all the Month of April, and in the Country, only he came now and then home for a little while, and went again; Now Mr. Otes came there when he was absent, and a young Man that lived in the House came to me, and told me, There was Mr. Otes in the strangest Disguise that ever was. Says he, I think he is turn'd Quaker; No, said I, he is no Quaker, for they were no Perriwigs, and I rebuk'd the young Man for saying so. As for Mr. Otes, I never saw his Face before that time that I know of.

L. C. J. How do you know that to be Mr. Otes then?

Mrs. Mayo. The Family knew him, and they told me it was he: That is the Gentleman there. I speak now nothing but that which I testified seven Years ago, and it is all Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Ay, no doubt of it, thou swearest nothing but the Truth.

Mrs. Mayo. My Lord, He came three or four Days afterwards again to the House, and then the young Man came to me, and told me, That Parson Otes was turn'd Jesuit; and thereupon I said to him, Good Lord! Why dost thou concern thy self with him? Canst not let him alone? I look'd upon him, and saw him at that time : And when he came that time, he went to Sir Richard's Lady's Sister, who is now in Wales, and coming to her, said she, Mr. Otes, I hear you are turn'd Jesuit, and we can have no Society with you now : At last, he stay'd to Dinner with them, and stay'd most of the Day there. Then he comes the latter end of May ; Whitsuntide was in May that Year, and I know he came before Whitsuntide by this Token ; I speak of the second time of his Coming : Our Custom in the House was to wash and scowre before the time, and I was sending for a Woman to come and help to wash and scowre, and then he was walking in the Garden ; and the young Man came and told me Otes was there : He came into the Pantry to me, Look, said he, he is come again, and he is turn'd Jesuit by his Disguise : Why Benjamin, said I, what hast thou to do with the Man ? Can'st not let him alone ?

L. C. J. What was the Name of that young Man you speak of ?

Mrs. Mayo. Truly, my Lord, he is dead, or he would have testified the same thing.

L. C. J. But what was his Name ?

Mrs. Mayo. Benjamin ; I can't tell his other Name.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Mrs. Mayo. Said I to him, Why dost thou scorn this Man ? Prithee get out of the Room, I am not able to hear it : So he walk'd the space of an Hour in the Garden.

L. C. J. Is Sir Richard Barker living ?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, my Lord, he is, but he is not well.

L. C. J. Was he at home when Otes was there ?

Mrs. Mayo. No, my Lord, I think not.

L. C. J. Who din'd with him, do you say, when he din'd there ?

Mrs. Mayo. My Lady's Sister.

L. C. J. What is her Name ?

Mrs. Mayo. Madam Thurrel.

L. C. J. And who else ?

Mrs. Mayo. And her Sons.

L. C. J. Where are they ?

Mrs. Mayo. They are both dead.

L. C. J. And who else was there ?

Mrs. Mayo. One Dr. Cocker.

L. C. J. Where is he ?

Mrs. Mayo. He is in Wales too, my Lord.

L. C. J. 'Tis a great Misfortune to have so many dead, or so far remote.

Otes. My Lord, Six Years time makes a great Alteration in a Family.

L. C. J. Was there any body else there ?

Mrs. Mayo. There were two of the Daughters, and they could all come and testify the same thing.

L. C. J. Where are they, and what is become of them ? Why are they not here ?

Mrs. Mayo. They are living in Lincolnshire, my Lord, I think.

L. C. J. What else have you more to say ?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Mrs. Mayo, let me ask you a Question : What colour'd Cloaths had he on when you saw him first ?

Mrs. Mayo. He had a whitish Hat, and colour'd Cloaths.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time of the Day was it you saw him ?

Mrs. Mayo. In the Morning.

L. C. J. Did he go publickly ?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, he went publickly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he come often to the House ?

Mrs. Mayo. He was there frequently, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then it seems he was so disguis'd that he could walk publickly in the Streets of London at Noon-day, and was frequently in the Family.

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Now tell me who was in the Family ?

Mr. At. Gen. Mrs. Mayo. —

L. C. J. Pray, give me leave to ask her the Question : Who was there at that time ?

Mrs. Mayo. Sir Richard Barker's Lady's Sister, Madam Thurrel, and his two Daughters, and two of his Kinsmen, and two of the Servants, one is here a Witness now.

L. C. J. Who is that that is a Witness now ?

Mrs. Mayo. One that belongs to Sir Richard Barker, and the other is now dead, and those two Kinsmen are dead.

L. C. J. What is become of the two Daughters, say you ?

Mrs. Mayo. They are in Lincolnshire, as I take it, my Lord.

L. C. J. When did you hear from them ?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, It is half a Year ago almost since Mr. Otes had notice of this Tryal.

L. C. J. Where is Sir Richard Barker himself ?

Mrs. Mayo. I was with Sir Richard Barker, and he purposed to have come hither ; but being a crazy Man, and ancient, it seems he could not, and desired to be excus'd, for he had a bad Night, and was not well ; but he desired that the Court should know, if he were well, he would be there.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you sworn at a former Tryal about this Matter, Mrs. Mayo ?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember what you swore then ?

Mrs. Mayo. The same I do now.

Mr. At. Gen. Then I ask you this Question, How long before Whitsuntide was it that you saw Mr. Otes at Sir Richard Barker's ?

Mrs. Mayo. A pretty while before, twice.

Otes. Mrs. Mayo, I'll put you a fair Question, Whether or no it might not be a Fortnight before Whitsuntide, you think ?

Mrs. Mayo. The last time I saw you was a Week before Whitsuntide.

L. C. J. How can you tell it was but a Week ?

Mrs. Mayo. 'Twas but a Week, because at that time I had sent the Boy for the Woman to scowre and wash there.

L. C. J. Was that the last time you saw him ?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes : I saw him several times before, and it was all before Whitsuntide.

L. C. J. How long before that was the first time that you saw him ?

Mrs. Mayo. He would be away for three or four Days, and come again.

L. C. J. But how long before the last time, was the first time you saw him ?

Mrs. Mayo. He came still to and again.

L. C. J. When was the time that you saw him next before the Week before Whitsuntide, which, as you say, was the last time you saw him ?

Mrs. Mayo.

Mrs. Mayo. I am not able to say that.

L. C. J. Did you believe it was within the compass of a Week before?

Mrs. Mayo. To the best of my remembrance it was.

L. C. J. When was the first time you saw him?

Mrs. Mayo. 'Twas in the beginning of May.

L. C. J. You said at first it was at the latter end of April.

Mrs. Mayo. Pray, my Lord, let me a little think; I am unwilling to be mistaken, I would say nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. No, I would not have thee; but for God's sake, let us have the Truth, that is that we look for.

Mrs. Mayo. I say, the Coach-man saw him there as well as I, and he can tell you better than I.

L. C. J. But I ask you this Question positively, Was it in May or April?

Mrs. Mayo. To the best of my remembrance it was the beginning of May.

L. C. J. Was it within a Week of May?

Mrs. Mayo. I believe it was, I cannot tell exactly to a Day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it so or not?

Mrs. Mayo. I cannot be positive to a Day; it is now six Years time since I was first examined about it.

Mr. At. Gen. But you can remember what you swore then, can't you?

Mrs. Mayo. I declare it, I speak not a Syllable, but I will aver to be true, before the great God.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you swear it was within the first seven Days of May?

L. C. J. You see, Mr. Solicitor, she says she cannot.

Mr. At. Gen. Did not you say at that Tryal, that you did never see his Face till a Week before Whitsuntide, or a little after?

Mrs. Mayo. I did swear the same that I do now, to the best of my remembrance, and that is the Truth.

Mr. At. Gen. But did not you swear so?

Mrs. Mayo. I never saw him before that first time he came to Sir Richard Barker's, and after the last time that he came, I saw him not till after the Plot was discovered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long was that after he had been at your Master's House?

Mrs. Mayo. It was a good while, I cannot tell how long.

L. C. J. Was it within a Month, or two Months?

Mrs. Mayo. It was more, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where was Sir Richard Barker at that time?

Mrs. Mayo. He was at Putney.

L. C. J. Then he did not see him?

Mrs. Mayo. Not then he did not.

L. C. J. Did he afterwards?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, he did see him afterwards.

L. C. J. How long afterwards was it?

Mrs. Mayo. I can't tell how long afterwards it was, my Lord.

L. C. J. About what time was it?

Mrs. Mayo. After the Plot was discovered he was up and down in the Family.

L. C. J. You never knew Mr. Otes before that time he came in a Disguise, and you did not know him then, but as they told you it was he?

Mrs. Mayo. No, I did not, but as they told me then; and this is the Man, I'll swear it.

Otes. Call John Butler.

Cryer. Here is John Butler.

Otes. Swear him.

[Which was done.]

My Lord, if you please I will propose my Questions to your Lordship; and my first Question is this, I pray your Lordship would ask him, Whether he gave in any Evidence at the five Jesuits Tryal, or Langborn's Tryal, about my being in Town in April or May, 78?

L. C. J. Did you give any Evidence at the Five Jesuits Tryal?

Butler. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Did you give any Evidence at Langborn's Tryal?

Butler. Yes, my Lord, I was a Witness there.

Otes. My Lord, it is so long ago, that ignorant People that come innocently without design, may not be so ready in their remembrance, as those that conn'd their Lesson for so long time together.

L. C. J. Well, well; what do you ask him next, Whether he will stand by that Evidence he gave then?

Butler. That is all I have to say, my Lord: I did testify the Truth then, and will abide by it.

L. C. J. But he must give the same over again here, or it will signifie nothing.

Otes. My Lord, it is now six Years since, and this Question was not thought to be stirr'd so long after: Therefore I beg so much Favour, that the Evidence he did give at Mr. Langborn's Tryal may be read to him.

L. C. J. O by no means.

Otes. My Lord, it is such a distance of time—

L. C. J. Look ye, if he has any Notes himself, he may look on them to refresh him.

Otes. My Lord, he comes raw hither, without any Instruction at all.

L. C. J. So should every Witness: God forbid we should countenance the instructing of Witnesses what they should swear.

Otes. I beg your Pardon, my Lord, I did hope this Favour might be granted: I will then ask him some Questions.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, do, Refresh his Memory by Questions as much as you can. Come, I'll ask him some Questions for you: Do you remember you saw Mr. Otes at any time in the Year 78?

Butler. If it please your Lordship, as near as I can remember, I saw him in May before the Plot was discovered.

L. C. J. That was the Year 78.

Butler. I am sure I did see him about that time.

L. C. J. Where did you see him?

Butler. I was a Servant to Sir Richard Barker, and Mr. Otes I had been acquainted with before he went to Sea; he used to come to my Master's House frequently, and divers times he din'd at the Table, and I waited upon my Master there.

L. C. J. When was it that he din'd there at the Table?

Butler. A Year before that time in May that I spoke of before: It was before he went to Sea.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. When did you see him again?

Butler. After he came from Sea, I saw him at my Master's House.

L. C. J. When was it that he went to Sea?

Butler. It was a Year or two, before the May that I saw him disguis'd coming to my Master's House.

Mr. At. Gen. Ay, what Disguise did he come in?

Butler. His Hair was cut off, close cropt to his Ears, and an old white Hat over his Head, and a short gray Coat over like a Horse-man's Coat.

L. C. J. How came you to take such notice of him at that time, as to be able to swear when this was?

Butler. I was call'd presently after for a Witness.

L. C. J. How long after this was it, that you were call'd to be a Witness?

Butler. It was when the Tryals were at the Old Bailey.

L. C. J. Was this the first time you had recollected these Circumstances?

Butler. Yes, my Lord, that was the first time.

L. C. J. Then how came you a Year and an half's time afterwards to remember the precise Month of May, when you did not know you should be call'd to question about it, and yet you cannot remember the time particularly when Otes went to Sea, but take the Compass of a Year or two?

Butler. I guess it was a Year before, I cannot exactly tell.

L. C. J. When you can but guess at the time of such a remarkable Passage, within the Compass of a Year or two, how can you pitch upon the very Month for such a thing as this is, a Year and an half's time after?

Otes. No, my Lord, it was not so long as a Year and an half.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, have patience.

Otes. My Lord, The Records shew, that Ireland's Tryal was the 17th of December 78, and the five Jesuits Tryal was the 15th of June 79.

L. C. J. Then it is a full twelve-month's time and more from the May that he says he saw you at Sir Richard Barker's, to Whitebread's Tryal, in which he was examin'd the first time. Now that which I desire of him is, to give me a reason why he remembers it was in the May was twelve-month before?

Butler. My Lord, The Lady whom I did serve, died in February before, that Year.

L. C. J. But give me some reason of your Remembrance so long after.

Butler. My Lord, I do as well as I can.

L. C. J. Well, what is it?

Butler. My Lady was buried in February, and he comes into the Yard where I was cleaning my Coach, in May following that February, which was May before the Discovery of the Plot. He ask'd me what Alteration was in the Family? I told him my Lady was dead, and the Escutcheon was over the Door for her. He ask'd for Dr. Tongue when he came first in the House.

L. C. J. Why should he ask for Dr. Tongue?

Butler. My Lord, Dr. Tongue lodged there, and he did ask for him: I come to justify the Truth; upon my Salvation what I say is true.

L. C. J. Well, when he ask'd whether Dr. Tongue was within, what said you?

Butler. I told him no; but he went into the Room where Dr. Tongue us'd to lie; but found him not there: So he went out again; that was the same time Mrs. Mayo saw him.

L. C. J. But, Friend, prithee mind what I ask thee, because thou must give me satisfaction how thou com'st to remember this, so as to be able to swear it; for his going to ask for Tongue, or the Escutcheon being over the Door, neither of those can be a Reason for you to remember that this was in May, for the Escutcheon may be up in June, or in July, or in August, or in any other Month after the time you speak of: But how came you to take notice of this Business that it was in May?

Butler. Sir Richard Barker my Master was then sick at Putney, which was in May, tho' I cannot speak to a Day or a Week particularly.

L. C. J. Then prithee let me ask thee this Question, How long had your Master been sick before that?

Butler. He had never been well since my Lady died.

L. C. J. When was it that your Lady died?

Butler. In February before.

L. C. J. How long after that did your Master Sir Richard Barker continue sick?

Butler. Half a Year, I believe.

L. C. J. Why then, suppose your Master fell sick immediately after your Lady died, and he continued sick half a Year after, yet all this while Otes might come during his Sicknes even in the Month of June or July, when 'tis acknowledged he was in Town, and not be here in February, which is testified by a great many Witnesses.

Butler. My Lord, I tell your Lordship the Truth, it was in May.

L. C. J. But how dost thou come to take notice it was in the Month of May, so as to be able to swear it?

Butler. My Lord, I tell your Lordship my Lady was dead, and the Escutcheon was over the Door.

L. C. J. So it might be, tho' he came in June or July, I tell ye.

Butler. My Master was sick at Putney at that time.

L. C. J. How long did he lie sick at Putney?

Butler. He was sick there a Fortnight, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then prithee when did thy Master go to Putney?

Butler. I cannot tell to a Day.

L. C. J. In what Month was it that he went?

Butler. It was the latter end of April, my Lord, as I remember.

L. C. J. How long continued he sick at Putney?

Butler. The matter of a Fortnight.

L. C. J. Was not your Master sick, when your Lady died, at Putney?

Butler. No, he was not there then.

L. C. J. When did he go to Putney, say ye?

Butler. He went not thither till the latter end of April, my Lord.

L. C. J. And did he continue at Putney but a Fortnight?

Butler.

Butler. Not at a time, but he continued going and coming a quarter of a Year.

L. C. J. But this was the first time of his going, was it?

Butler. Yes, as I do remember.

Otes. My Lord, He is my Witness, and I desire I may examine him.

L. C. J. Hold there, Mr. Otes; he is mine too: All the Witnesses are mine to satisfy me in the Truth of the Fact.

Otes. And to satisfy the Jury too, my Lord.

L. C. J. Yes, and to satisfy the Jury too; but I must and will sift out the Truth, for both our Satisfaction.

Otes. My Lord, It is now, come the next Month, six Years ago since the Evidence of this Matter was first given by these Witnesses.

L. C. J. Then, Mr. Otes, I'll come a little rounder to you, and I'll put you into a certain way of clearing this Business. I'll tell you what you shall do; You had a Lodging in Town, as well as Diet, and as well as you did eat at Dr. Barker's sometimes, so you eat and lay sometimes elsewhere. You were here in Town a great while together, if your own Assertions be true; for you were from April till June in Town. Now come and give us account by some Witnesses, if you can, where did you lodge at that time, and where did you diet? For it seems you had but one Meal at Sir Richard Barker's.

Otes. Is that the Question, Sir, here in hand?

L. C. J. Ay indeed is it, and the main one too.

Otes. I beg your Lordship's Pardon if I mistake, but I think that is not now in question; for these St. Omers Men do swear, That I was all April and May at St. Omers: Then if I do prove that in April and May I was not at St. Omers, but here in London, it is Argument good enough against them that their Evidence is false. And indeed, can your Lordship or the Jury expect that I being then engag'd among and for the Papists, and afterwards an Evidence against them to discover their Treasons, can bring any of them to testify for me now? No, they will as certainly forswear themselves, as these young Fellows have all done.

L. C. J. Let me ask you a shorter Question: Did you always lie in a Papist House, all the two Months you say you were here?

Otes. My Lord, I lay at several Houses.

L. C. J. Tell me the Names of those Houses, or any of them.

Otes. It is not to the Point in question here, my Lord.

L. C. J. Yes it is very much; but I perceive it is a Secret, and let any body judge why.

Otes. My Lord, They that have by the Principles of their Religion, Liberty to affirm or deny any thing, and can have Dispensations for the Violations of Oaths and Sacraments, certainly are not to be admitted as Witnesses in such a Case as this.

L. C. J. Talk not to me of Dispensations and I know not what; I speak from a plain demonstrative Proof: Can it be believed that you should be here in England so long, and as they say, publickly, and no Person living see you that we can hear of, but an Old Woman that never saw you, nor knew you before, and a Coachman that tells a wild Story without reason: If you will not tell me where you lay, can you tell me where you did eat all that time?

Vol. III.

Otes. I can tell where I did lie that time.

L. C. J. Do so then. Let us hear it, that will be your best Defence.

Otes. Is that the Point, my Lord, in question?

L. C. J. Ay upon my Word is it the main Point in this Case.

Otes. If it should go upon that Foot, my Lord, it is impossible for me now to prove it; for 'tis well known, I lay sometimes with Mr. Whitebread, and sometimes with Mr. Mico, neither of which can I have to testify for me; and besides, I must insist upon it, these things were in question at Whitebread's Tryal, nor do I believe that Mr. Whitebread, if ask'd at his Death, would have justified, and stood by it, that I was not here then.

L. C. J. Well, This I must certainly say, I cannot help it, but it will stick with me till better answered. I can never be satisfied, that if you were here so long, there should no better Evidence be produced to prove you here.

Otes. My Lord, Nor can I help your Dissatisfaction, but I am to satisfy all that hear me this Day, that it is a very hard Case that is put upon me; I have taken the most effectual Course that I could, to provide for Evidence to make my Defence; and I think, by your Lordship's good Leave, those that I have produc'd, do prove me here in Town in April and May 78. And if your Lordship has done with this Witness, I'll call another.

L. C. J. Well, go on as you will. I tell you what sticks with me.

Otes. Pray call Mr. Philip Page.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Hold, Sir, a little, I would ask these Witnesses a few Questions before they go away. You Butler, Let me ask you, pray, the first time you saw Mr. Otes at the time you speak of, was it in April or May?

L. C. J. He swore it was the beginning of May.

Butler. To the best of my Knowledge it was the beginning of May.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did you tell first, that there was Mr. Otes at that time?

Butler. I told it Mrs. Mayo.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Consider, Friend; what you say now, you are upon your Oath, and consider what you said at the former Tryal, when you were upon your Oath too.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, I desire my Witnesses may be examined without Threatnings.

L. C. J. It is not a Threatning, it is an Admonition not to go beyond the Truth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Be sure you be in the right in what you say, and now I ask you upon your Oath, when was the first time you saw Mr. Otes when he came in that Disguise you speak of?

Butler. I told you it was in May, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How far in May, consider well what you say.

Butler. To the best of my Remembrance, it was the beginning of May.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you think it was within a Week, or the first Ten Days of May?

Butler. I cannot tell that, as well as I remember, it was the beginning of May.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When you saw him first in May, who else, as you remember, was by?

K k k

Butler.

Butler. Mrs. Mayo.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And no body else?

Butler. Yes, One Benjamin Turbet, who is since dead.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But consider your Oath, Friend, once more, and recollect your self, Do you swear positively Mrs. Mayo was by, and did see him at the same time?

Butler. I see her look out of the Window into the Yard, and I believe she did see him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well then, Let us examine her Evidence and yours together, and see how they agree.

Otes. My Lord, These are not Questions tending to satisfy the Jury at all, as to the Point in question.

L. C. J. Are they not, methinks they are, whatsoever you think.

Otes. After six Years time, to ask such poor ignorant People such trifling Questions!

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, be contented, and let the King's Counsel examine the Witnesses.

Otes. My Lord, He says I was here in May, that's enough.

L. C. J. Well, Sir, I know what he says.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you shall hear Mr. Otes, how your Witnesses agree.

L. C. J. Go on, Mr. Solicitor, and do you sit still and be quiet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, I would ask him this Question more, the first time you saw Otes come to Sir Richard Barker's, what Habit, pray you, was he in?

Butler. He was in a Disguise.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, what Disguise?

Butler. He had a white Hat flapping over his Ears; his Hair cut short, close to his Ears, and a grey short Coat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had he never a Perriwig on?

Butler. No, his Hair was cut short to his Ears.

Mr. Hanses. Was he in such a Disguise, that a Man might not ordinarily know him, that had known him before?

Butler. Truly, my Lord, I did not know him when he first came in, till he spoke to me, and asked me, how do you, John? and then I recollected who he was, that it was Mr. Otes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he always in the same Habit, when he came thither?

Butler. The next time he came, he had a Cinnamon-coloured Suit, and a long black Perriwig that was curl'd down thus far, and a black Hat with a green Ribbon and green Cuff-strings about his Wrists.

L. C. J. Did you ever see Otes dine there?

Butler. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. When was that?

Butler. After my Master came home from Putney.

L. C. J. Who was there besides?

Butler. One Sir William Thurrell and Madam Thurrell.

L. C. J. How often did he dine there?

Butler. Several times.

L. C. J. Who else was there?

Butler. My Master and his Daughter.

L. C. J. And who else?

Butler. Mrs. Mayo.

L. C. J. What is become of your Master's Daughter?

Butler. I beg your Pardon for that, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where is she, Man?

Butler. She is at home, I suppose.

L. C. J. What dost thou beg my Pardon for then?

Butler. My Lord, I call to mind she did not dine with them.

L. C. J. Did she dine at any time with him there?

Butler. Yes, I remember several times, but not then.

L. C. J. When did you see your Master's Daughter last?

Butler. I have not seen her this Quarter of this Year.

L. C. J. Where is she now?

Butler. At home at Putney, my Lord, I believe.

L. C. J. And she was several times there when he din'd there?

Butler. Yes, she was at home.

L. C. J. Did Mrs. Mayo see him at Dinner there?

Butler. Yes, I believe she did.

L. C. J. How often did he dine there about this time you speak of?

Butler. Several times.

L. C. J. Do you think seven times?

Butler. I do think he might have din'd there seven times.

L. C. J. Did he more than seven times do you think?

Butler. I cannot number how many times it was.

L. C. J. Now come in Mrs. Mayo again.

Mrs. Mayo. Here I am, my Lord.

L. C. J. Mrs. Mayo, Give me leave to ask you a Question or two.

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, my Lord, what you please.

L. C. J. You say (if I do not mis-remember; if I do, I beg your Pardon, and you'll correct me) a Week in May was the first time you saw Mr. Otes, and that was at Sir Richard Barker's.

Mrs. Mayo. I think it might be about the beginning of May.

L. C. J. Had he been in the House before?

Mrs. Mayo. Not at that time that I know of, but as they told me.

L. C. J. Who told you?

Mrs. Mayo. That Coach-man there John Butler, and one Benjamin who liv'd in the House.

L. C. J. Then you did not see him the first time he came; what say you, Butler?

Butler. She did see him out of the Window in the Yard.

L. C. J. Well, let that pass then, come I'll ask you another Question upon your Oath, How often have you seen him dine there?

Mrs. Mayo. I saw him dine that time that I spoke of.

L. C. J. Did not he dine there above once?

Mrs. Mayo. No, he did not.

L. C. J. What say you Butler?

Butler. He did dine there several times with them.

L. C. J. Then one of you two must be mistaken, I am sure.

Otes. My Lord, If your Lordship would please to give me leave to speak, I would set it right.

L. C. J. Good Sir, Let them set themselves right if they can, we need none of your Instructions.

Otes.

Otes. My Lord, I desire——

L. C. J. Why, how now; pray, Sir, be at quiet. Mrs. Mayo, Pray what Habit had Otes when you saw him first?

Mrs. Mayo. He was in a grey Hat and a grey Coat.

L. C. J. Was his Hair short or long?

Mrs. Mayo. He had on a kind of a short Wigg.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You are sure it was a Wigg.

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, a kind of a brown Perriwig.

L. C. J. And he says his Hair was cut short to his Ears, Otes. These things are very lean stuff to perjure a Witness upon.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When he came the second time what Cloaths had he on?

Mrs. Mayo. Afterwards he came in black Cloaths and a long Perriwig.

Mr. Hanfes. What coloured Perriwig was that, a black or a white one?

Mrs. Mayo. Not a black, but a brown.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say it was long?

Mrs. Mayo. Longer than his other, yet not very long neither.

L. C. J. Here are I know not how many Contradictions in these Witnesses Testimonies.

Otes. Truly, my Lord, I do not find in the Examination of the St. Omers Witnesses, you were so strict, or bore half so hard upon them, as you do upon my Witnesses; what does it signify, my Lord, whether the Wigg were long or short, black or brown?

L. C. J. We have no other way to detect Perjuries, but by these Circumstances; and 'tis the Duty of a Judge to enquire into all Particulars; as in a Controversy about Words, were they spoken in Latin or in English, and so to all Places and Postures of sitting, riding, or the like; as you know the Perjury of the Elders in the Case of Susanna, was by their different Testimony in particular Circumstances discovered.

Otes. My Lord, I will ask her but one short Question, by the Oath you have taken, Mrs. Mayo, to speak the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, as you expect the Face of God with Comfort in another World; Did you see me at Sir Richard Barker's at any time in May 78. the May before the Plot was discovered? For that is the main Question.

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, I did, and I speak nothing here, but what I speak as in the Presence of the Lord.

L. C. J. Prithee, Woman, dost thou think we ask thee any thing that we think thou dost not speak in the Presence of the Lord; we are all of us in the Presence of the Lord always.

Mrs. Mayo. And shall answer before him for all that we have done and said, all of us, the proudest and the greatest here.

L. C. J. But I would not have so much to answer for as thou hast in this Business for all the World.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, we have done with her now, she may go away.

L. C. J. Where does she live now?

Cryer. Mrs. Mayo, Where do you live now?

Mrs. Mayo. In Leaden-ball-street, my Lord.

L. C. J. When did you see Sir Richard Barker's Daughter?

Mrs. Mayo. About a Fortnight ago.

L. C. J. Where?

Mrs. Mayo. In Barbican in London.

L. C. J. Do you live with Sir Richard Barker now?

Mrs. Mayo. I do not live with him now.

L. C. J. Did his Daughter use to be at the Table at Dinner?

Mrs. Mayo. She was often in the Country, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did she eat at his Table at that time when Otes was there?

Mrs. Mayo. I am not able to say whether she did or not; she used to be in Wales at Sir Thomas Middleton's sometimes, and with Madam Thurrell her Aunt, who was her Mother's Sister, and her two Daughters.

L. C. J. In Wales dost thou say, where?

Mrs. Mayo. My Lord, In your own Country, at one Dr. Cocket's; I know your Lordship, tho' your Lordship does not know me.

L. C. J. I am very glad of it, good Woman; but prithee did ever Sir Richard Barker dine with Mr. Otes?

Mrs. Mayo. I cannot say he did; he went to and fro.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more Witnesses?

Otes. Cryer, Call Philip Page.

Cryer. Here he is, Sir.

Otes. Pray swear him. (Which was done.) Pray be pleased to give my Lord and the Jury the best account you can of my being in Town. But, Mr. Page, the Question that I first ask you, is whether I was here in April or May, and in what Year it was that you did see me at your Master's House?

L. C. J. When did you see Mr. Otes at your Master's House? You mean Sir Richard Barker to be his Master, I suppose?

Otes. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What do you say to it?

Page. Truly, I cannot be positive to the Year, but to the best of my remembrance it was 78.

Otes. Pray tell my Lord and the Jury some Circumstances in that Year that did happen to you, that makes you believe it was 78.

Page. Sir, I'll give you the best Satisfaction I can to the best of my Knowledge; he came to Sir Richard Barker's one Evening, and there he enquired for Dr. Tongue: He was in a Disguise, in a light-coloured Coat, something like to Frize, but it was not Frize; the Term that they give it, I cannot so readily tell. He had his Hair cut short almost to his Ears, and he had a broad-brim'd Hat on, and a small Stick in his Hand, walking melancholly about the Hall: I happening to be the first body he met with, as I suppose, he asked me if Dr. Tongue was within; I told him no, I had not seen him of a considerable time: He then asked me where Sir Richard Barker was? I told him he was ill now at Putney; says he, when will he be here? I told him I could not tell.

L. C. J. Did he see any body there but you?

Page. That I cannot tell, my Lord; not that I know of.

L. C. J. What time of the Year was it?

Mr. At. Gen. And what Month?

Page. What Year and what Month it was, I am not able to say, my Lord.

L. C. J. What became of him after that?

Page.

Page. He went out of our Gates then, Sir; he was walking up and down melancholly, and not finding any one, as I suppose, to answer him, he continued walking in the Patient's Hall, where they used to wait on Sir Richard Barker, that came to discourse with him about Physick; and upon my Answer to his Question he went away.

L. C. J. Did you ever see him any other time near to that time?

Page. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Did you use to wait on Table?

Page. No, I did not.

L. C. J. What Service were you then engaged in at Sir Richard Barker's?

Page. I made up the Physick, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you not acquaint the Coachman, nor Mrs. Mayo, nor Sir Richard Barker with it?

Page. I think Sir Richard Barker was in Town soon after, and I did acquaint him with it.

Otes. But can't you tell what time this is, Sir?

Page. I can say no other than I have said; I believe it was in 78.

L. C. J. Was this in June, July, or May, or when?

Page. I cannot say punctually what Month it was, my Lord; but to the best of my Knowledge and Remembrance, it was in the beginning of May.

Otes. Had not your Master a Patient at Islington at that time, that was sick of a Fever?

Page. Yes, he had.

Mr. Just. Withins. Why, would Mr. Otes have given the Patient Physick?

Page. No, my Lord, but 'twas about that time that the Patient was under my Master's Cure.

Otes. Indeed the St. Omers Men do swear thorough-flitch, but my honest Witnesses are cautious, it being so long ago; and he that is a Minister of the Church of England (as they say) speaks to a very day, upon a much slighter Circumstance: Pray call Mr. William Walker.

Cryer. Here he is.

Otes. Swear him. (Which was done.) Be pleased, Walker, to give my Lord to understand, when 'twas you saw me here in London in Disguise, and when it was you swore six Years ago at the Old Bailey, that you saw me here in London: Sir, the time in Controversy is this: I came here to discover a Plot of the Papists against the King's Life and the Religion, and I swore—

L. C. J. You must not ask Questions in that manner. It is properest for you to propose your Questions to the Court, and they will ask the Witnesses.

Otes. Then I will not ask him, but propose it to your Lordship.

L. C. J. Ay, propose what Questions you please, and if they are fair, I'll ask them.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I would ask Mr. Walker this Question; when 'twas he met me with a Disguise, in what Year and what Month?

Mr. Walker. My Lord, I have been interrogated in former times upon this Point, six or seven Years ago, and I do confess I did see the Man, and met him between St. Martin's lane and Leicester-fields; and truly, my Lord, I think I may say it was my Unhappiness to meet with him; for I have had a great deal of Trouble by it since, Subpœna upon Subpœna, Trouble after Trouble, that I am even weary of it; for I am an old Man: But I do say I did meet him at that end of the Town, between St. Martin's-lane and Leicester-fields in a strange Disguise; he was just like a Vagrant, a very Rascal, and that's true, I believe, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know him before?

Mr. Walker. Yes, or I had not known him then.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Walker. My Lord, I'll tell you; my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs, when I was at the Old Bailey, asked me if I knew what time it was I saw him thus; said I, my Lord, 'tis almost a Year and an half since I saw him; and I being an old Man, little thought it worth the while to lay up the particular time in my Memory; but I'll cast about in my Thoughts to make the best Conjecture I can; for now I will not be upon my Oath, it being but Conjecture.

L. C. J. But now you are upon your Oath, remember that, Man.

Mr. Walker. My Lord, I am speaking what I said to the Court at that time.

L. C. J. Pray do not tell us an old tedious Story of the Questions and Answers in the Old Bailey, but mind what is said to you here, my Question is now, what time you saw Otes disguised between St. Martin's-lane and Leicester-fields, as you say you did.

Mr. Walker. My Lord, I cannot prescribe the time; but I'll guess as near as I can with the best probability, and that is, upon this Circumstance; when I went forward into Leicester-fields, in the Court before the House, I saw the Elm-Trees budded forth as big as an Hazle Nut; so that I did conjecture by that Token, it might be between Lady-day and the latter end of April; that was the time as near as I could guess.

L. C. J. In what Year was it?

Mr. Walker. I cannot very well tell what Year it was.

L. C. J. Was it in 77 or 78?

Mr. Walker. Truly, my Lord, I never thought it worth so much taking notice of, to fix the particular time in my Memory.

Otes. Whether was it that Year the Plot was discovered, or the Michaelmas following?

Mr. Walker. I cannot tell when the Plot was discovered, or whether it be found out yet or no?

Otes. But was it the Year before you were examined?

Mr. Walker. To answer you, Mr. Otes, when it was exactly, I cannot say; truly I would give you the best Satisfaction I could, and do you as much Right as I would do my self; I think if that time when I was examined, were in 77 or 78, it was near a Year and a quarter before I did see you.

L. C. J. Well; what can you make of this?

Otes. 'Tis not to be supposed he is a very willing Witness, but yet he says, 'twas a Year and a quarter before the Tryal in which he was examined, which must be in April 78.

L. C. J. I would know this Question of you: Were you present at the Old Bailey, when the five Jesuits were tryed?

Mr. Walker. I was there, my Lord.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Were you at any Tryal but one ?

Mr. Walker. I was not Examined at any time but one.

L. C. J. Have you any more Questions to ask him ?

Mr. Walker. My Lord Chief Justice that then was, did ask me, if I knew any of the Prisoners at the Bar, and I look'd upon all of them, and I said I knew not either of them.

Otes. Pray my Lord, ask him whether he was not produc'd, when the St. Omers Men were produc'd, and gave his Evidence as to my being in Town at that time ?

L. C. J. He hears the Question, let him answer it ?

Mr. Walker. I am not able to answer you, because you put several Questions together ; but this I say, I was never Examined but once, though I have been Subpœna'd often, to my great torment and trouble.

Otes. Did you give Evidence at that Tryal, that you saw me in April 78 ?

Mr. Walker. I testified that I saw you, and by such Circumstances, it must be about such a time as well as I could suggest ; but I could not, nor cannot speak positively.

Otes. Now my Lord, I shall go on to another part of my Evidence, and call some other Witnesses, and first of all, I come to Mr. Serjeant Maynard, and I desire he may be sworn. [Which was done.]

L. C. J. What do you ask my Brother, Maynard ?

Otes. I call Mr. Serjeant Maynard to give an Account of the Proceedings of the House of Commons upon my Discovery of the Popish Plot.

L. C. J. We will not admit that to be any Evidence at all ; nor can it be by Law.

Otes. My Lord, Mr. Serjeant Maynard was one of the Committee of the House of Commons that managed the Impeachment, and can give an Account of the Evidence and Records that were produced at the Tryal of the late Viscount Stafford.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. I know nothing truly, nor can remember any thing of it now.

L. C. J. He says, he remembers nothing.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. If Mr. Otes had told me before hand, when he Subpœna'd me, what time, and what particular things he would have Examined me to, probably if I was there, I have Notes that I then took, but I can never swear to my Memory, for any Cause so long ago.

Otes. My Lord, I am very sorry Mr. Serjeant Maynard's Age should so impair his Memory.

L. C. J. I dare say, you are not more sorry than he is for his Age.

Otes. Well, my Lord, I cannot help it : Then I desire Mr. Blaney may be ask'd whether he has his Notes of my Lord Stafford's Tryal ?

Mr. Blaney. No, my Lord, I have them not here ; Mr. Otes by his Ticket of his Subpœna, desir'd only the Notes of Ireland, Whitebread and Langborn's Tryal.

L. C. J. But I must tell you, Mr. Otes, if those Notes were here, they could be of no use to you without the Record of my Lord Stafford's Attainder ; if you ask any thing upon another Tryal, you must produce first the Record of that Tryal, and then you may examine to what was given in Evidence at the Tryal.

Otes. My Lord, it is of Record in the House of Lords.

L. C. J. But that we are not to take notice of, without the Record be brought in Evidence before us : We must go according to the course of Law in all Cases.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I must betake my self to another Part of my Defence, and that is to prove the frequent Attempts made to baffle the Discovery of this Popish Plot, and to stifle the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, and to sling it upon a Protestant Peer.

L. C. J. But that is no Evidence neither.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Surely that is very Collateral Evidence.

L. C. J. Nay, it is no Evidence at all in this Case ; we must not admit of any such Evidence to be given.

Otes. Good my Lord, if this had not been true, which was sworn by Witnesses that had discovered the Plot, why should these Men appear to suborn Witnesses (and they have been Convicted of Subornation, and endeavouring) to baffle the Discovery, particularly as to Justice Godfrey's Death.

L. C. J. Mr. Otes. I must keep you to Evidence that is proper ; we are upon our Oaths to go according to Law, and the Jury are upon their Oaths to Try this Cause according to their Evidence ; and we are bound to give them this Advice in Point of Law, that nothing must weigh, or have any Consideration with them, that you offer, if it be not legal and proper Evidence : If you can say and prove that any of the Witnesses that have been produc'd this Day against you, have been tamper'd with ; or that they have tamper'd with any of the former Evidence, that is a good Evidence against them ; but it must not be by any means admitted that the time of the Court be taken up, or the Jury enveigled by that which has not a natural tendency to the Business before us.

Otes. But if your Lordship please, this Consult in April 78. was discovered to the House of Commons, among the other parts of the Discovery of the Treasons of several Noble Men and Gentlemen : Now upon the Discovery of the Plot, I would desire that I might give in Proof the Proceedings of the House of Commons.

L. C. J. No, no, you cannot.

Otes. Pray my Lord, is not the Journal of this House of Commons Evidence ?

L. C. J. No, we say it is not at all.

Otes. Is that the Opinion of the whole Court, my Lord ?

L. C. J. Yes, undoubtedly, there is no Question of it.

Otes. Is any Record of the House of Lords Evidence ?

L. C. J. Yes, I tell you it is, and that because it is a Record ; but there is a vast difference between the Records of the House of Lords, and the Journals of the House of Commons.

Otes. The Journals have been delivered in as Evidence before now.

L. C. J. I cannot tell what they have been, but I am sure they ought not to be, and whatever they have been elsewhere, they cannot be here ; and I'll tell you a plain reason for it, because they have not so much Power in the House of Commons as to give an Oath : But the House of Peers is a Court of Record, and therefore their Proceedings are Evidence as the Proceedings of the Kings Bench here ; or any Court of Record are.

Otes. Then my Lord, if that part of my Evidence be over-rul'd ; before I come to sum up my Evidence, I desire to offer this thing. My Lord, I can produce several Members of the House of Commons in the several Parliaments, that can remember how they proceeded against the Lords in the Tower, and the Popish Traitors upon my Discovery, and what Credit I had in the House of Commons ; Will that be Evidence, pray my Lord ?

L. C. J. No, it will not, if you will produce any one that you told this to before the publick Discovery, that may be Evidence such as it is, and is often allow'd ; but what the House of Commons did upon the Discovery, that's not any Evidence at all.

Otes. Then my Lord, suppose I can prove, that I gave an early and timely Account to any of the House of Lords of this Conspiracy, and did acquaint them with the Consult in April as part of it ; I desire to know whether in producing any of those Lords, I shall give that which is Evidence ?

L. C. J. Call whom you will that you told any thing to, that is a sort of Evidence, I tell you ?

Otes. Then I call my Lord of Devonshire.

L. C. J. Here is my Lord of Devonshire.

Otes. My Lord, I beg your Pardon for the trouble I put your Lordship to ; but your Lordship sees the necessity of it : It is for the justification of the Truth, to which I will give my Blood for a Seal if I be call'd to it.

L. C. J. My Lord of Devonshire, your Lordship must be sworn. [Which was done.]

Otes. Will your Lordship please to acquaint the Court and the Jury (your Lordship being at that time a Member of the Commons House) what Account I gave there of this particular Consult (to keep to that Point that is here in question) before the Court this Day, and with what Credit I was received in all these Parliaments ; for my Credit and the Credit of the Parliament is now in question.

Earl of Devonshire. My Lord, all I can say to it is this ; you Mr. Otes gave a long Account of a Consult and Conspiracy among the Jesuits : But I cannot remember any Particular, it is so long ago.

L. C. J. Every body knows this, you gave a long Narrative into the House of Commons and House of Lords too.

Otes. Ay, and it was a true one ; but my Lord of Devonshire, I desire your Lordship would be pleased to give the Court and the Jury an Account, with what Credit I was received in those three Parliaments your Lordship sat as Member in.

Earl of Devonshire. I remember that the two Westminster Parliaments after the long Parliament, were so satisfied with the Discovery, that they passed a Vote in the House of Commons——

L. C. J. The Votes of the House of Commons are no Evidence at all.

Otes. They show what Opinion the Parliament was of.

L. C. J. Many Votes that have been made of late, I hope will neither be Evidence for, nor put in practice again.

Earl of Devonshire. My Lord, it is well known to all the World the Vote I speak of.

L. C. J. Nay, my Lord, I speak not to your Lordship ; for we all know those Votes that I speak of were not according to your Lordship's Mind : But we only say thus in general, that because the House of Commons cannot give an Oath, therefore what is done there, is not an Evidence here, or in any Court of Record.

Otes. But my Lord, that I must urge, I do perceive that in the time of Parliament, and during the Sitting of the House of Commons, Votes have been brought in as Bars to the Proceedings of Inferior Courts ; and this Court does not look upon it self as Superior to the Great Court of Parliament, and then if they may be brought——

L. C. J. Which they cannot be, nor never were, nor I am sure ought to be ; nor I hope never will be as long as there is any Justice in the Nation.

Otes. But my Lord, you will allow the Records of the House of Lords to be Evidence ?

L. C. J. Yes, I tell you, I will, and for that reason, because they are Records out of a Court of Record : An Order of Court Baron is no Evidence, because it is no Court of Record ; but a Judgment of a Court Leet is Evidence, because it is a Court of Record ; and there's the difference.

Otes. My Lord, I call in the next place my Lord of Anglesey, if he be in Court.

L. C. J. No, he is not here.

Otes. Pray will you give me leave to call my Lord Keeper then ?

L. C. J. See in the Court of Chancery, whether my Lord Keeper be there.

Cryer. No, my Lord, he is not ; he is gone.

Otes. He was Subpœna'd, my Lord, and I can have Affidavit made of it : He was a material Witness for me.

L. C. J. I cannot help it ; he is not here.

Otes. Pray call my Lord Chief Baron.

L. C. J. Go one of you into the Exchequer, and see if my Lord Chief Baron be there, and tell him, Mr. Otes calls for him as a Witness.

Otes. And Mr. Justice Levins.

Cryer. The Courts are both up ; and they are all gone.

Otes. They were subpœna'd I am sure to be here ; well, go and see, whether they are or no.

L. C. J. In the mean time do you call some other Witnesses.

Otes. I call my Lord Chief Justice Jones.

L. C. J. The Cryer is gone to look for the Judges.

Otes. Then I call my Lord of Clare.

L. C. J. Here is my Lord of Clare.

Earl of Clare. My Lord I can remember nothing, it is so long time ago.

L. C. J. My Lord of Clare says, he can remember nothing.

Otes. I only call my Lord of Clare to ask him one Question which I hope his Lordship will remember.

L. C. J. Swear my Lord of Clare. [Which was done.]

Well, what is it you ask my Lord ?

Otes. My Lord of Clare, the Question I would ask your Lordship is, with what Credit I was received in the House of Lords upon my Discovery ; and that you will to the best of your Memory, give my Lord and the Jury an Account, how the House of Peers proceeded upon my Evidence ?

Earl of Clare. Truly, my Lord, I cannot give any Account ; it is of so long standing.

Otes.

Otes. It is a great while ago, my Lord, and therefore it is hard measure that I must be brought to this Tryal so long after.

L. C. J. If it be a long time, we cannot help it: We cannot force People to prosecute sooner than they will do.

Otes. I desire Mr. Baron Gregory may be called.

L. C. J. He is not here, but see and call my Brother Gregory; I hear they are altogether in the Treasury.

Otes. Then I call Mr. Williams that was Speaker in the House of Commons.

L. C. J. Here is Mr. Williams. [He was sworn.]

Otes. I desire, Mr. Williams, because you were then Speaker of the Commons House of Parliament, you would be pleased to tell what you remember concerning the Credit I received in that Parliament in which you were Speaker, upon the Discovery I made of the Popish Plot; and particularly as to the Consult of Jesuits to kill the late King in the Month of April 78?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, my Memory is never very good; but especially in a Case that is at such a distance of time, and which consists of so many Particulars as this, I mean Mr. Otes's Discovery. But this my Lord I do remember; he was examin'd at the Bar of the House of Commons, and gave a long Account: But it is more than any Man can do to tell every Particular that is said in that House.

L. C. J. Was he upon his Oath, Mr. Williams, at the Bar of the House of Commons?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, he was as other Men are that are examin'd in the House of Commons.

L. C. J. We all know it could not be upon Oath, they have not Power to give an Oath.

Mr. Williams. What Reputation he was of, I cannot say so well as what their Proceedings did testify.

L. C. J. Nor in case they did believe him never so much, is it any thing to this Question, which is, whether he swore true or false at Ireland's Tryal?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, when a Person is brought to the Bar, there to be a Witness in any Cause, every body is silent, and the Witness is heard what he has to say; and so was Mr. Otes: When he had done he withdrew; but what the Opinion of the House was upon it, I must submit to their Votes and Resolutions.

L. C. J. Which you know, Mr. Williams, are no Evidence.

Mr. Williams. That I must submit to the Court.

Otes. I desire my Lord of Clare would be pleased to tell, if he remembers, what Credit the House of Lords gave me upon my Discovery?

Earl of Clare. My Lord, I do not well hear Mr. Otes's Question.

Otes. My Lord, my Question is this, when I was brought to the Bar of the Lords House, whether I did not receive the Thanks of the Lords House for my Discovery?

Earl of Clare. Truly, Sir, at the beginning of the Discovery of the Popish Plot, I was not in Town, nor in the House.

L. C. J. But now Mr. Otes I hope you are satisfied by the Answer that is given by your own Witness, that what is done in the House of Commons, is no Evidence; and I would have you remember that is the Reason of it, because they are no Court of Record, and because they cannot so much as give an Oath.

Otes. My Lord, I see my Lord of Huntingdon is here; and though I did not Subpœna his Lordship, nor designed to have troubled him; yet being here, I desire his Lordship would give an Account what Credit I had in the House of Lords upon my Discovery.

L. C. J. Swear my Lord of Huntingdon. [Which was done.]

Earl of Huntingdon. I do believe my Lord, Mr. Otes's Discovery found a good reception in the House of the Lords; but it was grounded upon the Opinion, that what he said was true, and that he was an honest Man: For so the House then accounted him to be; and upon this it was their Lordships gave Credit to his Testimony; and indeed had the Matter been true, it was of high Importance to have it thoroughly examined: But since that time it being apparent there were so many, and great Contradictions, Falsities, and Perjuries in his Evidence; upon which so much innocent Blood hath been shed, I believe a great many Persons who were concerned in the Tryals of those unfortunate Men, are heartily afflicted and sorry for their share in it: And I do believe most of the House of Peers have altered their Opinion, as to this Man's Credit; and look upon his Evidence as I do, to be very false.

L. C. J. Do you hear him, Mr. Otes?

Otes. No, my Lord, I do not very well.

L. C. J. Then my Lord of Huntingdon turn your Face to the Jury; and say what you said to us over again.

Which his Lordship did to the same Effect.

Otes. Very well, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Withins. There's your Credit with the House of Lords, Mr. Otes.

Otes. My Lord, I call'd you in to answer my Question, as to somewhat that is past, and to give your Judgment how you are inclined to believe now.

L. C. J. Nay, but with your Favour, it was to declare what Opinion the House of Lords had of you; and he says very well, and that this is in truth the same Answer that must be given, for the Judges and the Juries that try'd the People upon your Evidence: Says my Lord of Huntingdon at first, truly I did believe Mr. Otes did swear true, and he had Credit with me, and so he had with others; but now upon further Examination into Things, and in process of time Discoveries have been made of the Truth, and that what he swore is false; so that now I believe in my Conscience he is actually forsworn, and has drawn innocent Blood upon the Nation; and no body will believe a Word he says.

Otes. Well, my Lord, I have done with my Lord of Huntingdon.

Mr. Just. Withins. And he has done with you, as I perceive.

L. C. J. Yes, truly, methinks ye shake hands, and part very fairly.

Mr. Just. Holloway. There's my Lord Chief Baron; what say you to him, Mr. Otes?

L. C. J. Is my Lord Chief Baron sworn?

Cryer. Yes, my Lord, he is.

L. C. J. Then what do you ask him?

Otes. My Lord, I call'd your Lordship, because your Lordship sat as a Commissioner of Oyer and Terminer in the Old Bailey, at Ireland, Whitebread and Langborn's Tryals; and that which I call your Lordship for, is to give an account to my Lord and the Jury, of the Satisfaction your Lordship received concerning the Fulness and Fairness of the Evidence then deliver'd by me in those Tryals?

L. C. Baron. My Lord, I cannot charge my Memory with it.

L. C. J. He says he cannot remember.

L. C. Baron. No, not in particular; but in general I remember there were a great many Persons that gave Evidence in those Tryals on the one side and the other: There were a great many Persons that came from St. Omers, that gave Evidence there of Mr. Otes being at St. Omers, when he said he was in Town.

Otes. And what Credit were they of at that time, pray, my Lord?

L. C. Baron. I think they were Persons of very good Credit; they were Gentlemen of good Families many of them.

Otes. Did the Jury believe them at that time?

L. C. Baron. I cannot tell what the Jury did.

L. C. J. Nor is it any matter at all what they did: But I would ask you, my Lord, but one Question: Have you heard this Evidence that has been given here to day?

L. C. Baron. No, my Lord, I have not.

L. C. J. If you had, I would then have ask'd you, whether you believe him now or not?

L. C. Baron. Truly, my Lord, I never had any great Faith in him, I do assure you, as to my self.

Mr. Just. Withins. You hear what he says, Mr. Otes; you had never any great Credit with him.

Otes. My Lord, I am not at all concern'd at this; I value my self more upon my own Innocency and Integrity, than any Man's good or bad Opinion whatsoever.

L. C. J. Ah! your Innocency is very great!

Otes. Then, my Lord, I will conclude my Evidence.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, Before Mr. Otes goes to sum up his Evidence, we have some other Evidence to give.

L. C. J. What say you, Mr. Otes? Will you call any other Witnesses to this point?

Otes. My Lord, If they bring any other Evidence, I hope I may have my turn to answer it.

L. C. J. Ay, truly, if they bring any new Evidence that you have not applied to already, God forbid that you should not be heard; but if it only gives an Answer to the Evidence that has been given, then you must not retort on them; for they are to have the last Word; but it is not fit withal, that you should be denied any thing that is necessary or really of advantage to you.

Otes. If they offer any new Evidence to my Disreputation, the Question is, whether I may have a time allotted me to make my Defence against that Evidence?

L. C. J. Ay, ay, in God's Name by all means.

Mr. At. Gen. This is the usual Method of Proceedings; but I would know if Mr. Otes has any more Witnesses to examine to this Point, that he has examin'd to already?

Otes. My Lord, I think I have no further Evidence at present, till I hear what they further say.

Mr. At. Gen. Then may it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury——

Otes. I hope when your Lordship summs up the Evidence, you'll remember what has been said by the Witnesses.

L. C. J. You may assure your self, I will remember whatsoever has been said on the one side and t'other, as near as I can: The Gentlemen of the Jury are Men of Understanding, and I see they take Notes, and I'll give them all the Assistance I can.

Otes. Truly, my Lord, I have some more Witnesses to the same purpose, if your Lordship please to spare time to hear them.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, We sit here to hear the Witnesses, call whom you will.

Otes. Is my Lord Lovelace here?

L. C. J. I cannot tell, I do not see him here; but you did call my Brother Gregory, there he is, what say you to him?

Otes. Mr. Baron Gregory was Speaker of the House of Commons in one of the Westminster Parliaments.

L. C. J. Swear my Brother Gregory.

[Which was done.]

Otes. I desire your Honour would be pleased to give this Court and the Jury an account, you being Speaker of the House of Commons, what Credit I received there in that House upon my Discovery of the Popish Plot?

Mr. Bar. Gregory. My Lord, That is a pretty general Question, it is not possible for me to remember the Proceedings in the House of Commons so long ago.

L. C. J. But, Brother, I tell you what he means by it: He would have you to answer this Question, whether he was of good Credit in the House of Commons or not?

Mr. Bar. Gregory. I know not what Answer to make about the Credit he there had; any Member of the House of Commons may give as good and better an account in that Matter than I; and truly I do not remember that Mr. Otes was before the Bar of the House when I was Speaker: I believe it was before I was Speaker, that he was examined at the Commons Bar.

L. C. J. Well, he can remember nothing of it.

Otes. Is my Lord Lovelace there?

Cryer. He has been called, but he is not here.

Otes. Call my Lord of Stamford.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Call Sir Francis Winnington.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Call Silas Titus, Esq;

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Call Sir George Treby.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Call Sir Francis Pemberton: These have been all subpoena'd.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Is my Lord Bishop of London?

L. C. J. Here is my Lord Bishop of London, pray swear my Lord Bishop of London.

[Which was done]

Otes. I beg your Lordship, if you can, would give an account of your Remembrance in this Matter: Your Lordship was often in Committees of the House of Peers about this Business, and from first to last you were in the Committee for further Examination of the Popish Plot; and you were not only of the Committee, but you also sat as a Baron in the House. I humbly beg your Lordship would please to tell as far as you can charge your Memory, what Reputation I had in the House of Lords, where I was upon my Oath, and in particular, whether your Lordship remembers that I received the Thanks of the House for the Service I had done for the King and Kingdom in the Discovery.

Mr. Just. Holloway. It is a long Question, my Lord.

L. B. of London. It is so, my Lord; but my Answer will be very short: For it is a very little I can remember after so great a distance of Time, and the Transactions have been publick; nor can I acquaint the Court with any thing, but what is known already; and that is this, I remember that the Plot was discovered by him, and his Discovery was receiv'd as Evidence at the Bar of the House of Lords, and believ'd, and the Thanks of the House were given him at that time for it.

L. C. J. There's Sir George Treby, What do you ask him? But first let him be sworn.

[Which was done.]

Otes. Pray be pleas'd to ask Sir George Treby, who was Chair-man of the Committee of Secrecy, and was Manager in the Tryal of the Lord Viscount Stafford, that he will be pleas'd to tell what Credit I had in both Houses upon that Tryal.

L. C. J. I told you before, you must urge nothing of that Tryal, unless you have the Record here.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I desire Sir George may give an account what he knows of the Correspondencies between Mr. Coleman and the See of Rome?

L. C. J. No, that will not be any Evidence at all in this Case; for that is not at all here in question.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I desire Sir George Treby may speak what he knows of my Credit in the House of Commons.

L. C. J. Ay, what says he to that?

Sir George Treby. My Lord, I can answer for nothing but my own Judgment; I cannot tell what Credit he had with any particular Member of the House of Commons; I do remember indeed, he was there several times at the Bar, but not upon Oath, but as others usually are there; and concerning the Discovery, there was a Vote all the Kingdom knows of, that they were satisfied there was a Plot, but whether that Vote was grounded altogether upon his Evidence, or how far upon his Evidence, I cannot tell, nor what any Man thought of it besides my self.

Otes. I desire Mr. Serj. Pemberton might be call'd again.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Then pray call Sir William Dolben.

Cryer. He is not here neither.

Vol. III.

Otes. Then I call Sir Edward Atkins.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Call Mr. Richard White.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. My Lord, These were all subpoena'd, but they will not come; they are frighted away.

L. C. J. We know nothing of that, they may come if they will.

Otes. Call Mr. Thomas Cox.

Cryer. He is not here; but here is Mr. White.

Otes. I pray he may be sworn. [Which was done.] I desire to know of him, whether he were not a Jury man upon the Tryals of Ireland and Whitebread?

Mr. White. No, I was not.

Otes. Then I am mistaken, I beg your Pardon for this Trouble.

L. C. J. Well, there's my Brother Dolben come now. What say you to him? Swear my Brother Dolben.

[Which was done.]

Otes. May it please you, Sir William Dolben, you sat as a Judge upon the Tryals of Mr. Ireland, Mr. Whitebread, and Mr. Langborn; and I call you, Sir William Dolben, to give an account to my Lord and the Jury, what Credit my Evidence had at those Tryals, and how the Jury was satisfied with it.

L. C. J. There is the Verdict, Man, that finds the Persons you speak of guilty.

Otes. If that be Evidence enough, I am satisfied, my Lord.

L. C. J. Is not that better than his Opinion to shew how the Jury was satisfied? Ay, certainly: Better than the Opinion of all the Twelve Judges; for that point they would not have Convicted them, except they had been satisfied with the Evidence.

Sir William Dolben. Have you done with me, Sir?

Otes. I have, Sir.

L. C. J. Have you called all your Witnesses, or will you call any more?

Otes. No, my Lord, I will call no more at present.

Mr. At. Gen. Then, my Lord, we'll go on with another Part of our Evidence. Gentlemen, you see Dr. Otes, to support his Credit, has given two sorts of Evidence; the one is, some Records of Tryals at the Old Bailey, wherein he had the good hap to be believed; the other is, several noble Persons, and other Gentlemen, as to the Credit he has had given to his Evidence before. What they have said I shall not meddle with at all at this time, but leave the Observations that are to be made thereupon, till we come to summ up the Evidence for the King. But as to the first part of his Evidence, that is, as to the Records produced, and the Verdicts therein given, and the Opinions of the Judges, we have this to say in point of Evidence as an Answer. 1. We shall produce to you several Records, wherein he has not been believed; as that of Sir George Wakeman, and my Lord Castlemain; and not only so, but we shall actually prove that he was perjur'd in them; that what he swore against them was utterly false, and you will hear this was not the first time that he had sworn false; for in an Accusation that he gave at a Tryal at Hastings, we shall prove he swore Buggery upon a Person which was prov'd false.

Otes. Can you produce any such Record, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, we shall.

L. C. J. Do not interrupt the King's Counsel; let them go on; you shall be heard quietly in your time.

Mr. Hanfes. Nay, Mr. Otes need not be so hasty; as to ask for the Records, by degrees we shall produce Records enough against him.

Mr. At. Gen. We shall prove also by the Journals of the Lords House, that he did forswear himself; for after he had there made a long Narrative of the Plot, being ask'd whether he had any more to accuse, than those Persons that he had nam'd, and this upon his Oath; he did there swear that he had no more Persons to accuse.

Otes. That were Members of that House, it was.

L. C. J. Sir, You must be quiet till they have done.

Mr. At. Gen. But soon after he bethought himself, and accuses the Queen and His Royal Highness the Duke, our now present Sovereign of being in the Plot.

Otes. What Plot did I accuse them of?

L. C. J. Nay, you must sit down and be quiet; how now, will you not let the King's Counsel speak? You were heard quietly, and so shall they be too.

Otes. Well, my Lord, I will be quiet.

Mr. At. Gen. These things, my Lord, will shew of what Credit he was of at that time: Another thing we say to these Records, is this; There were two other Witnesses, Mr. Clay and Mr. Smith, besides those that were now produced, which were the Home-Witnesses, that did positively swear, that in April and May 78. Otes was here in Town; he did then indeed make use of those other canting Witnesses, for I cannot call them any otherwise, that beat so about the Bush, and speak of Uncertainties, and contradict one another; but those that I name, Clay and Smith, were Home-Witnesses, and there lay the Credit of his being in Town, when the Witnesses which came from St. Omers, say he was beyond Sea.

Otes. My Lord, I beg I may ask one thing; whether my Lord Bishop of London be there still?

L. C. J. No, my Lord of London is gone.

Otes. I am sorry for it, because he could have given an account of this Smith, for he knows him.

L. C. J. I cannot help it, you should have desired him to stay while he was here; go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. I will, my Lord; and this which I am going to say, as an Answer to his Evidence, which will give a full Answer to that other Objection which he made; which was, what was the Reason, when he had given such an Evidence so long ago, it should be delayed so long e'er it was prosecuted. I'll give your Lordship a Reason, and a satisfactory one, till those Discoveries were made that have lately been made: The Evidence these Witnesses gave, carried a Probability of Truth in it; and Sir Richard Barker himself added his Testimony to it, tho' he does not think fit now to come and confirm it: I say hitherto it had some semblance of Truth, and so did ballance the other Testimony of them that came from St. Omers: But when we had discover'd that it could be testified by twenty Persons, that had not been at any of the former Tryals, that he was certainly all that time at St. Omers; and when we had discover'd the Tampering and Practices of Mr. Otes, in suborning these Witnesses to swear as corruptly as he swore at first; which we shall shew you palpably to be true that he did so; that gave us Encouragement to go on to make Enquiry into the Matter; but this was not discover'd till half a Year ago, or thereabouts. Now as to one of those Witnesses, that is Mr. Clay, the Case stands thus; indeed I expected he would have brought the same Witnesses he did then; for I presume they are all about Town, but he has not thought fit to do that: This Clay was then a Priest, and a Prisoner in the Gate-house for that very reason as being accused for being a Romish Priest; while he was there a Prisoner, Mr. Otes comes and threatens him, and solicits him to swear that he was here in Town in May 78. that he might be provided with Proof against what the Boys of St. Omers (as he call'd them) would come to testify; and threaten'd him if he did not, he would hang him, for he could swear him to be a Priest; and this was about three or four Days before the Tryal of the five Jesuits: At length they came to a Bargain and Agreement, as you will hear, that he should come and swear this; when Mr. Otes cannot pretend that the Evidence of Clay was known at all by any of the Committees that were concern'd in the Management of his Discovery; or that he was so much as thought of for a Witness. But we shall prove how it came to pass; and I believe, if Mr. Otes would call him now (as I do not question he knows where to have him) Clay would not be so hardy now, as to affirm his former Testimony. Then as for Mr. Smith, his Case stands thus: Mr. Otes had sworn him into the Plot, as you will find in his Narrative that he gave in upon Oath, which is upon Record, and enter'd in the Journals of the Lords House. He was a School-master in Islington, and Otes swears High Treason against him, and thereupon Warrants went out to take this Smith, and Mr. Otes was very violent in the Pursuit of him but two or three Days before the Tryal; and then, when all these Witnesses from St. Omers were come, as he knew very well, he was in some Doubt his Design would have fail'd, and then does he prevail with Smith to become a Witness for him. And 'tis evident he did tamper with him, from that which was done by him at that time: For now he gives him under his Hand, (to shew the Impudence, as well as Villany of the Man) as it has been evident enough in all his Carriage) a Paper that should give him Authority to go free from all Process and Arrests, upon any Warrants; and this Protection under Mr. Otes's Hand, is directed to all the King's Officers, thereby commanding them to take notice that this Mr. Smith, whom before he had accus'd of being in the Plot, was an honest Man, and employed in great Service for the King at that time. This Paper, when produc'd, will shew the time when it was made; and then it will appear, that two Days after Smith comes and swears that he din'd with him the first Monday in May 78. This was what

Smith

Smith swore then; and upon my mentioning of this Practice, if he have any shame in him, it must put him in some Confusion: For we are prepared to prove by undeniable Testimony, that Mr. Otes did not dine with this Mr. Smith that Day: We shall prove it by the whole Family; but the first time ever Mr. Otes came there; was in July after, when he came into England from St. Omers, which these Witnesses say, was the latter end of June. Then it was that he was with Mr. Smith, and came to his House, and not before. And we shall prove by several Witnesses, that upon the Questions being asked of Mr. Smith, how he came to testify such a thing, his Answer was, I must have died for it, if I had not don't, 'twas only a mistake in point of Time: But he threatened me, and so did some others too, that he would have me hang'd for being in the Plot, if I did not comply with him, and swear this for him. My Lord, I shall offer this Evidence that I have open'd, and then I hope we shall satisfy the Jury, and all that hear this Tryal, that he is one of the most notorious Villains that liv'd upon the Earth; to be sure that ever was known in this Kingdom.

Mr. Sol. Gen. First, my Lord; we'll produce our Records, where is the Record of Sir George Wakeman?

Mr. Swift. This is the Record of Sir George Wakeman, and this is a true Copy, I examin'd it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray Sir Samuel Astry, read a Word or two of it.

Cl. of Cr. Here is an Indictment against Sir George Wakeman for High Treason; he pleaded not Guilty; and here is an Acquittal by the Jury.

Mr. At. Gen. He being acquitted, I desire he may be sworn. [Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray Sir George Wakeman, was Mr. Otes sworn against you at the Tryal?

Sir George Wakeman. Yes, Mr. Solicitor, he was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember what he swore against you at that Tryal?

Sir George Wakeman. Yes, I do Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that true that he swore, by the Oath you have taken?

Otes. Is that a fair Question? I desire the Opinion of the Court?

L. C. J. Ah! why not?

Otes. He was legally accus'd; he cannot swear himself off.

L. C. J. But he is legally acquitted too; we have a Record for that here.

Otes. Ah! My Lord, he was acquitted; it's well known how.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Come Sir, was That he swore against you at your Tryal, true?

Sir George Wakeman.

L. C. J. What do you say, Sir?

Sir George Wakeman. 'Twas false upon my Oath, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Particulars did he swear against you?

Mr. Pollexfen. Ah! Pray tell the Particulars as near as you can what he swore against you.

Sir George Wakeman. My Lord, if your Lordship please, I will give a little Account what he swore against me before the King and Council.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That will not do, Sir George Wakeman, we do not ask you that.

L. C. J. No, it must be only the Evidence that was given upon this Acquittal, which is the Record here produc'd before us; what did he swear against you then?

Sir George Wakeman. He swore at that Tryal, as near as I can remember, that I undertook for a certain Sum of Money; 15000 l. as I think it was, to poyson the King, and I was to do it by the means of the Queen. I was to provide this Poyson by for her, and she was to give it to the King. This he swore at my Tryal, which God forbid it should be true; nothing can be more false.

L. C. J. I ask you by the Oath you have taken, you are now quitted, and so in no danger; and being upon your Oath, ought to speak the Truth, without Malice or ill Will to him that did accuse you; was that he swore true or false?

Sir George Wakeman. False, false, upon my Oath; I speak it without any Malice against the Man in the World.

Mr. At. Gen. Then swear my Lord Castlemain. [Which was done.]

Sir George Wakeman. My Lord, I'll be bound to make it appear, that all he swore against me was false.

Mr. At. Gen. And so was it he swore against my Lord Castlemain and others that were acquitted at the same time with Sir George Wakeman.

Mr. Sol. Gen. First read the Record of my Lord Castlemain's Acquittal.

Cl. of Cr. Here is the very Record it self: It was in this Court my Lord Castlemain was Indicted of High Treason, and Tried and Acquitted.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord Castlemain, pray what did Otes swear against you at your Tryal? And pray tell the Court whether that was true or false.

Earl of Castlemain. My Lord, as near as I remember, Mr. Otes did swear at my Tryal, that he met me in Lincolns-Inn Fields, and that he went with me somewhere to Mr. Fenwick's Chamber in Dukes street in Covent-garden, where he said I did talk a great deal of Treason, and a great Discourse of that kind he said there was, and he swore that I was in several Cabals in relation to the King's death: I was afterwards acquitted by the Jury that Try'd me, as appears by the Record; and here I do declare, as in the Presence of God, and with all the Imprecations of divine Vengeance to fall upon me, if I speak any thing but the Truth, that not only that which he swore was false, but that I never had any thoughts in my Heart, much less did ever declare in my Words of any injury or hurt against the late King. And besides, that I never saw the Face of Otes in my life, till after I was put in Prison upon his Accusation of me.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know what Religion that Noble Lord is of?

Earl of Castlemain. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

L. C. J. We all know what Religion my Lord is of, you need not ask that Question.

Otes. That's not the Point, my Lord, I must have it declar'd in Evidence.

L. C. J. I wonder to see any Man that has the Face of a Man, carry it at this rate, when he he hears such an Evidence brought in against him.

Otes. I wonder that Mr. Attorney will offer to bring this Evidence, Men that must have Malice against me——

L. C. J. Hold your Tongue ; you are a shame to Mankind.

Otes. No, my Lord, I am neither a shame to my self or Mankind : What I have sworn is true, and I will stand by it to my last Breath, and seal it if occasion be with my Blood.

L. C. J. 'Twere pity but that it were to be done by thy Blood.

Otes. Ah ! Ah ! my Lord, I know why all this is, and so may the World very easily too.

L. C. J. Such Impudence and Impiety was never known in any Christian Nation.

Otes. But this will not do the Work to make the Plot to be disbelieved ; Things are not to be done by great Noises : I will stand by the Truth.

L. C. J. Can you think to out-face such Evidence as this with your Impudence ?

Otes. But I hope you'll give me leave to make my Defence.

L. C. J. Then carry your self as becomes you in the Court.

Otes. My Lord, I will do so.

L. C. J. If you do not, we know how to make you do it, you shall not think to Domineer here.

Otes. My Lord, I hope I do behave my self as I ought.

L. C. J. No, you do not.

Otes. Ill Language may provoke any Man's Passion, my Lord.

L. C. J. Keep your self within Bounds, and you shall be heard ; but we'll suffer none of your Extravagancies.

Otes. My Lord, if I had been aware of this, I could have produc'd Evidence that would have supported my Testimony in these Matters.

L. C. J. Go on with your Proofs, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Attorney. We will do so, my Lord.

Earl of Castlemain. Have you done with me, Sir ?

L. C. J. Have you any other Questions to ask my Lord Castlemain ?

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then your Lordship may sit down again where you were.

Mr. At. Gen. Now my Lord, we shall show the Lords Journal where it is Recorded, that he swore he could accuse no body else but those that he nam'd, and then we shall give an Account, that soon after, he accus'd our present Sovereign, and the Queen Dowager.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where is the Clerk of the Parliament ?

Mr. Swift. Here he is, Mr. Walker.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear him. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Walker, Is that the Journal of the House of Lords ?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord, it is.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Deliver it in to the Clerk, and let him read it.

L. C. J. Then you must direct to the time, or else it will be to no purpose.

Mr. Swift. Sir Samuel Astry, pray turn to Friday the 29th of November 78.

Cl. of Cr. Reads, Die veneris decimo nono Novembris 1678. Titus Otes being call'd in at the Bar, desired to be heard a few Words before he was sworn——

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, I doubt this will not be Evidence: It is only a Paper of what he said, taken before the Lords ; but now whether that was upon Oath or no, is the Question, nay it appears it was not upon Oath ; but says, it was before he was sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I desire it may be read all out.

Cl. of Cr. Reads, Titus Otes being called in at the Bar, desired he might be heard a few Words before he was sworn to speak to the main Business, which being granted to him, he complained of the Restraint he is under, and being debarr'd of the liberty of his Friends coming to him, and of conversing with any body in private, and that no Englishman ought to be restrained, unless accused by one or more Witnesses ; and pray'd that the Restraint might be taken off, that he might be enabled to give his Evidence more cheerfully, and that the House would be pleased to Address to the King for that purpose, and that his Pardon may be renewed, because he is under misprision of Treason, to which the Lord Chancellor told him, that the House would take his Condition into Consideration, and then being sworn, he was told by the Lord Chancellor, that the Lords have received an Address from the House of Commons in part upon Evidence by him given there, and that the House expects he should give an Account what that is, which has begot such Astonishment in the House of Commons as is expressed in the Address, upon which Titus Otes said, that in July last, he saw a Letter from Sir George Wakeman——

L. C. J. Is this Evidence, Mr. Attorney ?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, the use we make of it is to prove that he did accuse the Queen.

L. C. J. What is the Accusation of the Queen to this purpose ?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we say he had sworn several Days before that he had no other Persons to accuse.

L. C. J. You should produce that first that he swore so.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we should so, I think, and I thought it had been so done.

L. C. J. This is no Evidence, for it is not upon Oath ; it does not say so.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, it does my Lord, but we will go on in order.

L. C. J. Come then, let us see what was sworn about his having no more Persons to accuse.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Sir Samuel Astry, look the 30th of October 78.

Cl. of Cr. Reads, Die Mercurii 30. Octobris 1678. Titus Otes, being called in, was sworn at the Bar, and required to answer to what he is now called in for concerning his Discourse with the Lord Annesley last Night, about the Duke of York.

L. C. J. I doubt this will not be Evidence neither ; for we are now speaking only about what shall be Evidence: We are not now meddling with the methods of the House in their Examination of Witnesses, but what is Evidence here ; suppose an Oath be administred to me for a particular purpose in the House of Lords, that I shall answer to what is asked me concerning a Discourse that I had with a third Person.

Mr. At. Gen.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Sir Samuel Astry look the next Day ; for there my Lord, he is examin'd upon the general.

Sir Samuel Astry Reads, Die Jovis 31 Octobris 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. But first read the latter end of the former Day's Proceedings, beginning at those Words, Upon consideration.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Upon consideration of what Titus Otes had said, he was call'd in again, and told by the Lord Chancellor that the House has directed he shall be heard again to Morrow at Nine a Clock, and the Lords do expect that by the Oath he hath now taken, he should go thorow with what he hath to say, and therefore he should prepare himself to deliver the whole Truth of what he knows concerning the Design against the King's Person, and the Government of this Kingdom.

L. C. J. But still Mr. Attorney, we are but where we were ; for supposing upon my Examination upon Oath given me in the House of Lords to a particular purpose, That my Lord Chancellor should tell me here ; my Lords intend to Morrow, that you by vertue of the Oath now given you, should come and give them Satisfaction as to other Questions, I doubt that would not be Evidence in Westminster-Hall : Let us not stretch any thing further than it should be upon any Account whatsoever : For suppose I give you an Oath to make true Answer to such Questions as I shall ask you concerning what was said at the Sessions-house at such a Tryal, and then I come after and ask you upon the Oath you have taken, what do you say concerning such a Business 7 Years ago, would that be Evidence ?

Mr. At. Gen. With Submission, my Lord, if a Man be told he is upon his Oath, to say all he knows of such a Design, what he says upon that Oath, is Evidence.

L. C. J. You say very true, Mr. Attorney, if I give him a general Oath ; but what he says concerning any other Matter than that particular Thing which he was sworn to give an Account of, can never be Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I think we need not labour in such a thing as this is.

L. C. J. Truly, Mr. Solicitor, I think it is no Evidence at all, if you can prove he was sworn to his whole Narrative, and can bring any thing out of that, you say something.

Mr. At. Gen. We desire that my Lord of Berkeley may be sworn. [Which was done.]

L. C. J. What do you ask him ?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, will you give the Court and the Jury an Account, whether Mr. Otes was not sworn to his Narrative, and delivered in his Evidence at your Lordship's Bar upon Oath.

L. C. J. My Lord of Berkeley, let me ask you this Question ; Was every thing that he gave an Account of at the Bar of the Lords House, given in upon Oath ?

Earl of Berkeley. I cannot remember that my Lord.

L. C. J. It is impossible that he should.

Earl of Berkeley. All I can testify is but what I answered to the Question which was asked me at my Lord Stafford's Tryal.

L. C. J. But that is not material, now my Lord, because the Record of that Tryal is not here.

Earl of Berkeley. The same thing is entered here particularly.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we desire it may be read again.

L. C. J. Read it again with all my Heart.

L. C. J. This is a particular Oath to a particular pose ; and shall I help it by intendment, that he was afterwards sworn to the general Matter ? No, I will not : Suppose any thing had happened afterwards that it should have been thought fit to prosecute Otes ; could the Man have been convicted of Perjury for this ? Certainly he never could.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, my Lord, we submit it to you ; but we will now go on to prove that which Mr. Attorney opened, that Otes did suborn these Witnesses to swear what they did swear : You have had one part of the Evidence that was then given ; now we shall prove that Clay was sworn at Whitebread's Tryal, and what he did there testify about Otes being in Town.

Otes. I own it, he was sworn then.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you own that you suborned him ?

Otes. No, I think not, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we will prove that you did tamper with him, and by threatenings prevail'd with him to swear for you.

Mr. At. Gen. Nay, we will prove that he was mistaken in what he did swear a whole Year. Pray call Mr. Charles Howard.

Otes. My Lord, I desire I may have leave to ask the Court a Question, and I beg the Opinion of the Court in it, whether a Popish Recusant Convicted, may be a good Witness ?

L. C. J. We are not bound to answer your Question ; for we see no ground why you should ask it : If you have any occasion to object against any Witness, and can produce any Record against him ; then we will tell you more of our Minds.

Otes. Pray then let me ask you another Question, my Lord.

L. C. J. Prithee do not trouble us with thy Questions, let them go on with their Evidence.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know, whether a Man confessing himself a Popish Priest—

L. C. J. We do not sit here to answer every idle Question ; 'tis nothing at all to the purpose : When you ask a proper Question, we will answer it.

Otes. Yes, 'tis my Lord, and you are of my Counsel in Matter of Law.

L. C. J. I am not so.

Otes. Yes, my Lord, the Court is always of Counsel for the Prisoner.

L. C. J. That were well, indeed, if we were bound to give Advice in every Case, where a Man is Prosecuted at the King's Suit ; indeed in those Cases where a Man can have no Counsel allowed him, the Court is of Counsel for him ; but where he may have Counsel, the Judges are not of Counsel for him.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Besides, We are not here putting of Cases, but trying of a Cause.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Here is Mr. Charles Howard, swear him. [Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we bring this Gentleman Mr. Charles Howard only to this part of our Evidence ; to prove that Mr. Clay was mistaken a whole Year, mistook 78, for 77.

L. C. J. But, Mr. Solicitor, if you take this confused Method, we shall never be at an end, and for my part I cannot make any thing of it; it is impossible for me to retain these things in Memory, so as to give any Direction to the Jury, if there be not a Method used; for do you think that it is possible for any Man to retain in his Head a hundred things huddled up and down without any Order?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We beg your Lordship's Patience but a little while, and we shall have it in very good Order. Swear Higgins.

[Which was done.]

L. C. J. Pray what do you ask him?

Mr. At. Gen. The Matter we examine him to is this; for I would open to you the Nature of our Evidence. 1. He swore Smith into the Plot, and then gave him a Certificate, that he was an honest Man.

L. C. J. Is that Otes's Hand?

Mr. At. Gen. We shall prove it to be so.

L. C. J. You must first prove what he swore of Smith.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We desire that we may read his Narrative.

L. C. J. But first prove it, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. It is upon Record in the House of Lords.

L. C. J. Was that delivered in upon Oath to the House of Lords? Or else we shall be but where we were.

Mr. At. Gen. For Proof of that we call my Lord Bridgwater.

L. C. J. Here he is. Swear my Lord.

[Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord Bridgwater, Do you remember the Narrative that Otes gave in to the House of Lords, and was it upon Oath? But first of all, if you please, I desire my Lord may see the Book, whether any thing be there under his Hand, and then whether it be enter'd to be upon Oath, and whether this be the Journal agreeing with the Paper deliver'd him?

L. C. J. This is a Narrative, my Lord, that he himself deliver'd in, and I would ask my Lord Bridgwater this one Question: Was not this Journal compar'd with the Narrative given in upon Oath by Order of the Lords House?

Earl of Bridgwater. Yes, I must say I was one of the Committee appointed to take care of the Journal, and here is my Hand to it among other Lords, and that is a Copy of what Mr. Otes did deliver in as his Narrative which was inserted upon a Report of the Committee into the Journal-Book by Order of the Lords, and we did examine the Narrative with the Book.

L. C. J. But what is all this to our purpose now? Do not mistake me, my Lord Bridgwater, I do not speak to you now, but to Mr. Attorney: What does this prove as to the Matter in hand?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord Bridgwater, did you see the Narrative brought in by Otes?

Earl of Bridgwater. That Narrative was delivered to us by the Clerk of the Parliament.

L. C. J. But, my Lord, do you know that Narrative was given in upon Oath?

Earl of Bridgwater. I know no other, but that the Clerk of the Parliament brought it to us.

Mr. At. Gen. Here is the Clerk of the Parliament will tell you that Otes was sworn to it.

L. C. J. Prove it if you can; but hitherto I see nothing that looks like Evidence.

Mr. At. Gen. Really, my Lord, I should take it to be as much Evidence as any that ever was offer'd in the World.

L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Attorney, let us reason the Point a little; suppose you bring an Answer in Chancery; except the Man be sworn to it, can you read his Answer; and yet I ever look'd upon an Answer in Chancery as Evidence?

Mr. At. Gen. In that Case the Record proves it self, and so it should here; and therefore we desire it may be read.

L. C. J. But surely you would not allow an Answer to be Evidence, unless you prove it to be sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I always took it, that we need not come to prove a Man was actually sworn to his Answer; but if it be once enter'd upon Record in Chancery, it proves it self.

L. C. J. It is true, Mr. Attorney, if it appears upon Record that the Answer was sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, If this Journal of the House of Lords is a Record, then that which is enter'd into it, is a Record; this is a thing recorded as a Deed inrolled is, and proves it self.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Either we mistake one another, or we do not differ in Opinion: If you could make it appear that Otes brought this thing in the House of Lords, and deliver'd it upon Oath, that were Evidence; otherwise I cannot see how you can make Evidence of it.

Mr. At. Gen. I always thought, my Lord, that a Record out of a Court of Record, would have that Credit in another Court of Record, as to be read.

L. C. J. My Lord Bridgwater tells you, it was deliver'd to them by the Clerk of the Parliament.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, let the Clerk read what is at the end thereof.

Cl. of Crown. Reads, Hitherto examined the 3d of December, 1678. The Narrative and Examinations of Titus Otes, being first inserted according to the Order of the House, of the 21st of November last, by us Anglesey, &c.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray read the Order of the 21st of November.

Cl. of Cr. Reads, Die 21st of November, 1678. Upon Report made by the Earl of Bridgwater, from the Lords Sub-Committees for the examining the Journal of this House; That upon Examination thereof, their Lordships find, that the Narrative made upon Oath by Titus Otes at the Bar on the 31st of October last, of the horrid Design against His Majesty's Person and Government; is only mentioned in the Journal, but not enter'd at large in such manner as he then related it; and that therefore their Lordships desire the Direction of the House concerning this Matter: It is thereupon ordered, that the said Narrative made by Titus Otes on the said 31st of October, shall be enter'd at large, and inserted in the Journal, as the part of the Business of that Day.

L. C. J. Now you make it Evidence; for it appears that he was sworn, and gave his Narrative upon Oath.

Mr. At.

III 16V

Mr. At. Gen. Then now, my Lord, I hope we may read it.

L. C. J. Ay, read it.

Mr. At. Gen. Read the 54th Article.

Cl. of Cr. Reads, This is the Narrative of Titus Otes, the 54th Article. That one Matthew Medborne, a Player in the Duke's Theatre; one Mr. Penny, Mr. Mannock, Mr. Sharpe, and Mr. Seddon, and one William Smith a School-master at Islington, and one Edward Everard and others, meeting in a Club on Thursday Nights and Sunday Nights, with one Jones a Priest, and one Key-mash within-mentioned; and all these Persons are employed by the Jesuits, to vilify the House of Commons, and to go about the City to incense the People against them, and against the Bishops of the Nation; and they deliver this Treasonable Position, That the Commons assembled in Parliament are the Devil's Representatives, and not the Nation's; with treasonable and detestable Words the Deponent did hear at the said Club, which is kept at Fuller's Rents near Grey's Inn. And in the Month of August the Deponent was ordered by the Jesuits in London, to give the said Persons great Respects, and in their Names to thank the Club for their Faithfulness to them in that Particular.

Mr. At. Gen. Thus you see what he had sworn against him; now we shall shew how he dealt with him. Is that Mr. Otes's Hand?

Witness. It is; yes I believe it is.

Mr. At. Gen. I believe he will hardly deny it himself.

Otes. Let me see it, I pray you, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Show it him. (Which was done.) Is that your Hand?

Otes. I cannot say it is my Hand; nor do I believe it to be so.

L. C. J. He does not own it to be his Hand.

Otes. I do not say it is not my Hand; but I do not remember any thing of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Read it, Sir, pray you.

L. C. J. What is it you would read?

Mr. At. Gen. A Certificate under Otes's Hand of Mr. Smith's Honesty, not three Days before the Tryal of the five Jesuits.

L. C. J. Read it, let us hear what it is.

These are to certify that William Smith is no Papist; and that he is upon good Service at this time for his King and Country; of which, I hope, those that are Inquirers after Recusants, will take notice.

Witness my Hand this 3d Day of June 1679.

Titus Otes.

L. C. J. What Harm is there in all this? I must needs say, I cannot comprehend what you would make of it.

Mr. At. Gen. This Protection was given Mr. Smith by Mr. Otes three Days before the Tryal; but after he had sworn him into the Plot in his Narrative.

L. C. J. I see not any Plot, for my part, that he swore him into, unless you mean Treason against the House of Commons: For that is the Accusation he made, that he spoke such Words of the House of Commons. Pray read it again. (Which was done.)

L. C. J. Well, and what is all this?

Mr. At. Gen. Is not this a swearing him into the Plot?

L. C. J. No, not that I see: It only gives an ill Character of him.

Mr. At. Gen. But he is accused as a Confederate with the Priests and Jesuits.

Otes. Did I charge him, Mr. Attorney, with having any Hand in the Plot against the King's Life?

Mr. At. Gen. I only offer this as an Evidence that there was tampering.

L. C. J. You call it a being in the Plot; I see no such thing.

Mr. At. Gen. And then he comes and gives him an Acquittal under his Hand, and then produces him as a Witness.

L. C. J. There can be no great matter in this, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Then, my Lord, we'll call Mr. Smith himself, and he will tell you how Otes drew him in: Swear Mr. Smith. (Which was done.) Pray acquaint my Lord and the Jury, how you came to swear at the former Tryal; by whom you were perswaded, and how you varied from the Truth.

L. C. J. That is very nauseous and fulsome, Mr. Attorney, methinks in a Court of Justice.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you swear in the former Tryal? And was that true you did swear then?

L. C. J. I tell you truly, Mr. Attorney, it looks rank and fulsome; if he did forswear himself, why should he ever be a Witness again?

Mr. At. Gen. 'Tis not the first time by twenty that such Evidences have been given.

L. C. J. I hate such Presidents in all times; let it be done never so often. Shall I believe a Villain one Word he says, when he owns that he forswore himself?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, give me leave; I must pursue my Master's Interest.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, It was ever Testimony allowed to be given, to detect a Subornation.

L. C. J. I am sure 'tis not fit to be allow'd at any time: If he did forswear himself in a Court of Record, in my Opinion he is not to be received as a Witness any more.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We do only make this use of him, to prove that Otes did suborn him.

L. C. J. Pray call some other Witnesses, if you have them, to contradict him; but do not offer to bring a Man to swear that he did forswear himself before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We give Evidence here of a Man's being produced by Otes, to swear he was here in May 78. and he did make such an Oath: Now I hope, with Submission, my Lord, it is Evidence to contradict that Oath, if we can prove that he has confessed he was forsworn, and mistaken in his Oath; such Evidence perhaps will be of little value, yet Evidence it is.

L. C. J. Make it what you will, Mr. Solicitor; I think it is of no value at all, nor to be admitted for the Man to come and swear it himself: Prove what you can by others.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Surely, my Lord, this Confession of his to others is of less value than when we bring the Man himself to confess his Fault; that Man himself coming and owning the thing, that he was mistaken, with great Sorrow for it, sure is a good Evidence.

L. C. J. Argue the Matter as long as you will, Mr. Solicitor, you will never convince me, but that he that has once forsworn himself, ought not to be a Witness after that in any Cause whatsoever. If any Man tell me otherwise till Doomsday, I cannot be convinced of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I go but to ask him this Question, Whether or no what he swore were true?

L. C. J. Mr. Solicitor, We are all of another Opinion, that it is not Evidence fit to be given.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I must submit it to you.

L. C. J. I tell you, Mr. Solicitor, if you should call him to know what it was he swore, and it does appear by any Evidence, or by his own Confession, that it was false, you ought not to believe what he says even in that Matter. And I think truly, for Example's sake, it ought not by any means to be admitted.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I must submit it to you, but then I humbly conceive, it will be in very many Cases impossible to detect a Perjury or Subornation, if the Party suborn'd cannot be admitted to be a Witness.

L. C. J. What good will the admitting him to be a Witness do? For either what he swore then, or what he swears now, is false; and if he once swears false, can you say he is to be believ'd?

Mr. North. My Lord, If a Man come and swear——

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir, you have our Opinion; it has been always the Practice heretofore, That when the Court have delivered their Opinion, the Counsel should sit down, and not dispute it any further.

Mr. At. Gen. Then we will go about the Business of Clay, and for that we will call Lawrence Davenport.

L. C. J. 'Tis certainly against the Law to admit a Man that has once forsworn himself to be a Witness again in any Cause.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Lawrence Davenport. (Which was done.) Pray give my Lord and the Jury an account how Clay came to be a Witness, and by whom he was wrought upon to be so.

Davenport. May it please you, my Lords and Gentlemen of the Jury, Mr. Otes came to the Prison, I being then a Prisoner at that time in the Gate-house at Westminster my self, and having no other Employment I had the Government and Care of some of the Prisoners for a Livelihood, being in Custody; and at that time Mr. Otes, as I said, when old Clay was in Prison, did come there to visit this Clay at several times; and coming there to visit this Clay, up stairs he went to his Chamber, and desired to speak with him; and I did desire your Worship, Mr. Otes, that you would go in to him, and you did go into his Chamber, and there these Words you did speak to him before the Tryal of the five Jesuits, That if he did not swear what you put to him, he should be prosecuted as a Priest, which you did believe he would die for.

L. C. J. What is this Man's Name?

Mr. At. Gen. Lawrence Davenport.

L. C. J. Did you hear him say so?

Davenport. Yes, my Lord; upon my Oath I did hear him say so, and Sir William Waller was with him; and then he replied and said, with a Proviso That you would give him his Gold and Silver that was taken from him, being then a Prisoner under my keeping in the Gate-house, and wanting his Money; if you would do that, he said, he had been a Rogue before, and he could not say what he might do.

L. C. J. Now make it appear that this Clay was sworn at the Tryal.

Davenport. My Lord, Afterwards I was Keeper to him under the other Keeper, and he had a Keeper to wait on him to Newgate Sessions at the Old Bailey; wherefore this Gentleman that is standing there, Mr. Otes, comes to us, says he, Do not you trouble your self about this Prisoner; let him alone with me, I'll see him at home again; and then the Jesuits there did take their Tryals; how it was I cannot tell: For we could not come into the Court. Afterwards they went to the Fountain Tavern by Newgate to Dinner, and Mr. Otes and he went to Dinner together; we were below in the House waiting there till it was Night, and still thinking that he should come down again; but away went he home, and left us in the lurch; but indeed he did come home to the Prison very honestly and civilly, because he was civilly guarded.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, my Lord, we'll give you an account, That the next Morning after this Discourse betwixt Otes and Clay at the Gate-house, this Witness told it to another that was a Prisoner there then too.

Otes. My Lord, I would ask this Man a Question, whether he had the sole Keeping of Clay without any other Keeper with him?

Davenport. There was no Keeper in the House, but my self, where he lay, which was in Margaret's-lane, not in the Prison, but in the House.

Otes. Pray ask this Gentleman, why he did not come in and testify this Discourse he speaks of, when Clay was a Witness?

Davenport. I was not by when he was sworn.

Otes. Did he not know he was a Witness?

L. C. J. No, he says he did not go into the Court with you, he was not suffered to go in.

Davenport. My Lord, I am a poor Tradesman, and know nothing what belongs to the Law.

Mr. At. Gen. Come, pray swear this Man, Mr. ——— [Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell what Davenport told you, and when.

Mr. ——— He came and told me the next Day in the Prison, where I was then, what Mr. Otes and Sir William Waller had been tampering with Clay about, to make him swear for Mr. Otes.

L. C. J. What were the Words he told you they said to him?

Mr. ——— It was, That he must swear that Mr. Otes dined at Mr. Howard's House such a Day of the Month, and Mr. Clay did say he knew nothing of the Matter; but then Sir William Waller and Mr. Otes did reply to him again, here's your Choice; if you will not swear this, we will try you for a Priest, and hang you, and so Clay agreed; if he might have his Money restored that was taken from him, he had been a Rogue before, and did not know what he might do.

Otes.

Otes. Is this Evidence, my Lord ?

L. C. J. Yes, doubtless, very good Evidence.

Otes. 'Tis only upon Hearsay that he speaks.

L. C. J. But that establishes the other Man's Testimony, this being told the very next Morning ; for he would not conceal it, it seems.

Mr. At. Gen. Now that Clay was sworn at the Tryal, you admit, Mr. Otes.

Otes. Yes, I do, he was so.

Mr. At. Gen. Then I think here's a plain Proof of a Subornation.

L. C. J. You must observe how they apply this Evidence : They say, you are an ill Man, not only as to swearing false your self, but as to suborning others to swear more than they knew ; and particularly as to this Clay, that you and Sir William Waller did threaten him, you would hang him up for a Priest, if he would not swear as you would have him ; and by your Threatnings he was prevailed with to swear.

Otes. Is Mr. Clay in Court, my Lord ?

L. C. J. Nay, I cannot tell where he is.

Mr. At. Gen. He was your Witness, Mr. Otes ; we expected you would have brought him.

Otes. I cannot tell where to find him, my Lord, now truly.

Mr. At. Gen. Call Mr. Howard.

Crier. Here he is, Sir, he is sworn.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, You have not proved what he swore.

Mr. At. Gen. We are now about it, my Lord. Mr. Howard, pray were you at the Tryal of the five Jesuits, or at Langborn's, when Clay was sworn as a Witness for Dr. Otes ?

Mr. Howard. Yes, I was at Langborn's Tryal, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the Effect of his Testimony there ?

Mr. Howard. He did swear, That he was with me and Mr. Otes at Dinner at my House, in May, in the Year 77.

Mr. At. Gen. 77 did he say, or 78 ?

Mr. Howard. Stay, I will look upon my Notes I took at that time.

L. C. J. Ay, do so, to refresh your Memory, Mr. Howard.

Mr. Howard. It was May 78, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray thus, Sir, Was he then at your House with Otes ?

Mr. Howard. No, he was not there in May ; Mr. Clay was with me and Mr. Otes both together in July 78, after the 4th Day of July.

Mr. At. Gen. That is after the time he came to London from St. Omers.

L. C. J. You say very well ; Have you any more Witnesses ?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We must desire that the 28th Article of Mr. Otes's Narrative may be read.

Cl. of Cr. Reads, That in order to this Command on April 24. 78. Father Warren, Rector of Leidge, Sir Thomas Preston, Baronet, Father Marsh, Rector of Gaunt, and Father Williams, Rector of Watton, and Master of the Novices, Sir John Warner, Baronet, Richard Ashby, Rector of the English Seminary at St. Omers, being sick of the Gout could not go. But out of the said Seminary went Sir Robert Bret, Baronet, Father Pool, Edward Neville. There were in all with the Deponent nine or ten, who met in London in Consult with Thomas Whitebread, Father Harcourt Senior, and Father Harcourt Junior, John Fenwick, Basil Langworth, William Morgan, John Keimes, Father Lovel, Father Ireland, Father Blundel, Richard Strange, Father Mico, Father Grey, and others to the Number of fifty Jesuits met at the White Horse Tavern in the Strand, where they plotted their Designs for the Society, and ordered Father John Carey, who was also there, to go Procurator for Rome ; at which Consult thus held in the Month of May, the Deponent was present to attend the Consultors and deliver their Concerns from Company to Company ; and then a little after they left the White Horse Tavern, and divided themselves into several Clubs and Companies ; some met at Mr. Saunders's House in Wild-street ; others at Mr. Fenwick's at Aireses his House in Drury-lane ; others at Mr. Ireland's in Russell-street near Covent garden, and in other places. All which, tho' in several Companies, five or six in a Company, did contrive the Death of the King ; and in order to which, there were Papers sent from Company to Company, which the Deponent did carry containing their Opinions of the timing their Business, and the manner how it was to be done, and within three or four Days after the Deponent went to St. Omers with the Fathers that came from the other side of the Water.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We produce this to overthrow their Witnesses, that speak his being here a Week in May. Now Mr. Otes in this Narrative, says, that the Consult ended the 24th of April, and that three or four Days after, he returned back to St. Omers.

L. C. J. Pray read that over again, where the Names are, for the Witnesses for the King swear, That Mr. Williams came over from St. Omers, but he here says he did not, I think.

It was read again.

L. C. J. I thought it had been otherwise ; 'tis darkly penn'd.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I my self heard him declare in many Tryals here, and at the Old Bailey, That all was finished in that Day, and he went in a few Days.

Otes. Mr. Attorney, You are mistaken : For if you please, my Lord, the Consult was not dissolved in six or eight Days, tho' they were not sitting or acting every Day.

Mr. At. Gen. 'Tis not a difference of six or eight Days that is contended for, but it is, Either Mr. Otes or his Witnesses do not swear true. If it were as Mr. Otes says, That six or eight Days were allow'd after the 24th of April, then it must be the 5th or 6th of May that he went to St. Omers ; and then his Witnesses, that say he was here the latter end of May, cannot swear true. And our Witnesses say he was all April and May, until the 23d of June at St. Omers.

Otes. My Lord, Mr. Attorney does not apprehend the Evidence aright.

L. C. J. Well, you may make your Remarks by and by, and set him right if you can.

Mr. At. Gen. We have done our Evidence, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witnesses, Mr. Otes ?

Otes. No, my Lord, I have not.

L. C. J. Then you must conclude, and say what you have to say to the Jury.

O o o

Otes.

Otes. My Lord, I have one thing more, and that is, A Copy of the Record out of the House of Lords. It is in the Journal the twenty fifth of March, seventy nine.

Mr. Walker. My Lord, I have not the Book here, it was not spoke for.

Otes. But do you know this Hand ? Shewing him a Copy.

Mr. Walker. Yes, and I believe it is a true Copy.

L. C. J. Read it.

Cl. of Cr. Reads, Tuesday the 25th of March, 1679.

Otes. It is the last Clause in the Journal of that Day.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Resolved, Nemine Contradicente, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in Parliament assembled, That they do declare that they are fully satisfied by the Proofs they have heard, That there now is, and for divers Years last past hath been a Horrid and Treasonable Plot and Conspiracy contrived and carried on by those of the Popish Religion, for the Murthering of His Majesty's Sacred Person, and for subverting the Protestant Religion, and the Ancient and Established Government of this Kingdom.

Otes. There is an Order to have that Vote printed and inserted before the Form of Prayer for the Fast. Pray, Sir, read the next Page.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Die Lunæ 25. Oct. 1680.

Upon Report from the Lords Committees for examining Matters relating to the Discovery of the late Horrid Plot and Conspiracy, That Captain Thomas Bickley hath lately wilified Dr. Titus Otes at a publick Meeting at Chichester to the prejudice of His Majesty's Evidence, for the further Discovery of the said Plot : It is thereupon ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the said Thomas Bickley be, and is hereby required to appear before their Lordships, in the Lord Privy-Seal's Lodgings, near the House of Peers, on Wednesday the third Day of November next, at eight of the Clock in the Forenoon. And it is further ordered that Alderman Exon, and Alderman William Bury of Chichester aforesaid, who were then present at the said meeting, do likewise attend their Lordships at the time aforesaid, to give Evidence of what they know concerning this Matter.

L. C. J. What of all this ? We know hereupon Bickley was turned out of Commission, and now Bickley is in again. But it seems as you had Credit with some then, so you had not with others. Well, have you now done all ?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Mr. Otes will Sum up his Evidence, then I will do the same for the King, when he has done.

L. C. J. Well, what say you, Mr. Otes ?

Otes. Now, my Lord, here is an Indictment, preferr'd against me for Perjury, and the Evidence they have given for the King, is this, 1. They have called Mr. Foster, and he tells you, that I was produced at the Sessions-house in the Old Bailey, where he was summoned as a Jurymen, upon the Tryal of Ireland ; and he says, That when I was produced at the Sessions in the Old Bailey as a Witness, and sworn (if I do remember Mr. Foster aright in what he says) he did hear me swear, That there was a Treasonable Consult of Jesuits upon the twenty fourth of April 78. at the White-Horse Tavern in the Strand ; and he does further say, That I said those Jesuits afterwards came to a Resolution to kill the King ; and that they separated themselves into lesser Clubs ; the Resolution being drawn up by one Mico ; and that I carried it from Chamber to Chamber to be signed, and did see it signed. My Lord, I did ask Mr. Foster, Whether I in my Evidence called it a Consult, or a Traiterous Consult. Now, my Lord, 'tis true, I did call it a Traiterous Consult ; it is as true that I did swear there was such a Consult ; and it is as true that I did swear this Consult did divide it self into lesser Companies ; it is as true that I did say I did carry that Resolution about from Chamber to Chamber, and saw them sign that Resolution for murdering the King, I do not mean of this King, but of the late King. My Lord, the Evidence I think I nor no honest Man shall need to be ashamed of ; I am not ashamed to own that I repeated this Evidence several times, nor that I gave that Evidence upon Oath ; for it is Truth, my Lord, and nothing but Truth, and I resolve by the Grace of God to stand by it and confirm it with my Blood, if there be occasion. My Lord, to Conviſt me of Perjury, they have brought a parcel of St. Omers Witnesses, and these do swear that which they would have sworn six Years ago ; but then the Court thought them not fit to be sworn, not only because the Law will not allow them, but because of their Religion, that can dispense with false Oaths, if it were for a good Cause, and that was the Remark my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs then made of it. I shall not insist much upon what they have sworn, for that I suppose your Lordship and the Jury do very well remember : But I have five Things to object to their Evidence ; and I hope the Jury will take notice of my Objections, and make their Remarks upon them ; for since you have heard the Evidence that is brought against me, it will be necessary for your Lordship to weigh the nature of these Witnesses, and the Value that the several Juries of London and Middlesex had for them. 'Tis true, there are several brought here now, that never were Witnesses before ; there are indeed other Men, but of the same Religion and the same Interest, and therefore their Testimony must be of the same Value ; I think your Lordship will allow me that : Therefore I begin with their Religion, and that I take notice to be a great Objection to their Evidence, as I am advis'd by those that are learn'd in the Law. And I must appeal to the Court, whether a Papist in Case of Religion may be believed and received as a good Witness ?

L. C. J. We must not hear any of these idle Expressions.

Mr. Just. Withins. Do you think you are come here to preach, Mr. Otes ?

L. C. J. I'll tell you, a Papist, except you'll prove any Legal Objection against him, is as good a Witness in a Court of Record as any other Person whatsoever.

Otes. But if 'tis your Lordship's, I'll tell you my Lord Cook's Practice was not to admit them as good Witnesses.

L. C. J. Do not tell me of my Lord Cook's Practice ; the Law is otherwise ; keep to the Business that you have here in hand ; the Question before us, Whether you were forsworn in Ireland's Tryal or not ? Answer that if you can ; can ; but you must not run out into Clamours and idle Extravagancies.

Otes. My Lord, I demand it as my Right to be heard what I have to except against the Witnesses.

L. C. J. I tell you, you shall be heard when you speak properly : But are you to determine what is right, or what is wrong ?

Otes. I am to determine my own Right now in this Point, and I insist upon it, and demand it.

L. C. J. It may be presently you'll tell us we have no right to judge of it.

Otes. Yes, my Lord, you have ; but I hope I have right to urge it.

L. C. J. Urge what you will that is to the Purpose, but then you must keep to the Matter in hand, and not make such idle Excursions as these are.

Otes. I will keep to the Matter, my Lord, if you will hear me.

L. C. J. So you shall, we'll make you keep to the Matter, or we will not hear you at all : Do not think your Impudence shall storm us out of our Senses.

Otes. My Lord, I do insist upon it, that these Mens Religion is an exception to their Testimony, and a Papist is not a good Witness in a Cause of Religion ; and I desire I may have leave to argue that as a Point of Law in my own Defence.

L. C. J. No, Sir, it is no Point of Law at all.

Otes. Then I appeal to all the hearers, whether I have Justice done me.

L. C. J. What's that, why you impudent Fellow, do you know where you are ? You are in a Court of Justice, and must appeal to none but the Court and the Jury.

Otes. I do appeal to the hearers.

L. C. J. Take him away there ; if you will not behave your self as you ought, I can assure you, the Court will do what they ought to do, and stop your Mouth.

Otes. What you please, my Lord, I must make my own Defence as well as I can.

L. C. J. You are here in Judgment before us, and are to appeal to us ; we'll suffer none of your Common-wealth Appeals to your Mobile ; keep within the Bounds of Decency, and say what you can for your self.

Otes. My Lord, this I move to the Court as one of my Objections to this Evidence given against me, That their Religion makes them no good Witnesses ; especially in this Cause.

L. C. J. I tell you that is nothing to the purpose, what their Religion is.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Mr. Otes, we come not here to dispute Points of Religion, we come to try a bare Matter of Fact, whether you are perjured, or no.

L. C. J. I tell you a Papist is a good Witness without a Legal Exception.

Mr. Just. Withins. Pray, Mr. Otes, is not a Papist as good a Witness as a Dissenter ?

Otes. My Lord Cook would not admit a Papist to be a good Witness in any Cause.

Mr. Just. Withins. How, not in a Cause of Meum and Tuum ?

Otes. No, my Lord, not in any Cause between Party and Party.

L. C. J. Where is that Opinion ?

Otes. I'll cite you the Case, if you please, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray let us hear it.

Otes. It is in Bulstrode's Reports, the Second Part, 155. A Popish Recusant is not to be admitted a Witness between Party and Party.

Mr. Just. Withins. May a Presbyterian be a good Witness, Mr. Otes ?

Mr. Just. Holloway. Or would Mr. Colledge have been a good Witness, Mr. Otes ?

Otes. I tell you this was my Lord Cook's Practice.

L. C. J. You have our Opinion, and be satisfied with it ; That Book says it was my Lord Cook's Practice, and we think if that was his Practice, his Practice was against Law.

Otes. Then another thing I object to their Testimony, is their Education.

L. C. J. That's no Objection at all neither.

Otes. My Lord, they are bred up in a Seminary against Law, and for which their Friends are to be punished.

L. C. J. So is every Man living that's bred a Dissenter, bred up against Law.

Otes. My Lord, I have not offered any Dissenter as Evidence for me.

L. C. J. No, they are all no doubt of it very good People. Good-wife Mayo, and her Companions, excellent Protestants without all question.

Otes. My Lord, I humbly offer a Statute to your Lordship : And that is Law sure.

L. C. J. Yes, a Statute is Law. What Statute is it ?

Otes. It is 27^o of Eliz. Cap. 2. The Law says there—

L. C. J. Come we will see what the Law says. Read the Statute he speaks of.

Cl. of Cr. It is Intituled an Act against Jesuits, Priests, and other such like disobedient Persons.

Otes. My Lord, I desire that the Preamble of the Act may be read.

Cl. of Cr. Whereas divers Persons called and professed Jesuits, Seminary Priests, and other Priests, which have been, and from time to time are made in the Parts beyond the Seas, by or according to the Order and Rites of the Romish Church, have of late come, and have been sent, and daily do come, and are sent into this Realm of England, and others the Queen's Majesty's Dominions—

L. C. J. This is nothing to this Business before us at all.

Mr. Just. Withins. Does this Statute say they are no good Witnesses ?

Otes. They own themselves to be Educated at St. Omers, and that is against this Law expressly.

L. C. J. What then, Do they own themselves to be in Orders, Jesuits and Priests, then you might say somewhat to them upon this Law ; but do not spend our Time in such Trifles.

Otes. I do not spend your Time in Trifles, my Lord. It is my Defence.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, do you go on ; for we will not sit here to spend our Time for nothing.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, let me but shew this, I only purpose one Statute more to your Lordship's Consideration.

L. C. J. You may propose to read the whole Statute-Book.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, hear me out.

L. C. J. Speak then to the Business in hand.

Otes. It is the Statute made in the 3^d of King Charles 1: Chap. 2.

L. C. J. It is nothing to the purpose.

Otes. I am advis'd 'tis very material for me.

L. C. J. I tell you it is not, and we'll not let your Importunity prevail upon us to spend our time for nothing: There has been a great deal of Time spent to no purpose already.

Otes. Then if you will over-rule it, my Lord—

L. C. J. We do over-rule it: For it signifies nothing to this purpose.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to give me leave to offer their Judgments in Cases of Conscience, whereby they own they have Dispen-sations to swear Lies for the promoting of the Cause.

L. C. J. That is no Evidence neither.

Otes. This is very hard in such a Case as this.

L. C. J. No, it is not hard, that what is no Evidence in Law, should not be suffer'd to be given in Evidence.

Otes. It is Evidence against the poor Dissen-ters, my Lord.

L. C. J. Indeed, Sir, it is not Evidence against any one body in the World; if you will take my Word for it, if you will not, I cannot tell how to help it.

Otes. Then I offer you one thing more, my Lord, and that is what was said and done in the Case of the Earl of Shaftsbury, when he was charged with High Treason, and committed to the Tower of London, at several Sessions in the Old Bailey and at Hicks's Hall; they did move that they might have liberty to bring in an Indictment of Perjury against the Witnesses which did accuse him of Treason, but now the Court there over-ru'd those Motions, and would not suffer my Lord of Shaftsbury's Friends to bring Indictments of Perjury against him, because they would not have the King's Evidence Indicted of Perjury, nor the Popish Plot called in question; This is a Matter of Fact in the Old Bailey.

L. C. J. And this is all idle too.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, will you hear me?

L. C. J. But pray, Sir, will you hear me too? I tell you this is nothing to the purpose neither.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to speak but these few Words then, as to my own Witnesses I have produced. And the first is Cicely Mayo; and, my Lord, though it be your Lordship's Pleasure, not to have that good Opinion of her, as I think the poor Woman does deserve, yet I hope her Evidence, will have its due Weight and Con-sideration with your Lordship and the Jury; she says, she saw me in Town in the Month of May: Now indeed she could not be positive, what May it was, but she said it was the May before the Popish plot broke out, that is, be-fore the Rumour of that Plot was spread Abroad, and she believes the Plot broke out in '78. But this she says positively, she saw me in the Month of May here; my Lord, she comes to give this Evidence freely and voluntarily; a Man that is a Knave, is a Knave for something, ei-ther out of Malice, or for Gain or Interest; but she has no Reward given her, nor can hope for any; but in Love to Justice, without any By-end or particular Interest, she came here to testify the Truth, about her seeing me in Lon-don, in May '78. The next Witness is Mr. Butler, he was then Sir Richard Barker's Coachman. He lived some Years with him, as his Servant; but he is now set up for himself, and he says, that when he was about his Master's Business in the Coach-yard, and sitting the Coach for to fetch his Master home from Putney, I came in, and this was in the beginning of May, in a Disguise; and he says, he saw me a second time in another Disguise. Then comes a third Wit-ness that I called, and that is Page, and he came into the Hall, where the Patients use to wait for his Master, and there he met me, and spoke with me. Then I called Walker, the Minister, but it happens his Memory is not so good now, as it was heretofore; and indeed I cannot tell how to blame him; for 'tis so long since, that it is impossible for any body to remember the Cir-cumstances of Times and Places, that in some short time after the Fact might have been re-membred with far greater Ease. I expected Sir Richard Barker might have been here, being Sub-pœna'd to justify the Evidence of these People; and I did expect that Mr. Smith would have been examined; but I perceived the Court tender of that Point, as knowing it would then easily have been seen upon which Side it was, that he was suborned, that is, to make such a Con-fession as Mr. Attorney would have hinted at.

L. C. J. Have you a mind to examine him, Mr. Otes; with all my Heart. If you consent to it, he shall be examined.

Mr. Just. Withins. If you will, he shall be ex-amin'd, it was for your sake he was not.

Mr. Just. Holloway. It was to do you Right, that he was refus'd to be sworn before.

Otes. Good Mr. Justice Holloway, are very sharp upon me.

Mr. Just. Holloway. No, I am not sharp upon you; I think the Court did you a great deal of Justice, you have no reason to complain.

Otes. But, my Lord, this I say, The Evidence upon which I am now indicted of Perjury is the same which was delivered six Years ago at the Old Bailey, at Whitebread's Tryal first, and then at Langborn's Tryal, where were sixteen Witnesses then produced and heard against me: But then, my Lord, what Credit did they re-ceive at Whitebread and Langborn's Tryals? Now if this Evidence that I gave was then to be be-lieved, though oppos'd by so many Witnesses, what new Objection does rise against it, which was not then hinted, and received an Answer? For as to all the Records that are brought out of the House of Lords, they have not amount-ed to a Charge sufficient to diminish any Man's Evidence in the World; for as to the Narra-tive that is entered there in the Journal; I think I and any Man else, that were concern'd as I was, may very well defend the Truth of it; and I do avow the Truth of the Popish Plot, and will stand by it as long as I have a Day to live, and I do not question but the Jury, upon Consideration of those Protestant Witnesses that I have here brought against these Popish Semi-naries, will acquit me of this Perjury. I leave it to your Lordship and the Jury to judge, and I hope those Passages of Heat, that have fallen from me in Court, shall not make me fare at all all the worfe in your Judgment. I have called some Noble Lords to testify for me ; but I find, either the distance of time has wrought upon their Memories, or the Difference of the Season has chang'd their Opinion, so that now they disbelieve that which they did believe before, and perhaps for as little Reason as —

L. C. J. As they believed you at first.

Otes. Yes truly, my Lord, for as little reason as they believed me at first ; for I cannot expect that a Man, who believes without a Principal, should not recant that Belief without a Reason.

L. C. J. What do you mean by that ?

Otes. I name no body.

L. C. J. But the Nobility that are here, and that have been Witnesses in this Cause, are all Persons of that Honour, that the Court is bound in Justice to take notice of, and vindicate them from your scandalous Reflections ; but only I think that a Slander from your Mouth is very little Scandal.

Otes. Nor from some body's else neither.

L. C. J. But, Sir, you must be taught better Manners.

Otes. I find, my Lord, I am not to be heard in this Cause with Patience.

L. C. J. I think you do not deserve to be heard at all.

Otes. I cannot tell how to help it, if you will not hear me.

L. C. J. Can't you say what you have to say for your self without Reflections and running out into such Extravagances ?

Otes. My Lord, You will suffer me to offer nothing that is material for my Defence.

Mr. Just. Walcot. Do you think it decent for this Court to suffer Persons of Honour, that by your own Desire were sworn to give Testimony in this Cause, should lie under the Reproach of your Tongue ?

Otes. Good Mr. Justice Walcot, Was there ever any Man dealt with as I am, or had such Evidence offer'd to be given against him ? Here they offer to blacken me with the Imputation of that foul, infamous Crime of Perjury ; and who are the Witnesses to prove it, but Youths out of a Seminary ? Sir George Wakeman, and my Lord Castlemain, known Papists, and perhaps Popish Recusants, Convict too ; as for my Lord Castlemain, the Record of his Acquittal is brought as a Charge against me, to prove that I was forsworn, and not believed at his Tryal ; when all the World knows, it was because there was but one Witness against him that he came off, and that was the Reason that was urged by my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs at that very time, who would not admit Dangerfield to be a Witness, and reflected not at all upon my Testimony, but directed the Jury, for want of another Witness, to acquit him : Then, my Lord, here is Wakeman brought and his Acquittal too ; he swears all I said against him was false ; whereas, had it not been for two dishonest Persons, one I have now in my sight, I shall not name any Names, we could at that time have proved five thousand Pounds of the Money paid to him, and that he gave a Receipt for it ; but, my Lord, this I am sure of, if I had been brought in as a Witness in the Case of those that suffered lately for the Presbyterian Fanatic Plot (as they call it) I had never been call'd in question, if my Evidence had been false ; but it is apparent the Papists have now a Turn to serve, and these Papists are brought in, the St. Omers Youths, to bear this Testimony on purpose to falsify my Evidence, and to bring off the Popish Lords that now stand impeach'd of High Treason for the Popish Conspiracy ; but, my Lord, I hope as the Court would never admit Indictments of Perjury against the Witnesses in that Case of my Lord Shaftsbury, so you will not admit it here ; and if my Lord Chief Justice Jones were in the Right, who did the same thing in his Circuit, I hope I shall have that Right done me here. My Lord, It is not me they indict, but the whole Protestant Interest is aim'd at in this Prosecution ; and hereby they arraign the whole Proceedings of so many Parliaments, all the Courts of Justice, and the Verdicts of those Juries that convicted the Traitors that were executed ; for my own part, I care not what becomes of me, the Truth will one time or another appear.

Vol. III.

L. C. J. I hope in God it will.

Otes. I do not question it, my Lord.

L. C. J. And I hope we are finding it out to day.

Otes. But, my Lord, since I have not the liberty to argue those things that were most material for my Defence against this Indictment, I appeal to the Great God of Heaven and Earth, the Judge of all ; and once more in his Presence, and before all this Auditory, I avow my Evidence of the Popish Plot, all and every part of it, to be nothing but true, and will expect from the Almighty God, the Vindication of my Integrity and Innocence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury —

Otes. My Lord, I have one thing to move to your Lordship ; I desire I may be brought up to morrow by Rule of Court to hear my Tryal that is then to be.

L. C. J. Ay, let him be brought up by Rule to his Tryal.

Otes. My Lord, I lie under very great Affliction with the Stone and the Gout, and besides that, I have lain in Irons these twenty-one Weeks ; I beseech your Lordship, that this Cruelty may not be inflicted upon me. My Lord, I am but hitherto a Debtor to the King upon a Civil Account ; and if I should be convicted upon these Indictments, I could then be but in Execution for a Trespas ; and I humbly conceive and hope the Court will shew me that Favour as to acquaint my Keeper, that I ought not to be so handled.

L. C. J. Look you, for that I tell you again what I have often said, I expect from the Marshal that he keep you as he ought to keep you ; I have heard that there have been abundance of Attempts made for your Escape, and therefore the Marshal must have the greater Care of you.

Otes. Let any of those Complaints be made out, my Lord, and I'll be contented to be used how they will.

L. C. J. I repeat it again, Let the Marshal have a care to keep you in salvâ & arctâ Custodiâ, according to Law.

Mr. Just. Holloway. If the Marshal does otherwise than his Duty, inform against him, and take the Remedy the Law allows.

P p p

Marshal.

Marshal. But the last Night, my Lord, Ropes were brought into his Chamber, on purpose to give him means to escape, and here are the Bundle of Ropes.

Otes. I know nothing at all of them, I assure you, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, you have our Rule. Go on, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel for the King in this Cause; which is upon an Indictment of Perjury against Titus Otes, the Defendant; and the Perjury charg'd upon the Defendant, is laid to be in his Oath at the Tryal of Ireland, at the Old Bailey; and it is thus, That he in his Evidence at that Tryal, did swear, that there was a Treasonable Consult of the Jesuits, held at the White Horse Tavern in the Strand, the 24th of April 78. and that he was there present. —

Otes. Ay, I was there.

L. C. J. You must be quiet, and let the Counsel go on without Interruption.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And that they separated themselves into lesser Companies and Clubs, and that the Jesuits came to a Resolution to murder the late King, and that he, the Defendant Otes, carried this Resolution from Chamber to Chamber, and saw it signed by them; now all this is laid in his Indictment to be false; for that in truth, he was not present at any such Consult of the Jesuits at the White Horse Tavern in the Strand upon the 24th of April 78. nor did carry any such Resolution from Chamber to Chamber to be sign'd as he had sworn in the Old Bailey at that Tryal, and so has committed Wilful and Corrupt Perjury.

Gentlemen, The Evidence that has been given to prove, that he was not present at any such Consult, nor did carry any such Resolution, has been by proving where he was at that very time that he swears this Consult was held, that is, that he was really at St. Omers, in Parts beyond the Seas, and not in London; and to make out this, we have produced no less than twenty Witnesses, that swear positively, and give you very many Circumstances to induce you to believe, that what they have taken upon them to remember is really and effectually true.

First, You have Mr. Hilfley, and he swears that he himself came away from St. Omers, the 24th of April, New Stile, which is the 14th of April, Old Stile, which was a Sunday; that Night he came to Calais, the next Day he arriv'd at Dover, and coming up to Town towards London, the next Day he met with Mr. Burnaby, who was then going to St. Omers. And he further swears, that at that very time, when he came from St. Omers, he left Otes, the Defendant upon the Place; this I say was the 14th of April: And for a Confirmation of this to be true, he left him there at that time, I would mention what two other Witnesses do testify, and therein do verify what he swears; for they tell you, that at this very time when he came over, or within a Day or two, but long before such time as there was any occasion to bring this to be a Question, he told one of them, in a Discourse that was between them, that he had left upon the Place from whence he came, which was the College at St. Omers, an English Minister, whose Name was Sampson Lucy. —

Otes. My Lord, I beg I may have leave to withdraw, for I am very weak, and ill.

L. C. J. Then make Room for him to go away, if he will.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And they give you an account, that the Defendant, Otes, went by that Name there, and it is not denied by him that he did so: And this is a Circumstance greatly verifying Mr. Hilfley's Evidence. Then comes Mr. Burnaby, who swears, That he met Mr. Hilfley when he came from St. Omers, about the 16th of April, Old Stile, and the 21st of April, Old Stile, he came to St. Omers; and that when he came there he found Otes there upon the Place; this was the first of May, New Stile; and he gives you this Circumstance to strengthen his Testimony, That he very well remembers, that upon the 2d of May, New Stile, the Day after he came to St. Omers, Otes intruded into his Company, and got himself acquainted with him; he says further, that upon the 3d of May, New Stile, he particularly remembers Otes was in his Company there, and they went into the Garden and walk'd together; he also says, he saw him the 5th of May, New Stile, which is the 25th of April, Old Stile, the Day after this Day assign'd for the Consult, with this Circumstance, That he remembers to have seen him in the Rhetorick School, and so successively afterwards he gives you a particular account down to Midsummer; after that Otes continued in the College at St. Omers, and then went away.

Then the next Witness we produce is Mr. Pool, and he gives you an account, That upon the 25th of April 1678. New Stile, which was the 15th of April, our Stile, he came over here, and he left behind him at St. Omers, the Defendant Otes; for he particularly remembers, that he saw him there when he came away; so Hilfley left him the 14th of April; Mr. Pool came away the 15th of April, which is our 25th, and left him at St. Omers, and does not remember, That he used to be absent out of the College; and Mr. Burnaby finds him there the 21st of April; so that particularly at the times the other two came away, and Burnaby came thither, there he was, and there they saw him.

The next Witness is Mr. Thornton, and he gives you an account when Otes came thither first, and how long he stayed there; he says he came about Christmas 77. and there he stayed till Midsummer Eve 78; and he tells you some particular Days he saw him on; he says he saw him there on the 1st of May, New Stile, and he saw him the 2d of May, New Stile, in Company with Mr. Burnaby, the next Day after his Arrival there, wondering at their sudden Acquaintance. And he adds a particular Circumstance, why he remembers it was the 2d of May; because that Day the Scholars at St. Omers acted a Play, at which Otes had a Scuffle for a Seat; and he says he does likewise remember him to have been there, when Mr. Pool came away, which was the 25th of April, New Stile.

Then Mr. Conway, that was our next Witness, gives you an account likewise of Otes's coming to St. Omers about December 77. and how long he stayed there, viz. till the latter end of June 78. And he does not remember, that he lay out of the the College above one Night, and that was in January. And he remembers particularly, that he saw him with Mr. Burnaby such a Day in May.

Then we brought another Witness, and that was Mr. Haggerstone, and he tells you, he had good reason to remember Mr. Otes, for he was in the same Classis with him; and this Gentleman gives an account particularly, that he remembers him to be there the next Day after Mr. Burnaby came, and agrees in Testimony with all the rest, that from Christmas till Midsummer, he was not absent out of the College, but one Night.

We have another Witness, Mr. Beefton, and he remembers, that Otes was playing at Nine-pins the 1st of May; he remembers the 2d of May to have seen him with Mr. Burnaby after the Play was over; and that agrees with the other Witnesses about his being in Burnaby's Company the 2d of May; and he remembers likewise, that he himself was chosen Reader to the Sodality; but upon Mr. Otes's Importunity, he supplied the Place in Mr. Beefton's Room, only with this Reserve and Condition, That Mr. Beefton was to be Reader at any time, if Otes failed; and he gives you this particular account, that Otes did read, as he believes, every Sunday and Holiday, from the latter end of March when he was chosen Reader, to within a Week of his going away; for that he did never read himself, as he should have done if Otes had been absent or failed to read.

We have another Witness, and that is Mr. Smith, and he swears his being there from Christmas 77. to Midsummer 78. and he remembers particularly as to April and May, because the 21st of April, he himself fell sick in the College, and went into the Infirmary, and remained there till the 7th of May; and he does remember that Otes visited him very oft in that time in the Infirmary, and told him Mr. Hilsley was gone away, and Mr. Pool was gone away, and two or three other Particulars, which happened in the College at that time; so that there is another Evidence, that is very strong with Circumstances to confirm the Testimony of the rest; and he gives you a very satisfactory account of it, by shewing the Reasons how he comes to remember these things.

Mr. Price, who was our next Witness, has given you a Relation all to the same purpose of Otes's coming there at Christmas, and of his going away at Midsummer. And he remembers particularly, that Otes was at St. Omers, when the Jesuits went to the Consult at London; for that there was a Consult, and at that time, is acknowledged to be true; but not such as he says, nor was he there; but he says some of the Fathers did call there in the way to England. And at that very time, and after, he saw him there. And Mr. Doddington gives you the same account.

Then comes Mr. Gerrard, and he tells you a Story to the same purpose; how long Otes was there, and when he came. And that the 2d of May he remembers Otes was at the Play; and he remembers the 26th of May Otes was there, which was the 16th of May, Old Style. And he is sure Otes was there at that time, for this reason, that being the Day whereon he himself was confirmed, St. Augustine's Day; and Otes was confirm'd with him; and therefore he has reason to remember Otes was at St. Omers.

My Lord Gerrard of Bromeley was our next Witness, and he gives you an account to the same purpose; and to the General Evidence, in which he confirms the others, he adds this particular, That Otes used to read with a singular canting Tone; so that he must needs remember him, and was so remarkable for other things, that he could not be absent without being miss'd, which he never was.

Then comes Mr. Morgan, who was there at that time, a Scholar; but he's now a Minister of the Church of England; and therefore not liable to Mr. Otes's great Exception of Religion; he confirms what all the Witnesses said of the time of Otes's coming, and of the time of his going away: And particularly he swears, That when Mr. Hilsley went away, he was there; when Mr. Pool went away, he was there; and when Mr. Burnaby came thither, he was there. And this is not all; for there is somewhat more remarkable in his Testimony; for he tells you particularly he does remember, That upon the 24th of April, Old Style, the Day, Gentlemen, when Otes says he was at the Consult in London, Otes was then at St. Omers. And the occasion of his remembering this he gives you an account of; for, he tells you, upon reading the Tryal of Ireland, where Otes swears, That he was here at the Consult the 24th of April, 1678. Old Style, all the College reflected upon it, and wondered at the Impudence of the Man, that he should dare to swear such a thing, when all the College remember'd him to be there all the while: And upon Recollection of Circumstances, he himself did particularly recollect his own playing at Ball that very Day, and having toss'd his Ball over the Wall, he borrowed Otes's Key to go into the Garden to fetch it: And this was thought of whilst things were fresh, and every Man remembered this, or that, or the other thing to be done at such a particular time.

Mr. Arundel, who was another Witness, proves the general Testimony of the rest, and agrees in some particular things; and all he says, is to the same purpose.

Mr. Christopher Turberville, he comes and swears Otes's being at St. Omers the 4th or 5th of May, which is the 24th and 25th of April, Old Style. For that upon Mr. Pool's going away, he changed his Chamber in the College, and saw Otes divers Days afterwards in his Chamber, and at the Door; and he knew that he constantly read in the Sodality, and that he left particularly the Sunday before he went away, which was about Midsummer 1678.

There was another Gentleman, and that was Mr. Anthony Turberville, who gives Evidence all to the same purpose; and this Circumstance goes thorough all the Testimony of these Persons, that there's scarce any body can come to, or go out of the College, but it is known to all that are there, every Man takes notice of it, 'tis the Common Discourse amongst them; and therefore they give this as the Reason of their Belief, That he was there all this while, because they did not remember any thing that should give them occasion to believe Mr. Otes was away from the College from Christmas till Midsummer, but only one time; and the remembrance of that that does shew, That they do really observe these things; for they could all tell that in January he went to Watton, and stayed out one Night.

There is one Witness more that is positive and particular, and that is Mr. Clavering, and he remembers Otes, by a very remarkable Circumstance, was at St. Omers at the very time the Congregation is said to be held in London; for he tells you there came a Person to beg Money of him, and there was a Collection made in the House; and this Person did desire to speak with Otes, who was then in the College; and whom it seems this Person had known in Spain; but Otes did refuse to speak with him, and did not come down to him. Thus he remembers such an one came there, and when he was there, he was sent to Otes to desire him to come down to this Man, and he would not. Ay, but now how is this remember'd to be at the time when the Congregation was held here in England? As to that, he gives this plain and full account, That it must be at that very time; for the Scholars did discourse among themselves, and were reckoning up what he had gotten among them, and what he had gotten at Watton; and finding that it was very inconsiderable that he had gotten at Watton, they talk'd among themselves what should be the Reason, and concluded it was, Because the Fathers were gone over to England to the Congregation.

These particular Circumstances our Witnesses give you as the Reasons of their particular Remembrances of the particular times: But, Gentlemen, you must take along with you those General Considerations too that are offered, which do affect the whole time, from Christmas till Midsummer. First, That none can come or go, without being discours'd of in the College: Next, That much more Mr. Otes must needs be miss'd, than any other, being so remarkable a Person, as they tell you, that scarce any Week pass'd without his making it remarkable by some ridiculous Action or another. They say he sat singly by himself, at a particular Table, that no Man could come into the Hall, but they must see him; and therefore, if absent, must needs miss him. And yet they swear they do not ever remember him absent, but that one Night; and if he had been absent, they must needs have observed it, because of all those Circumstances that have been reckoned up.

These are the Witnesses, Gentlemen, that we have produced to prove this Charge upon the Defendant, two of whom are brought only to verify Mr. Hilsley's Testimony; having heard it from him at that time that he had left Otes at St. Omers; when there was no Thoughts of this Question.

Now among these twenty Witnesses, there are not above two or three at most that were at either of the Tryals before. They were never produced as Evidence, tho' indeed they proved the same thing that was testified by others then, but with many other Circumstances and Particularities that were not before spoken of; some are now produced that were produced before, and the Reason is, because they are themselves concerned in those Particularities which gave occasion to the others to remember them.

Gentlemen, after the producing of so many Witnesses, and so strong a Proof; What is it that Mr. Otes has produced against it? His main Objection to their Testimony, is, There were several that came from St. Omers to testify at those former Tryals what these now swear, who were not believed, but I was believed; and the Men were Convicted, Condemned, and Executed upon my Testimony: But is that all he has to say? No, says he, I have likewise Witnesses to offer as a Counter-proof to them, a positive Proof that I was here in England, at the time they swear me to be at St. Omers; and he says well; if that be proved, there is an end of the Case. Well, what is the Proof? The Witnesses that he has, have been these four, Cicely Mayo, Servant to Sir Richard Barker, Butler his Coachman, Page another of Sir Richard's Servants, and the Parson Walker.

The Evidence of Page and Walker, tho' produced last by Mr. Otes, yet I crave leave to mention first, and set them out of the way. Page, he remembers to have seen Mr. Otes in a Disguise at Sir Richard Barker's; that is, in grey Cloaths; but he is not certain as to the time, and he cannot take upon him to say what time of the Year, or what Year it was, only he believes it was in May; and therefore that can be no sufficient Evidence to contradict Witnesses, that with great Particularity speak to certain times. As for Walker, the Parson, he said he saw him between St. Martin's lane and Leicester-fields; but he cannot remember the time when neither; nay, the Remembrance he has of it goes rather to another time, than the time in question; for being asked what Circumstance he knew the time by, he said, it was about a Year and a quarter before the Plot was discovered, which must be in April or May 1677, and that will do the Doctor no Service at all upon this Question.

Now let us consider Mrs. Mayo's Testimony; and the Oath that she made was this, That when Otes came over into England, she saw him at Sir Richard Barker's House the latter end of April, or the beginning of May, and the Week before Whitsuntide; the latter end of April, or the beginning of May, was the first time that he came, that she saw him; but that he came before, as she heard, but the Coachman only saw him, and told her that Otes had been there; but the second time she did see him, and he went in and dined there in the House: Sir Richard Barker was not there, but my Lady's Sister, her Sons and Daughters were there; she says, that she saw him again a Week before Whitsuntide; that when he came the first time he was in grey Cloaths, a white Hat, and a short Perriwig: Afterwards he was in black Cloaths, a pretty long Perriwig, not very long, but the Perriwig was brown; and these are the Circumstances she remembers to have seen him by.

Now let us see what Butler, the Coachman, says, he remembers about the beginning of May he saw Otes at his Master's House in a Disguise; the other said it was the latter end of April, or the beginning of May; but I stand not upon that; but this he does swear, That the first time he saw him, Cicely Mayo saw him too, that he was then in grey Cloaths, a white Hat, but his Hair was cut short, and he had no Perriwig on; afterwards he came in a Cinnamon-colour'd Coat, and green Ribbons, and a long black Perriwig: This is Butler's Evidence.

Now these two People's Evidence are utterly impossible to be reconciled, they contradict one another so much: First, they contradict one another in this; she says, The first time he came, she did not see him, but the Coachman told her, he had been there; but he swears, That she did at that time look out of the Window into the Yard, and did see him as well as he: Another Contradiction is this, She remembers the first time he came in grey Cloths, a white Hat, and a short Perriwig; the Coachman he swears he had no Perriwig on, but his Hair was cut short to his Ears: Then again she swears the second time, he was in black Cloths, and an indifferent long Perriwig, and the Perriwig was brown; and the other swears he was in cinnamon colour Cloths, and a long Perriwig, and it was a black one. Now thus you see the Witnesses contradict themselves, and cannot be reconciled to one another.

But take one thing more, which is very considerable, wherein she contradicts Mr. Gerrard; for she swears he was here a Week before Whitsontide, that she is sure of: Now that falls upon the nineteenth Day of May; then upon the sixteenth Day of May, was the Week before Whitsontide; now, that is a most Eminent Day, by the Testimony of Mr. Gerrard; for that happens to be the twenty sixth of May, New Style, and that was the Day he was confirmed with Mr. Gerrard at St. Omers: And no Man sure can doubt, which of the two Witnesses is to be believed; and it cannot but be true, that he was there at that time; because so remarkable a Circumstance cannot be forgotten; and yet this Woman swears that he was here a Week before Whitsontide, and that by Computation must be the time of his Confirmation: But, Gentlemen, another thing that I offer upon the Testimony of these Witnesses, is this; If you will believe it, he himself contradicts his own Witnesses, or they him, and one of them is forsworn: For he has sworn the Consult was the twenty fourth of April, and that three or four Days after that was over, he went back with the Fathers to St. Omers: Now, this contradicts all that his Witnesses have said: But he has given himself, as he thought, some little Latitude; says he, the Consult began the twenty fourth, but it held six or seven Days longer. We will for this time admit it to be so, and give him the six Days he requires; and yet after all, it will not come up to the time that his Witnesses speak to; for to the twenty fourth of April, add six Days, and that brings us just to the last Day of April; and then take four Days in May, to make up the three or four Days after the Consult was over, and we are yet at a great distance from the Whitson Week; for that was the nineteenth of May, and the Week before must be the twelfth or thirteenth, and so it is impossible to be reconciled to Truth what he and his Witnesses swear; either the Evidence that the Doctor now brings, must be a Contradiction to his own former Oath, or his Oath proves they are mistaken; besides the Contradiction that is between the Witnesses themselves; for they vary in a great many material Circumstances, which I have before reckoned up to you.

But, Gentlemen, false Witnesses are very often detected by little Circumstances, though I must needs say these are not small ones; for these are very remarkable things in themselves, and great Contradictions to one another, and therefore 'tis impossible they both can swear true.

There were some other Witnesses that were produced by Mr. Otes formerly upon this Point; one of which was Clay, the Priest, and he you hear is contradicted by Mr. Howard's Testimony, who not only tells you he was not at his House, when he says he was; but shews that Clay was mistaken in Point of Time: 'Twas not in May, but in July: But that's not all, we have another Evidence, Gentlemen, to show how this Mistake comes to pass, and which will give a great light into this sort of Practice that has been used in this Matter; for we have two Witnesses that give you an Account how Otes and Sir William Waller were at the Gate House with Clay, and there did threaten him, That unless he swore he dined with Otes at Mr. Howard's in May, they knew he was a Priest, and he should be hanged: The Man was somewhat cautious at first, for truly he knew nothing of the Matter, but at last, upon Condition he might have his Money again that was taken from him; he had been a Rogue formerly, and he did not know what he might do: Now, we find presently after, that he was in Fact brought as a Witness; what he swore, Mr. Howard tells you, and you have heard him contradicted in that point of Time. For Mr. Howard says, it was in July; and then it was agreed, that Otes was in England; for our Witnesses tell you, that at Midsummer he came away from St. Omers.

So that, Gentlemen, the Evidence that was formerly produced for him, is not only taken away by positive Counter-proof, but there is fixed upon him, with great Infamy, the additional Crime of Subornation, by forcing People to swear for him under the Threats of being hanged; and we all know how such People lay under great Fears and Terrors at that Time.

There was another Witness that was produced formerly for him; but I shall not take upon me to repeat all the particular Evidence that has been now given about that Matter: In short, our Objection to that Testimony lies thus; That Otes did swear in his Narrative, that Smith was a dangerous Man, and employed by the Jesuits to stir up the People against the Government; that appears by Otes's own Oath: But it likewise appears, that afterwards they were reconciled, and that he gave Smith a Certificate under his Hand, that he was a good Protestant, and a good Subject, and about Eminent Service for the King: Now, we see no reason hitherto, why Mr. Otes should change his Mind, after having sworn him such an ill Man, all of a sudden to be so kind to give him his Protection, and so advantageous a Character, as that was in that Season. But, Gentlemen, the Mystery is easily unfolded, if we go three or four Days further in time, which brings us to the Tryals of Whitbread and Langborn; it seems Mr. Otes was then aware of that, which is now an Objection to his Testimony; for it was made an Objection at the first Tryal of Ireland, That he was not at this Consult, for he was then actually at St. Omers; but no Witnesses were there to prove it; but now he was aware that some were a coming over, and it concerned him to make some good Proof if he could, that really and in Truth he was here in London at that Time.

And I cannot omit to take notice of what my Lord Chief Justice was pleased to observe and object to him now ; It is a wonder a Man should be here in Town so long ; a Man that had much Acquaintance, as it seems he had, a Man that went about freely and publicly, as his own Witnesses say he did, should be seen by nobody, but these few, should not be able to give an Account, by any body, where he lodged, at any one Time in this Interval. Nay, by no Circumstances that must occur to his own Knowledge, to be able to shew where he lodged, is very strange ; though it should be that he did lodge in the Houses of those that would not come to give Evidence, as he alledges, yet it is almost impossible, but there must be some other Circumstances to prove his being here, besides the Evidence of the Landlord of the House where he lodged ; but he gives no Account where he was lodged, and whom he conversed withal, but these People only ; and that they should see him, who were not his Intimates, and none else in the World, is to me one of the most strange Things that can be conceived.

Now, Gentlemen, when he has given no manner of Satisfaction, that he was here, and is by twenty Witnesses sworn not to be here ; what is it that he says to all this ? Why, he doth insist upon it, that his Credit must not be now Impeached, because that once he had the fortune to be believed, and some Men have died and suffered for it ; as if no Perjury were to be punished, but that which is unsuccessful ; whereas the reason why Perjury is taken notice of in the Temporal Courts, is only because of the Mischief that it may do : Shall it then be no Crime when a Man has done the Mischief, when the fear of that Mischief was the ground of making it a Crime ? That is a most monstrous way of arguing. And yet this would Mr. Otes have look like an Argument, that because he has been believed in his false Oaths, and Men have suffered by his Perjury, and he has been successful in his Crime, that Success has protected his Wickedness from Punishment. This I confess is a new way of arguing ; and such as none but Mr. Otes could certainly have invented.

But, Gentlemen, to contradict this, we have shown you, that as he has had the fortune to be believed ; so he has likewise had the fortune to be disbelieved. For there have been produced as many Records of Acquittals, where he was an Evidence, as there have been produced Convictions upon his Testimony ; so that he has been as often disbelieved as believed.

Whither then does he betake himself next ? He has called a great many Witnesses to give you, as Evidence for him, an Account what Opinions at that time the Houses of Parliament, the Courts of Justice, and the Juries had of his Evidence ; and then insists upon it, that now to call his Credit in question, is to arraign the Justice of the Nation, the Wisdom of both Houses of Parliament that believed him, the Honesty of the Juries that convicted those whom he accused, and the Integrity and Understanding of the Judges who were learned, wise and just Men ; and with great Earnestness he asks the Question, Why now at this time of Day should this be called in question, which received so much Credit and Approbation so long ago, by the good Opinion that all sorts of Men had of it at that Time ? And, now to question this, he would have thought to be a casting a Blot upon the Wisdom of the Nation, and an arraigning the Justice of it ; when, if the Thing be duly considered, the not punishing this heinous Offence with the utmost Severity that the Law will allow of, now, that these Circumstances appear to make it plain and evident, would be a greater piece of Injustice and Reproach, rather to our Nation, than any ways a Reflection on the Justice of it.

Gentlemen, when we consider the Circumstances of this Case now, I do verily think it will appear to be a very strange and wonderful Thing to us, that ever any Man should have believed him. And it is a strange Consideration to reflect upon, to think what Credit he had at that time. But withal consider, Gentlemen, could any one imagine, that it were possible for any Man on Earth to become so impudent, as to dare to expose himself before the High Court of Parliament, the great Courts of Justice, and there tell a most Infamous Lye for the taking away the Lives of Men ? The greatness of the Attempt, was a great inducement to the belief of it, because no Man could be presumed to dare the doing of such a Thing, if he had not a Foundation of Truth to build upon. And when he had thus made his Discovery, and that of such a nature too, a most horrid, bloody and traiterous Conspiracy to murder the King, to overturn the Government, to massacre all the Protestants in the Kingdom, and to deface the very Name of the Protestant Religion. What was more natural than that the Parliament should take all imaginable care to prevent the accomplishment of so great a Mischief ? And consider too how much easier it was for him to relate his Evidence in a continued Story, than afterwards it was to maintain it, when it came to be examined and opposed by them that were accused, who best knew wherein, and by what means to prove him false.

Gentlemen, the Care the Parliament took to disappoint any Designs of this nature, and the means they used for the Security of the King and Kingdom, and the Preservation of our Religion and Lives (which I cannot but observe was previous to the Tryal of any one Offender, that was tried and convicted upon this Evidence) must needs put the whole Nation under great apprehensions of Danger, and make the way much easier for him to be believed, as by sad Experience we found it did. Under these Circumstances came those Men to be tried, with this further (as we cannot now but think) that there were ill Men at work, that laboured to improve those Fears and Jealousies, that had already possessed Men's Minds ; the Wonder then will be the less, if Men under such Disadvantages, tried by Men under those fears and apprehensions, had the ill Fortune to be convicted. But when Men had a little overcome their Fears, and began to consider his Evidence more calmly, the Scene was changed, Otes lost his Credit, and the Men were all acquitted. Nor is this Prosecution any reflection on the Protestant Religion, whose cause he falsely assumes, fumes to himself. No, Gentlemen, the Protestant Religion had no share in that Invention. It needs not the support of a Lye, no not the most plausible Lye, much less of one so Infamous as this does now appear to be. It is rather a Vindication of our Religion, to punish such Offenders as they deserve, and the proper way to maintain the Justice of the Nation, and wipe off that Reproach this Man's Perjury has brought upon it.

L. C. J. Then, Gentlemen of the Jury, the Evidence has been very long, and it cannot be expected after so much Time has been spent in this Cause, and such a difference of Testimony, and especially considering that the Testimony has met with frequent interruptions, and, I may say, some Part of it delivered in great Confusion, it cannot be thought or imagined, I say, that I should be able to remind you of the several Particulars that concern this Case, and may be necessary to be observed about it. But, Gentlemen, I am sure, by the Knowledge I have of the most of you, you are Persons of great Understanding; so that what may be omitted by me, I question not, but your own Abilities will supply; I confess I am much shortened in my Labour, by the Pains that Mr. Solicitor has taken to sum up the Evidence to you, and without all doubt, has done it with all Faithfulness to his Master, and with great Right to himself. I could not hear much of what he did say; but you, who were nearer and did hear all, which I could not do, your Judgments will direct you to lay that Weight upon it, which it deserves, and which the Law will allow; for, Gentlemen, I am bound to tell you, that you are to lay no weight upon any Allegations on the one Side or on the other, or what is observed to you by the Court, further than is supported by the Testimony that has been offered.

Now, Gentlemen, I think it not amiss for me (before such time as I enter upon the Consideration of the Particulars, and reminding you what I take to be Evidence in this Case, and what not) to clear one Point, that this Person Otes, the Defendant, against whom this Indictment of Perjury is brought, has endeavoured to insinuate, on purpose to gain himself a Reputation, which if he could acquire this way, would add a greater Reproach to the Justice of the Nation, than it has contracted already, by giving too much Credit to such profligate Wretches, as have too lately appeared among us. The Objection he makes and insists so much upon; says he, I was believed very much before, I can produce you the Opinions of the Judges, that declared themselves very well satisfied with my Evidence, and the Verdicts of Juries, two or three; that convicted Men upon my Testimony; and not only that, but here were likewise three or four Parliaments that did not only believe that Testimony (or rather Narrative; for I cannot call that Testimony which was given before the House of Commons) that I gave, but did declare their Satisfaction of the Truth of what I said, which Satisfaction and Belief of theirs did produce Thanks from both Houses to me for giving this Testimony.

But all this while, what Mr. Solicitor said upon this Point, is a plain and a full Answer to it:

If in case upon a sudden Information, the King, the Parliament, the Courts of Law, and Juries, were surprized into this Belief, as not imagining there could be a pack of such Villains, that could be wound up to that height, as these Fellows have been; that there could be such an horrid Impostor, as this Fellow, that should make such Attempts, unless there had been some Truth in it.

Therefore the surprize of the Thing, at that Time might obtain a Belief; but, God forbid, that that Belief which was so obtained, should protect the Party believed from being called in question for the falshood of that Testimony, which was the ground of that Belief. It was hardly credible that any Person could be so wicked as to declare such impudent falsties as these; but, God forbid, that we should continue longer under the same blindness and delusion, the whole Matter is now laid open and detected. Therefore, Gentlemen, if you are satisfied in your Consciences, and do believe upon the Testimony and Evidence that has been given here this Day, that those very Things that were so much believed before, were credited upon the Surprize of a sudden Discovery, or the boldness of the Undertaking, yet now do plainly appear to be false; then be it, I say, upon your Consciences, if you let this falshood go unpunished: It is a Charge upon us who are upon our Oaths as Judges, and who must answer to the great Judge of all the World for our Judgments; and 'tis likewise a Charge upon you that are sworn to try this Cause, and must answer, as well as we, for what you do in it, not to have regard to any thing that was done before upon that hurry and surprize, but seriously to weigh and consider what is sworn now, and from thence make a Conclusion, whether you are not satisfied that innocent Blood has been spilt by the means of this Fellow: Nay, in this Case, 'tis a contracting of much more Guilt than ordinary, as it is Murder done under the Forms of Law, and common Methods of Justice; That Men should take away the Lives of their Fellow Creatures, by Perjury and False Accusations, is of such dreadful Consequence, that if the Justice of the Nation shall be afraid to have such Matters detected, there would be an end of all the Security we have of our Lives, Liberties, and whatsoever is dear to us.

Gentlemen, the Justice of the Nation lies under a very great Reproach Abroad, for this particular Thing; and we must be, all of us, that have any Concern for the Honour and Good of our Country, uneasy, till this Matter be thoroughly searched into, and impartially determined; and I take it to be a Case of the greatest Importance to the Settlement of the Kingdom, for the Credit of our Laws, for the Honour and Justice of our Kingdom, that ever came in Judgment in any of our Courts of Justice. And therefore as you respect your own Consciences, and the Obligation of that Oath you are now under, and as you would be thought to bear any regard to the Peace, Honour and Good of your Country, take care to examine strictly and impartially into the Merits of this Cause, and weigh the Evidence which has been given on all Sides: Be not at all dismayed with the Apprehension of Clamour mour or Calumny, from any sort of People whatsoever, for doing your Duty; neither be led away by the Insinuations of what was believed formerly; for you hear the Reason which might make Otes be believed then; but it is incumbent upon you to enquire, whether you have not sufficient reason to be satisfied what the Truth now is.

And, Gentlemen, I take my self to be the more obliged to take some pains in the pressing a serious and impartial Consideration of these things upon you; because I cannot but say, my Blood does curdle, and my Spirits are raised, that after the Discoveries made, I think, to the satisfaction of all that has attended this Day, to see a Fellow continue so impudent as to brazen it out, as he has done this Day; and that there should appear no more Shame and Confusion than what was seen in the Face of that monstrous Villain that stood but now at the Bar; the pretended Infirmary of his Body made him remove out of Court, but the Infirmary of his depraved Mind, the Blackness of his Soul, the Baseness of his Actions ought to be looked upon with such Horror and Detestation, as to think him unworthy any longer to tread upon the Face of God's Earth: You'll pardon my Warmth, I hope; for it is impossible that such things should come before any honest Man, and not have some extraordinary Influence upon him.

Gentlemen, As to the Merits of the Cause, you have the positive Proof of many Witnesses, whose Testimony I shall by and by, as well as I can, repeat to you; but, pray you, first give me leave to observe somewhat, as to some Points that have been started at the Bar, as, Whether a Papist can be a Witness? Now, suppose all these Persons that come here to testify this Matter against the Defendant, were Papists, as they are not, except you can take it upon your Oaths and Consciences, that all these Men are guilty of voluntary and wilful Perjury, you must find the Defendant guilty.

As to their Difference in Religion, which Otes so much hung upon, I must tell you, every Papist or Roman Catholick, call them how you will, except the contrary be made appear by a Legal Exception; I mean such as would take off the Testimony of one that were not a Papist, is as good a Witness in a Court of Justice, as any Protestant whatsoever; we are not come here to controvert Points of Religion, but to try a bare Matter of Fact; so that all that stuff that you have heard here this Day from the Defendant, and those Insinuations that he made about their Religion, on purpose to cast Dirt and Filth upon all the Testimony that they have brought against him, must signify nothing with you at all. If in case such Doctrine happen to prevail as he has this Day preached, then it is in the Power of any Villain, to swear any Mischief whatsoever against a Roman Catholick, and that Roman Catholick has no way to vindicate himself, nor to make the Truth appear. We have no such Exceptions to Witnesses in our Law; every Man, till it is made to appear, that his Credit is forfeited, may and ought to be received as a Witness to give Testimony in any Cause; so that all that Matter is of no Import at all.

And, Gentlemen, I am the rather minded to hint this unto you, because he has insinuated something out of the Tryals of Grove and Pickering, and Ireland, which was in December, in the Year 1677. at which Tryal Whitebread and Fenwick, who had pleaded to the same Indictment; were brought on to Tryal; but because there was but one Witness against them, the Court discharged them for that time, and they came not again to Tryal till the Month of June or July hereafter, when they were convicted and executed; now between that time of Ireland's Tryal, and the time when Whitebread and the rest came on to Tryal again, says Otes, they had sufficient time to have brought all their Witnesses from St. Omers, to testify this Business of my being there, having notice by the former Tryal, what Evidence was against them; but all the Witnesses they did bring, which were about fifteen or sixteen, were not sufficient to countervail the Testimony that Otes gave of his being here in Town; and thereupon they were convicted, condemned, and afterwards (I am sorry to say it) executed.

This is the Objection he makes; but at the same time I must repeat what I said before, when such a dismal Story as this was told, when he had the Confidence to relate it before, in the Houses of Parliament, and there obtained Credit; no wonder if, in that hurry, all of that Perswasion were looked upon with an evil Eye; and the Conviction of those that were at that time accused were too easy.

We must remember the Apprehensions some were under of our Religion being to be subverted, our Government to be destroyed, our King to be murdered, our Throats to be cut by the Papists, to that height, that this very Fellow, Otes, was so much credited, that all other People almost were below him, and greater Respect shewn to him, than to the Branches of the Royal Family. Nay, it was come to that degree of Folly, to give it no worse Name, than in publick Societies, to the Reproach and Infamy of them be it spoken, this profligate Villain was caressed, was drunk to, and saluted, by the Name of the Saviour of the Nation. O prodigious Madness! that such a Title, as that was, should ever be given to such a Profligate Monster of Impiety, as this is.

Good God, whither were we running, when many easy People were so strangely wrought upon by this Impostor, and when the villainous and black Designs of some evil Instruments amongst us, could prevail so far, as to deceive almost a whole Nation into the Belief of so horrid a Falshood; even at the same time that a hidden Treason too deeply contriv'd was carried on amongst us? But, God be thanked, was not too lately discovered. The Conspirators had a fair Game of it, whilst this Fellow was believed, and they needed no other means to accomplish their Design: But when he was found false, and the pretended Plot had lost its Credit in the World, what is their next Step? Why, then they enter into that black and bloody Conspiracy, from which it hath pleased God lately to deliver us.

I speak this the rather, because I know there are in my Eye several Persons, whose Fears of Popery made them give Credit to such Villains as these before: But when it pleased God to open their Eyes, and the false Mist vanish'd, they they found a real Conspiracy against the Persons of that Blessed King, lately dead, and of our Gracious Sovereign, now living, carried on under the pretence of that false, but so much credited Discovery, and now, God be thanked, all our Eyes are open. And I hope, as we are secured from what we so vainly dreaded, so we shall not be afraid to have Villany detected, and the greatest Mark of Infamy that can be put upon it.

Yes, Gentlemen, there was a Consult, and there was a Conspiracy against the Life of our King; our Government, and our Religion: Not a Consult at the White Horse in the Strand, but a Cabal and Association of perfidious Rebels and Traitors, who had a mind to embroil us in Blood and Confusion, but, God be thanked, it had not its desired Effect; the same sort of Villains were Parties in this Conspiracy, that had too great a Hand in the late great Rebellion, which we to this Day feel the smart of, and they had a mind to make use of the like Instruments, as they did before, to bring us into the like Misery, as we were before involv'd in.

And is it not a prodigious thing, to have such Actions as these to day defended in a Court of Justice, with that Impudence and Unconcernedness, as tho' he would challenge even God Almighty to punish his Wickedness, and blasphemously blesses God, that he has liv'd to do such wonderful Service to the Protestant Religion; and is so obstinate, in his Villany, as to declare he would venture his Blood for the Confirmation of so impious a Falshood; and indeed, to speak the Truth, he makes no great Venture in it; for when he had pawn'd his immortal Soul, by so perjur'd a Testimony, he may very easily proffer the venturing of his vile Carcass to maintain it?

Gentlemen, Having thus said, (and I could not forbear saying of it) give me leave to put you in mind of what lies before you now to be tryed. First, this Indictment takes notice, that there was an Indictment, taken before the Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal-delivery at Hicks's-hall, of High Treason against Whitebread, Fenwick, Ireland, Pickering and Grove, and that Indictment, and the whole Record is proved to you by Swift: For I must tell you as I go along, what Proofs there are of all the Particulars, and you, upon consideration of all that is alledged, are to be Judges what is sufficient Proof to convict the Defendant of the Crime that is laid to him; which is wilful and corrupt Perjury. The Indictment, Gentlemen, sets forth the Oath that Otes did make at Ireland's Tryal, and then avers it to be false: For the Oath that he did take, that stands thus, That he did swear he was present at a Consult, held at the White Horse Tavern in the Strand, the 24th of April 1678. That he did swear, That it was there resolved to murder the late King: How that that Resolution was carried by him from Chamber to Chamber, that is, to Whitebread's and Fenwick's, and Ireland's Chambers, and saw them sign this Resolution there; and the Assignment of the Perjury, is, That he was not present at any Consult, 'tis not that there was not any such Consult, tho' it appears by the Evidence that there was none such, but that he was not present at any Consult at all held there at that time.

Now, that he did make such an Oath, is proved by a worthy Gentleman, Mr. Foster; a Gentleman known to you all that live in the City of London; and he did truly make that Remark in the beginning of his Testimony, that any honest Man in his place would have done; That he was one of those unfortunate Men, that tryed Mr. Ireland; for tho' a Man do go according to his Conscience, as to be sure there is no question to be made of it, but all these Jury-men did in finding that Verdict; yet when I come to find, that the Evidence, upon which I convicted those Men, is detected to be false; and that upon my Verdict the Persons were executed; tho' no Guilt of their Blood is really contracted by me; yet I cannot but think my self unfortunate, that I was, tho' innocently, an Instrument of their Death; and there is never an one of you, but would have thought your selves unfortunate, if you had convicted Men upon such a Testimony, which tho' you believed then, yet afterwards you should have reason to conclude was false. And yet Otes would have you think, that because they believed him when he was a Villain, and not known to be so, you must believe him, notwithstanding his Villany is now discovered; for that is all the Argument this learned Doctor has a mind to impose upon you by.

Gentlemen, Mr. Solicitor has been very particular, in giving an Account of the whole Evidence, and then it comes to this, which is the natural Question in the Case, Whether upon the Testimonies that have been given to you, there does remain so much as a Doubt, what Verdict you ought to give; for I confess, were it a thing in the least doubtful, Matters of Perjury are so nice and tender, that we and you ought to be cautious how you convict People for Perjury in doubtful Matters; but if it be a thing without doubt, and plainly evident, that there was a Verdict thereupon, adds to the Guilt; because the Justice of the Nation is imposed upon; the God of Heaven deliver every honest Man's Soul and Conscience from such Guilt. For my part, I would not for the Universe have the least Guilt of innocent Blood lie upon me.

Then, Gentlemen, to prove what Otes swore is not true, you have no less than twenty two Witnesses, that swear directly he was not here in London the 24th of April 1678. But it may be that it is not such a positive Testimony as the Law requires to prove a Perjury; but then to swear directly that he was in another place, at that time, is a positive Contradiction to his Evidence; and this has been testified by the Oaths of twenty two Persons, against the Credit of whose Testimony there is no Objection at all really made, but only Impudence; and that Shadow of an Objection, They are all Papists, and I am a Protestant; and truly a wonderful Credit is is, I must needs say, for the Protestant Religion for to have such a Learned and Pious Supporter, as Mr. Otes, to be of that Perswasion, but it is certain there was a Judas amongst the twelve Apostles, and there are Rascals of all Perswasions. And truly I take it makes never the more for his Advantage, nor the Honour of our Church, that he is pleased to call himself by that Name, which he, and such as he, have brought into some Scandal and Reproach, by setting themselves up, as the great Pillars of it; but we know Dr. Otes has been very liberal to himself, he has given himself Baptism, and given himself the Doctor's Degree, and now he gives himself the Title of the Reforming Protestant, Mr. Otes. We have Protestant Shoe-makers, and Protestant Joiners, and Protestant Atheists, and all sorts of true Protestant Rascals; but it becomes us and you to assert the Honour of our Religion by disowning any Fellowship with such Villains, or their Actions.

Gentlemen, The Method that was taken, gives you an exact account in point of time, as to this whole Business. First, Says Mr. Hilsley, I left him, in time the 23d of April, New Stile, at St. Omers, and I am sure I saw him there then, which is the 13th, Old Stile, the 24th of April, New Stile, which is the 14th, Old Stile, I came from St. Omers, I did not see him there that Morning, but I myself came to Calais, it being Sunday, and I stayed there till Sunday in the Afternoon, and all Night. I came on Monday in the Afternoon to take Water at Calais, and from thence went to Dover. And from thence the next Day I went towards London; but I stayed four or five Days by the way before I came to London; but then there is this Circumstance that you must take along with you, Gentlemen, That at this time, one Mr. Burnaby was coming from London, and going to St. Omers, and met with Mr. Hilsley in his way towards London; says Hilsley, I came afterwards to Town, and that was upon the Monday following, which happens to be the 21st or 22d of April, our Stile; but this I do remember very particularly, which makes his Testimony to be true, and not dressed up for this occasion; says he, I told one Osborn at that time that we had a pretty Fellow at St. Omers, that went sometimes by the Name of Lucy, and sometimes by the Name of Otes, a Minister of the Church of England; and there he comes and gives an account of his ridiculous childish Actions, and what a remarkable Fellow he was; and this, says he, I told to Osborn.

Now, to make this good, you have one Mr. Dorrel, who tells you there happened a Discourse, where he was present, between his Mother and Mr. Osborn, about Religion; and amongst other things, Osborn did say, Mr. Hilsley had told him he left Otes at St. Omers when he came away from thence; and Mr. Osborn, he comes and says, I remember I did tell Mr. Dorrel and his Mother, at that time that Mr. Hilsley did tell me this Story; so that here are these two Witnesses which support Mr. Hilsley in that Circumstance of the time of his coming away, and his Relation of Otes being left behind him, and that this was related about the 21st or 22d of April.

Burnaby is the next Person that was produced, and he swears he met Hilsley by Custinbourn; and he happens to set out for St. Omers the 18th of April, our Stile, and to come thither to St. Omers the 21st; and he swears positively, that he was there the 21st, 22d, 23d, and was there the 25th Day of April, our Stile; and he does positively affirm, that all those Days he saw Otes there at St. Omers; that Otes intruded into his Company at his first coming; and that he and all the other Scholars wondered at the Confidence of the Man; and he particularly remembers that he was with him at a Publick Entertainment that was there the 25th; and if so, then it is impossible that what Otes has sworn of his being at the Consult the 24th of April, our Stile, can be true; and except you can imagine Mr. Otes to fly from St. Omers the 24th Day in the Morning, and be at the Consult and back again at Night, which is more than he would have believed, because he swears the contrary, you must conclude that what he swore was false.

The next Witness is Mr. Pool, and he comes and says, he was there at St. Omers, and he came over from thence the 25th of April, and that was the Day after Otes swears the Consult of the Plot to be here; and all the rest of the Witnesses do directly swear, That at the time that Pool went from thence, Otes was there; so that the Testimony of Pool is fully and positively confirmed; and Pool gives you a reason why he came over, which was the Death of a Brother of his, and upon a Prospect of an Estate he came into England, which likewise is a reasonable Circumstance why he should remember the time, because he had such Inducement to come over hither.

The next, Gentlemen, is one Thornton, and he comes to the Month of May, to the 1st and 2d of May, their Stile, which was the 21st and 22d of April, our Stile, and particularly he is sure Otes was there upon the 22d of April, our Stile, that is, the 2d of May, their Stile. For, says he, there was an Action or Play of the Scholars; and I can tell you how I remember Otes was there, Otes had a mind to have a place to see the Play, which he had no Pretence or Title to; and he had a Scuffle with some body about it; and therefore I remember by that Token, that he was there at that time.

Now, Gentlemen, it is not easy to be imagined, that six or seven Men should agree in their Testimony in all those Circumstances, which in themselves are but minute; yet when offered as Reasons to induce Men's Remembrance, must be allowed as good Reasons; and yet this is to be thought to be but a made Story. If Sir Richard Barker's Coachman, and Mrs. Mayo had had any such Circumstances to support their Testimony, they would have had much more Credit.

Then there is one Conway; and it is very observable what he speaks of; for he was there all the while that they say Otes was there, and he gives you an account that he saw him with Burnaby the first time he came over, and agrees with Burnaby in this, that he wonder'd much at his Confidence, and did think that he was very well known to him before: He swears Otes came in thither about the beginning of December 77, and he was not absent, says he and several more, any one Night, except in January once at Watton, till he went away in June 78. Nay, they are so precise in their Memory for very good Reasons, because they are so regular in their Societies, and keep a strict Order, each has his fixed Place in the Refectory, where all the Socii or the Members of the College do meet; and because this Fellow was an old Fellow, older than the rest, and likewise was a Dunce, therefore he was set at the Dunce-Table in every body's View, because he was a Block-

Blockhead, and too old to keep Company with the Boys; so that though perhaps one of those young Fellows in a mixt Society may escape the View, and be absent without being missed, yet Remarkable Mr. Otes is not so easily forgotten, that us'd to sit by himself. And as that Noble Lord, my Lord Gerrard of Bromley says, he has a particular Face, and a particular Tone; and there was more reason to remark him than any other, both upon the Account of his Person and of his Actions; so that I must needs say indeed, it is not a downright and positive Swearing, but their Testimony is given with deliberation and recollection of such particular Circumstances as may reasonably induce any unprejudic'd Person to give Credit to it.

The next Witness, Gentlemen, is Haggerstone, whose Evidence is wonderful particular, and very material as to the Circumstances that accompany it. For you are to observe, that in these Colleges some are of the Sodality, and some are not; and some are of such and such Classes or Forms, and others of other. Now this Gentleman and Mr. Otes were of the same Form, and he does particularly remember that he was setting up for a Preacher, as he has an excellent knack that way; and he tells you, how ridiculous he made the late King in a Sermon; that he halted between two Opinions, and there ran a Stream of Popery between his Legs; and such like precious Stuff he vented. And to fix it to be about the same time that is now in question, he says, he particularly remembers it was when he was Reader, when Mr. Otes was, it seems, the Buffoon to the Society, or as I may call him, the Jack-pudding to the College, that us'd to make them Sport, and was guilty of so many ridiculous Things, that they could not but put particular Remarks upon him.

Next, I take notice, that this Person says, there were two Persons, Williams and Marsh, that were qualified to give Suffrages in the Congregation, that is, they were pass'd eighteen Years standing, and did go over: For that there was a Consult, is not denied, nor that it was in London, nor that it was upon the 24th of April; but they say, it was a Triennial Meeting, which they us'd to have once in three Years for the choice of some Officers to manage the Affairs of the Society; as for the choice of a Provincial, and other Persons that they were to send upon their Errands, in order to the support of their Society; so that under the Colour and Countenance, of what was in it self ordinary and usual, and that happened to be at that Time, Otes, who had heard somewhat of it, and that it was the 24th of April, and that such and such were to be there, he upon that Hear-say, as should seem at St. Omers, does feign and contrive this pretended Conspiracy.

The next is one Beesfon; and it is very material too that he swears: For besides what he testifies, That from the time of his coming, which was in December 77, he was not absent till the 23^d of June, when he went away; and for the Time in question, he very well remembers his being there, by this Circumstance: Says he, I was chosen to be Reader of the Sodality in the Month of March, but then Otes comes and gets the Office out of my Hands; but still with me there was that Benefit reserved, that if he should at any time fail of Reading there upon a Sunday, or a Holy-day, I was then to have read, and to have supplied his Place. Says he, I was there from March, till the Time Otes went away in June; and Otes read there that very Sunday before the Time in June that he went away. And I am sure I heard him read every time; and in case he had not read every time, I must have read in his Absence: But I did not read at all during that time.

Now, Gentlemen, when a Man is to succeed or to supply the Absence of another in an Office that is peculiar as to the Charge incumbent upon the Officer, and considerable as to the Profit of it, that must needs make an impression upon the Mind, and give a Man a more exact remembrance of the Thing; and therefore I recommend it particularly to your Observation.

The next is one Mr. Smith, and he says, he saw Otes there all the Time: And as to one part of it, when he himself was in the Infirmary, Otes went to visit him every two or three Days; nay, and about such a Time in May, says he, which was about the beginning of May, Otes being then in the Infirmary, not well, the Doctor and he had a pretty Dialogue together, and Otes spoke false Latin to the Doctor, for he said, Si placeat Dominatio vestra, in the beginning of his Compliment; This he did particularly say was the Expression that this excellent Scholar us'd to the Physician at his first application to him, and all the whole College took notice of that Piece of his Learning.

The next is one Price, and he tells you, he was there all the time that the others speak of; he remembers him very well, and particularly says, I am sure Otes was there the 11th of May, N. S. which will be the first of May O. S. Because, says he, I know he was soundly beaten that Day upon a Quarrel that he had there; this particularly he speaks to, besides his remembrance of the other Circumstances in concurrence with the former Witnesses.

Mr. Doddington swears the same, and Mr. Gerrard also swears the same, with that other particular Circumstance that Mr. Solicitor repeated to you, which was of Otes being there upon the Day of Confirmation, the 26th of May N. S. the 16th of May O. S. and he is sure of it, because he was Confirmed along with him, and therefore it is impossible he should forget it: And my Lord Gerrard, who was next, gives this reason upon his remembrance of all the forementioned Particulars, that he always took special notice of the Man for his Canting Tone, his Physiognomy, and remarkable Behaviour.

Then there is Mr. Morgan who is no Papist, but a Minister of the Church of England; now Mr. Otes was angry with all the rest, because they were Catholics; but what has to say to Mr. Morgan who is a Protestant? Why the truth is, there are none of them to be believed, because they swear against him, and really he ought to be permitted to give that reason, or it is like to go very hard with him; for if in case you believe but a third Part of the Testimony that has been given; it is enough to do his Work. But what says Mr. Morgan? Truly he comes up to the 24th of April particularly, and he tells you how he remembers it; and the first Occasion he had to look into it was; they they being all surprized at St. Omers at what Otes had Sworn, and Mr. Morgan recollecting with himself, did remember that very Day he was playing at Ball within the College, and happened to toss his Ball over the Wall into the Garden, and not being able to recover it any other way, he spied Otes walking and looking into his Book, and therefore he desired him to lend him his Key, and by the help of that, he went in and fetched his Ball; and this was the very Day that Otes swore he was here.

Mr. Arundel says the same: The two Turbervoiles say the same; and one of them is positive to have seen him there, either the 24th and 25th, or 23d and 24th of April O. S. which is the 3d and 4th, or 4th and 5th of May N. S. and if it were either of these Days, it cannot be possible he should be here at the Consult.

The next is Mr. Clavering, and I cannot but particularly take notice of what he has sworn: He says Mr. Otes was there all the time that the rest speak of; but it seems particularly about the time of the Congregation in London: There comes in a Stranger that was poor, and this Gentleman Mr. Clavering made a Collection for him; and it was talked of in the College as the reason why he had not Success in his Collection, because the Fathers were gone to the Congregation. Nay, and yet farther says he, I do remember particularly that Mr. Williams and Mr. Marsh did go over to the Congregation, but Otes did not; for I do remember when Williams and Marsh came back again, I had some Discourse with Mr. Otes about the Congregation: He came to me, and desired to know of me what Account I was able to give of the Matter of that Meeting after the Consult was over. Now had Mr. Otes been there, and been a Person of that great Trust that he had sworn himself into, he needed not sure have asked Mr. Clavering at St. Omers, what the Business of the Consult was at London, where he himself had been, but the other had not.

There is besides Mr. Copley, another Witness, Mr. Cooke, that speaks particularly of the 30th of April, that he was sure Otes was there then, because of the Procession, and because he walked by himself in it; and Wright the last Witness gives a general Account, but speaks to no particular Time.

And now, Gentlemen, after all this Evidence, Viva voce, you must give me leave to hint Testimonium Rei, an improbable Oath was that which Otes owns he made, if it be considered in all its Parts. Can any Man believe that fifty Persons should meet together in a Tavern in London, and these fifty Persons should come to a Resolution to kill the King and subvert the Government, and alter the Religion; and that this Consultation being drawn up in the Tavern (for so he swears it was) they should sever themselves into lesser Clubs and Companies, and take care that none should sign when they were altogether and among themselves, but must have it carried up and down from one Man's Chamber to another, and find no body to trust with this Affair, that if discovered, must subject them to present Destruction, and ruin their whole Party, but only Mr. Otes, who was none of their own Order, nor does appear to be of such Credit amongst them? Can you believe any Men should be so void of Sense and Reason, that of fifty together, and those reputed as subtle as any Sort of Men whatsoever, there should not be one Man of common Understanding that should take care for a more rational Management of so great and hazardous an Undertaking? When they were met together, and might have dispatched it in a quarter of an Hour, they should separate themselves into several Parts of the Town, and trust a Resolution of that nature in Mr. Otes's Pocket, in whom if they had had more Confidence than they seem to have, yet it was folly and madness to give him that Opportunity of destroying all them, and making himself; were there no other Evidence but the very Testimony of the Thing, it would go a very great way with me I confess; but I must say withal, you are Judges of this Fact, upon a superadded Testimony of Twenty two Witnesses, Viva voce, I think it leaves the Thing without any doubt.

Gentlemen, the Answer given by the Defendant to this Charge is very fallacious; and though he puts such a Countenance upon it, as though his Witnesses were such Persons of Credit, that nothing could be objected against them, yet he is certainly very much mistaken in that: He has produced but two positive Witnesses, and those two as positive as they are in their Proof, are likewise positive in their Contradictions of one another, and what they have said is left to your Consideration.

The one is a Coachman, the other was Sir Richard Barker's House-keeper; they indeed do say, Sir Richard Barker's Wife's Sister, and his Nephew, and his Daughter, and his Nieces, and a worshipful Knight, and I know not who, that the old Woman tells me are gone into my Countrey, were all there at the same time, and no body comes to testify it, but only this Coachman and this old Woman: These, Gentlemen, are Things fit to be thought of.

But now let us consider how they agree in their Evidence. Says the Woman, I saw him not till the beginning of May, but I am sure he was there before once or twice. And how does she know that? Because the Coachman told her so; and he came there several times, but he did dine there but once; and when he came there the first time she saw him, he came in such a Disguise, and he had a short Perriwig, and a kind of a short white Coat, and a white Hat; but when my Coachman comes to swear, he tells you the first time he saw him, the Woman saw him too, that he had his own Hair, and cut close to his Ears, that made him look, as the young Fellow told her, like a Quaker. And when I asked the Coachman, Are you sure that Benjamin the young Fellow did see him the first time you saw him there? He told me, No; but he was sure the old Woman did look out of the Window and see him, which she denies. I then asked him how often he dined there? He tells you several Times, and there were such and such, and the old Woman did see him dine there several times; which she denies that she ever saw him dine there above once: And I take notice of one of the Evidence, the Coachman, he gives but an odd sort of Reason for his remembrance: In February, says he, my Lady died, and my Master was sick at Putney, and Otes came into the Yard while I was cleaning my Coach; and I am sure it was where the

Coat

Coat of Arms hung over the Door, because he ask'd me about my Lady's death, and therefore it must be in May, when, for ought does appear to the contrary, it might be in any other Month after the Escutcheon was up; and in the other Circumstances there is no certainty at all; So that it is plain, these Witnesses swear according as their Humour leads them, and not according to any remembrance they have of the Thing.

And I rather believe it, because the third Witness, that is Page the Apothecary, that used to make up Sir Richard Barker's Medicines, gives an Evidence contrary to both those, he cannot remember the Year positively or particularly; but I'll tell you how he thwarts and contradicts the other Peoples Testimony; for he remembers he came in such a Disguise, but he believes no body spoke to him but himself, because he found him walking in the Place that was for the common reception of the Patients, and he asked for Dr. Tongue, and he not being within, he went away very discontented: And so now these three Witnesses seem to contradict one another; and the last Witness Walker, who is the Parson, he says nothing to the Matter; for it does plainly appear, the Time which he speaks of, which was about a Year and a half before he was called to testify at the five Jesuits Tryal, must be in the Year 77, and not in the Year 78, which is the Question here, which must be before he went first to St. Omers.

Gentlemen, the other Part of Mr. Otes's Defence has been upon this Topick: Says he, I have been believed heretofore, the Parliaments have given me Credit; and to prove it, he has called several Noble Lords and Persons of Quality. The first was my Lord of Devonshire, who says he cannot remember any Particulars of his Evidence, 'tis so long since; but he remembers the Parliament, upon the Evidence given of the Plot, did make such Votes as we do all know of. And there were a great many People that gave Credit to his Testimony, who, God be thanked, are of another Opinion now. And my Lord of Clare says, he was not in the House of Lords at the beginning of the Discovery, and cannot remember any Thing in particular. But my Lord of Huntingdon was a little more particular; and Mr. Otes began to be angry with him, because he spoke so much: Says he, I remember Mr. Otes was examin'd in the House of Lords, and was believed there, because they did believe he spoke Truth at that time; but now, upon Consideration of the Contradictions and Falsities of his Evidence, I cannot but say, I do believe him, says he, to be a great Villain, and that he has been guilty of spilling innocent Blood. And this Noble Lord speaks with great Honour and Consideration: And truly, I believe, if every Man that is here were to speak his Mind, my Lord has delivered the Opinions of us all, and many Thousands more in the Nation.

Mr. Otes call'd next my Lord Chief Baron, my Brother Gregory, my Lord of London, Sir George Treby, Mr. Williams, and my Brother Dolben. But they all tell you, they are able to give no particular Answers to his Questions; and this was the Sum of his Evidence.

To this Mr. Attorney General has given a Reply of Evidence, that truly is of very great Moment. First, here is produced Sir George Wakeman, whom Otes accused of High Treason, and he suffered his Tryal and was acquitted; so that as well as the Jury had given Credit to him in the former Verdicts, so says Mr. Attorney, I must speak likewise for the Credit of that Verdict that did disbelieve him, because though he did swear as roundly and briskly up to the Matter as he had done before, yet when he had not the Hurry and Surprize of his Discovery to support him, his Villany was detected, and the Innocent acquitted. And besides the Record of the Acquittal, here is the Person himself who is now under no dread or danger, having stood his Tryal and being acquitted; and he takes it upon his Oath, in the Presence of the great God, and the Searcher of Hearts, That whatsoever Otes swore against him at his Tryal, was every Tittle of it false; And this Acquittal of his, being after great and mature Consideration, is an Evidence of another-gets quality, than the Verdicts of the other Convictions.

Next to him, is my Lord Castlemain, a Person of very great Honour; and he gives an Account he was arraigned of High Treason at this Bar, and upon his Tryal Otes was produced as a Witness against him, and there he swore he met with my Lord Castlemain in Lincolns-Inn-Fields, and great familiarity there was between them, so that my Lord could not trust him in a less Affair than the Plot; and away he goes with him to Fenwick's Chamber, there to talk about a Design of killing the late King. Mr. Otes, of all Mankind must be the great Repository of this Secret; but the Jury then being Persons of great Understanding and Integrity, did not believe Otes, but acquitted my Lord Castlemain: And he does here take it upon his Oath, back'd with all the Imprecations of Evil to himself that a Man can use, That there was not one Word of Truth in Otes's Testimony; nor did he ever see Otes in his life, till such time as he was taken up upon his Accusation. Now are here two Persons of Honour and Quality, that upon their Oaths do particularly give you an Account, as in the Presence of Almighty God, that Otes has twice forsworn himself against them.

Gentlemen, there is notice to be taken of the Journal of the House of Lords; and though it is true for the sake of the Precedent, and to secure the Justice of the Nation, we did keep them strictly to their Proof, that it was upon Oath. And as to the Business of Smith, though we do believe the Thing in our private Judgments, yet we thought it not fit to be permitted, that Persons should upon their own Oaths confess themselves to be guilty of Perjury, and afterwards give Evidence against others; for such are not to have the Countenance of ever being Witnesses again: Yet by the Records of Parliament, and other Evidence, there is enough to make the Matter aimed at clear.

For it is clear by his Narrative, that Otes did first swear, as far as he could well swear, to bring him into the Displeasure of the People: For that was his way to intimidate all he had to do with, and thereby force them to comply with his Designs. And there was no more plausible Accusation at that time, than to accuse a Man for saying somewhat against the Parliament, or being in a Combination to subvert the Protestant Religion. But you see when he comes to have his own Turn served, then this Man upon whom he had fixed such an odious Character, is really no Papist at all, but engaged in Service for his King and Country, and has Mr. Otes's Passport, a Thing of great advantage to him at that Season. This the King's Counsel made use of with great reason, as an Evidence of Tampering: For the Man has altered his Opinion of one he had before accused, and now brings him as an honest Man to give Evidence for him. And this, say they, must be intended to be done by Practice and by Threats.

And the rather, Gentlemen, for that you have an Account by Witnesses sworn, that there was one Clay a Popish Priest, that lay in Prison at the Gate-House, and while he was there Otes and Sir William Waller came into the Prison to him, and tampering with him, says Otes, I hear there are some St. Omers Boys that intend to testify that I was at St. Omers, when I say I was at London; but you must swear, that you dined with me at Mr. Howard's in May 1678. or if you will not, you know I know you to be a Priest, and I'll hang you. Says Clay, Where is my Silver and Gold that was taken away from me? And we all know Sir William Waller was wonderful good at the fingering of Gold; he us'd to take away broad Pieces as Popish Reliques, because of the Crosses upon them. Says Clay, Give me my Gold again, I will swear for you; I have been a Rogue before, and I may be a Rogue again. And accordingly a Contract is made for him to swear directly that Otes and he were together at Mr. Howard's House in May 78. This very Fellow that tells you now the Story, told it the next Morning to another Man, who has likewise sworn the same. Then is Clay conveyed by Otes to the Old Bailey, and there swears, being thus threatened and suborn'd, That in May 1678. he and Mr. Otes dined together at Mr. Howard's House, and you have Mr. Howard produc'd, who does swear that Clay did swear so; but indeed he was not there with Mr. Otes at Dinner till July after.

This, Gentlemen, is direct Corruption and Subornation; and if a Man will be a corrupt Knave, and endeavour to suborn Witnesses to swear that which is false, he is the more likely to swear false himself. Besides, that you are to take notice, here is his own Narrative produced, where you have it sworn by himself, That he went back to St. Omers about the beginning of May, and was there all the Month of May, and in June till the latter end of it. Then all this while, either Mr. Otes, or his Witnesses, are perjured in the Case: He says, he stay'd but three or four Days in England after the Consult was over, and then went freight back again to St. Omers. Which must be the first Week in May; but if you believe his two Witnesses, he din'd with them several times after that: And so it is apparent, some of them are guilty of gross and foul Perjury.

Now, Gentlemen, I cannot but resort back to the Objection that I made at first. 'Tis strange to me, that a Man that came upon such a Design, should go publickly about the Streets at Noon-day, though in a Disguise, yet he was known. But if you take the Persons Time to be in the Year 1677, then it is easily reconciled what they did say of their seeing him in such a Disguise; and so all their Testimony may stand together, and perhaps they may mistake in a Point of Time, though not in the Substance of their Evidence; and I would out of Charity conclude it to be so.

But I will say, if they are to be taken strictly to the Year 1678, it is monstrous to imagine, that we should have no body brought to let us know where he lodged, where he eat, with whom he convers'd for all that time.

Gentlemen, I have detained you the longer in this Matter, because I take it to be of so great Weight, wherein the Justice and Honour of the Nation are so much engag'd, and it was therefore fit this Cause should be tryed in the most solemn and publick manner, in order to vindicate the Nation from the Reproach and Calumny of Injustice and Oppression. And sure I am, if you think these Witnesses swear true, as I cannot see any colour of Objection, there does not remain the least doubt, but that Otes is the blackest, most perjur'd Villain that ever appear'd upon the face of the Earth.

Cl. of Cr. Tipstaff, you must take care of the Jury.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, if any of you have a mind to drink at the Bar, before you go, you shall have some got for you.

Jury. No, my Lord, we do not care for drinking.

L. C. J. Then we will stay for you.

Then the Jury withdrew to consider of their Verdict, and after about a quarter of an Hour's stay, they returned and delivered in their Verdict: That the Defendant was Guilty of the Perjury whereof he was Indicted. Which being Recorded, the Lord Chief Justice spoke to the Jury, to this effect.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, that we are not, God be thanked, in those Times of Disorder and Confusion that we have been heretofore in, to have Humming or Hissings to declare the Auditors Approbation or Dislike of Juries Verdicts. But because there has been this Day mention made of the Opinions of Judges about Verdicts, I shall take the liberty to declare my Mind to you now; That for my Part, I am satisfied in my Conscience, you have given a good and a just Verdict; and so I believe is every other Judge upon the Bench.

To which the rest of the Judges assented; and then the Court arose.

TITUS OTES.

Die Sabbati 9. Maii 1685. in Banco Regis.

Dominus Rex versus OTES.

HIS Day being appointed for the Tryal of the Other of the Causes between Our Sovereign Lord the King, and Titus Otes, for Perjury: The same began about nine in the Morning, and proceeded after this manner:

First, Proclamation was made for Silence: Then the Defendant was called; who, appearing in Person, was advised to look to his Challenges; but he challenged none; only he desir'd, that they might be all ask'd, Whether they were of the Grand Jury that found the Bill? Which was done: And all denying it, the Twelve sworn were these:

Sir Thomas Vernon, Kt. Nicholas Charleton, Esq; Thomas Langham, Esq; Thomas Hartop, Francis Griffiths, John Kent,	}	Jur,	George Toriano, Henry Loades, John Midgley, John Pelling, Thomas Short, and George Peck.

But should take them to answer, &c.

Which Indictment the said Justices of our Lord the King, afterwards (to wit) at the Goal-delivery of our said Lord the King, of Newgate, holden by Adjournment for the County of Middlesex, at Justice-Hall in the Old Bailey, in the Suburbs of the City of London, on Friday (to wit) the 13th Day of June, in the 31st Year aforesaid, before Sir James Edwards, Knight, Mayor of the City of London; Sir William Scroggs, Knight, Lord Chief Justice of His Majesty's Court of King's Bench; Sir Francis North, Knight, Lord Chief Justice of His Majesty's Court of Common-Pleas; Sir Thomas Allen, Knight and Baronet, one of the Aldermen of the said City of London; Sir George Jeffries, Knight, Recorder of the said City of London; and other their Companions, Justices of our said Lord the King, assigned to deliver his Goal of Newgate of the Prisoners in the same being, by their own proper Hands did deliver there, in the Court of Record, in form of Law to be determined: And thereupon, at the said Goal-delivery of our Lord the King, of Newgate, holden by the Adjournment aforesaid, for the County aforesaid, at Justice-Hall aforesaid, the said Friday the 13th of June, in the 31st Year aforesaid, before the aforesaid Justices of our said late Lord the King last named, came the said Thomas White, otherwise Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwise Harrison, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, under the Custody of Sir Richard How, Kt. and Sir John Chapman, Knight, Sheriff of the County aforesaid; into whose Custody, for the Cause aforesaid, they were before that time Committed; being brought to the Bar there, in their proper Persons; who were committed to the aforesaid Sheriff, &c. And immediately being severally demanded concerning the premises aforesaid, in the Indictment aforesaid specified, charg'd upon them as above, how they would thereof acquit themselves; the said Thomas White, otherwise Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwise Harrison, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, did severally say, That they were Not thereof Guilty: And thereupon, for Good and Bad, did severally put themselves upon the Country. And thereupon, upon the Indictment aforesaid last recited, at the Session of our Lord the King, at the Justice-Hall in the Old Bailey, it was so far proceeded, that the Issue aforesaid between our said late Lord the King, and the said Thomas White, otherwise Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwise Harrison, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner; afterwards (to wit) the aforesaid Friday, the 13th Day of June, in the 31st Year aforesaid, at Justice-Hall aforesaid, by a certain Jury of the Country in that behalf duly impanell'd, Sworn and Charged, was Tried; and that upon the Tryal of the Issue aforesaid last mentioned, between our said late Lord the King, and the said Thomas White, otherwise Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwise Harrison, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, at London aforesaid, (to wit) at the Justice-Hall in the Old Bailey aforesaid, in the Parish of St. Sepulchre in the Ward of Faringdon Without, London, aforesaid, the said Defendant, Titus Otes, was also a Witness produced on behalf of our said late Lord the King, upon the Tryal aforesaid, upon the Indictment last aforesaid: And he, the aforesaid Titus Otes, then and there at the Session last aforesaid, at the Justice-Hall aforesaid, in the Court of the same Session (to wit) at the Parish and Ward aforesaid, was duly sworn upon the Holy Gospels of God, to speak and testify the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, of, and in the Premises, in the Issue aforesaid last mentioned, so as aforesaid joyned between our said late Lord the King, and the said Thomas White, otherwise Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwise Harrison, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner. And that the said Titus Otes then and there, at the Session aforesaid last mentioned, in the Justice-Hall aforesaid, in the Court of the same Session, upon his Oath aforesaid, upon the Indictment last aforesaid, by his own proper Act and Consent, of his most wicked Mind, falsely, voluntarily, and corruptly did say, depose, swear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the Jury aforesaid last mentioned, so as aforesaid Sworn and impanell'd to try the Issue aforesaid between our said late Lord the King, and the said Thomas White, otherwise Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwise Harrison, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner. That William Ireland (one William Ireland, then before Convicted and Executed for High Treason against our late Lord the King, meaning) took his Leave of him the said Titus Otes and others, at the Chamber of the said William Ireland, then being in Russel-street (a certain Street, called Russel-street, lying within the City of Westminster, in the County of Middlesex, meaning) between the 8th and 12th Day of August, in the Year of our Lord 1678. Whereas, in truth and in deed, the said William Ireland did not take his Leave of the said Titus Otes, or any other Persons whatsoever, at the Chamber of the said William Ireland, then being in Russel street aforesaid, between the said 8 and 12 Days of August, in the Year of our Lord 1678. And so the said Titus Otes, upon the said Friday the 13th Day of June, in the 31st Year aforesaid, at the Session last aforesaid, at the Justice-Hall aforesaid, in the Court of the same Session, upon the Indictment last aforesaid, so put in Issue, and Tryed as aforesaid, between our said late Lord the King; and the said Thomas White, otherwise Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwise Harrison, John Garven, and Anthony Turner, by his own proper Act and Consent, and of his most wicked Mind, falsely, voluntarily, and corruptly, in manner and form aforesaid, did commit voluntary and corrupt Perjury, to the great Displeasure of Almighty God, in manifest contempt of the Laws of this Kingdom of England, to the evil and pernicious Example of all others in the like Case offending, and against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. Upon this Indictment he has been Arraigned; and thereunto hath pleaded, Not Guilty: And for his Tryal, hath put himself upon the Country, and His Majesty's Attorney-General likewise; which Country you are. Your Charge is, To enquire, whether the Defendant, Titus Otes, be Guilty of the Perjury he stands Indicted, or Not Guilty. If you find him Guilty, you are to say so: If you find him Not Guilty, you are to say so, and no more: And hear your Evidence.

Sir George
Jefferies.

L. C. J. Look ye, Mr. Attorney, my Lord Chief Justice Jones has sent to know, whether you have any thing to do with him to Day, here?

Sir Robert
Sawyer.

Mr. At. Gen. Not at all, that I know of.

L. C. J. Mr. Otes, Do you intend to make use of my Lord Chief Justice Jones, or any of the Judges of the Common Pleas, as Witnesses?

Otes. Yesterday, my Lord, I did call for them, to have made use of them, as Witnesses.

L. C. J. But have you any thing to say to them to Day?

Otes. I cannot tell, as yet.

L. C. J. Then my Lord Chief Justice Jones must be told, That he does not know, whether he shall, or not. Go on, Sir Samuel Astrey.

Then Proclamation was made for Information, and Evidence was made in usual manner.

Mr. Phipps. May it please your Lordship, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury; This is an Indictment against Titus Otes, Clerk, for Perjury: And this Indictment sets forth, That William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, in the 30th Year of the late King, were Indicted of High Treason, and Tryed at the Old Bailey; and at that Tryal, the Defendant, Titus Otes, was produced a Witness for the King; and being sworn to tell the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth; did falsely, voluntarily, and corruptly depose, and swear, and give in Evidence to the Jury that did try that Cause, That the said William Ireland was in Town (within the Cities of London and Westminster, or the Places adjacent, meaning) upon the First or Second Day of September, in the Year 1678. Whereas, in truth, the said William Ireland was not in Town, nor within the Cities of London and Westminster, or the Places adjacent, upon the First or Second Day of September, in the Year 1678. And so the said Titus Otes hath committed wilful and corrupt Perjury. And the Indictment further sets forth, That upon the 13th Day of June, in the 31st Year of the late King, Thomas White, otherwise Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwise Harrison, John Garven, and Anthony Turner, were Indicted and Tryed at the Old Bailey for Treason; and at that Tryal, the said Titus Otes was a Witness produced on the part of the King: And being sworn to testify the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth; by his own Act and Consent, of his own most wicked Mind, falsely, voluntarily, and corruptly did depose, and swear, and give in Evidence to the Jury, That William Ireland (one William Ireland, before that time Convicted and Executed for High Treason, meaning) did take his Leave of him the said Titus Otes, at his the said William Ireland's Chamber, then being in Russel Street, between the 8th and 12th Day of August, in the Year of our Lord 1678. Whereas, in truth, the said William Ireland did not take his Leave of him the said Titus Otes, or of any other Persons whatsoever; at his the said William Ireland's Chamber, then being in Russel-Street aforesaid, between the said 8th and 12th Day of August, in the Year of our Lord 1678. And so the said Titus Otes did then and there commit wilful and corrupt Perjury. And this is laid to be to the great Displeasure of Almighty God, in contempt of the Laws of this Land, to the evil and pernicious Example of all others in the like Case offending, and against the King's Peace, Crown, and Dignity. To this he has pleaded, Not Guilty. If we prove it, we do not question, but you will find him Guilty.

Mr. At. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; Mr. Otes stands Indicted for having perjured himself: The Instances, Gentlemen, that we charge him with, are these: First, What he swore at the Tryal of Ireland; and we say, that at that Tryal he did swear Ireland was in Town the 1st or 2^d of September, 1678. The second Instance is, What he swore at the Tryal of the five Jesuits; and there we say, he did swear, That Ireland was in Town between the 8th and 12th of August, and that he took his Leave of him here in Town at his Chamber in Russel-Street; and we do charge him by this Indictment, that he has forsworn himself in both Instances: And that Ireland, Gentlemen, was neither in Town between the 8th and 12th of August, nor the 1st or 2^d of September. And we shall make it out very evidently; For, Gentlemen, as to the Proof in this Case, our Case stands thus; We say, That the 3^d of August, 1678, Ireland went into Hartfordshire, to a House of my Lord Aston's; and from thence went into Staffordshire. I will not stand to open the Particulars, where he was every Day; but we shall give you an Account, in a Method very easie to be remembered and observed, where he was till the 14th of September. But one remarkable Instance, Gentlemen, I desire to take particular notice of; and that is the Time of Pancras Fair, which is upon the 2^d of September always, a known Day, and a known Place

Place in that Country. Now we have among the rest, many Witnesses to prove, That Mr. Ireland was there that Day, and not in Town. And when we have proved this, as we shall by a whole Cloud of Witnesses, I believe, you Gentlemen of this Jury, will no more doubt, that Mr. Otes is Forsworn in these Particulars, than the Jury Yesterday did in that Particular; nor than, I believe, the whole Kingdom does by this time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we shall go to our Evidence; and first, we produce the Records of the two Tryals of Ireland, and the five Jesuits. Swear Mr. Swift. [Which was done.] Pray, Sir, put in the Records. Are those true Copies?

Mr. Swift. My Lord, I examined these Records with the Originals, and they are true Copies.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Otes, Will you have them read? Or to save the time of the Court will you agree them?

Otes. My Lord, I consent to save the time of the Court; if they shall be made use of for Evidence for me.

L. C. J. No doubt, they are Evidence for you, as well as against you, when they are produced here.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Mr. Otes does admit the Records, then shall we go on, and prove what he did swear at those Tryals; and for the first part of the time, which is between the 8th and 12th of August, we desire that Mr. Thomas Harriot, and Mr. Rainsford Waterhouse may be sworn. [Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Harriot. Pray do you remember at the Tryal of the five Jesuits, was Mr. Otes produced and sworn as a Witness?

Mr. Harriot. Yes, he was, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember what Testimony he gave about Ireland's being in Town, and when it was, he said, he was in Town?

Mr. Harriot. My Lord, he did positively swear, that Mr. Ireland, the late Jesuit, did take his leave of him the said Otes and others, at the said Ireland's Chamber in Russel-street, betwixt the 8th and 12th of August, 1678.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you of the Jury that tryed the five Jesuits, Mr. Harriot?

Mr. Harriot. Yes, I was Foreman of that Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What say you, Mr. Waterhouse? Were you present at that Tryal?

Mr. Waterhouse. Yes, I was of the Jury too.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did Otes swear at that Tryal?

Mr. Waterhouse. He said, That Mr. Ireland took his leave of him the 12th of August. My Lord Chief Justice Scroggs then asked him, are you sure it was the 12th? And then he said, He would not be positive it was the 12th, but between the 8th and 12th it was, I am positive upon my Oath.

Mr. At. Gen. It is so in the Print too; but we will now go on.

L. C. J. But will the Defendant ask these Witnesses any Questions?

Otes. My Lord, if your Lordship please, I will ask Mr. Harriot a Question.

L. C. J. Ay, do, ask him what you will.

Otes. Mr. Harriot. Did I swear, that he took his leave of me, or I took my leave of him?

Mr. Harriot. You swore, that Ireland took his leave of you and others, between the 8th and 12th of August, 1678. between those two Days, and in that Year.

Mr. Just. Withins. It is a nice Question, that of yours, Mr. Otes, upon my Word.

Otes. My Lord, I know what reason I have to ask that Question; I am sure in Perjury, the Court ought to keep up the Witnesses strictly to what is laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Well, you have his Answer according to the Indictment.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask Mr. Harriot this Question, whether he took Notes of the Tryal?

Mr. Harriot. Yes, I did so, Sir.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know of Mr. Harriot, whether he has those Notes by him?

Mr. Harriot. No, Sir, I have them not here; but I have had them by me this four or five Years, or more. It was my manner in all the Tryals, wherein I was concern'd as a Jury-man, to read the Tryals strictly over, when they were printed, especially where I happened to have any Notes, that I took at the Tryal; and to compare the printed Tryal with my Notes; and where I found any thing doubtful, I used to put a Query upon it. And this and many other things, I found to be in the printed Tryal strictly according to my Notes.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know, what Tryal he was Foreman at?

Mr. Harriot. That of the Five Jesuits, in June, the 13th of June, 1679.

L. C. J. Have you any thing to ask Mr. Waterhouse?

Otes. Yes, my Lord. Pray, Sir, let me ask you a Question.

Mr. Waterhouse. Ay, if you please, Sir.

Otes. Did you take Notes of that Tryal you speak of, Sir?

Mr. Waterhouse. No, I did not.

Otes. How come you then to remember this, That I was so positive as to the time betwixt the 8th and 12th of August?

Mr. Waterhouse. Because I was one of the Jury; and because my Lord Chief Justice made a stop, when you said, 'Twas the 12th of August; and bid you consider: And you consider'd, and consider'd it; and did affirm positively, That it was between the 8th and 12th of August.

L. C. J. He gives you a plain Reason for his Remembrance.

Otes. My Lord, I have done with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we desire Mr. Foster may be sworn. [Which was done.]

Mr. Foster, Pray will you tell what you remember Mr. Otes swore at Mr. Ireland's Tryal, about Ireland's being in Town?

Mr. Foster. I was one of the Jury at the Tryal of Mr. Ireland, Mr. Pickering, and Mr. Grove; and I did see Mr. Otes sworn, as a Witness for the King, at that Tryal; and so was Mr. Bedloe: And Bedloe there gave Evidence, That there was a Meeting at Harcourt's Chamber; and Ireland, Grove, and Pickering was there: And that this was the latter End of August. Mr. Ireland did make his Defence, as much as he could, to prove, That he was not in Town from the Beginning of August, to the Middle of September; and brought divers Witnesses. But upon his denying to be here the latter End of August, Mr. Otes did come and swear: I am certain (says he) that the First or Second of September, he was in Town; for then I had of him Twenty Shillings.

Otes. Was I positive, that he was here in Town the 1st or 2d of September?

Mr. Foster. You were positive, Sir, to the 1st or 2d; I have it in my Notes in Writing.

L. C. J. He tells you, it is in his Notes: And therefore he's sure you said so.

Mr. At. Gen. In the Printed Copy, if it be right, there is mention made of the Word Positive.

L. C. J. I think, that is in August, between the 8th or 12th he was positive.

Otes. Did I say these Words, I was positive?

Mr. Waterhouse. I say, you affirmed that he was in Town the 1st or 2d of September.

L. C. J. It is not necessary, that you should use the Word Positive: The Question is, Whether it was positively affirmed?

Mr. Just. Withins. Was not that true that you said? Did not you affirm a positive Truth?

Otes. My Lord, I'll tell you the Reason why I ask the Question, because I have forgot my self, whether I us'd the Word or no; and therefore I ask for my own Information now.

L. C. J. Well; ask for what Reason you will, you have receiv'd an Answer to your Question; and upon my Word he gives a notable Evidence: Says he, Bedloe had sworn a reasonable Practice by Ireland, in the latter end of August. Then Ireland comes, and makes his Defence: Says he, That cannot be; for I was out of Town at that time: I was not in London all August, nor the beginning of September. Then come you in, to support the Testimony of Bedloe; and swear, that he was in Town the 1st or 2d of September; for then he gave you Twenty Shillings. And so you come to rivet the Matter that was sworn before by Bedloe.

Otes. My Lord, What I swore was Truth.

L. C. J. That is now to be tried.

Mr. At. Gen. We have another of the Jury here, Mr. John Byfield: Pray, swear him.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, Sir, what did you hear Otes swear at that Tryal?

Mr. Byfield. I heard the same that they have testified before.

L. C. J. But you must tell us what that was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you a Jury-man at that Tryal?

Mr. Byfield. Yes, I had a Summons to the Old Bailey.

L. C. J. But what did Otes swear? That's the Question.

Mr. Byfield. Mr. Otes did positively assert, That Ireland was here in Town the 1st or 2d of September; and to confirm it, he said, He receiv'd of him Twenty Shillings.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, my Lord, we shall go to our Evidence to prove, That all this is absolutely false: For Ireland went out of Town into Staffordshire, and did not return till after the 9th of September. And for this, we call Anne Ireland.

[Who was sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Ireland, Pray, where did you take your Leave of your Brother Mr. Ireland, who was Executed in Summer 1678: and when?

Mrs. A. Ireland. I took my Leave of him the beginning of August.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Day in August do you remember?

Mrs. A. Ireland. The 3d of August.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was it?

Mrs. A. Ireland. In my own Lodging.

L. C. J. Where was your Lodging?

Mrs. A. Ireland. In Russel-street, Covent-Garden.

L. C. J. Now tell us again the time when it was?

Mrs. A. Ireland. It was on Saturday Morning; as I remember, the 3d of August, the Saturday after St. Ignatius's Day.

L. C. J. How come you to remember so particularly, that it was then?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Because upon St. Ignatius's Day, we were invited to Mr. Gifford's at Hammersmith; my Brother, my Mother, and I, were invited to stay all Night: But my Brother refused to stay, because—

L. C. J. Which Brother? What was his Name?

Mrs. A. Ireland. William Ireland.

L. C. J. Did they stay there?

Mrs. A. Ireland. No, my Lord; my Brother came home on foot, but we stayed all Night.

Mr. At. Gen. Here is an Almanack of that Year: And the 3d of August was on a Saturday.

Mrs. A. Ireland. He said he could not stay, because he was to go into the Country upon Saturday. I ask'd him, Why he would set out on Saturday? And says he, I'll go to Standen; there I shall meet with my Lord Ashton, and his Family; and have an Opportunity to go with him into Staffordshire.

L. C. J. She says, he went out of Town on Saturday after St. Ignatius's Day; which was Saturday the 3d of August: But there being a Discourse between her and her Brother, why he should make choice of a Saturday; which she thought, it seems was an inconvenient Day to take a Journey on. And upon that, her Brother made Answer again, That that Night he would only go to Standen, to my Lord Ashton's House, where he should meet with Company to go along with him into Staffordshire.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Week was St. Ignatius's Day?

Mrs. A. Ireland. St. Ignatius's Day was on a Wednesday.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month is St. Ignatius's Day?

Mrs. A. Ireland. It is either the last Day of July, or the 1st of August.

L. C. J. Look on your Almanack, if you have any one of that Year, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. We have no such Saint in our Almanack.

Mrs. A. Ireland. It was, as near as I can remember, the 3d of August, that he went out of Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The 3d of August, at that time, was on a Saturday.

Lord Petre. St. Ignatius's Day is always the last Day of July, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. In this Almanack another Saint has justled him out; and that is Bishop German.

L. C. J. And in my Almanack, a third has justled them both out; but my Lord Petre says, it is always the last of July; and that was on a Wednesday that Year.

Mrs. A. Ireland. I remember it was on a Wednesday.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. And you are sure he went out of Town the Wednesday after?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Yes, I am sure he went out of Town then; for I ask'd him; Why he would go on a Saturday? And he told me he would go but to Standen that Night.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And that does hold, according to the Computation, to be the 3d of August.

Otes. My Lord, She is not positive in this, that he went out of Town the 3d of August.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, but she is; for she says, that she was the Wednesday before (which was St. Ignatius's Day) with him a little way out of Town.

L. C. J. And that it was Saturday after he went out of Town; and she gives the Reason, that she entred into a Discourse with him, why he would go on Saturday? And he made that Answer which you hear.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Otes knows what Day St. Ignatius's Day is upon, I presume.

Otes. It is the last Day of July, I think.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In our Protestant Almanacks, it seems, we give another Bishop place.

Mr. At. Gen. Mrs. Ireland, When did you see him again?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Just a Fortnight before Michaelmas, and not before.

L. C. J. You were his near Relation, I suppose?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Yes, my Lord, I was his Sister.

L. C. J. Pray, when he came to Town again, where did he lodge?

Mrs. A. Ireland. He used to lodge at the same place where we did always; and in the mean time, while he was absent, my Mother lent one Mrs. Eagleston his Lodging.

L. C. J. Is that Person, you lent his Chamber to in his Absence, here?

Mrs. A. Ireland. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. When did she enter upon his Lodging?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Truly, my Lord, I cannot tell; her Maid fell sick, and so she came down a pair of Stairs lower into his Lodging. It was in a short time after he went out of Town, my Lord, as I remember.

L. C. J. When did he come to Town again, do you say?

Mrs. A. Ireland. He came to Town again a Fortnight before Michaelmas; it was that Day Fortnight before Michaelmas, that Michaelmas-day fell on—

L. C. J. Have you any Questions to ask her, Mr. Otes?

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know, Why she did not give this Evidence before? Or whether ever she did give this Evidence at any of the Tryals?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Yes, I was at my Brother's Tryal; and there I gave the same Evidence.

Otes. Were you there at the Tryal of the five Jesuits? And did you give the same Evidence then?

Mrs. A. Ireland. No, I was not call'd.

L. C. J. But were you there?

Mrs. A. Ireland. I was in the Court at the same time, but was not Examined.

Otes. What Year is it you speak of, that he went out of Town the 3d of August?

Mrs. A. Ireland. The Year 78.

Otes. I desire, my Lord, to ask this Gentlewoman, what Religion she is of?

Mrs. A. Ireland. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

Otes. I desire to know, whether her Name be Ireland or Ironmonger?

Mrs. A. Ireland. My right Name is Ironmonger; but because of his Profession, he went by the Name of Ireland; and for his sake we go by that Name too.

Otes. By what Name did you give Evidence at Ireland's Tryal?

Mrs. A. Ireland. By that Name of Ireland.

L. C. J. Why, Mr. Otes, that is a good Name enough to be called by; you may remember, you were called Titus Ambrosius, and Sampson Lucy, at St. Omers.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Eleanor Ireland.

[Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. When did your Son go out of Town?

Mrs. El. Ireland. The 3d of August.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you sure it was the 3d of August?

Mrs. El. Ireland. Yes, I am sure it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Year was it?

Mrs. El. Ireland. My Memory is not good for that; I cannot tell what Year, my Daughter can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it the same Year he was tryed afterwards?

Mrs. El. Ireland. Yes, it was the same Summer; at Michaelmas after he was taken up.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time did he return again out of the Country?

Mrs. El. Ireland. The 14th of September after?

Otes. My Lord, I would ask her, Whether or no she gave this Evidence at her Son's Tryal?

Mrs. El. Ireland. Yes, I was a Witness there; but they would not permit me to speak half so much; they would hardly let me speak at all.

Otes. I desire to know, whether she was an Evidence at the five Jesuits Tryals?

Mrs. El. Ireland. No, I was not there then.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray swear Mrs. Duddle, and Mrs. Quino.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Come, Mrs. Duddle; Do you remember when Mr. Ireland went out of Town, in the Year 78?

Mrs. Duddle. To the best of my remembrance, it was the 3d of August.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why do you think it was the 3d of August?

Mrs. Duddle. He went for a Recreation out of Town three Days before, which was upon an Holiday, St. Ignatius's Day; and he went out of Town one Night then, and he came and stayed but two Nights after; and went out of Town upon the Saturday.

L. C. J. Did he stay out of Town one Night?

Mrs. Duddle. Yes, he stay'd out of Town all Night.

L. C. J. Are you sure he stay'd all Night?

Mrs. Duddle. I am sure he stay'd but one Night.

L. C. J. But what say you to that, Mr. Attorney? This Witness contradicts the other.

Mr. Just. Withins. Ay, plainly.

Mrs. Duddle. Mrs. Ireland, and Mrs. Anne Ireland, and he, went out upon a Recreation out of Town, it being Holiday; and I remember well, that was of a Wednesday. And that Saturday

Thursday he went away, and never came again till a Fortnight before Michaelmas.

L. C. J. But mind my Question, Woman.

Mrs. Duddle. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did he come home that Night he went on the Recreation?

Mrs. Duddle. I do not know.

L. C. J. But just now you swore, he stay'd out all Night.

Mrs. Duddle. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Yes, but you did though; prithee mind what thou art about.

Mrs. Duddle. I do not say, He; but I am sure his Sister and the Company stay'd out that Night. I remember very well, he went the third Day after, which was Saturday. And Mr. Jennison came to ask for him three Weeks after: And there was a Person of Quality with him in the Coach; I think, it was Sir Miles Wharton. And he asking for him, they gave him an account, that they had not heard from him since he went; which was then three Weeks after he was gone. And I remember well, he did not come to Town again till a Fortnight before Michaelmas.

L. C. J. How can you tell that?

Mrs. Duddle. My Lord, I can tell it very well: For I was almost every Night in the Room where he used to lie; and there lay a Gentlewoman there, that I knew.

L. C. J. What was her Name?

Mrs. Duddle. Mrs. Eagleston.

L. C. J. How comes she to lie there?

Mrs. Duddle. Her Maid fell sick, and she chang'd her own Chamber, and lay there all the time he was out of Town.

Otes. My Lord, Is this good Evidence?

L. C. J. Ay, why not?

Otes. My Lord, I think she contradicts the other Witness: For she says, he lay out two Nights.

L. C. J. No, there you are mistaken too. But I tell you what I did observe before. Mrs. Anne Ireland swore, that they did stay all Night; but Mr. Ireland refused to stay there; but would go home, because he was to go his Journey on Saturday. Then this Woman comes; and she said at first, that he went out of Town on the Wednesday, and stay'd out all Night; and lay at home but two Nights, and then went away. But now, when I put her in mind to take care what she said, she swears, She is sure the Sister lay out; but she is not sure of Ireland's lying out: But she is positive he went away on the Saturday the 3d of August, and return'd not till a Fortnight before Michaelmas.

Otes. My Lord, I humbly conceive, she having once sworn false,——

L. C. J. Ay, but she immediately recollected her self.

Otes. By what Token does she remember it to be the 3d of August?

L. C. J. She said before, it was the Saturday after St. Ignatius's Day, which was on a Wednesday, the last Day of July; and he went then out of Town. She called it by the Name of Recreation.

Otes. Was it the Saturday after St. Ignatius's Day?

Mrs. Duddle. Yes, it was: And I had not remember'd it, but that it was upon that Holiday.

Otes. This is a Roman Catholick, I suppose, my Lord.

L. C. J. I cannot tell. What Religion are you of?

Mrs. Duddle. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord. Mr. Jennison knows what I say to be true.

Otes. Were you a Witness in any of the Tryals at the Old-Bailey?

Mrs. Duddle. I was in the Court, but was not called.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What say you, Mrs. Quino? When did Mr. Ireland go out of Town?

Mrs. Quino. I must say the same; It was the 3d Day of August, on a Saturday.

L. C. J. How do you know that it was on a Saturday the 3d of August?

Mrs. Quino. By the same Reason that she speaks. I mark'd that other Day he went out of Town; and he came again, and his Mother stay'd there that Night: And he went on Saturday Morning out of Town. I know it very well: For my Husband was his Taylor, and he had somewhat to alter in his Cloaths; and I brought it immediately after it was done.

L. C. J. Are you sure he went out of Town that Day?

Mrs. Quino. He went out of the House, and, as I take it, he went out of Town?

L. C. J. Did he say, he was to go out of Town?

Mrs. Quino. He had his Boots on; and took Horse at the Bull-Inn in Drury-lane.

L. C. J. How do you know it?

Mrs. Quino. Because his Servant that was there has testified it.

Mr. At. Gen. Now swear my Lord Aston. (Which was done.) We'll bring Ireland now upon the 3d of August at Night, to my Lord Aston's House at Standen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray will your Lordship give my Lord and the Jury an account, when Mr. Ireland came to your House, and how far he travelled with you afterwards?

Lord Aston. My Lord, Being in Town, I was spoke to, and desired, that Mr. Ireland might have the Opportunity of going in my Company down into Staffordshire; which I consented to. I went out of Town, as I remember, the latter end of July 1678. and this same Mr. Ireland came to me at my House in Hartfordshire at Standen, upon the 3d of August at Night.

L. C. J. What Day of the Week was that, my Lord?

Lord Aston. As I remember, it was Saturday, and in the Evening.

L. C. J. How long did he stay with your Lordship?

Lord Aston. My Lord, I stay'd till Monday at Standen; and upon Monday he went in my Company to St. Albans, which was the 5th of August.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither then did you go, my Lord?

Lord Aston. There I met with my Brother and Sister Southcoat.

L. C. J. Sir John Southcoat you mean, my Lord.

Lord Aston. Yes, my Lord. And thence, in four Days, we went to my House at Tixhall.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Ireland travel with you all the Way?

Lord

Lord Aston. I cannot charge my Memory, my Lord, that he did, so as particularly to swear it: But there he came into my Company sometimes at Tixhall; but I cannot tell the particular Days: Nor could I speak positively to those things that I have spoke to now, but that I find in my Note-Book, that at that time he did come to my House at Standen, and did go with me to St. Albans.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, Did he go that Journey to Tixhall along with you?

Lord Aston. I cannot say positively that, Mr. Attorney; but I have a general Notion that he did. Nor could I testify this so positively, I say, but by Notes that I have of things at that time: Where I have only writ down these things concerning Mr. Ireland, that he came the 3d of August to my House at Standen: That on Monday we went together to St. Albans; and there met us Sir John Southcoat, and my Sister his Wife; and thence I went to Tixhall; and there I arriv'd the 8th of August, which was Thursday.

L. C. J. My Lord, I ask you this Question; you say, you have a general Apprehension, that he did go with you to Tixhall: Pray, did he come with you to Standen for that purpose, to go with you to Tixhall?

Lord Aston. I had no Business with him at all; but he desired the opportunity to go down in my Company into Staffordshire.

L. C. J. Pray, my Lord, Do you remember you saw him within four or five Days after at Tixhall?

Lord Aston. To name particular Days, I cannot; but that I saw him several Days at Tixhall, I am sure.

Otes. My Lord, You say that Sir John Southcoat went with you to Tixhall.

Lord Aston. Yes, he did so.

Otes. My Lord, I would ask this Nobleman, Whether he was at the Tryal of the five Jesuits? Or the Tryal of Ireland?

Lord Aston. No, my Lord, I was not.

Otes. Then I would ask, my Lord, If he saw Mr. Ireland executed?

Lord Aston. No, I did not.

Otes. Then I would ask him this Question; Whether the Ireland that was executed be the same Ireland he speaks of?

Lord Aston. Amongst those that knew him well, I have been told it was the same.

Otes. That is but Hear-say, my Lord; he does not speak of his own Knowledge.

L. C. J. For that matter, I suppose, you'll produce some other Ireland, Mr. Otes, if it was not the same.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it this Mrs. Ireland's Brother, that was here a Witness now?

Lord Aston. He was so reputed, and so looked upon.

L. C. J. That is all one. If any body should ask me, if you were the same Mr. Otes that was at St. Omers; I should say, I heard so; and it would be very good Evidence, unless some one else were produc'd.

Otes. My Lord, I submit; I will be directed by the Court in any thing that is fair, and not injurious to my Defence.

L. C. J. We will not direct you in any thing that's foul, but pray keep to those Questions that are pertinent.

Otes. Are you sure Ireland went the whole Journey with you, my Lord?

Lord Aston. I did answer that; I have but a general Notion of it, he came to me for that purpose.

Otes. Then my Lord is not positive he went with him into Staffordshire.

L. C. J. No, he is not; but I would ask you this Question. My Lord Aston, Do you believe he went with you to Tixhall?

Lord Aston. I make no doubt of it; I would pawn all I have in the World upon it; only I cannot swear it, because I have it not in my Notes, as I have those two other Days.

Mr. Just. Withins. Do you like him the worse, because he is cautious, Mr. Otes?

Otes. No, Sir, I do not. But pray, my Lord, ask him, because it is a Question here about a point of time; Whether he remembers, that within eight or ten Days, he saw Ireland at Tixhall?

Lord Aston. I cannot say any thing as to that.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Sir Edward Southcoat.

[Which was done.]

L. C. J. I thought you had called him Sir John Southcoat.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir John is sick, and cannot be here.

Otes. I suppose my Lord Aston is a Roman Catholic?

L. C. J. Ay, that all the World knows very well; but I tell you what, Mr. Otes, I observe, he is not so easy in giving his Oath; nay, he is wonderful cautious in swearing; I speak it for his Commendation, not as his Fault, he is not very forward at swearing.

Mr. Just. Withins. Well, what do you ask this Gentleman, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. We desire Sir Edward Southcoat would give an account, whether he met Mr. Ireland at my Lord Aston's? And when?

Sir E. Southcoat. I was with my Lord Aston in his Company.

L. C. J. When was that, Sir?

Sir E. Southcoat. The 4th of August I saw Mr. Ireland at my Lord Aston's.

L. C. J. Was it the same Ireland that was afterwards tryed and executed?

Sir E. Southcoat. It was the same Ireland that was commonly reported. I did not see him executed.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it the same that was reputed to be this old Gentlewoman's Son?

Sir E. Southcoat. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, go on with your Evidence.

Sir E. Southcoat. Upon Monday we began our Journey to Tixhall, and went that Night to St. Albans, where we met my Father and Mother, and thence we continued on our Journey the next Day.

L. C. J. Was he with you there that Day you went to St. Albans?

Sir E. Southcoat. He was with us, I remember very particularly. It was hot Weather, and my Lord Aston invited him into the Coach; for before he was riding by the Coach-side, and there I remember a particular Discourse that he and my Lord Aston had; from thence we went on to Northampton, and came the Tuesday Night.

L. C. J. Was Ireland with you there?

Sir E. Southcoat. Ireland was with us there.

Otes. My Lord, I did not well observe what this Gentleman said.

L. C. J. Pray mind your Business your self, he speaks plain enough ; go on, Sir.

Sir Edward Southcoat. Mr. Ireland was with us, I say my Lord, all the Journey ; and I do remember it particularly by a pretty Horse Mr. Ireland rode upon ; and I had a Dispute with my Cousin, who should buy him ; I took particular notice every Day of him, as he rode by the Coach, and Converſed with him every Night in the Inn. We went, I say, from St. Albans to Northampton on the Tuesday ; from Northampton we went to Coventry on the Wednesday, and from thence to my Lord Aston's, at Tixball, on the Thursday.

L. C. J. Come, let us go by degrees. Was Mr. Ireland with you, when you went from my Lord Aston's at Standen to St. Albans ?

Sir Edward Southcoat. Yes, he was.

L. C. J. You say, it was a hot Day, when you set out : And my Lord Aston did invite him into the Coach.

Sir Edward Southcoat. Yes, my Lord, he came into the Coach on Monday, which was the first Day we set out ; and came that Night to St. Albans.

L. C. J. You lay there that Night ?

Sir Edward Southcoat. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where did you lie there ?

Sir Edward Southcoat. At the great Inn, at the Bull.

L. C. J. Ay, That is the great Inn.

Sir Edward Southcoat. The next Night, my Lord, we came to Northampton.

L. C. J. Where did you lie there ?

Sir Edward Southcoat. We lay at the Sign of the George ; it was Sir William Farmer's House ; but made use of for an Inn, because the Town was burnt down.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Ireland with you all that Day ?

Sir Edward Southcoat. He rode with us all the Day.

L. C. J. And you took notice of it, because of his Horse, you say ?

Sir Edward Southcoat. Yes, he had a very pretty Horse, my Lord ; and my Brother bought the Horse of him, after we came back again.

L. C. J. Whither went ye the next Day ?

Sir Edward Southcoat. The next Night we lay at the Bull in Coventry, and from thence on Thursday, we arrived at my Lord Aston's, at Tixball.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, the Jury desires to know what he says ? For they have not heard it.

L. C. J. He says, Mr. Ireland went with my Lord Aston in the Coach, it being a hot Day, on Monday the 5th of August, from Standen, my Lord Aston's House in Hertfordshire to St. Albans, and lay there at the Bull Inn that Night ; that he went the next Day, which was Tuesday, the 6th of August, with them to Northampton. That he rode upon a pretty Horse, which makes him remember it particularly ; and that there was a Dispute on the Road, who should buy him ; and when they came back, his Brother bought him. He says, they lay on Tuesday Night at Northampton, at the George, which was a Gentleman's House, which was turned into an Inn, because of the Fire : That he went with them the next Day to Coventry, which was Wednesday the 7th of August, and lay with them that Night at the Bull in Coventry ; and the next Day, which was Thursday the 8th they came, and Ireland with them, to my Lord Aston's House at Tixball in Staffordshire.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Sir Edward Southcoat, How long did he stay with you at Tixball, at my Lord Aston's ?

Sir Edward Southcoat. He staid with us there till the Tuesday after ; and then we began our Journey from my Lord Aston's House in Tixball into Wales, to St. Winifred's Well.

L. C. J. That is Holy-Well, you mean.

Sir Edward Southcoat. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. You say, he stayed all Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Monday, and till Tuesday after you came to my Lord Aston's at Tixball.

Sir Edward Southcoat. Yes, my Lord, he did so.

Mr. At. Gen. So then, my Lord, we are gotten to Tuesday the 13th of August, which is past the time of the Perjury, that is laid second in the Indictment ; but in Point of Time, is the first that happened ; for he swore that Ireland took his leave of them, and others here in Town, between the 8th and 12th of August ?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you go on Tuesday, Sir ?

Sir Edward Southcoat. Towards Wales.

Mr. Jones. Was he at Tixball the 12th of August ?

L. C. J. He says, he was there till Tuesday the 13th. Pray let us not have the same Questions repeated over and over again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you go on Tuesday Night ?

Sir Edward Southcoat. We went to Nantwich, and lay at the Holy Lamb there.

L. C. J. Where were you the next Night ?

Sir Edward Southcoat. The next Day we reached to St. Winifred's Well.

L. C. J. Where did you lie there ?

Sir Edward Southcoat. At the Star, which is the great Inn there.

L. C. J. It is so.

Mr. At. Gen. Was Mr. Ireland there with you ?

Sir Edward Southcoat. Yes, he was.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did ye go then ?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. We staid not but one Day at Holy-well ; for we arrived there pretty late at Night ; and all the Morning we spent there, and went away in the Afternoon, and came that Evening to Chester, and lay there only one Night, and came the next Day to Tixball again.

Mr. At. Gen. Which was Friday the 16th of August.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask him, Whether this Gentleman Mr. Ireland was with them all the while, in this Journey to Holy-well ?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Every Day particularly ; I remember it very perfectly.

Mr. At. Gen. After he came to Tixball again, How long did he tarry there ?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. That I cannot so well say. I do remember truly, but he was afterwards at my Lord Aston's at Tixball. I remember some scambling Days ; but I can fix upon only two.

L. C. J. which are they ?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. I cannot tell what Day of the Month it was, or what Day of the Week ; but one Day that I remember him there, was Mr. Cbetwind's Race with Sir Henry Gough ; and one other Day.

L. C. J. When was that Horse-Race?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. My Lord, I cannot tell what Day of the Month it was.

Mr. At. Gen. When was the other time you speak of?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. I remember him there one Thursday, upon the Bowling-green at Tixball, where there was a particular Company.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We desire to know, when his Brother did buy the Horse of Mr. Ireland?

Sir Edward Southcoat. When we came back; for he came home with us from my Lord Aston's, and we began our Journey, the 9th or 10th of September, from Tixball to Kingston; and when we arriv'd at my Father's House, my Brother bought the Horse of him.

L. C. J. Did you come home back again with Mr. Ireland, do you say?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Yes, my Lord, we did.

L. C. J. When did you set out from Tixball?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. The ninth of September, my Lord, I think it was; I am sure, it was upon a Monday, the 9th or 10th.

L. C. J. When did you come home?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. We were four Days on our Journey.

L. C. J. And did you come straight to London?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. No, we went to my Father's House in Surry.

L. C. J. Which way did you come?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. The first Night we came to the Bull in Coventry; and from thence, the next Night, we went to the Altar Stone at Banbury; and from Banbury, we came the third Day to Agmondisham (I think, it is called) a little Town in Buckinghamshire: And from thence the fourth Day, to my Father's House, by Kingston in Surry.

Mr. At. Gen. And then Ireland sold his Brother his Horse.

L. C. J. How long was he at your Father's House in Surry, Sir Edward?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. My Lord, we came on the Thursday; and as I take it, he went on the Saturday to London: My Brother, after he had bought his Horse, lent him the Horse to Town; and sent a Man with him, to bring it back again.

Mr. At. Gen. That Saturday, my Lord, makes it come just to the Fourteenth of September; and is the very Day Fortnight before Michaelmas-Day.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to ask this Gentleman, Whether he saw Ireland all August, and till the Fourteenth of September in Staffordshire, and elsewhere? And, how long in Staffordshire?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. I cannot say, as to any particular Days of the Months, after our coming from Holy-Well, till our coming from Tixball to London.

L. C. J. Marry, if he did, he would contradict what he had said before: For from the time of coming from Holy-Well, to the time of coming back to London, he could tell but of two Days, and those uncertain: For he remembers not by the Times, but by other particular Circumstances.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask him this Question, When was the first Day he saw him in September?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Truly, my Lord, I remember not any Day before we began our Journey home?

Mr. At. Gen. But, my Lord, this is his Testimony: He was in his Company till the sixteenth of August. It is true, there were other times that he saw him at Tixball; but he cannot particularly speak unto them: But by and by, we shall go on to every Day, and prove particularly where he was.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know, Was Sir Edw. Southcoat at the Tryal of Ireland a Witness, or no?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. No, I was not, my Lord.

Otes. Were you at Whitebread's Tryal, Sir?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Yes, I was, and gave the same Evidence I give now.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then swear Mr. John Southcoat. [Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. This is Sir Edward Southcoat's Brother, my Lord.

L. C. J. What, he that bought the Horse?

Mr. John Southcoat. Yes, my Lord, I bought the Horse of Mr. Ireland.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask him?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, When did you meet Mr. Ireland in August 1678? And where?

Mr. John Southcoat. My Lord, I met with Mr. Ireland, upon Monday the Fifth of August, at the Bull-Inn in St. Albans, with my Lord Aston: I came thither that Day with my Father and Mother. And the next Day we went to Northampton; and there we inn'd at the Sign of the George, Sir William Farmer's House; which is an House in the Road, us'd for an Inn since the Town was burnt: And I conversed with him every Day, in our Journey. And from thence, the next Day, we went to Coventry, to the Bull-Inn there; and from thence, to my Lord Aston's (on Thursday Night) at Tixball: There we stay'd all Friday, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. Mr. Ireland was there; I was with him all the while. And then upon Tuesday we set out for Holy-Well in Flintshire; and went that Night to Nantwich, to the Lamb there. And the next Day we went through Chester to Holy-Well: We stay'd that Night at Holy-Well; and the next Day, came back again towards Noon, to Chester; and there lay that Night: And then the next Night, which was Friday, we came back again to Tixball.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Ireland with you both those Journeys, all the while?

Mr. John Southcoat. Yes, my Lord, he was; I did see him, and rode with him every Day.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, How long were you at Tixball, after you came from Holy-Well?

Mr. John Southcoat. We stay'd there till we came away for good and all.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Ireland with you all that time?

Mr. John Southcoat. No, he was not?

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember, that Mr. Ireland came to Tixball the Ninth of September; and came along home with you, when you came?

Mr. John Southcoat. Yes, I do remember it very well.

L. C. J. What Day did you come home, Sir?

Mr. John Southcoat. We came home in Four Days.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did he leave you?

Mr. John Southcoat. We came home upon Thursday, and he went to London on Saturday.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, Can you recollect when you did first see him again at Tixball, after you came from Holy-Well?

Mr. John Southcoat. My Lord, I cannot tell particularly any Day, till the Day we came away.

L. C. J. Do you remember the Horse-Match between Mr. Chetwind, and Sir Henry Gough?

Mr. John Southcoat. I was there, my Lord; but I do not remember Mr. Ireland was there.

L. C. J. How long did he stay at your Father's House in Surry, Sir?

Mr. John Southcoat. Two Days, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You lent him your Horse you bought of him, I think, Sir?

Mr. John Southcoat. Yes, up to London, I did; and I lent my Man with him, to bring him back again.

Mr. At. Gen. Has Mr. Otes any Questions to ask this Gentleman?

Otes. My Lord, I desire to ask Mr. Southcoat, Whether or no he is sure, that Ireland was in his Company from the Fifth of August, to the Sixteenth?

Mr. John Southcoat. Yes, every Day, I am sure of it; I remember it very well.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, Whether or no he testified this that he now swears, at Ireland's Tryal?

Mr. John Southcoat. My Lord, I was not at Ireland's Tryal.

Otes. Then I desire to ask him, Whether or no he did testify this at the Five Jesuits Tryal?

Mr. John Southcoat. No, I was not sent for to any of the Tryals.

L. C. J. I am sorry you were not, Sir: 'Twas pity you were not there. It might have saved some innocent Blood.

Mr. At. Gen. Now swear Harrison. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will you give an Account, when you saw Ireland, and where?

Harrison. In the Year of our Lord 1678. my Master, Sir John Southcoat, went with my Lady, on Monday the Fifth of August, to St. Albans; and we came with a Coach and four Horses: For my Master had an old Servant, that had a Pair of Horses, which my Master made use of. And there we met my Lord Aston, in the Company of Mr. Ireland. And the next Morning, my Lord Aston went with my Master and Lady towards Tixball: And I rode by, in Mr. Ireland's Company; and came acquainted with him that Day. That Night we came to Northampton; and there we Inn'd at a Stone-House, that was used for the Inn, the Town being burnt before. The next Night we went to Coventry; and on Thursday we came to Tixball: There we stay'd till Tuesday. After we went to Holy-Well; and the Tuesday Night we lay at Nantwich: And thence we went to Holy-Well, and stay'd there on Wednesday Night: And on Thursday we came to West Chester; and I parted with him upon the Friday at West Chester.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, did you know this Ireland? Was it he that was Tryed and Executed?

Harrison. I was at Mr. Ireland's Tryal.

L. C. J. Was it the same Man that was Tryed?

Harrison. My Lord, I saw him at his Tryal, the Hair of his Face was grown, and he was, a little disorder'd; he did not look so well, because he was not so well dress'd; but it was the same Man, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Before this Man goes, we have more Questions to ask him: When did you see him again, after you left him in Chester you say?

Harrison. I saw him several times at Tixball; I saw at the Bowling-green upon a Thursday; and I saw him when the Horse-Race was between Mr. Chetwind and Sir Henry Gough; I cannot tell what Day it was; for I had no reason to keep an Account of the particular Days at that time.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you come up with your Master again the 9th of September?

Harrison. My Lord, I did so; I have a Note wherein I set down the Charges at that Time. It is in this bit of Paper, which I have kept in my Almanack ever since. My Lord Aston sent his Coach with us to Banbury, where my Master's Coach was to meet him; but came only to Coventry the first Night. The next Night which was Tuesday, we came to the Altar-Stone at Banbury, and there we lay: From thence on Wednesday, we came to Agmondisham, where we were ill lodged. The next Day we baited at Uxbridge, and came to Kingston, and so to Sir John Southcoat's House, upon the Thursday Night. Upon the Friday Mr. Ireland sold his Horse to Mr. John Southcoat, my Master's Son. Upon the Saturday Morning, I came with him from my Master's House towards London; he did ride upon the Horse he had sold to Mr. Southcoat; and so we came up to Town, and took Water; and I took a little Bag that belonged to Mr. Ireland upon my Arm, and we landed at Somerset House, and I came with him to his Lodging in Russell-street; and when he came there, he went up Stairs, where were two Women met him, and welcom'd him Home: Said they, We are glad you are come, we thought we had lost you, because we had never heard from you all this while. There I took my leave of him, and did not see him again till his Tryal at the Old Bailey, and this was Saturday the 14th of September.

L. C. J. Pray let me see your Paper you speak of. [Which was delivered in, and the Court look'd upon it.

L. C. J. Did you write this in your Journey?

Harrison. Yes, my Lord, I did it at that time.

Mr. At. Gen. Are the particular Days inserted there, my Lord?

L. C. J. No, they are not, Mr. Attorney.

Harrison. I could not write well, it was only but Memorandums for my self.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month was the Saturday he came to Town?

Harrison. It was the 14th of September, my Lord.

L. C. J. That agrees with all that the Women said, that he came on Saturday a Fortnight before Michaelmas, being the same Day of the Week as Michaelmas-Day was: Thus far it is as clear as the Sun at Noon-day.

Otes. My Lord, There was a time when this was not believed.

L. C. J. Ay, Mr. Otes, we know there was a time, when there were Ignoramus Juries, and Things were believed, and not believed, as the Humour Humour went. What can you, Mr. Otes, say to it? I must needs tell you, prima facie, 'tis so strong an Evidence, that if you have any Sense in the World, you must be concern'd at it.

Otes. Not at all, my Lord; I know who they are, and what is the end of it all.

L. C. J. Upon my Faith, I have so much Charity for you, as my Fellow-Creature, as to be concerned for you.

Otes. 'Tis not two straws matter, whether you be or no; I know my own Innocency.

L. C. J. Thou art the most obstinately hardened Wretch that ever I saw.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him; whether he did not appear at Mr. Ireland's Tryal? And let it be remember'd what Credit he had then for all this Story he tells now. These People come here to serve a Turn only, and care not what they swear against me.

L. C. J. You must hold your Tongue.

Otes. My Lord, I must speak the truth, and I will speak the truth.

L. C. J. I think, there is scarce a Word of Truth comes out of thy Mouth.

Otes. You may think what you will, my Lord; but these Popish Traitors, I am sure, will swear any thing, and suborn Witnesses upon Witnesses against me to overthrow the Plot.

Mr. Just. Withins. If you cannot behave your self better than you do, we must send you elsewhere; we must not suffer this Behaviour: And therefore either be quiet, or get you gone.

L. C. J. Let him keep himself in order, and we'll hear him. If he think by boisterous Impudency to outface Justice, we will not suffer it. Go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. George Hobson.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you in the Journey to Tixball with Mr. Ireland and my Lord Aston in 78?

Mr. Hobson. Yes, I was so, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell all your Knowledge of that Matter.

Mr. Hobson. From the 3d of August till the 16th at Night, I was present with him every Day.

L. C. J. How do you know you were?

Mr. Hobson. That is to say, the 3d of August he came to my Lord's House at Standen in Hartfordshire in the Evening, and there he remained till Monday the 5th of August; and that Day in the Morning, he went together with other Company to St. Albans, where we met Sir John Southcoat and his Lady towards the Evening; and we all lodged there, because that was the appointed Place to meet at: We lodged the 6th of August at Night at Northampton; upon the 7th at Coventry; upon the 8th at Tixball, my Lord's House, where Mr. Ireland remained till Tuesday the 13th in the Morning. And upon the 13th in the Morning, we set forth with my Lady Aston, my Lord's Mother, and Sir John Southcoat, and Mr. Ireland, and the other Company, towards a Place called Holy Well in Flintshire: That Night, being Tuesday the 13th of August, we lodged at Nantwich in Cheshire; the Wednesday Night we lodged at Holy Well, where Mr. Ireland was with the rest of the Company; and on Thursday Night we returned back again to Chester, and lay there. Upon Friday we came back again to my Lord's House at Tixball. After that I did not see Mr. Ireland till Monday the 26th of August, when he came back again to our House: Where he went in the mean time I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Whose House is it that this Man means by our House?

Mr. Hobson. I mean my Lord Aston's House at Tixball.

L. C. J. You knew him very well, did not you?

Mr. Hobson. Yes, my Lord, I knew him very well.

L. C. J. You say, he came back the 26th of August to Tixball?

Mr. Hobson. Yes, as I remember, he did so.

Mr. At. Gen. How long after the 26th of August was it, that you saw him at Tixball?

Mr. Hobson. When he went away for London.

Mr. At. Gen. When was that?

Mr. Hobson. The 9th of September.

L. C. J. Did you come along with him to London?

Mr. Hobson. No, my Lord; I see him go; he was not in the Coach, but he was in the Company.

Otes. My Lord, I would fain ask him a Question, When he was first acquainted with Mr. Ireland, that he speaks of?

Mr. Hobson. I never saw him till he came to my Lord Aston's at Standen.

Otes. Were you at the Tryal of Mr. Ireland, Sir?

Mr. Hobson. No, my Lord, I was not; I was then in Staffordshire.

Otes. Then it is material, my Lord, for me to ask him this Question, it relating to a particular Person; whether Ireland that was executed, was the Ireland he says he was with?

L. C. J. I will ask him, if you will. Was that the same Man that was afterwards tried and executed?

Mr. Hobson. I believe it was, my Lord.

Otes. I insist not so much upon the Question; but only in reference to the Witness, his Acquaintance being so short with him.

L. C. J. Truly, I think it is not so very short; for he swears he was with him from the 3d of August till the 16th every Day.

Mr. Just. Withins. I have no great Acquaintance with you; but I know you, Mr. Otes, because I have seen you so often.

L. C. J. Is it the same Ireland that was at the Tryal? You, Harrison, you saw him then?

Harrison. The very same, and no other.

Mr. Just. Withins. Certainly no body doubts that.

L. C. J. 'Tis fit he should have his Question answer'd, if the Witness can. Pray, go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear George North. (Which was done.) Pray, will you give an account where you met Mr. Ireland, and whether you was with him in his Journey?

North. My Lord, I saw him the 4th of August, which was Sunday, at Standen, my Lord Aston's House in Hartfordshire: Upon the 5th, he went with my Lord to St. Albans; where my Lord met with Sir John Southcoat and his Lady; and I was with them. And from thence we went on Tuesday to the George at Northampton: And from thence, on Wednesday the 7th, to the Bull at Coventry. And upon the 8th, we came to Tixball; which was Thursday. And from Thursday the 8th, to Tuesday the 13th, I did see him every Day at my Lord's House at Tixball.

L. C. J. Whither went he then?

North. He went with my old Lady, and some other Company to go to Holy-Well.

L. C. J. When did you see him again?

North. I did see him several times after that at Tixball: But I took no particular notice of him again till he went away for London.

L. C. J. When was that?

North. I did see him the 9th of September: He came to go with Sir John Southcoat to London: Mr. John Southcoat, and he. I took my Leave of him.

Otes. What Religion are you of, Sir?

North. I am a Catholick, my Lord.

Otes. I desire to know, how he comes to remember this so well?

North. I waited at the Table; and he was every Day at Dinner with my Lord.

Otes. Were you at the Tryal of Ireland a Witness?

North. No indeed, my Lord, I was not.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Richard Ingletrap.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will you give an account, whether you knew Mr. Ireland, and where you saw him?

Ingletrap. The 1st of August, my Lord, I was ordered to be at Standen in Hartfordshire, to wait upon my Lord Aston, to go with him to Tixball. And the 3d of August, I saw Mr. Ireland there at Standen Lodge at my Lord's House. The 4th Day he rested there being Sabbath-Day.

Mr. At. Gen. What are you, an Hackney-Coach-man?

Ingletrap. Yes, my Lord, I am so. And upon the 5th, which was Monday, he went with my Lord Aston to St. Albans; upon the 6th, to Northampton; on the 7th, to Coventry; and the 8th Day, to Tixball Lodge. He was in the Company, and went all the way with him; and I was there too.

L. C. J. How long did he stay there?

Ingletrap. Till Tuesday the 13th.

L. C. J. Did you see him there till Tuesday?

Ingletrap. I do not say, that I did see him every Day.

L. C. J. Did you go with them on Tuesday to Holy-Well?

Ingletrap. No, I did not.

Mr. At. Gen. But, my Lord, you observe, that is past one of the Times that he swore Ireland was here in Town; that is, between the 8th and 12th of August.

L. C. J. It is so.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what Religion are you of, Mr. Ingletrap?

Ingletrap. I am a Protestant, my Lord?

Otes. Were you at the Tryal of the five Jesuits, or that of Ireland?

Ingletrap. No, I was not.

Otes. My Lord, I desire you would ask him, he being a Protestant, How he came to be acquainted with Ireland, that was a Priest?

L. C. J. Why, Mr. Otes, Is there no Conversation to be between Papists and Protestants?

Otes. Truly very little, my Lord: But that is not to the Point now. I desire to have an Answer to my Question.

Ingletrap. There was no great Acquaintance between us, my Lord; for I never saw him before that time.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Andrew Wetton. (Which was done.) Did you go that Journey with my Lord Aston to Tixball?

Wetton. No. I went from Tixball to Holy-Well.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day did you set out from Tixball?

Wetton. Upon Tuesday the 13th of August.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you lie that Night?

Wetton. At Nantwich at the Holy Lamb. And the next Day we baited at Chester; and from thence we came the next Night to Holy-Well: There we stay'd all Night, and till next Day at Noon. We din'd at Holy-Well, and came that Night back to Chester: And from thence, the next Day, we came home to Tixball.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Ireland there all the while?

Wetton. Mr. Ireland was there, I look'd after his Horse.

L. C. J. When did he come first to Tixball?

Wetton. He came upon the 8th, and stay'd till the 13th; and then went to Holy-Well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, what Religion are you of?

Wetton. I am a Protestant, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. And the 9th of September he came away from Tixball for London, you say?

Wetton. Yes. I saw them take Coach, and he did ride on Horseback.

L. C. J. Did you see him often at Tixball, between the time he came from Holy-Well and the time he went to London?

Wetton. Yes, he was there several times; but I cannot tell the particular Days: But, my Lord, if you please, I can tell you the very Money he gave me, which was a Shilling and two Six-pences, when we came back from Holy-Well.

L. C. J. And the 16th, you say, he came back from Holy-Well?

Wetton. Yes, it was the 16th, upon Friday, that he came from Holy-Well.

L. C. J. And he says, the 9th of September he came back again from Tixball to London; and that he saw him several times, in the mean time, at my Lord Aston's House.

Mr. Sol. Gen. So, my Lord, we are past one of the Times; and have fix'd him at Tixball upon the 16th.

Mr. At. Gen. We have a couple of Witnesses more upon this Point, and then we shall go on to the 17th; and so all along to the 9th of September.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Thomas Sawyer. (Which was done.) When came Mr. Ireland to Tixball? Can you tell?

Mr. Sawyer. He came the 8th of August to Tixball, and continued there till the 13th: And then he went away; but whither he went, I cannot tell: But, as I was told, it was to Holy-Well.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come to Tixball again?

Mr. Sawyer. When my old Lady Aston came home, which was Friday the 16th.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know when he left Tixball for good and all?

Mr. Sawyer. the 9th of September, my Lord, he went with Sir John Southcoat to go to London.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Can you remember he was there at any time between the 16th of August, and the 9th of September?

Mr. Sawyer. He was once or twice there; but I cannot tell the particular Days.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Perswasion are you of, as to Religion, Sir?

Mr. Sawyer. I am one of the Church of England, my Lord.

L. C. J. Truth is the same in all Perswasions.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But we would obviate Mr. Otes's Objection, That they are all Papists.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Frances Allen. (Which was done.) Pray, will you give an account, when you saw Mr. Ireland in Staffordshire?

Mrs. Allen. He came the 8th Day of August to Tixball, and continued there the 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, and to the 13th in the Morning, and then he did go to Holy Well.

Mr. At. Gen. She will tell you one particular Circumstance, how she remembers him about that time.

Mrs. Allen. The 10th of August was Saturday; and that which causeth me to remember it, is this; There was a Woman, one Sarah Paine, I think her Name was, which testified at the Tryal, that he was in Town at that time; but he was not: For he was at Tixball upon the 10th, which was Saturday; and the 11th, which was Sabbath-day: And I saw him in the Chamber those Days.

Mr. At. Gen. How came you to know him so well?

Mrs. Allen. I was a Servant to my Lord Aston, and look'd to Mr. Ireland's Chamber, and wash'd his Linnen; and those Days I saw him in his Chamber.

Mr. At. Gen. When he went from Tixball to Holy Well the 13th, when did he come back again?

Mrs. Allen. The 16th Day, which was Friday.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he come afterwards to Tixball at any time?

Mrs. Allen. He went away the 17th, and I can tell you by a good Token, that he did so: For the 17th I carried his Cloaths into his Chamber, that he was to take with him.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come again to Tixball?

Mrs. Allen. He came several times, but truly I cannot tell what Days particularly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, when did he go away for good and all?

Mrs. Allen. I remember his going away with Sir John Southcoat, but I cannot tell the time.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what Religion are you of?

Mrs. Allen. I am a Protestant of the Church of England; so I was Christened, so I have lived, and so I hope to die before you all.

L. C. J. Upon my Word, she is very kind, she has a mind to die before us: 'Tis a sign she lives a good Life, she's so ready to die.

Mr. At. Gen. So, my Lord, you see that the 17th of August, he departed from my Lord Aston's. Now we shall call Mrs. Harwell to give you an account, whither he went on the 17th. Swear Mrs. Jane Harwell. (Which was done.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where do you live, Mrs. Harwell?

Mrs. Harwell. I live now in Town, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you live in the Year 78?

Mrs. Harwell. At Wolverhampton.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know Mr. Ireland, he that was executed?

Mrs. Harwell. Very well, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time did he come to your House at Wolverhampton?

Mrs. Harwell. The 17th of August 1678.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Mrs. Harwell. Upon Saturday.

Mr. Sol. Gen. From whence did he say he came at that time?

Mrs. Harwell. I do verily believe it was from Tixball that he came; I cannot positively say.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long stay'd he there?

Mrs. Harwell. He came to my House the 17th of August 1678. He supped there that Night, and I think he lay in my House every Night till the 26th of the same Month. Upon the 19th Day, after Dinner, I went with him a good part of the Town of Wolverhampton; and upon Friday following, which was the 23d, he went a little way out of Town, to a Fair hard by; and return'd the same Day; and stay'd at my House the next Day, being Bartholomew-day. The next Day being the 25th, being Sunday, he was at my House, and he stay'd, as I said, every Night, and lay at my House; and went away on Monday the 26th of August. It was, to the best of my remembrance, in the Morning.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Whither did he say he was going, when he went from your House on the 26th?

Mrs. Harwell. I think to Tixball, he said.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you see him again after that?

Mrs. Harwell. He returned to me again the 14th of September following. That Night he supped at my House, and lay there; and he stay'd at my House Thursday the 5th of September, Friday the 6th, and he went away on the 7th from me for good and all.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did he go then?

Mrs. Harwell. To Tixball I think, I cannot tell.

Mr. At. Gen. Whence did he say he came, when he came last to your House; which was Wednesday the 4th of September?

Mrs. Harwell. Then he said, he came from Boscobel and Black-Ladies, and that way.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell any thing that makes you remember he was at Boscobel?

Mrs. Harwell. I have some Circumstances that make me believe and remember it.

L. C. J. Ay, tell us what they are.

Mrs. Harwell. My Lord, Upon Monday the 2d of September, I heard Mr. Ireland would be at Boscobel; and I said to my Friend that told me so; Sure Mr. Ireland will not be there that Night, and I so near him. Yes, said she, be will. Then, said I, I will write to him; and so I did. And I tell you the 4th of September, which was Wednesday, he came to my House, and stay'd that Night, and the two next Days with me, and went away upon the Saturday after.

L. C. J. You say, you did write to him upon the 2d of September?

Mrs. Harwell. Yes, I did so.

L. C. J. What was the occasion of your writing to him at that time?

Mrs. Har-

Mrs. Harwell. One Madam Dormer, was then in those Parts, and he being gone a Visiting his Friends at Black Ladies, I writ to him, and desired him to give her a Visit, for I knew she would be glad to see him.

L. C. J. He came back to you the 4th of September, you say?

Mrs. Harwell. Yes, he did so, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did he own upon the Fourth of September, that he had received your Letter?

Mrs. Harwell. He said he had been at the Place, my Lord, but I know not whether he had received my Letter or no; but I am sure he waited upon my Lady; for she told me so afterwards.

Otes. I desire to know whether this Gentleman was at Ireland's Tryal?

Mrs. Harwell. No, my Lord, but I heard that upon the 17th of December following, Mr. Ireland was try'd at the Old Bailey for High Treason. Upon the 19th, I was informed by the Post what was sworn against him; and particularly as to this time, which I knew to be false: And upon my own Cost and Charges I sent an Express away to Town here to a Friend that I knew, upon reading the Letter that was written to me, that Mr. Ireland was falsely accused; and by that Express also I sent a Petition, humbly beseeching His late Majesty, that we might bring in Witnesses to prove, that Mr. Ireland was in Staffordshire, when Mr. Otes swore he was in Town; and upon that the King staid the Execution about five Weeks. We did hope for a second Tryal, but we could not obtain it; and he was executed. I did it at my own Cost and Charges: For I thought it my Duty, if I could, to save his Life, knowing that to be false which was sworn against him.

L. C. J. She speaks gravely and soberly upon my Word.

Mr. Just. Withins. So she does indeed.

Mr. At. Gen. We have abundance of them, my Lord. Swear Mr. William Rushton.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Tell my Lord what you know of Mr. Ireland's being at Mrs. Harwell's in August 1678, at Wolverhampton.

Mr. Rushton. My Lord, In the Month of August 1678, I did see Mr. William Ireland at Wolverhampton in the County of Stafford; and it was upon the 18th of August, and I saw him there, from the 18th to the 25th, every one of the Days but one, and that I cannot be positive in. He went that Day to Litchfield, which was upon the 23d, as I take it, but I cannot be positive; but all the rest of the Days I did see him there once, if not twice or thrice a Day.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did he lodge then?

Mr. Rushton. At Mr. Jyfford's, or Mrs. Harwell's.

Otes. Were you at any of the Tryals of Ireland, or the five Jesuits, Sir?

Mr. Rushton. No, I was never at one till now.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, what Religion is this Gentleman of, I desire to know?

Mr. Rushton. Not of your Worship's Religion, Doctor Otes.

L. C. J. But answer his Question.

Mr. Rushton. I am a Catholick.

Otes. A Roman Catholick he means, I suppose.

Mr. Rushton. Yes, I am a Roman Catholick, and a Loyal Subject.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mrs. Katherine Winford.

[Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. Mrs. Winford, Pray did you see Mr. Ireland at Mrs. Harwell's, the Year 1678?

Mrs. Winford. Yes, I did, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray tell the Court what you do know of that Matter.

Mrs. Winford. I did hear at Wolverhampton, that Mr. Ireland came to Town the 17th of August, and I did see him there the 18th, and I did see him there the 19th, and I did see him there the 20th, and I saw him there upon the 22d, 23d, 24th, and 25th, and that was the last time I saw him there.

L. C. J. At Mrs. Harwell's was it that you saw him?

Mrs. Winford. Sometimes at Mrs. Harwell's; and sometimes at my Father's House, who lived in that Town.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know how she comes to remember those Days so particularly?

Mrs. Winford. I remember them, because St. Bartholomew's Day was the 24th of August, and that was the Saturday after he came to Town; and the first Day I saw him was the Sunday before, and so I reckon it to be on those Days I saw him.

L. C. J. Have you any other Questions to ask her, Mr. Otes?

Otes. No, my Lord, I have not; She was a Witness before at Whitebread's Tryal, and was not believed there.

L. C. J. Well, make your Remarks by and by, and let them now go on with their Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then swear Mr. William Stanley.

[Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, did you see Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton, and when?

Mr. Stanley. Upon the 18th of August 78. It was Sunday, I saw Mr. Ireland in Wolverhampton in the Morning, and in the Afternoon he was in my own House. Upon Monday the 19th I saw him twice that Day at my own House; I positively speak that, and I verily believe I did see him on Tuesday the 20th, and Wednesday the 21st; but Thursday and Friday I cannot say I did see him those two Days: For he went upon one of them to Litchfield. But upon Saturday and Sunday I am sure I saw him, and two or three times some Days.

Otes. Pray, Mr. Stanley, did you know him before?

Mr. Stanley. No, I did not, Sir.

Otes. Was you at his Tryal?

Mr. Stanley. No, I was not.

Otes. Were you at the five Jesuits Tryal?

Mr. Stanley. No, I was not in London since, till the last Term.

Otes. What Religion are you of, Sir?

Mr. Stanley. What Religion are you of, Mr. Otes?

L. C. J. Nay, do not ask Questions, but answer the Questions he asks.

Mr. Stanley. I am a Roman Catholick.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Stanley, Pray can you recollect any Circumstance how you came to remember that it was such and such Days that you saw him?

Mr. Stanley. Yes, my Lord, I can.

L. C. J. What are they, tell them us?

Mr.

Mr. Stanley. I buried a Child that Morning, being Sunday the 18th of August, and he came to my House in the Afternoon, and I entertained him with those Things that I had provided for to entertain my Friends at the Funeral. On Monday was a Wake, and the young People went all to the Wake, and left Madam Harwell alone; and so she came with him to my House, and I entertained him with the same kind of Entertainment that I did the Day before.

L. C. J. That is a remarkable Circumstance indeed.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Dorothy Purcell. [Which was done.]

What say you, Mrs. Purcell, when did you see Mr. Ireland, at Wolverhampton?

Mrs. Purcell. I saw him the 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22d, and 23d Days of August, 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you see him?

Mrs. Purcell. At a Friend's House in Wolverhampton.

L. C. J. How come you to remember those Days of the Month?

Mrs. Purcell. I remember them by particular Circumstances.

L. C. J. What are those particular Circumstances? Let us hear them, How come you to name those very Days, the eighteenth, nineteenth, and so on?

Mrs. Purcell. I can remember it as well as any thing in the World.

Otes. I desire, my Lord, that she may tell how she does remember it.

Mrs. Purcell. That's enough, and as much as need to be said, I remember very well.

Otes. But I desire to know how you come to remember it?

Mrs. Purcell. I remember it, I tell you, very well; And I do affirm I saw him there.

Otes. But you do not tell what Circumstances you remember it by.

Mrs. Purcell. No, there is no need of it, I am sure I saw him there then.

Mr. At. Gen. Tell him some Circumstances.

Mrs. Purcell. Those were the Days before Bartholomew Eve.

Otes. My Lord, Is this any thing of Evidence?

L. C. J. The Jury hears it, and they will consider of it.

Otes. What Religion are you of, Mrs?

Mr. Purcell. Must I tell what Religion I am of?

L. C. J. Yes, answer his Question.

Otes. I dare say she is a Papist, she need not trouble her Head to answer it.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Scott. [Which was done.] Were you at Wolverhampton when Mr. Ireland was there?

Mr. Scott. Yes, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you do any Service for him there?

Scott. I look'd to his Horse.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come thither, do you remember?

Scott. I cannot tell just the time that he came in.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Week was it that he came thither?

Scott. It was of a Saturday.

Mr. At. Gen. What Month was it?

Scott. I cannot tell very well what Month it was; it was in August I think.

Mr. At. Gen. How long did he continue there?

Vol. III.

Scott. The space of a Fortnight off and on.

Otes. Is that Evidence, my Lord, that he has delivered?

L. C. J. It is but very small Evidence. It is only Circumstantial to confirm the other Testimony.

Mr. At. Gen. How long was it before Ireland was tryed and executed, can you tell that?

Scott. No, I know nothing of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Then swear Mr. John Stamford. [Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton, and when was it, I pray you?

Mr. Stamford. My Lord, in the Year 1675. I was sent beyond Sea to St. Omers, to fetch over two young Gentlemen that were Students there; And there I became acquainted with Mr. Ireland, who was then Procurator of the Jesuits at St. Omers. And in August 78. I did see him in Wolverhampton, upon the Sunday after the Assumption of our Lady; which was the 15th of August, he came to see me, and I saw him there that Day.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month is the Assumption of our Lady?

Mr. Stamford. That is always the 15th of August, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. How often did you see him there?

Mr. Stamford. I saw him Sunday and Monday, and till that seven Night, I saw him every Day in that Week but one, when he went to Litchfield.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know how he comes to remember that it was at that time?

L. C. J. He tells you a Reason for it, because it fell out to be upon the Sunday after the Assumption of our Lady; which is always the 15th of August.

Otes. My Lord, he says he came acquainted with Mr. Ireland at St. Omers.

L. C. J. Yes, he says, that was in the Year, 1675.

Otes. I desire to know, my Lord, what Business he had there?

L. C. J. He tells you, he went to fetch over two young Men that were Students there.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, I desire to know what Religion he is of.

L. C. J. What Religion are you of?

Mr. Stamford. I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. I desire to know what his Profession?

Mr. Stamford. I am a younger Brother, of a good and loyal Family as any of the County of Stafford, and that suffered as much as any for the late King.

Otes. I believe if it were looked into he is somewhat else besides a younger Brother.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, he says he is of a Loyal Family.

L. C. J. I am sure there is such a Family in that County that were great Sufferers for King Charles I. and the late King; and were very instrumental in Services for the late King, at his escape from Worcester; but whether he be of that Family or no, I cannot tell.

Mr. Stamford. The Doctor thinks I am a Jesuit, but I'll assure him I have a Wife and Children.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Otes was about to have made him a Priest, but it seems he hath a Wife and Children, and so is out of Danger.

Z z z

Mr. Sol. Gen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, swear Mrs. Katharine Fowler.

[Which was done.]

Mr. At. Gen. Did you see Mr. Ireland, Mrs. Fowler, at Wolverhampton, in 1678?

Mrs. Fowler. Yes, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. When was it?

Mrs. Fowler. I did see him on Saturday the 17th of August at Wolverhampton, he came that Day to my Mother's House, where I was.

Mr. At. Gen. How long did he stay there?

Mrs. Fowler. Till the 27th, which was Monday was Seven Night after, I was in his Company every Day in that time unless it were Friday, which Day they say he went to Litchfield to the Fair.

L. C. J. Is Mrs. Harwell your Mother?

Mrs. Fowler. Yes, my Lord, she is, and I lived at that time with my Mother.

L. C. J. How do you remember this, Have you any Tokens that you can give us, why you remember it was then?

Mrs. Fowler. My Lord, I recollected my self after Mr. Ireland's Tryal, in which Mr. Otes swore that he was here in Town between the 8th and 12th of August, that that was the very Month that Mr. Ireland was in Wolverhampton, and thereupon I concluded that Mr. Otes had not sworn true by that Recollection when it was fresh in my Memory, being within half a Year after.

Otes. Madam, Are you Mrs. Harwell's Daughter?

Mrs. Fowler. Yes, I am so, Sir.

Otes. Did you not know one Mr. Jennison?

Mrs. Fowler. Which Jennison?

Otes. Mr. Robert Jennison.

Mrs. Fowler. Yes, I do know him.

Otes. Are you not a kin to him?

Mrs. Fowler. Yes, but I am sorry to own I have such a Relation.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Gifford.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see Mr. Ireland in Staffordshire, and when, I pray you?

Mr. Gifford. I saw him there at Wolverhampton the 17th of August 1678, and he continued there till the 26th, I saw him there every Day.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask this Gentleman, whether he were at the Tryal of Ireland?

Mr. Gifford. No, I was not in Court, nor examined as a Witness.

Otes. Were you at the Tryal of the five Jesuits, Sir?

Mr. Gifford. I was there, but was not examined.

L. C. J. Was it every Day, say you, that you saw him at Wolverhampton?

Mr. Gifford. Every Day.

L. C. J. They say, he was one Day out of Town at Litchfield.

Mr. Gifford. He was out of Town that Day, but I saw him.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Elizabeth Gifford.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. You hear the Question, Did you see Mr. Ireland in Staffordshire in 78, and when?

Mrs. E. Gifford. Mr. Ireland came to Wolverhampton the 17th of August, and continued there till the 26th.

Mr. At. Gen. How do you remember it?

Mrs. Gifford. By a Wake that was just hard by, that was at that time; and he came to my Uncle's House upon the Sunday following the Assumption of our Lady.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you see him every Day till the 26th?

Mrs. Gifford. I remember I did see him every Day but two Days that I was abroad at the Wake.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know, whether she was examined at any of the former Tryals?

Mrs. Gifford. Yes, at the five Jesuits Tryal, I was.

Otes. Were you not at Ireland's Tryal?

Mrs. Gifford. No, I was not.

Otes. There was one Gifford examined there.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Elizabeth Keeling.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton, and when?

Keeling. Yes, my Lord, I did see Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell when it was.

Keeling. It was the 17th of August he came to my Mistress's House.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What August?

Keeling. August before the Plot.

L. C. J. Who was your Mistress?

Keeling. Mrs. Harwell, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long did he continue there?

Keeling. He came on the Saturday, and I saw him there till the Monday. When I was sent for to my Mother's Burying I left him and Madam Dormer at Dinner, and came back on the Thursday. And in his Chamber I heard him discourse, but I did not see him. Upon the Friday he went abroad, and returned again that Night. Upon the Saturday I saw him, and he continued there till Monday Morning, and then he went away, and returned on Wednesday the 4th of September, and stayed till Saturday the 7th; and then went away from Wolverhampton.

Otes. I desire to know what Religion this Woman is of?

Keeling. I am a Roman. Catholick, God be thanked.

Mr. At. Gen. Mrs. Keeling, When did Mr. Ireland return again do you say, after he went first to Wolverhampton?

Keeling. It was the Wednesday seven-night after, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. That was the 4th of September.

L. C. J. How long stayed he there then?

Keeling. Till Saturday in the Forenoon.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did he say he was going then?

Keeling. He said he went to Bellamour to Dinner.

L. C. J. Did you see him at any time after?

Keeling. No, my Lord, I saw him no more.

Mr. At. Gen. Then swear Mr. Richardson.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, will you give an account when you saw Mr. Ireland and where, in the Year 78?

Mr. Richardson. My Lord, I saw a Gentleman that I was informed was Mr. Ireland, at Wolverhampton, at a Wake; which was Monday the 19th of August.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did he lodge?

Mr. Richardson. At Mrs. Harwell's.

Mr. At.

Mr. At. Gen. What, Are you a Tradesman?

Mr. Richardson. Yes, an Apothecary in Wolverhampton.

L. C. J. How many Days did you see him at Wolverhampton?

Mr. Richardson. I saw him only one Day in the Market-place.

L. C. J. You did not know Mr. Ireland before?

Mr. Richardson. But I was informed that was he.

L. C. J. What became of that Ireland that you were informed was at Wolverhampton then?

Mr. Richardson. I heard presently after that, upon Mr. Otes's Plot, he was secured and executed.

Mr. At. Gen. What Religion are you of, pray, Sir?

Mr. Richardson. I am of the Church of England.

Otes. Pray, Sir, I would ask you this Question.

Mr. Richardson. As many Questions as you please, Mr. Otes.

Otes. Who told you it was Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Richardson. Mrs. Harwell.

Otes. When was it she told you it was Ireland?

Mr. Richardson. To the best of my Remembrance, it was before he was apprehended as a Traitor.

Otes. He is uncertain when he was told so.

L. C. J. Well, make what Advantage you can of it by and by.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Eleanor Graves.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mistress, did you see Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton at any time?

Mrs. Graves. Yes, I did, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was it?

Mrs. Graves. The first time was six Years ago in August, it is now going on seven Years since.

Mr. At. Gen. What time in August was it?

Mrs. Graves. The first Day was the 20th or 21st, I am sure I saw him upon the 22d; for I din'd with him, and was with him all the Afternoon; and supp'd with him. Upon the 23d we went to Litchfield together, which was Bartholomew Eve. And I saw him the 25th, which was Sunday after.

L. C. J. Are you sure it is the Ireland we are now speaking of?

Mrs. Graves. They said it was the same Mr. Ireland that was executed. They call'd him so.

L. C. J. Nay, there is no great Doubt, but only for Mr. Otes's Satisfaction.

Mr. At. Gen. At whose House did he lie at Wolverhampton?

Mrs. Graves. At Mrs. Harwell's.

Mr. At. Gen. Where was it you supp'd with him, I pray you?

Mrs. Graves. He din'd and supp'd at a Relation's House of mine.

L. C. J. Who was that? Name him.

Mrs. Graves. It was at my Uncle Winford's.

L. C. J. Did you go along with him to Litchfield do you say on the 23d?

Mrs. Graves. Yes, and so did my Uncle; and at Night we came back together.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Religion are you of, Mistress?

Mrs. Graves. I am of the Church of England.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to ask her, How did she know it was the same Ireland that was tried?

Mrs. Graves. It was the same Ireland that they said was afterwards executed. I know no more.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you go back with him to Mrs. Harwell's from Litchfield?

Mrs. Graves. I did, to my Uncle Winford's House.

Mr. At. Gen. Now we come, my Lord, to another Period of Time, which is from the 26th of August, to the 29th; and for that we first call Sir Thomas Whitegrave, who is a Justice of the Peace, and a worthy Gentleman; a Member of the Church of England in that County. Swear him. [Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir Thomas, will you be pleased to give the Court an account, whether you saw Mr. Ireland in Staffordshire 1678, and what time it was?

Sir Thomas Whitegrave. I saw Mr. Ireland upon the 29th of August before the Popish Plot; it was upon a Thursday in the Afternoon upon Tixball Bowling-green; and I discoursed with him; he told me he was to go home that Night with Sir James Simmons, and Mr. Heveningham. They told me afterwards he went on Saturday to Hildersham, and went thence on Monday following towards Boscobel; some time after that, a Rumour came down that Mr. Ireland was accused with others, of being in a Plot of the Papists; and my self and some others that were in Commission for the Peace in that County, did reflect upon the time that Ireland was in the Country, and we were a little disturbed, because he had been at particular Places among our Neighbours, whom we knew to be Catholics.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you remember no Day but that one, Sir Thomas?

Sir Thomas Whitegrave. Only the 29th I saw him there, and discours'd with him; and afterwards there was Word sent to me, to desire me that I would come up to London at his Tryal.

L. C. J. And did you come up, Sir Thomas?

Sir Thomas Whitegrave. No, I did not; I had no Subpœna; and being a Justice of the Peace, I did not think fit to leave the Country at that time without a Subpœna.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know of this Gentleman, how long he had been acquainted with Mr. Ireland?

Sir Thomas Whitegrave. I never saw him before, nor since.

L. C. J. He goes no further than the 29th.

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord, he does not. Then swear Mr. William Fowler.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will you give an account when you saw Mr. Ireland, and where?

Mr. Fowler. I saw Mr. Ireland upon the 27th of August 78. in Staffordshire, at a Horse Race at Etching-hill. The Race was run between Sir Henry Gough and Captain Chetwind.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see him any other Day in that Month?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, the 29th of August I saw him at Tixball Bowling-green.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When else did you see him?

Mr. Fowler. I saw him the 10th of August before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where, at Tixhall, at my Lord Aston's House?

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Sir Thomas Whitegrave was upon the Bowling-green the 27th of August?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, he was, and did discourse with Mr. Ireland there.

L. C. J. What became of Mr. Ireland afterwards?

Mr. Fowler. He went about the Country for some time, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was it the same Ireland that was executed?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, it was the same.

L. C. J. You say you saw him the 29th at Tixhall Bowling-green?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, I did so.

L. C. J. When you heard he was taken up for the Plot, what did they say whither he went at that time?

Mr. Fowler. I think he went to Mr. Heveningham's, or thereabouts.

Otes. I would fain know this Gentleman's Religion.

Mr. Fowler. I am a Roman Catholick.

L. C. J. We ask it only because Mr. Otes desires to be satisfied in that Point.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray swear Mr. Howard.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time in August 78 did you see Mr. Ireland in Staffordshire, and where?

Mr. Howard. I came out of Shropshire upon the 27th of August, to the Horse Race at Etching-bill; and there I saw this Mr. Ireland upon the 28th. I dined at one Mr. Herbert Aston's House at Bellamore, and there I saw him again.

Mr. At. Gen. What other time did you see him?

Mr. Howard. Never any other time.

Otes. How does he know it was the same Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Howard. I came up to Town soon after, and they told me that knew him, that it was the same Ireland that suffer'd.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Drayton.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you see Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Drayton. At Etching bill Race.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day was that?

Mr. Drayton. That was the 27th of August 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you see him after?

Mr. Drayton. The next Day following I did not see him; but the Thursday following I saw him at Tixhall, and he went home with Mr. Heveningham to Aston, and I saw him on Friday, he was with us there, and went a fishing, and we catch'd a great Pike of a Yard long; which was not ordinary with us. Upon the 31st, which was Saturday, my Master went to kill a Buck in the Park, and Mr. Ireland went along with him, and they went to a little Village hard by, and there I parted with him, and did see him no more that Day. Mr. Gerrard of Hilderham was to meet my Master a hunting, but he was sick, and did not: Then upon Sunday the 1st of September, I was sent to see Mr. Gerrard of Hilderham, and there I saw Mr. Ireland.

L. C. J. Who was your Master, pray you?

Mr. Drayton. This Lord Gerrard of Bromeley's Father.

Mr. At. Gen. He was accused by Dugdale of the Plot, and died afterwards in Newgate.

Otes. Pray ask Mr. Drayton what Religion he is of?

Mr. Drayton. I am a Roman Catholick.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Sir James Simmons.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you see Mr. Ireland, Sir James?

Sir J. Simmons. Upon Tuesday the 27th of August 78, I remember very well, I saw Mr. Ireland at the Horse Race at Etching-bill, between Sir Henry Gough, and Mr. Chetwind; and I remember particularly, that Sir Henry Gough's Horse distanc'd him. I did not see him before he came to the Inn, but there we met, and drank together. And Thursday the 29th of August, being at Tixhall Bowling-green, Mr. Ireland was there, and came home with my Father Heveningham and me, and some Gentlemen in the Country; and came to Aston, and stay'd there that Night. I remember the next Day was Pancrass Fair, and I went to the Fair, and did not come home.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Month is that Fair usually kept?

Sir J. Simmons. It is an unconstant time; now and then in September, now and then in August; and that Year we had a Subscription to get it regulated to a certain Day.

L. C. J. Did you see him after?

Sir J. Simmons. My Lord, I cannot swear to the Saturday, because I cannot so well tell whether I came back from the Fair on Friday Night, I think I did not.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Green.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Green. Yes, my Lord, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you see him in 78?

Mr. Green. The first time was Etching-bill Race, the 27th of August.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What other Days do you remember?

Mr. Green. Thursday the 29th I saw him; I belong to Sir James Simmons, and Mr. Ireland came home with him, and some other Gentlemen to Mr. Heveningham's at Aston, and was a setting with him on Friday the 30th in the Afternoon. And Saturday the 31st he was a hunting with Mr. Gerrard. Nay, more than that, I saw him drawn on the Sledge, but not executed. And that was the same Man that was there at that time.

Otes. What Religion is this Gentleman of?

Mr. Green. I was ever a Roman Catholick.

L. C. J. Pray were they a fishing that Day?

Mr. Green. In the Morning he was, and they got a great Pike; I saw the Pike and did eat part of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Fallas.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you see Mr. Ireland, Sir?

Fallas. Upon the Thursday after Sir Henry Gough's Race, which was Thursday the 29th of August, Mr. Ireland came to Mr. Heveningham's, and I look'd to his Horse there. Upon Friday Morning they went a fishing, and got a great Pike; and I did see them go out a setting after Dinner, Dinner, he and Mr. Green, with my Lady and the Keeper; and I saw him come in again. And I saw him drink a Glass of Table-Beer in the Hall. Upon Saturday Morning, which was the 31st of August, they went a hunting in Mr. Gerrard's Park, and kill'd a Buck; and afterwards my Master asked him to go home with him again, but he would not: For he said he must go to Mr. Lowes at four, and we parted at three. And I came here, and saw him executed; but while he was at my Master's House, his Horse was never out of the Stable but I brought it to him.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you see him executed?

Fallas. It was the 24th of January afterwards, I think.

Otes. What Religion are you of?

Fallas. I am for the Church of England, a Protestant, I always was so.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him when he was acquainted with Mr. Ireland?

Fallas. The first time was the 29th of August, when he came to my Master's House.

Otes. That does not come to my time, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. But it comes very close to it; it reaches to the 31st of August.

L. C. J. It is within a Day of you, upon my Word.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And I'll tell your Lordship what is yet more considerable; this Place is an hundred and twenty Miles from London: But we shall not leave him there.

Otes. I desire to know whose Servant he is?

Fallas. I am a Servant to Mr. Heveningham, and I serve the King; I come to testify the Truth. I was here before, but then we must not be heard; all the Cry was against us, that we were Rogues, and must be knock'd on the Head.

L. C. J. Were you here at any of the Tryals?

Fallas. I was at the Council-Table, and there I was in great Danger of being knock'd on the Head.

Otes. Would they have knock'd him on the Head at the Council-Table, does he say?

Fallas. I have been in the Room by the Council-Table, where they have cryed, Knock them down, hang them Rogues; do they come to be Witnesses against the Saviour of the World? And they came about me there, and asked me if I knew any of them, or was of their Company? And I was glad to say I came thither about a Suit of Law I had with a Brother of mine; and then they pitied me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we have brought him, my Lord, every Night where he lodged from the 3d of August to the 31st.

Mr. At. Gen. And then we shall prove that he went to Mr. Gerrard's at Hildersome that they speak of; there he was the 31st and 32d—

L. C. J. How, Mr. Attorney, the 32d? I doubt you will hardly be able to tell us where he was that.

Mr. At. Gen. The 1st of September I mean, my Lord.

L. C. J. Ay, we understand you very well.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. John Proctor.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you see Mr. Ireland in 78?

Proctor. I saw him the 31st of August 78.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where?

Vol. III.

Proctor. At Fulford.

Mr. Sol. Gen. At whose House?

Proctor. At Mr. Lowes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That was the Place the other Witness said Ireland told him he was to be at four of the Clock, and therefore went away at three.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you see him afterwards?

Proctor. I saw him the next Day, the 1st of September.

Mr. At. Gen. Where?

Proctor. At Esquire Gerrard's.

Mr. At. Gen. How far is that from Mr. Lowes?

Proctor. It is a Mile and an half.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see him afterwards?

Proctor. Not there, I did not.

Mr. At. Gen. What Religion are you of?

Proctor. I am a Protestant.

L. C. J. What did you hear became of that Ireland afterwards?

Proctor. I saw him executed at Tyburn afterwards, and it was the same Man.

L. C. J. Where did you live then?

Proctor. I lived at Fulford then.

L. C. J. What, with Mr. Lowe?

Proctor. Yes, my Lord.

Otes. It seems he was a Servant to a Papist.

L. C. J. What then, what of that?

Otes. My Lord, I desire you would ask him, whether he ever saw Ireland before the 31st of August which he speaks of?

Proctor. No, I did not.

L. C. J. But you are sure it was the same Man you saw executed?

Proctor. Yes, I am sure of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Circumstance can you tell that he was the 1st of September at Mr. Gerrard's?

Proctor. I went to Dinner thither that Day: I rode before Madam Brooke.

L. C. J. What Day of the Week was that 1st of September?

Proctor. It was upon a Sunday, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Was that about Pancrass Fair-time?

Proctor. Yes, my Lord, it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He can tell you another Circumstance how he comes to remember him at Mr. Lowes the 31st of August.

L. C. J. Ay, by what Token do you remember that he was there the 31st of August?

Proctor. I went that Day to pay some Money, and came home again in the Afternoon; and just as I came in, he came thither.

Otes. How does he say he knows him to be the same Man?

L. C. J. He has told you twice he saw him executed.

Otes. What Religion is he of, does he say?

L. C. J. He is a Protestant.

Mr. At. Gen. Then swear Mr. John King.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, do you acquaint the Court and the Jury where you saw Mr. Ireland, and when.

Mr. King. I saw Mr. Ireland at Mr. Gerrard's of Hildersome the 1st of September that Year that the Plot broke out, which was in the Year 78. There I saw him on Sunday; there he stayed all Night, and so did I; and on Monday Morning I went to Mrs. Crompton's where I liv'd, and he came thither to Millage as soon as I, which is within

A a a a

within a Mile of Hildersome, and dined there the same Day.

L. C. J. How far is that from London pray you?

Mr. King. An hundred and ten miles.

L. C. J. And he was there at Dinner, you say?

Mr. King. Yes, he was.

L. C. J. How long was it before Dinner was done?

Mr. King. I believe he might go thence about two of the Clock.

L. C. J. Where did he say he designed to go then?

Mr. King. He designed to go to Boscobel that Night.

L. C. J. Do you remember any body else was at Mr. Gerrard's then when you saw him?

Mr. King. Yes, Mr. Ferman Drayton was at Hildersome at that time.

Otes. Pray, what Religion is this Gentleman of?

Mr. King. I am a Roman Catholick, Mr. Otes.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray swear Mr. Francis Lee.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, tell my Lord and the Jury where you saw Mr. Ireland, and when?

Lee. I was a Servant to Mr. Gerrard, and Mr. Ireland upon Saturday Night came to my Master's House, and stayed all Night and all Day on Sunday, and went away on Monday to Millage.

L. C. J. What time and what Year was it?

Lee. It was in 78; but I am not certain of the Day of the Month: It was on a Saturday he came, and I have Witnesses to prove I was there at that time.

L. C. J. What Month was it?

Lee. It was in August; as I think, the last Day, but I am not certain: And he went on Monday to Millage, and there dined at Mrs. Crompton's; and from thence he went to Pancrass, and thence he did go to Boscobel, and stayed all Night there.

Mr. At. Gen. That was the 2d of September.

L. C. J. How do you know he went to these Places?

Lee. I was told so.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know how long this Man was acquainted with Ireland before?

Lee. I never saw him but at that time.

Otes. How does he know it is the same Man then?

Mr. King. Here is a Man that saw me with him, and was present at Ireland's Execution.

L. C. J. Who is that, Proctor?

Mr. King. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then call Proctor again. (Who came in again.) Who went along with you to Dinner on Monday?

Lee. My Lord, He did see me at Hildersome at Mr. Gerrard's.

L. C. J. What say you, Proctor, was this Gentleman there at that time?

Proctor. Yes, my Lord, I did see him there.

L. C. J. Was that the same Man that was executed, which you saw at Mr. Gerrard's?

Proctor. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Did you dine with Mr. Ireland on Monday at Mrs. Crompton's?

Lee. Yes, my Lord, I did, and went afterwards with him to Pancrass, and stayed there two Hours, and then he went to Boscobel.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There are the two Days gone which Mr. Otes swore to, and in which he was so positive that it was either the 1st or 2d of September.

Mr. At. Gen. Then swear Mr. Biddolph.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, when did you see Mr. Ireland, and where?

Mr. Biddolph. My Lord, I was in Staffordshire the latter end of August and the beginning of September, and I was at Mrs. Crompton's House, which is my Aunt, the 2d of September, being Monday, where I saw Mr. Ireland, and dined with him that Day; and after Dinner he went with Mr. Gerrard's Son who was to go to School to Boscobel: And I will give your Lordship a particular Circumstance that may satisfy you that I am not mistaken in the time: As I came thorough Northamptonshire that Summer, I was at my Lord Cullen's, and he desired me to be at a Horse Race at Newton-Slade, where there is a Plate always run for upon the first Thursday in September, and that Year it was the 5th of September. Now when I dined at my Aunt Crompton's, she would have had me stay'd all Night at her House, but I excused my self, and told her I had promised to come to my Lord Cullen to be at the Race, and I must needs be there before, to be as good as my Word to my Lord; and therefore I went away to Pancrass, and so on my Journey, otherwise I had stayed with my Aunt all Night: And I am sure this was Monday before this Horse Race.

Otes. My Lord, This Gentleman speaks to no Year particularly.

Mr. Biddolph. It was in 1678, the Year before Mr. Otes's Plot broke out.

Mr. At. Gen. Now we will call Mrs. Crompton: Swear her.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, when did you see Mr. Ireland, Mrs. Crompton?

Mrs. Crompton. He was at my House at Millage in Staffordshire at Dinner, the same Day that my Nephew Biddolph did dine there: As for the Day of the Month I cannot so well tell it, because when my Friends dine with me, I do not use to note down the Day particularly; but it was, I remember, a pretty remarkable time, for it was about Pancrass Fair. Mr. Gerrard of Hildersome came with him, and Mr. Ireland being a Stranger, I asked who he was, and they told me it was Mr. Ireland: He never was at my House before nor after; he was a meer Stranger to me.

L. C. J. What Day was it, say you?

Mrs. Crompton. It was the same Day my Nephew Biddolph dined there.

L. C. J. Was it Monday the 2d of September, do you remember?

Mr. At. Gen. He says he was at her House at Millage that Day, and she says it was the same Day he dined there.

Mrs. Crompton. But I never note down the particular Days when my Friends dine with me, except I had particular occasion to do it, as I had none at this time.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know what Religion this old Gentlewoman is of?

Mrs. Crompton. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Palmer:

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Palmer, Where did you see Mr. Ireland?

Mrs. Palmer. I was at Dinner at Mrs. Crompton's at Millage, where there was a Gentleman called Mr. Ireland that did dine there.

L. C. J. When was it?

Mrs. Palmer. I cannot tell truly what Day it was.

L. C. J. Who was there besides you at Dinner that Day?

Mrs. Palmer. 'Tis so long since, I cannot remember.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Biddolph there?

Mrs. Palmer. Not that I remember, my Lord.

L. C. J. What do you bring her for, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. She dined there that Day it seems; but if she cannot remember it, I cannot help it.

L. C. J. But these kind of Witnesses do but slack your Proof.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I think we do over do our Business indeed.

Mr. At. Gen. We have one Witness more to this Point, and that is Mrs. Mary Holmes; swear her. [Which was done.] Where did you see Mr. Ireland in the Year 78?

Mrs. Holmes. I saw him at Millage, my Lord.

L. C. J. When?

Mrs. Holmes. The 1st or the beginning of September, I am sure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Mrs. Holmes. Monday.

L. C. J. You have Proof enough of this, Mr. Attorney General.

Mr. At. Gen. Truly, I think so, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray swear Mrs. Esther Gifford. [Which was done.] Mrs. Gifford, When did you see Mr. Ireland?

Mrs. Gifford. Upon the 2d of September 78. I saw Mr. Ireland, above a hundred Miles from this Place.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where?

Mrs. Gifford. At Pancrafts.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time of the Day was it?

Mrs. Gifford. In the Afternoon about four or five a Clock.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he stay there all Night?

Mrs. Gifford. I cannot tell indeed.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Pendrel. [Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, my Lord, we are come to the 2d of September in the Evening, we shall prove where he was that Night and the 3d, and then we shall return to the 4th of September, when Mrs. Harwell swears he came back to Wolverhampton.

Mr. Hanfes. When did you see Mr. Ireland, Mr. Pendrel?

Mr. Pendrel. I saw him upon the 2d of September.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you see him?

Mr. Pendrel. At Boscobel at my House, there he lodged with me that Night.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In what Year was it?

Mr. Pendrel. In the Year 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it the September before the Plot, and before Mr. Ireland was executed?

Mr. Pendrel. Yes, my Lord, it was.

L. C. J. Did you know him before?

Mr. Pendrel. No, I did never see him before, as I know of.

L. C. J. How long did he stay there?

Mr. Pendrel. He stayed that Night and the next Day all Day, and went away the 4th of September to Black-Ladies.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Whose House is that?

Mr. Pendrel. It is Mr. John Gifford's.

L. C. J. You say you live at Boscobel; did you hear any thing of a Letter came to your House for Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Pendrel. Not that I know of, my Lord, there was not any that I remember.

Mr. At. Gen. Then swear Mrs. Pendrel.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mistress, will you give an account where you saw Mr. Ireland?

Mrs. Pendrel. I saw him at Boscobel, at the Royal Oak; he came there the 2d Day of September.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell what Year it was?

Mrs. Pendrel. It was the first beginning of the Plot.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long did he stay there?

Mrs. Pendrel. He stay'd Tuesday, and Wednesday he went to Black-Ladies, and so away to Wolverhampton.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have but one Witness more, my Lord, for Wednesday the 4th of September, and then we have done. Swear Mr. Charles Gifford. [Which was done.] When did you see Mr. Ireland?

Mr. C. Gifford. May it please your Lordship, I saw Mr. Ireland at my Father's House at Black-Ladies.

Otes. My Lord, I would ask Mrs. Pendrel a Question before she goes: Whether she was not a Witness at the five Jesuits Tryal?

Mrs. Pendrel. I was in Court, but they would not suffer me to swear.

Otes. Did she not give Evidence there?

L. C. J. She was examined, but she could not be sworn, because she came to testify against the King in a Capital Cause.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what say you, Mr. Charles Gifford?

Mr. C. Gifford. My Lord, I say I saw Mr. Ireland at my Father's House at Black-Ladies, and he stay'd there an Hour and an half, and went thorough Chillington, and said he would go to Wolverhampton.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Month was it?

Mr. C. Gifford. I am morally certain, it was the 4th of September, and so he went to Wolverhampton, as I am informed. He came to our House to see a Lady that was there.

L. C. J. What Lady was it?

Mr. C. Gifford. It was one Madam Wells.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Thus, my Lord, we have lodged him the 4th of September at Wolverhampton, when Mrs. Harwell says, he returned to her; and so, my Lord, we have given an account where he was from the 3d of August to the 14th of September.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have prov'd where he was every Day in that time, but only the 8th of September, and for that we must leave it to the Jury. We have proved that he came away from Mrs. Harwell's the 7th, and he said he was to go to Tixball; and the 9th he did go from Tixball in Sir John Southcoat's Company, and came to London the 14th.

L. C. J. Well, what say you to it, Mr. Otes?

Otes.

Otes. Has Mr. Attorney done his Evidence, my Lord?

Mr. At. Gen. We shall call no more Witnesses, unless you go about to support your own Credit, and then we have other Witnesses to call.

Otes. I do not value any Witnesses you can bring against my Credit.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, for the present we do not design to call any more Witnesses.

L. C. J. Then let us hear what you say to it.

Otes. My Lord, Here is an Indictment exhibited against me, which sets forth, that I should swear at Mr. Ireland's Tryal, that Mr. Ireland was in Town the 1st and 2d of September; and it sets forth, that in truth he was not in Town: And likewise it sets forth, that I swore at the Tryal of the five Jesuits, that Mr. Ireland took his leave of me and others here in Town at his Lodging in Russel-street, between the 8th and 12th of August; whereas the Perjury there assigned, is this, That he did not take his leave of me or any other Person, betwixt the 8th and 12th of August, at his Lodging in Russel-street. Now, my Lord, I was not the only Witness of Mr. Ireland's being in Town in the Month of August; nor the only Witness of his being in Town about that time in September. My Lord, my Prosecutors have endeavoured to maintain this Charge against me thus: The first thing they have gone upon, as far as I can remember in the Indictment, is as to the 1st or 2d of September, or rather they have endeavoured to prove both under one. Now in answer to all this Evidence, my Lord, the first thing I shall offer to your Lordship's Consideration and the Consideration of the Jury, is the great Hardship I lie under, after six Years time to be put to disprove what the Counsel here have now offered against me. My Lord, I observe first, that this Indictment which is now upon Tryal, is founded upon the Tryal of Ireland, which was the 17th of December 1678, at the Old Bailey, and it is now six Years after that Evidence of mine was delivered. A second thing is, that the Indictment is found by special Commission, as appears by the Indictment itself. Now I must recommend to the Consideration of your Lordship and this Jury, why the Prosecution of this pretended Perjury has been delayed so long, when it appears by the Evidence which has been produced, that the Witnesses to prove it were known six Years since, as much as they are now; and there is no colour of Evidence offered, that any new Fact has been lately discovered which was not then known. There is no Reason, my Lord, that is assigned, or can be assigned for this Delay, but only that the Hardship might be the greater upon me: For now it is difficult, if not impossible, for me to maintain the Evidence I then gave, so many Persons being since dead or gone beyond the Seas, and many things that were fresh then, are now grown out of Memory; and I beg your Favour to insist upon this, and I think it cannot be denied me. If such a Practice as this be admitted, no Witness is safe in giving his Testimony against any Conspirators whatsoever. For, my Lord, I must desire leave to offer another thing to your Consideration, before I speak to the particular Evidence, and that is this, That here is nothing but a bare Point of Time upon which this Perjury is assigned; when the Substance of the Testimony that I gave at the Tryals of Mr. Ireland and the rest about the Popish Plot, is not assigned as any Perjury at all; it is only a Circumstance of Time and Place: And, my Lord, I shall offer this to your further Consideration, that Ireland was convicted for a Treasonable Resolution to murder the late King, and not for being in Town in August or September 78, or elsewhere; and he was not convicted for his being in his Chamber in Russel-street, and taking his leave there in August, which is one matter of the Perjury now assigned. Next, my Lord, 'tis hard and unreasonable to tie up Witnesses that come to discover Plots and Conspiracies, to speak positively as to Circumstance of Time and Place; and every little Punctilio in their Evidence to bind them up to such Niceties in the Delivery of their Testimonies, as to Time and Place. It is usual to speak with Latitude, as to such kind of things, and 'tis probable my Evidence, which is now in question, was not, that Ireland was the 1st or 2d of September positively here in Town; but, my Lord, I did (I believe) give myself a Latitude, and would not confine myself to either the 1st or 2d, 5th, 6th, 7th, or 8th; but, my Lord, that he was in September there, I am positive: I must therefore beg your Lordship's and the Court's Opinion, whether that Mr. Foster did prove that I was positive and precise to the Days of the 1st and 2d of September 78?

L. C. J. In my Opinion it is a plain Evidence that you did swear positively to those two Days; and you spoke to a Circumstance very material in your Evidence, that either the 1st or 2d of September you had twenty Shillings of him in Town here: Now that Circumstance of his Kindness to you, was not a Circumstance either of Time or Place.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I shall begin with my Proofs; but, my Lord, I desire I may have free Liberty to mind my Business; for here is a Gentleman behind me that will not let me be at quiet, but is either meddling with me or my Papers.

L. C. J. Who is it? Let me know him, and I will take care to make him quiet, or set him farther off. You, Gentlemen that are at the Bar should know better, one would think: He must have liberty to make his own Defence; and if he complains and lets me know who meddles with him, they had better do somewhat else.

Otes. My Lord, The first thing that I offer, is, that Ireland was convicted of Treason, and for that you have the Record.

L. C. J. It is allowed of all sides, that Ireland was convicted and attainted of Treason.

Otes. Then, my Lord, the principal Defence which, as near as I can remember, Mr. Ireland made at his Tryal, was an Endeavour to prove that he was not in Town between the 8th and 12th of August, nor the 1st and 2d Days of September, which are the Points now in Issue; and he then produced one Mr. Gifford and his Sister and Mother; and fifteen or sixteen Witnesses were produced at Mr. Whitebread's Tryal, of which there is another Record, that being six Months after Mr. Ireland was tried: There
Mr.

Mr. Whitebread produces several Witnesses, Mr. Gifford, I say, and several others, I think to the number of sixteen, which were to prove Ireland's being out of Town in these times that these Witnesses speak of. Now, my Lord, all those several Witnesses being produced to prove Ireland then out of Town, the very Point that is now in Issue, was then so; and notwithstanding all those Witnesses, the Jurors who tryed Mr. Ireland, and the Jurors who tryed Mr. Whitebread and the other four Jesuits, found them guilty; tho' they endeavoured with all their force imaginable to oppose my Testimony, and it was left to the Consideration of the Jury what their Witnesses had said. If your Lordship pleases to remember, my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs did observe to the Jury, that the Evidence of the Prisoner at the Bar did consist only in Punctilio's of Time; which, as near as I can remember what he says, he called a Nicety of time; and in Whitebread's Tryal he was pleased to call it catching in Point of Time. And it was observ'd at Ireland's Tryal, that his Defence was so weak that my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs upon the Integrity of Bedloe's Evidence and mine, uses these Words to the Jury, (tho' he then endeavoured to do what these Witnesses do now): It is most plain the Plot is discovered, and that by these Men, and that it is a Plot and a villainous one; which shews not only the Fulness and Satisfactoriness of our Proof that we gave, but does also take notice of the little Shifts and catching Tricks he made use of to prove himself out of Town; which would not weigh with the Court: Therefore I observe it is but the same Objection that then was made, and is not a new one now. And my Lord Chief Justice that then was, speaking of that Proof he brought (which the Court heard with Patience, but could easily see thro' the Vanity of it) said, What Arts they have of evading this, I know not; for as they have turn'd their Learning into Subtilty, so they have their Religion too. All this is well remembered by those that were by and heard that Tryal: And tho' Ireland laboured to disprove me in that Circumstance of Time, yet still the Court did justify the Evidence that Mr. Bedloe and my self had given: And the same Chief Justice said, I leave it to you to consider, whether you have not as much Evidence from these two Men as can be expected in a Case of this nature; and whether Mr. Otes be not rather justified by the Testimony offered against him than discredited. This was after his Plea was debated and considered; and I must further observe to your Lordship, that tho' Mr. Ireland by his false Witnesses pressed this Matter as far as he could then, and urged the Court to believe it; yet when the Jury brought in their Verdict and found him Guilty, the Chief Justice expressed the Satisfaction of the Court in these Words: You have done, Gentlemen, like very good Subjects and very good Christians; that is to say, like very good Protestants; and now much good may their 30000 Masses do them. This, my Lord, was the Case of Mr. Ireland, at his Tryal, and the same point of his being out of Town was again managed before a second Jury at the Tryal of the five Jesuits; but the Court saw the Design of the Popish Party to blemish the Evidence given of the Plot; but yet they look'd upon it only as a Trick: And my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs, in summing up the Evidence at that Tryal, says, They fall foul upon Mr. Otes, meaning my self; he appears to have been their Agent; and whilst so, bad enough: But if he had not had a mind to have become a good Man; he would not have done us that good he has done in the Discovery of the Design they had engaged him in. And if your Lordship please to remember, that at that Tryal of the Five Jesuits, when all Arts were used to prove Ireland out of Town, and me at St. Omers, in the same Charge to the Jury, my Lord Scroggs did take notice that the Jesuits were very exact at catching in a Point of time; but now says, that is a thing that no Man can precisely charge his Memory withal; and therefore he does there perswade the Jury, that that should not be too strictly the Measure of their Judgments about Truth and Falshood, by the Mistake of seven or eight Days; For, said he to the Jury, examine your selves how often every Day you do mistake things that have been transacted half a Year ago, and err in Point of Time, taking one Week for another, and one Month for another; and therefore you are not to lay too great a Weight upon the Point of Time. Now if too great weight, my Lord, be not to be laid upon a Point of Time, then this Charge that is now brought against me is not of weight at all. And besides, my Lord, this ought to be considered, if this were the great Objection then, and then answered, it ceases to be an Objection now. And as the Court did observe at the summing up of the Evidence, that they made their Defence about the Uncertainty of a Point of Time, which was no Defence at all: So that, my Lord, the whole Course of my Plea is this: 'Tis a hard Case for a Man after six Years, to be indicted for a Circumstance of Time. I will first offer the Testimony of one Witness that is dead, and that is Mr. Bedloe, who at his Death confirmed all that he had sworn of the Popish Plot to be true, and affirmed that he had rather spoken less than the Truth, than more; and for that I desire that my Lord Keeper may be called, who took his dying Examination.

Vol. III.

L. C. J. As for that, Mr. Otes, it is a thing very well known to the World, and particularly to a worthy Gentleman that sits by you, (pointing to Mr. North) that Mr. Bedloe, when he was sick, did make some such Protestation.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I desire that Mr. Blayney may be sworn, to give an account what Mr. Bedloe testified at Ireland's Tryal.

Then Mr. Blayney was sworn.

Otes. Mr. Blayney, Pray will you see in your Notes of Ireland's Tryal, whether Mr. Bedloe did not swear that Mr. Ireland was in Town, the latter end of August 78, or the beginning of September.

Mr. Blayney. Whereabouts in the Tryal is it, Sir?

Otes. It is in the Printed Tryal, folio 41.

Mr. Blayney. My Lord, I do find these Words in my Notes, that Mr. Bedloe should say, about the latter end of August, or the beginning of September; but I believe it was the latter end of August, Mr. Ireland was at Harcourt's Chamber,

B b b b

and

and being asked the Question by my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs, Whether he said positively, it was the latter end of August, he said it was in August, he would not be positive to a Day, but he thought the latter end.

L. C. J. 'Tis very well known that too, that Bedloe did swear Ireland was in Town the latter end of August or beginning of September, and to confirm it upon Mr. Ireland's denial, you swore he was in Town the 1st or 2^d of September, and gave you Twenty Shillings, that was the Occasion of your Oath.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I desire to call some Witnesses to testify to the Deposition that was taken of Mr. Jennison, about Ireland's being then in Town.

L. C. J. When was that Deposition taken, and before whom?

Otes. It was taken in the Year 79. by Sir Edmund Warcup.

L. C. J. But we cannot admit that in Evidence, unless the King's Counsel will consent.

Otes. My Lord, I will then produce what he swore at another Tryal.

L. C. J. Why, where is he, is he dead?

Otes. My Lord, it has cost me a great deal of Money to search him out; but I cannot any where meet with him; and that makes my Case so much the harder; that I cannot, when I have done all that Man can do, get my Witnesses together. I sent in the depth of Winter for him, when I thought my Tryal would have come on before; but I could never hear of him.

L. C. J. We cannot help that.

Otes. Will what he said at any other Tryal be Evidence here?

L. C. J. Look you, though in strictness, unless the Party be dead, we do not use to admit of any such Evidence; yet if you can prove anything he swore at any other Tryal we will indulge you so far.

Otes. Have you the Record of Sir George Wakeman's Tryal there, Sir Samuel Astrey?

Mr. At. Gen. Here it is, if Mr. Otes have any use for it, we will lend it to him.

L. C. J. Put it in, and now prove what you can, what Jennison swore at that Tryal.

Otes. Mr. Blayney, have you your Notes of Sir George Wakeman's Tryal here?

Mr. Blayney. No, Sir, the Ticket of your Subpoena did only mention Ireland, Whitebread and Langhorn's Tryals. But I did formerly upon another Occasion look for the Tryal of Sir George Wakeman, but could not find it among all my Notes.

Otes. Sir, Can you remember then what Jennison swore at that Tryal, about Ireland's being here in Town?

Mr. Blayney. Truly, my Lord, I can never trust my Memory at all when I take Notes, and it is now so long since that Tryal, that I dare not undertake to say I remember any Particulars of it.

L. C. J. He says it is so long since, that he cannot remember anything. But there is Sir Edmund Warcup now, is he sworn?

Cryer. Yes, My Lord.

L. C. J. What do you ask him then?

Otes. I would desire to Examine Sir Edmund

Warcup, my Lord, about the Deposition of Jennison that he took.

L. C. J. But we tell you that cannot be admitted as Evidence, without they will consent to it on the other Side.

Otes. My Lord, he proves Mr. Ireland here the 19th of August, and that contradicts these Witnesses.

L. C. J. If they will admit it well and good, else we cannot do it.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we will be so fair with Mr. Otes, if he will admit Mr. Jennison's Letter that is under his Hand, wherein he does own that he was mistaken in his whole Evidence about that Matter, we will consent his Deposition be read.

Mr. Just. Withins. If he will not consent to that, there's no reason you should consent to the other, Mr. Attorney.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Otes, Mr. Attorney makes you this Offer, You desire to have Mr. Jennison's Depositions read; which cannot be done without their Consent; they tell you they will consent, if you will let them prove what he has owned since about that Business.

Otes. My Lord, I will consent with all my Heart; let them read any Letter under his Hand.

L. C. J. Well, do it on both Sides by consent: And now Mr. Otes, do you produce his Examination.

Otes. Pray Sir Edmund Warcup, will you please to give the Court an Account, what Deposition Mr. Jennison made before you about Ireland's being in Town in August 78.

Sir Edmund Warcup. If my Lord commands me, I will.

L. C. J. Ay, you must answer his Question.

Sir Edmund Warcup. This Mr. Jennison did make one Information before me, and according to the Duty that was incumbent upon me, I delivered it in to the King and Council, and there it has lain ever since; for me to remember the Particulars of it is impossible.

L. C. J. Have you his Examination here, Mr. Otes? If you have, shew it him.

Sir Edward Warcup. If I see my Hand to it, attesting it was sworn before me, I can say somewhat to it.

Otes. My Lord, he says he delivered it into the Council; but it is printed.

L. C. J. That is no Evidence, Man.

Sir Edward Warcup. I can say nothing to it, unless I saw it under my own Hand.

Otes. That is impossible for me to have, my Lord.

L. C. J. I cannot tell how to help it.

Sir Edward Warcup. You have no more to say to me, Sir, have you?

Otes. No, Sir, I have not. Pray call Sarah Batten.

Mr. At. Gen. Is that the same that was Sarah Pain?

Otes. I think so, Sir; I am not sure it is she, till she come hither.

Cryer. Here is Sarah Batten.

Otes. Pray swear her, and call Sir Thomas Doleman. [Which was done.]

But Sir Thomas Doleman did not appear.

Otes. Pray was not your Name, Sarah Pain?

Batten.

Batten. My Lord, I desire my Charges before I speak.

L. C. J. What is your Name, good Woman?

Batten. My Name is Sarab Batty.

Otes. Was not your Name Sarab Pain, once?

Batty. No, my Maiden name was Sarab Edmunds.

Otes. Was not you a Witness at the Tryal of Mr. Ireland?

Batty. No, Sir.

Otes. Did not you live with my Lord Arclington?

Batty. No, Sir.

Otes. Then I have been at all this Charge for nothing. Are you sure your Name was not Sarab Pain?

Batty. No, indeed, Sir.

Otes. They told me that she liv'd at Uxbridge, and thither I sent.

Batty. I do live at Uxbridge, Sir.

Otes. Upon your Oath, were you a Witness at any of the Tryals, or no?

Batty. No, my Lord, I was not.

Otes. Then I have nothing to say to her.

L. C. J. What other Witnesses have you to call?

Otes. We have laboured all we could to find her out, and searched for her with all the care imaginable; and here we thought we had had her, but it seems it is not she.

L. C. J. We cannot help it.

Batty. I hope, my Lord, you will consider my Charges in coming up hither.

Otes. I will take care of thee, Sweet-heart.

L. C. J. Who do you call next?

Otes. Pray call Mr. Charles Cläre.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Pray call Mr. Percival. My Lord, I desire Mr. Blayney may give an Account what she swore about Ireland's being in Town, seeing I cannot have her here.

L. C. J. That we cannot do neither, without Mr. Attorney will consent: For this as well as the other, is an extraordinary Thing.

Otes. You see by my bringing this Witness, my Lord, that I have done what I could to find her out.

L. C. J. What say you, Mr. Attorney, will you consent?

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord, it is so irregular, that we cannot consent to it.

Otes. Pray call Mr. Percival and Mr. Vaughan.

Cryer. They do neither of them appear.

Otes. Then I must lose the Benefit of her Testimony.

L. C. J. Have you done?

Otes. No, my Lord, I will have done immediately.

L. C. J. Take your own time.

Otes. I desire Sir Michael Wharton may be called.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Pray call Mr. Charles Cherwin.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Pray call Mr. Robert Bowes.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Pray call Mr. John Savile.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. My Lord, I have served all these with Subpœna's; and if they will not come, I cannot help it.

L. C. J. Nor we neither.

Otes. Mr. Jennison was used as a Witness in the Tryal of Sir George Wakeman, and so was Mr. Bowes, and Mr. Burnet, who was produced to prove the Circumstance of Mr. Jennison's Evidence: But, my Lord, since I cannot have the benefit of his Evidence, nor of Sarab Pain's, I must only sum up all I have to say in two or three Words: My Lord, besides that what I did deliver in Evidence at those Tryals, I gave in upon Oath: You have Mr. Bedloe's Evidence at the Tryal of Ireland testified by Mr. Blayney; and the Testimony of him as a dying Man, given into my now Lord Keeper, wherein he averr'd, That what he had spoken of the Plot, was all true: And you hear that he swore Mr. Ireland was here in Town in August, and so did Sarab Pain too, and I think upon my self as very hardly used, to have such a part of my Testimony brought in question, after Witnesses are dead, or gone out of the way. As for Mr. Jennison, his Evidence was formerly made use of; and his Evidence was approved of too, as is well known to those that sat Judges upon the late Viscount Stafford. But this is that, my Lord, I must needs say for my self, That as I hope to see the Day of Salvation in another World, whatever I have sworn about Mr. Ireland's being here in Town betwixt the Eighth and Twelfth of August 78. and in the beginning of September, is true, as I shall answer it before God another Day. And, my Lord, as to the Evidence this Day brought against me, I desire you would but observe, though that there are many of those Witnesses, yet a great part of them do not come up to the Eighth or Twelfth of August: And I hope your Lordship will remember and remark to the Jury, what little Credit those of them had that came to testify in the behalf of Mr. Ireland at his Tryal, and at the Five Jesuits Tryals, of which there are two Records before you; and they do first justify this, That Ireland and the rest of them were Guilty of what they were accused of; and then, that these Witnesses did not testify the Truth.

Besides these two Tryals, my Lord, you have a third Verdict, and that is, at the Tryal of Mr. Langborn: Now the whole Popish Plot almost was laid forth in those three Tryals; and my Lord, I believe verily I am the first Precedent in all England, of any one's being indicted for Perjury that was a Witness for the King in such a Case as this, after six Years times elapsed, after Verdict upon Verdict, and Judgment and Execution upon these Verdicts, and when no new Objection is now offered, but what was then started; and no new Circumstance occurs now, but was as forcible then, except it be the Change of the Season. And I desire it may be considered, when all the Judges of England were Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer at those Tryals, these Matters were fully discussed and debated; and then they did look upon all the Objections as fully answered and confuted.

My Lord, I am confident if I had been a Witness in any other Cause than of a Conspiracy of the Papists, I might have had fairer quarter than I have now: And I do verily believe, that at this rate, it is more safe for Papists to be Traytors, than for any Protestant to discover a Popish Plot.

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I beseech you to take my Case into your serious Consideration, as to the hardship of it; and since all my Witnesses are in Places unknown, or they are such as, considering the Times, dare not appear, some of them being Lawyers, and under fear they shall fare the worse in their Practice; and others being Persons that depend upon the Law, and think they shall be look'd ill upon, as I am now look'd upon with a hard Eye by the Popish Party and their Adherents: Yet I hope, you that are sworn to do Justice, will not let me be ruined by a number of false Witnesses, by the Evidence of Papists that are Parties. For if your Lordship please to consider that Vote of the Lord's House, which is a Court of Record, wherein they do declare that they are fully satisfied by the Proofs they have heard, that there then was, and for divers Years last past had been, a Horrid and Treasonable Plot and Conspiracy, contrived and carried on by those of the Popish Religion, for the murdering of His Majesty's Sacred Person, and for subverting the Protestant Religion, and the Ancient and Established Government of this Kingdom: Which Vote of Parliament, my Lord, does make the Papists to be all Parties in this Case, and where they are Parties, I hope they shall not be admitted as Evidence, or at least not be believed, because there is a Turn to be served by them against me, and a Revenge they are resolved to take upon me; for they have hopes now of bringing in their Religion, and are to welcome that in with my Ruin; and this is the Cause of this Prosecution: Their Eyes do see now what their Hearts so long desired, that is, the Death of a great Man who died but lately, and against whose Life they had conspired so often and so long. My Lord, if this had been the first Conspiracy that ever the Papists were guilty of, there might have been some more Scruple and Objection in the Case: But if you cast your Eyes upon Campian and others in Queen Elizabeth's Time, of Garnet, and the Powder Jesuits in King James's Time, and the Designs of the Popish Party in the Time of the late King Charles, the first discovered to the Archbishop of Canterbury: If these Things do pass for Truth, and there is no Averment against so many Records as we have of their Conspiracies, then my Discovery is no such improbable a Thing; and I hope then the Gentlemen of the Jury will take it into their Considerations; who they are that are Witnesses in this Case; Men whose very Religion is Rebellion, and whose Principles and Practices are pernicious to the Government; and thereby they are to be looked upon as dangerous Persons in Church and State. But, my Lord, if the Letters of Coleman be well considered, they will justify me, that he Corresponded with Le Cheefe the French King's Confessor, for the promoting of Popery in England, is notorious to all Mankind, that have either read or heard that Tryal: Your Lordship was of Counsel for the King in that Case, and heard how it was opened, and plainly proved upon him: And when his Letters have been made so publick, and proved under his own Hand, nay and confessed by himself, I think no Man will doubt but that must be a plain Proof of the Plot; and will be enough to vindicate me.

My Lord, I have one Word more, and then I have done, and leave it to your Lordship and the Jury. My Lord, as they would now sling the Popish Plot upon me, so there is an evident Design to sling the Murder of Godfrey upon a Protestant Peer; and because an Indictment was upon the Testimony of the Traytor Fitzbarris, against that noble Lord, they have resolved to have profligate Villains to take his Life for that Murder: That is apparent; and so they will go on step by step, if they be let alone; and think at length to wipe their Mouths with Solomon's Whore, and say, They have done no Mischief. My Lord, I leave these Things to the Consideration of the Court and Jury; I will not detain you any longer: I have called what Witnesses I could get, but the distance of Time has made it impossible for me to have those here now, that did give Evidence in this Matter before.

My Lord, I have one Favour to beg of the Court, I had but a bad Night last Night, and am now in a great Pain; I desire that you would grant me one Request, that I may have Counsel assigned me to argue the Errors in Yesterday's Indictment: My Lord, I am but a poor Man, and cannot be at the Charges of seeing Counsel.

L. C. J. We did assign you Counsel before; you may have who you will for Counsel.

Otes. Will your Lordship be pleased, to do me the Favour to let me have some time to prepare and instruct Counsel.

L. C. J. Ay, what Time would you have?

Otes. A Week's time, if your Lordship please.

L. C. J. Give him till this Day seven-night, there may be no hurt in that.

Otes. Till Monday come seven-night, if your Lord please, let me have.

L. C. J. No, no, we cannot do that; we give you a Week's time, which is more than ordinary; for by the Rules of the Court there are but Four Days allowed, and those would be out Monday or Tuesday.

Otes. I thank your Lordship for that Time you have given me, but I hope you will be pleased to take the Particulars I have mentioned, into your Consideration; and I desire I may have liberty to go Home, because I am not well.

L. C. J. Ay, you may go, if you will.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please Your Lordship, and You Gentlemen of Jury, the Question that you are to try, is a Perjury, which is charged on the Defendant Titus Otes, for swearing that William Ireland was in Town, upon the first or second of September, 78. And likewise, for swearing, that he took his leave of him at his Chamber in Russel-street, between the eighth and twelfth of August 78. And we do assign the Perjury in both those Points, that he is forsworn in both, and the Evidence of that Perjury is, that it is impossible to be true what Otes did swear, because Mr. Ireland was not in Town between the eighth and twelfth of August, nor the first or second of September.

Gentles

Gentlemen, You have heard the Evidence that has been given, and there has been no less than between forty and fifty Witnesses produced to shew that it is really impossible what Otes did swear should be true; he tells you that this Matter is in a Circumstance of Time, wherein it is difficult for a Man to be positive to a Day, and a Man may be allowed some Latitude in such a Case; nay, it is usual with Witnesses in Points of Time, to swear with a Latitude; but, my Lord, to shew that, if we should grant that false Doctrine to be true (and false most certain it is, and of mischievous consequence it would be, if, when things are charged upon Men that depend upon Circumstance of Time and Place, the Witnesses should not be strictly kept to those Circumstances) yet, I say, granting that Position, it is impossible it should do him any Service in the Case before you: For between the beginning of August, and the 14th of September, (which includes both the Times he swears to, and the Latitude of above twenty Days to boot) there is not any one Moment of Time wherein his Oath could be true.

Gentlemen, You observe what the Witnesses have said, how they have given you an account of every particular Day of both Months, from the 3d of August, when he first left London, to the 14th of September, when he returned back again: We did ask the Witnesses, that it might appear to be plainly true, what they swear, if they had any particular Circumstances that made them to remember it; and they have given a great many, and now it lies upon us, to shew you that it is Demonstration, that what they have said and testified, must be true; and that those Days they speak of, he was in the Places they named.

For take the Periods of Time, and you will find you have him from the 3d of August to the 16th, with my Lord Aston, going from London to Tixball, upon the 17th they give you an account of him at Mrs. Harwell's to the 26th; from the 26th to the 4th of September, there are others that give you a particular account, by remarkable Circumstances, where he was every Day in Staffordshire; from the 4th to the 7th you find him at Wolverhampton; for the 8th indeed we do give no particular account where he was that Day; but we prove that upon the 9th he was at Tixball, and from thence he came away with Sir John Southcoat towards London, and there you have a particular account where he was every Day till the 14th, when he returned to his Lodging.

And now, Gentlemen, I shall shew you, that, if you believe these Witnesses saw him in these Months; that certainly it was upon those Days they speak of, that they did see him.

First, That he went out of Town in August, you have these Witnesses, Anne Ireland, Eleanor Ireland, Mrs. Duddle, Mrs. Quino, and my Lord Aston. Well, how come they to remember it was upon the 3d of August? Why the four Women remember it by this particular Remark; Three Days before there was a Holiday, which they keep in Memory of Ignatius; and upon that Day they remember Mr. Ireland went abroad to take a Recreation, and came home again that Night, tho' the rest of the Company stayed there; because he was to go out of Town. Upon the third Day after, which must be the 3d of August: For Ignatius's Day you hear, is always the last Day of July. And they do positively swear, that upon the 3d of August, he took his leave of Anne Ireland and Eleanor Ireland. Mrs. Duddle remembers, that he went out that Day. Mrs. Quino, whose Husband was his Taylor, says, he did stay a little to have somewhat in his Cloaths mended: And she saw him in his Boots; and he said he was to go out of Town. Mrs. Anne Ireland says, they took the Liberty to lodge a Gentlewoman in his Chamber, and saw him not again till a Fortnight before Michaelmas: And that he did go out of Town upon the 3d of August, is further prov'd by my Lord Aston, who noted it down in his Book at that time that Ireland came to his House at Standen in Hartfordshire; so that here is as strong an Evidence as can be, that he did go on the 3d of August, and that they remember it to have so been by all the Circumstances that can be imagin'd.

Vol. III.

Well, the 3d of August he went out of Town. The 4th of August we give an account where he was: He stayed that Day with my Lord Aston at Standen. The 5th of August he set out with my Lord Aston's Company, and went to St. Albans. The 6th, he went to Northampton. The 7th to Coventry. The 8th to Tixball; and the Company that went with him proves it, which was Sir Edward Southcoat and Mr. John Southcoat, and Harrison and Hobson, who saw him go in the Company; and Mr. North, who says he saw him every Day; and Ingletrap the Coachman that drove the Coach, all these remember it positively; and some of them speak of a remarkable pretty Horse which he rid upon.

Now when he comes from Tixball; (for we have brought him hither by manifest Proof, by Men that could not forget, by Men that saw him in the Company:) There he remained (as they all testify) till the 13th of August, and that was the Tuesday after his Arrival at Tixball; and from thence he went that Day a Journey into Flintshire to Holywell; and that is proved by the Witnesses that were in his Company in that Journey. They tell you, the 13th he lay at Nantwich. The 14th at Holywell. The 15th at Chester. And the 16th he came back again to Tixball. And so here you have abundance of Witnesses, that give you a particular account where he was, in what Company they saw him from the 3d of August to the 16th. If he were then in this Company from the 3d to the 16th; he could not be in his Chamber in Russel-street between the 8th and the 12th.

Then we came to the 17th, and then we find him to be at Wolverhampton, where he continued to the 26th; and that it must be between the 17th and the 26th, is plain; for after that time which Mrs. Harwell speaks of, the other Witnesses give such Circumstances, that it cannot be otherwise: You find him on the 27th at a Horse Race, which is a remarkable Circumstance. And these are things that Men do very well remember what Days of the Month they happen upon. We then give you an account of the 29th; that at Tixball he was seen in Company upon the Bowling-green, with Persons of Quality; Sir Thomas Whitegrave and others. So we give you an account where he lodged. The 28th he was at Bellamore.

The

The 19th he went to Mr. Heveningham's; there he lodged till the 1st of September; and this is remember'd by particular Circumstances, that he went a Fishing, and a Setting, and a Hunting. Then the next Day, which is the 1st of September, and the next Day after, the 2d of September, they saw him at Mr. Gerrard's; he din'd upon the 2d at Mrs. Crompton's, and lay at Boscobel; there he continued the 3d, and the 4th he came to Wolverhampton again.

So that this shews, that what Mrs. Harwell did speak of, was true; for if Mrs. Harwell did see him, as 'tis not at all doubted but she did: It must be in that Interval of Time between the 16th and the 27th; where we give you an account of him by other undeniable Circumstances, that he lodged at other Places, and could not lodge at her House at Wolverhampton.

Besides, Gentlemen, the particular Circumstances that they do remember him by, proves it to be on those Days. Mrs. Harwell gives her positive Oath, that he did come there the 17th, and lay there every Night to the 26th, which was on the Monday Seven-night after; and that he came again the 4th of September after, and lay there till the 7th.

Then there is Rushton, another Witness, that saw him at her House, the 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22d, and 25th. And, I say, it must be those Days, because we have given an account, by other Witnesses, of all the other Days. And it must be that very time, that Otes speaks of: For it was the Summer before Ireland was apprehended and executed for the Plot, which was Michaelmas 1678.

Mrs. Winford she remembers him at Wolverhampton, the 18th, 19th, 22d, and 24th.

Stanley remembers the 18th and 19th: And if you ask him, how he remembers it? He tells you by a Circumstance, that most Men would remember; he buried his Child that Day, and entertain'd Ireland with the Provision for the Funeral. Now Men usually remark such Accidents as these; for that is a thing a Man cannot forget, that has any Concern in the World for those that are so nearly related to him. And therefore such Circumstances must of necessity evince the Truth of what he speaks; because it is brought to his Mind by an Accident that cannot be forgotten.

Mrs. Purcel, which is the next Witness: And she remembers to have seen him the 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22d, and 23d; for she remembers the last of them was the Day before Bartholomew-day, which was a remarkable Day.

Then there is another Man, that look'd to his Horse whilst he was there; but his Memory will not serve him to speak to any particular Time: He only evidences, that he was there; and the other Witnesses speak to the Time.

Mr. Stamford, he remembers it to be at that time, because he saw him on the Sunday after the Assumption of our Lady; which is always the 15th of August. And the like says Mrs. Gifford. These Circumstances verify her Testimony.

And Mr. Gifford remembers, he came on the 17th Day: And he saw him every Day, till the 26th Day.

And Mrs. Fowler, who is Mrs. Harwell's Daughter: She remembers, he came the 17th Day; and she was in his Company every Day, till the 26th; except one Day, when he went to Litchfield; that was the Day before Bartholomew-day, which was Friday.

Mrs. Keeling, she swears, that upon the 17th Day he came there, which was Saturday. She saw him on the Sunday, and on the Monday; and went on the Monday in the Afternoon, to the Funeral of her Mother: Which is another Circumstance, that she must needs remember; and by that, has the Remembrance of the Day of the Month when he was there: And she return'd back again on Thursday, and heard him that Day, but did not see him. But she saw him every Day after, till he went away: And she remembers his going away was upon the 27th. And she remembers likewise, that he return'd the 4th of September after.

Mr. Richardson, he proves, That he saw him upon the 19th Day of August at Wolverhampton; as he was told, it was he: And being ask'd, When he was told so? He says, Mrs. Harwell told him so some time before he was apprehended: So that she could not tell it him then, to serve a Turn. And he is a Protestant too.

So is likewise Eleanor Graves: Who gives you an account that she saw him there on the 20th, 21st, and 22d; and on the 23d, she went to Litchfield with him; and upon the 25th, she supp'd with him at Mr. Winford's.

Now, Gentlemen, you have a full account of it, even to a Demonstration, That he must be in these Places at this time, if you will believe one thing; that is, That these Witnesses saw him at all: And sure none can doubt, but these Witnesses did, upon the Circumstances they have testified, see him in August and September. And then it must be those particular Times, that they speak of.

At Wolverhampton then you have him to the 26th: The 27th Day, you have an account of him at the Horse Race at Etching-bill. The 28th, Mr. Howard gives you an account, he din'd at Bellamore, at Mr. Aston's. The 29th, you find him at the Bowling-green at Tixball: And from thence to Mr. Heveningham's; where he lodg'd that Night, and stay'd there the 30th: Which is prov'd by the Circumstances of Fishing in the Morning, and Setting in the Afternoon. And the next Day which was Saturday the 31st, you hear he was at the Killing of a Buck; where Mr. Gerrard was expected, but Sickness prevented his Coming. And you have him the 1st of September, which was Sunday, at Mr. Gerrard's House, where several of the Witnesses did see him.

And besides, one Proctor tells you, He saw him the 31st of August, at Fulford, at Mr. Lowe's. And he very well remembers that to be the Time, by a remarkable Circumstance: For (says he) the last Day of August I went to pay some Money, (which is a thing Men are generally very punctual in) and when I came home again, I found him there. And he swears he saw him at Mr. Gerrard's House, the 1st of September, the Day after.

Mr. King remembers he saw him at Mr. Gerrard's of Hildersham, the First of September; and that he din'd at Mrs. Crompton's, the Second of September; and stay'd there till Two of the Clock in the Afternoon: And went from thence, with an intent to go to Boscobel.

Lee says, He saw him at Mr. Gerrard's House, and at Mrs. Crompton's : That he dined there, and went from thence to Pancrass, and from thence to Boscobel.

Mr. Biddulph remembers, he dined with him on the Second of September, at his Aunt's ; and that by this Circumstance, He was desired by my Lord Cullen, to see an Horse-Race in Norshamptonshire ; and promised my Lord Cullen to come : Which Horse-Race is always on a certain Day, the First Thursday in September ; and that Year it happen'd to be the Fifth of September : And it was the Monday before, that he din'd at his Aunts. And because of his Promise to my Lord Cullen, he would not stay all Night. And so it must be the Second Day of September, that he saw him there.

Mrs. Crompton says, It was the same Day, that her Nephew, Mr. Biddulph, dined there : For he was a Stranger, and she never saw him before, nor after.

And there is another Gentlewoman, Mrs. Palmer, that swears, He dined at Mrs. Crompton's ; but she cannot tell the particular time when.

Mrs. Gifford saw him at Pancrass, between the Hours of Four and Five in the Afternoon, upon the Second of September : And Lee went along with him to Pancrass ; and from thence he went to Boscobel.

Mr. Pendrell says, He saw him the Second of September at Night. For he came to his House. Which agrees with all that the other Witnesses say, which was, That he intended to go to Boscobel that Night. He and his Wife both testify, That there he lodged upon the Second of September ; and stay'd there the Third of September ; and went from thence the Fourth, to Black-Ladies ; Where Mr. Gifford tells you, he dined.

And we have given you an Account before, where he was the Fourth at Night : For then he was returned to Wolverhampton ; and there he lodged to the Seventh of September. And after the Seventh of September, though we do not give you a positive Evidence, That upon the Seventh of September, at Night, or upon the Eighth, he was at my Lord Ashton's : Yet we have given you that, which amounts almost to a Demonstration, That he must be there upon the Eighth of September. For he went from thence with Sir John Southcoat, to go towards London, on the Ninth. And our Evidence is the more Credible, because they swear cautiously all of them : Unless they remember some remarkable Circumstance, they will not take upon them to fix upon a particular time.

Then, Gentlemen, we give you an Account, by the Persons that were in his Company where he was every Day, all along from the time he left Tixhall, down to the time he came to Sir John Southcoat's House in Surry. And this Journey took up the Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh and Twelfth of September : There are Four Days ; and he stay'd there one Day. Then he sold Mr. Southcoat his Horse. Mr. Southcoat lent him his Horse to come to Town ; and the next Day he did come to Town. And so we have brought him to Saturday the Fourteenth of September.

And now, let all the World be judge, if there be any possible Room left, that any one Word Mr. Otes has said, can be true ; even giving him the Latitude of Time, he himself desires, and says, All Witnesses must be allowed. No, there is not one Minute for him, wherein he can be verified in any one Tittle of his Evidence, as to Ireland's being in Town. And this is that which I call (and sure, well I may so call it) a Demonstrative Proof, That what Otes did swear, is utterly false.

Gentlemen, the Jury had not this Evidence at the Tryal of Ireland : Some they were, that went out of the Town with him ; and some, one or two of Wolverhampton, were at the Five Jesuits Tryals ; but not above Five or Six in all of these Forty odd, that now appear. True indeed it is, all these were not there ; and Ireland, upon that, unfortunately suffered ; for so I may take leave to say, It was Unfortunately.

Mr. Otes has said one thing unto you, which he lays much stress upon : He would have you look upon it as a great Hardship, That this Prosecution comes so late ; and that it is strange, after Six Years time spent, this should not be set on foot.

But, Gentlemen, I cannot but with much Sorrow remember to you ; and I know you all remember it too well : That there was a time, when the City of London was so far corrupted, that it was become a Refuge and a Sanctuary for High Treason ; when there was no Justice to be had for the King there ; when Men lodged themselves within those Walls, as a Protection for their Conspiracies ; we all remember the Time, when Indictments were preferred, and a plain Evidence given to a Grand Jury, even to the publick Satisfaction of all that heard it ; and yet they have refused to find the Bill : And not only so, but were so abetted by the Rabble, that it was scarce safe for the Judges to sit upon the Bench. These are Things none of us can forget, but must be perpetually remembered, to the Shame of the Authors and Contrivers of them ; And therefore it is no wonder an Indictment was not preferred against Mr. Otes at that Time, when the plainest Proof against Criminals could not be admitted. And this will give every Man Satisfaction, why it has been delayed. And I hope at the same time give every Man a Caution, how they fall into the like Circumstances again.

But, Gentlemen, you have heard the Evidence that is now offered, to prove this Matter of Fact ; and it is a plain Demonstration, if you will believe that Mr. Ireland was seen by these Men at all, he was seen at those very times they have particularly declared : For upon Consideration of the Circumstances, it is impossible it should be at any other times ; and so I leave it to you to judge upon the whole, whether the Defendant be Perjured or no.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Case has taken up a great deal of Time ; but it is a Case of that Moment and Consequence, that sure no time ought to be thought too long, that is employed for the discovering of the Truth, so necessary to be discovered, as the Matter now in question. For as I said at the beginning upon this Occasion, and I cannot but say it again now ; I confess, I cannot without Horror and Trembling, reflect upon the many Mischiefs and Inconveniencies we have been run into, if the Testimony given this Day in this Cause against Otes prove true, as I cannot in the the least imagine, where there should remain the least Objection against the Truth of it ; I cannot, I say, but bewail, that so many innocent Persons (to the Reproach of our Nation be it spoken) have suffered Death upon this account.

God deliver me, from having the least stain of Innocent Blood imputed to me ; and it is more to be lamented, when we see that Impudence, which has brought that Infamy upon our Land, continues with a brazen Face, defying all Shame to this Day. But by this we may be informed, how some Men's Consciences are seared, and that there are some People that do indeed live without the Fear of God in the World. For if that Man, who has assumed to himself the Habit and Character of one that should preach to others, Religion, Vertue, and the Things that become true Christians, shall become such a Monster of Impiety and Impudence, in defiance of Heaven and Earth ; What greater and more manifest Proof can there be of a seared Conscience ?

I cannot but lament likewise the Wickedness of our Age, when I reflect upon the Testimony of that other Wretch (indeed I cannot use Terms severe enough for him) that when he was going into another World, should persist in such gross Falsities ; I mean Bedloe, infamous Bedloe ; and let his Name be for ever infamous to all Mankind, that have any regard, or deference for the Truth ; that he should with his latest Breath dare to affirm, That every Word he had said of the Popish Plot, was true ; when it is as clear as the Sun, by the Testimony of this Day ; that every Word he swore about Ireland, was utterly false. Good God of Heaven ! What an Age have we lived in, to see Innocence suffer Punishment, and impudent Falsity reign so long.

Gentlemen, I hope all Eyes are opened (I wish they had been so long since ;) let us lay the Burden, the Infamy and Reproach of these Things, upon them that deserve it ; for we cannot but know, we are reckoned as a By-word to all our Neighbours, and shall remain Monuments of Ignominy to all succeeding Ages and Times, if we did not endeavour to discharge our selves, and our Religion, and the Justice of our Nation from these Scandals.

Gentlemen, I think I am obliged, in the first Place, to take notice of what Mr. Solicitor General has mentioned, concerning the Insolency of those Times ; wherein the Faction was grown to that extravagant Height, that, in truth, a Man durst not appear, with safety of his own Life and Fortune, to Testify the Truth. And, Is it not a shame, that it should be remembered, what one of the Witnesses this Day Testified ? That when he came to appear at the Council-Table, to Attest a Matter of Fact, before this Innocent Blood was spilt (for so I must call it, if that which has been Sworn this Day is true) the Rabble should be so boisterous, as to cry out ; Where is that Villain, that dares come to give Evidence against OTES, the SAVIOUR of the NATION ? Oh, horrid Blasphemy, that no less an Epithet should be given to such a Profligate Wretch as Otes, than that which is only proper to our Blessed LORD ! As though Otes had merited more than all Mankind ; and so indeed he has, if we take it in a true Sense :

He has deserved much more Punishment, than the Laws of this Land can inflict.

And I must needs say, Gentlemen, That this is an Instance, why there seems not to have been Punishment enough ordain'd in Law for Perjury, because our Law-makers did not foresee, that there could ever be such Villains, such Miscreants, as these.

We have indeed another Instance in the Law, of a Crime for which there is no adequate Punishment ; and that is in the Case, where a Child kills his Father ; Paricide has no peculiar Judgment assigned for it ; but we are forced, because these Things have been sometimes practised, by a Construction in Law, to make that Child as a Servant to his Father, and so punish him with the Judgment of Petty-Treason ; but take him immediately as he is a Child, and not as a Servant, and I say there is no particular Provision in Law, to punish such an Offence : And, What is the Reason of it ? Because it is so unnatural, and against the Imaginations of Mankind to believe, there ever could be such a wicked Child in the World.

If that be not to be imagined, How could it be imagin'd, that there should ever be such horrid Villains, as should attempt the Destruction of the Government of Three Kingdoms ? Good Lord ! What Times do we live in ? Surely, 'tis such an Age, as was never known, from the Creation of the World, to this Day.

And to this must be added, what aggravates the Mischief, That all this is done under the Umbrage, Countenance, and Pretence of Law ; the Proceedings of Law, the usual Methods of Justice, are made the Instruments of the most horrid Injustice. The Murder of our late Blessed Sovereign, King CHARLES the Martyr, of ever happy Memory, though a Crime as high in it self, as the Law knows of ; yet I may say, it was aggravated very much, that that Unfortunate, but Glorious King, should be brought to the Block, by a Pretext of Law, and Cut off by a colourable Method of Justice ; 'tis that which makes that Murder ten times more Base and Infamous. So, Gentlemen, the Destruction of poor innocent Persons, by false Accusations, by the pernicious Evidence of Perjur'd Witnesses, in a Court of Justice, makes their Crime infinitely more odious, than common Murder.

Gentlemen, I cannot but speak with warmth in a Case of this Nature ; and I the rather speak so, because, at the time when those things were done, we all know, the Nation was in a Hurry, and a sort of ill-minded Men had crept in among us, who had blown us up to such an height, that nothing but what comply'd with their malicious and Devilish Designs, was to be believed ; when the King could not get common Justice done against real Traytors ; but the very Streams of Justice were all Corrupted, though the Fountain (God be thanked) was preserved pure.

When the Faction (by Cabals and Intrigues) had got Sheriffs of their own Party, and laboured to get all other Officers of their own wicked Principles, then came all those Mischiefs we so long labour'd under. When those Fellows, that had so great a share in the late Rebellion, were the only fit Men to be trusted with the Government ; and all the while were designing to destroy it, and to bring us into the

the same miserable Condition we formerly were in.

Was it ever (I speak to you, Gentlemen of the Jury, Citizens of London, who know its ancient Constitution, and have too well experienced its late Convulsions) was it ever known, till Justice was designed to be Corrupted, that there was any labouring to be Sheriffs? No, Endeavours were always used to be excused, and Fines paid to get off from that Office: And the reason is plain; for never was there a wise and wealthy Citizen, that had a mind, out of a principal Part of his Estate, to squander away so much as is necessary to defray the Charge of that Office: But it was the Design that those Rascals had upon the Government, that made them so greedy of those Places; and they thought they had now an Opportunity to effect their Design, upon these Fellows pretended Discovery. They believed, that because we were hurried into the Mischiefs of the late Times, by Pretences of Popery, the same Bait would be swallowed now: Therefore the Cry must be set up, Popery was a coming in. They concluded, if they could but make use of the same Engines, they should have the same Effect: Witness a Peer, that is now dead, one that was a main Instrument of our Confusion in the late Times, and thereby experienced in Villany, was made use of as the Chief Tool in these late Contrivances.

But alas! When they found those Pretences and Projects would take no longer, then they fly to that, which was indeed the bottom of All; I mean, The bloody Conspiracy: When they found they could not overthrow the Government by Methods of Law, they betake themselves to downright Treason. For by this time, the Eyes of the honest Citizens were opened; and they found what Interest was driving on: And it was time to have them open, when a Cause in Guild-Hall was always Tried according to the Characters of the Client, and not the Merits of the Cause; when, if a Man was blasted with the name of a Tory, he was sure to lose it: But if a whining Rascal was Sanctified with the name of a Whigg, he was sure to have it go on his Side: Witness the famous Cause of Mr. Loader, about his Lions.

But when Sheriffs came to be Elected in due manner, such as were fit to be Trusted with the City-Business: What do they, but break out into a horrid Conspiracy, to take away the Life of that blessed King, that merciful Prince, so lately deceased, to the Grief and Sorrow of all His loving and loyal Subjects? And not only so, but to rob us of His Sacred Majesty, our present most Gracious Sovereign; whom I pray GOD to preserve long to Reign over us. To which, the Auditory gave a great Acclamation, saying, Amen.

Gentlemen, When these Things are thought upon, you must give me leave to observe (let others think what they please) that was the real Plot, the true Plot: For there is one thing observable, that attends this whole Affair, That every Man who Suffered for the Plot, which the Witnesses truly call Otes's Plot, to a Man denied it even to the last Gasps; and took it upon their Deaths and Salvations, that they were Innocent: Nay, when they had not those Hopes Bedloe had, of Life (for I cannot believe, that he could have been so egregious a Villain, as to have Attested such notorious Lies, if he had not hoped to have recovered; and thereby increased his own Reputation) yet not a Man of the others, but disowned it with their dying Breath. Now, on the other Side, there was not a Man, that was concerned in the Conspiracy, of which this was to be the Blind and the Colour, had the Confidence to deny it, when they came to Suffer for it. All this ought to be put in the Ballance, and duly weighed.

For, Gentlemen, because it is a Matter that is not only publick here, but all the World over, we must have the Justice of the Nation vindicated, and its Dis-reputation wiped off. And having taken notice of these Things, which I could not well omit upon this Occasion, I must now put you in mind, what is necessary for you to take into your Consideration, as to the particular Case before you. And,

First, You must observe, That this Indictment against Otes, is for Committing wilful and Corrupt Perjury; which is also said to be done maliciously. And if it were false, surely it was malicious; because, by his false Oath, have Innocent Men been Convicted, Condemned, and Executed.

Secondly, You are to consider, how far the Thing goes, to make it material to the Issue: For if it were upon a Nicety only, or a Catch, or any of those fine Words, that he has been pleased to make use of; it were not fit to Perjure him upon it. But it is certainly very material: For Time and Place are Matters substantial to discover Truth and Falshood by, as in the Case of Susannah; The Perjury of the Elders, as you may remember, was detected by those very Circumstances. But I shall shew you the Occasion of this Oath; and that will manifest it to be a material Part, in respect of the Time. For,

First, Here was a Consult held, as he Testified, the 24th of April, 1678. and then he swears Ireland was in Town, and present at the Consult: But all that Otes swore, would not do the Feat, because that he was but one Witness. Then comes Bedloe, his worthy Yoke fellow (a Brace of such Witnesses, as the Lord deliver all Mankind from) and he assigns another Fact upon Mr. Ireland, in the Month of August, the latter end of it, or the beginning of September; which is material, and makes two Witnesses against Ireland, which Otes knew well enough: For he is his Arts-Master; he knows all the Tricks, and can tell the very Nick that will do. And therefore, when he finds Mr. Ireland so positively affirming, That he was then out of Town; and if so, Bedloe did not swear true: Then does this Otes come in (and thereby makes his Testimony material to the Point then in Issue.) Says he, The First of September, or (at least) the Second, I will swear he was in Town; for he gave me Twenty Shillings: And that is given as a Token, why he does remember it. And thus he did prop up Bedloe's Testimony, against Mr. Ireland's Defence. This is proved to you by Mr. Waterhouse, who was one of the Jury. And the same thing does the next Gentleman swear, which is Mr. Byfield: They do both agree in that Circumstance punctually, That he swore, he had then of him Twenty Shillings.

Ay, (but says he for himself, because I would remove the Objections out of the way, as they occur to me) 'tis very hard, this being now some six or seven Years ago, that I should be called to question about such a thing; when they might have had a time to disprove it before.

Besides, Gentlemen, the Answer that has been truly given to you, concerning the Miserableness of the Times; when, the Truth of it is, there was no Justice to be had for Protestants, if we speak of the Church of England-Men under that Name: For either they were Papists in Masquerade, or Popishly affected; or the Names of Tory and Tamboy, and I know not what, was enough to do their Work for them: And no body was reckoned of the Sober, Virtuous, Godly Party, but those that were under Associations and Covenants; as tho' there was no Sanctity to be found in any but those who were bent to destroy all Virtue and Religion. I say, besides that, there is another Answer, which I am sorry has so much Weight in it: Could any Man have believed, that Otes should dare so impudently to swear a Falshood, and that in a Cause where Life was concern'd; and the Man hang'd upon his Testimony? To what purpose then should his Relations interpose to disprove Otes, after his Death? That would not revive him. But you find there was an Inclination that way; and I wish to God, with all my Heart, it had taken effect: For what says the old Gentlewoman? As soon as she heard what Mr. Otes had sworn, which she knew to be false, immediately she dispatch'd an Express to London; and sent a Petition to the King, That either Ireland might have a new Tryal, or his Execution might be repriev'd, till they brought up such Witnesses, as would have made it apparent, and as clear as the Light, That what this Fellow had testified, was notoriously false. But such, such, I must say, was the Misfortune of the Time we were in, that stop'd the Fountain of Mercy it self, from letting forth its wonted Streams; and even compelled that Compassionate Prince, rather than he would give any Disturbance to his People, to permit that Execution against his own Inclination; because there was a Verdict, and Judgment in the Case. For, as he was really the Fountain of Justice; so was he of Mercy too. And it is well known to those that had the Happiness to be near his Person, how oft he expressed his Concern for having consented to this Execution. And this continued with him even to his dying Day, as the Business of my Lord of Strafford did with his Royal Father.

And, Gentlemen, I chose to mention this Passage concerning his late Majesty, for this Reason, That when we live in such tumultuous Times, when things are put so hard upon Princes, as to compel them to restrain their Mercy, where they think it due, rather than seem to stop the Current of Justice; this should not be remember'd with any Reflection upon them, but with Infamy to those that are the Causes and Grounds of it: When such prodigious Wretches, as Otes and Bedloe; for there appears no Evidence before you, but of those two profligate Villains, who came out of Goals: And after having been guilty of Villanies almost of all sorts that ever were committed, came to be sanctified by committing more: And were therefore called, The Saviours of the Nation.

Gentlemen, The next Objection that is made against the Evidence for the King, is, That they are all Papists; who design nothing but to destroy the Government, and ruin the Protestant Religion. And this must be taken to be the whole Design of all these Persons of Quality, and others, that they come to forswear themselves, and damn their Souls to all Eternity, on purpose only to destroy Innocent, Protestant Mr. Otes. Alack-a-day! When, at the same time, I must tell you, if it were necessary, you have about seven or eight Protestant Witnesses of the Church of England, that confirm the Testimony of the rest: Not that we must think, or ought to have any such Conception among us, but that Roman Catholicks, in Point of Law, are good Witnesses; and are to be credited as much as any other Witnesses whatsoever, unless there be some Objection made to them; which would be the same against a Protestant as a Papist: For there remains a Right in them; and they ought to have equal Credit given to their Testimony, with those of any other Perswasion, if a regular Objection be not started against them. And sure I am, that has been always the Law; and shall be my Practice, while I have any thing to do with the Administration of Justice. Let the sober Party, as they call themselves, make what Reflections they please upon it, or trouble themselves as they will about it; I value them not, nor their Opinion: Let them send as many Penny-Post Letters and Libels as they have a mind to do; two of which I receiv'd last Night, about Yesterday's Tryal. This I am sure of, Lying is as much the Talent and Inclination of a Presbyterian, as ever it can be of a Papist: Nay, more; For it is as inseparably incident to a Presbyterian, (and such sniveling, whining, canting Knaves) to Lie, as to Speak. They can no more forbear Lying, than they can forbear Speaking; for generally, as often as they do the one, they do the other.

Besides, I must observe to you, with what Caution, Care and Sobriety, both of Expression and Action, all these Gentlemen and Women have delivered their Testimony, with the greatest Tendernefs and Care that possibly could be: And as well as they have given it with Caution; so I cannot but put it home to you, Gentlemen at the Bar, to give it it's due Consideration.

For tho' the other Juries did believe Otes, and not them at that time; yet that is not to be your Measure, because you have not the same Reason to do it. Could any Person think, that there should be such Villains upon Earth, as impudently to swear downright Treason against their Fellow-Subjects, if there were no Truth in the Accusation? That was the thing that guided those Juries, who were all of them, no doubt, very honest Men; and that was it, which influenc'd the Parliament to do what they did in the Matter. For it was morally impossible to be thought, any such Wickedness could be so publickly attempted.

But, God be thanked, the Eyes of all honest and understanding Men are opened. And we see the Fault was in our Credulity; and that these were Fellows should not have been believ'd: And it concerns us, when the Truth has been so debauch'd, and our Credulity so imposed upon, to shew the World our just Resentment thereof.

And this I say to you, Gentlemen, with a purpose to vindicate those Persons who were concern'd as Jurors, in the Tryals of all those Causes; because that is the thing much harp'd upon, and aim'd at: That because he was believed lieved before, to disbelieve him now, would cast a Reflection upon the Juries; whereas, if that Opinion hold, never will there be any such thing as Perjury detected, so long as the Sun and Moon endure: For if a Verdict be obtain'd upon false Testimony, and it shall be enough for the Witness to say; I was believed at such a Tryal, and therefore do not you offer to prosecute me for Perjury: That would be the finest Doctrine that could be taught, to give a Licence to destroy all Truths, Justice, and human Society.

Therefore I leave it home upon you: Upon your Consciences be it; for, in the Presence of the Great God of Heaven and Earth, that sees all our Hearts, and will judge us for our inward Thoughts at the last Day; Liberavi animam meam. If you can find all these Persons (in number forty-seven) guilty of wilful, downright, malicious, and corrupt Perjury; then you must acquit the Defendant.

For the Particulars of the Evidence, which abound in many material Circumstances in Point of Time and Place, I shall run them over as short as I can, and remind you of them; not because I think it extraordinary necessary, as tho' there were the least Doubt of the Fact, but for the Satisfaction of all Mankind, that are not under invincible Prejudice against the Truth. And I am sure, upon Yesterday's Business there remained not any Doubt with any that heard it, save one, who I know had a great share in the Design, that was at the bottom of it; and I doubt, was one of those Persons that set this Villain on Work; his Name may be concealed for the present, but a few Days will discover it here, or in some other Place.

Gentlemen, What Mr. Attorney, or Mr. Solicitor General, or any of the King's Counsel have said, or what the Defendant has said for himself, if not proved, and made plain by Evidence, is to be no Guidance at all to you; who are only to go according to the Testimony given to you; for that is pursuant to your Oath, which Oath is the Rule of your Enquiry.

The Witnesses that prove, that he did swear so in both the Points in the Indictment; I need not mention, they were so full: They tell you, he swore, that Ireland was in Town from the 8th to the 12th of August; but because he fixed upon the 8th at first, there was Caution given him, Be not so precise to a Day, consider with your self. Then comes he to stab the Business to the quick, and to river it home: If I cannot be positive to the 8th, I will be positive between the 8th and 12th. And as to the other Point, I did observe before that, because Bedloe was at a stand, upon Ireland's denying his being in Town the latter end of August, or the beginning of September; therefore comes Otes up again, to fix it home; and, says he, I am sure he was in Town the 1st or 2d of September, because he gave me Twenty Shillings: That he swore this, is testified by three Gentlemen, who were Jury-men at those Tryals.

Now, that this is notoriously false, false to a tittle; and, as Mr. Solicitor does observe, not the least time left to give any sort of Countenance to what he swore, is thus made out to you.

First, You are to take notice, that upon the 3d of August, being Saturday, it is sworn by three or four Witnesses, that he went out of Town; and this is not sworn as Mr. Otes gave his Evidence positively without Circumstances; but they give you an account how they remember it; because upon the Wednesday before, which was a publick Day of Note among them, and always kept as a Festival in Memory of St. Ignatius, upon the last Day of July, as both they and Mr. Otes himself do affirm, there went Mr. Ireland, Mrs. Anne Ireland, and their Mother out of Town to a Friend's House to Dinner. Mrs. Ireland did desire him to stay there all Night, as she did. No, says he, I cannot stay all Night, because I must go out of Town on Saturday, and I must provide things necessary for my Journey: Nay, that is not all; for it goes yet further: Says his Sister unto him, Why do you begin your Journey on a Saturday? That is an improper Day: Oh! says he, I do it, because I am that Night to go to my Lord Aston's House in Hartfordshire; where I am to meet with Sir John Southcoat, and go down with them into the Country: This does the Mother swear, and the Sister. And then the Maid-servant, and the Taylor's Wife, do give you another Token, That it was Saturday the 3d of August, because he had something to be mended in his Cloaths; and stay'd for them; and he was to go out of Town, for he had his Boots on.

There is yet this Circumstance further, wherein those four do all agree, That as he went out of Town the 3d of August, so he did not return till the 14th of September; for they say it was the Saturday Fortnight before Michaelmas, and the same Day of the Week that Michaelmas day was of: So that you will find, that there is a constant Proof, and as plain a one as any possibly can be in the World, as to the Time of his going out, and coming home. And where he was in the mean time, proved directly by a great Company of Witnesses, except one Day. For you see, the 3d of August he went to my Lord Aston's at Standen: Several there are that saw him there the 4th, and dined with him there; particularly, Sir Edward Southcoat: And to shew that it is not a thing they are positive in, and swear it roundly without Consideration, they give you an account of the Reasons of their Knowledge. You are to consider also the Testimony given by my Lord Aston, a Person of great Honour and Quality: Says he, Tho' I dare venture all I am worth in the World upon the Truth of it, that Ireland did go along with me all the Journey; yet, because I did not take such particular notice of the rest of the time as I did of those two Days, I will not take upon me to swear it. If Mr. Otes had had the fortieth Part of that Caution in his Evidence, I dare say, you had not had the Trouble of this Day's Tryal.

The Fifth, You have a great many Witnesses who give you an account, that he came on Monday Night to St. Albans with my Lord Aston; there is Sir Edward Southcoat, Mr. John Southcoat, my Lord Aston, the Coachman, and all the Servants: Sir Edward tells you, that Monday was a hot Day, and my Lord Aston took him into his Coach; but he rode a Horseback all the rest of the way; and had a fine going Horse; which Horse Mr. John Southcoat bought of him when the whole Journey was ended. They tell you likewise, upon the 6th and 7th Days, the very Inns they lodged at upon the Road; and particularly at Northampton, they lay at the George, which was Sir William Farmer's House, which was then let to an Inn-keeper, because of the Fire in that Town. And, which is most material of all, for Mr. Otes's Satisfaction, you have for these Times no less than four Witnesses, that are Protestants of the Church of England, who give you the same Account. There are in all no less in number than fourteen to this Point; and whether you will believe those fourteen to be wilfully perjured, without Evidence to the contrary, is left to you: And if they do swear true, Otes that was Yesterday found Perjured, must be Convicted of Perjury again to Day: For in short the Question is, Whether you will believe Persons of Credit, that have no stain upon their Reputation; or Otes, that, upon plain Evidence, was found Guilty of Perjury Yesterday.

When we come to Tixball, we have no less number, that testify where he was from Day to Day, and from Night to Night, to the 17th, and from the 17th to the 26th. You have fifteen Witnesses more, all as direct and positive, as can be in the World; swearing where he was from time to time. It seems he came to Tixball Thursday the 8th; there he stayed till Thursday following, and then he went to Holy-Well; he lay the first Night at Nantwich; the next Night at Holy-Well, at the Sign of the Star, a notorious Inn there; he came to Chester on Thursday, and some of the Company left him there, but others came back with him to Tixball; who say, he went away on Saturday Morning, which happens to be the 17th. And thus you have a full account of him, quite from the 3d to the 17th, beyond all Controversy, plainly proved by Persons of undoubted Credit. And if he were where they say he was from the 3d to the 17th, How could Otes swear true, that he took his leave of him here in Town, between the 8th and 12th?

Now let us come from the 17th to the 26th, and you have no less than fifteen Witnesses, four whereof are Protestants; which I urge not as a necessary Qualification to be a Witness, but to answer Otes's Objection, as tho' this was a Popish Design to destroy him. They have given you an account where he was from time to time, by convincing Circumstances, which you have heard, particularly of one Day that he went to Litchfield; one of the Witnesses went with him, and a Protestant Witness too, that came back with him again, and supped with him at her Father's House. The Apothecary tells you the Day that he saw him was a Wake-day, which is a remarkable Time in the Country. You are told of the Funeral of one Woman's Mother, that made her stay away from Monday till Thursday: Of another Man's Child. I mention them but shortly to you, because I know you have taken Notes of them, and they are only used as Instances to manifest the Integrity of the Witnesses, that this was not a thing contrived on purpose to make a Story of, but did really happen in the Order they tell it. And I must remember you of another Circumstance some of them do swear, that whereas Otes had a mind to evade their Testimony by that Question, Whether this was the same Ireland that was tried? It was most certainly he; for that is made too evidently to appear, by their seeing him executed at Tyburn, I am sorry to say, innocently.

From the Third of August to the Twenty-sixth, there is not one Night, but you hear where he was: And from the Twenty-sixth of August to the Seventh of September, you hear where he was at the Horse-Match, upon the Bowling-Green, at Mr. Heveningham's, Mr. Low's, Mr. Gerrard's, Mrs. Crompton's, Mr. Pendrel's, Mr. Gifford's, and Mrs. Harwel's: And from the Seventh to the Fourteenth, save only one Day, viz. the Eighth, you have a particular Account too; and it does not appear by a rambling Evidence, but a faithful Account is given of all the Time, save that Eighth Day; which shews the Caution of the Witnesses. And it cannot but be easily presumed, he was either at Tixball, or thereabouts, because he was at Wolverhampton the Seventh, coming to London the Ninth. How easy is it to imagine him there the Eighth, and the rather because where he was the Eighth, is not material to the Point in Question before you, but where he was the First and Second?

And, Gentlemen, If in case you had a mind to imagine, he was the Eighth at London; it must be by a strained Imagination: For you must take him to be at Wolverhampton the Seventh, and made him ride Post to London that Night, and return Post from London the Eighth to Tixball, to be ready there early in the Morning upon the Ninth, or take four Days Journey back again; or else you cannot give the least Countenance to any other Imagination, but that he was about Tixball the Eighth of September.

Well, at Tixball you have him the 9th of September; and from thence, you have it testified by all the Persons that came along with him all the way, that he lay one Night at Coventry, another at Banbury, a Third at Agmondisham: That he Baited at Uxbridge the Fourth, which was the 12th of September; and came to Sir John Southcoat's House that Night, being Thursday: He stayed there Thursday Night, and Friday; and upon Saturday the 14th of September, Sir John Southcoat's Man went along with him to London, whither he rode upon the Horse he sold Mr. Southcoat; the Man saw him at his Lodging; and he says, they wondered when he came in, that he had stayed so long.

And then we return to the Four Witnesses they begun with at first; who make all this Testimony to stand well together, That he went away the 3d of August, and was never in Town till the 14th of September: And every Day, but the 8th of September, which makes nothing to the Business, is particularly spoke to: And he must be there that Day too, except you will put him upon very hard Service, to ride Post to London and back again, in Twenty four Hours; for no other reason, but only to commit a Treason, that none ever found out but Mr. Otes. And, I am sure, if he did, he took a great deal of Pains to a very little purpose.

Gentlemen, I have taken up much of your Time, and detained you the longer in this Matter; because I cannot but say with grief of Heart, our Nation was too long besotted; and of innocent Blood there has been too much spilt: 'Tis high time to have some Account of it. 'Tis a Mercy we ought to bless Almighty God for, that we are prevented from spilling more innocent Blood! God be blessed, our Eyes are opened; and let us have a care for the future, that we be not so suddenly imposed upon by such Prejudices and Jealousies, as we have reason to fear, such Villains have too much filled our Heads with of late.

Gentlemen, 'Tis incumbent upon you, to Try according to the Evidence that has been given, whether the Defendant be Guilty, or Not Guilty.

And

And 'tis incumbent upon us that sit here as Judges, to see the Law executed, as we will answer it at the Tribunal of the great Judge of Heaven and Earth, before whom we must appear, and receive our Tryals at the Great Day. And God forbid, but we should use our utmost Endeavours, to inflict the greatest Vengeance, that the Justice of the Nation can permit us to inflict upon such Villains as these are; that have contracted so much Mischief and Reproach upon us, and so much Guilt upon themselves.

Gentlemen, I am sorry, I say, I have kept you so long: 'Tis a Case of such Importance, that I could not but say what I have done in it. There may be other Circumstances arising from the Evidence, which I may have omitted; but were very largely and fully spoken to, by Mr. Solicitor. Whatsoever has been forgotten by him, or by me, I am sure, will be sufficiently supplied by your own Observations: For I know you to be Gentlemen of great Knowledge and Experience in Matters of this Nature.

Then the Jury withdrew, to Consider of their Verdict; and, after half an Hour's Recess, returned to the Bar; and, answering to their Names, delivered in their Verdict, That the Defendant was Guilty of the Perjury whereof he stood Indicted: Which being Recorded, the Lord Chief Justice spoke to the Gentlemen of the Jury, to this Effect.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, because there has been some Notice taken to Day, as there was Yesterday, concerning the Opinions of Judges, about Verdicts that have been given; I would say a Word or two to you: Not that I much admire the doing of it, at any time; nor would I do it now, for your Sakes; because, I am sure, you act according to your Consciences, and affect not Commendation: But because it may be necessary, for the Satisfaction of some People, that they should know our Opinions also in this Matter; I must tell you, You have given a Verdict, that becomes your Honesty, Integrity, and Loyalty. And I declare, in the Presence of Almighty God, the Searcher of Hearts, That had I been of the Jury, I must have given the same Verdict. Gentlemen, 'Tis an Honest and Just Verdict, that you have given; and by it, you have Contributed, as much as in you lies, to vindicate the Nation from the Infamy it has so long lain under.

Mr. Just. Withins. For my part, I think, if you had given any other Verdict, you had found against plain Demonstration; the Evidence was so full and clear.

Mr. Just. Holloway. The Court is very well satisfied with the Verdict; and you have acquitted your selves like worthy, honest Gentlemen.

Mr. Just. Walcot. There is nothing can be said to the Verdict, but that it is a just Verdict, and according to the Evidence.

[And then the Court arose.]

Die Lunæ, 11 Maii 1685. Banco Regis. Dominus Rex versus Otes.

THis Day Mr. Wallop moved, That in regard the Court were pleased to give the Defendant time till Saturday next, to move in Arrest of Judgment, upon the Conviction on Friday last; they would please to give to the same Day, to move in Arrest of Judgment, upon the Conviction on Saturday; which the Court granted. But afterwards, upon the Motion of Mr. Attorney General, they order'd, That a Note of the Exceptions to both Indictments should be sent to the King's Counsel some Days before Saturday.

Die Sabbati, 26 Maii 1685. Banco Regis. Dominus Rex versus Otes.

THis Day being appointed for the Defendant to move what he could in Arrest of Judgment, upon the two Convictions of Perjury; he was brought, by Rule from the Prison, to the King's-Bench-Court.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney General, Have you any thing to move?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I pray your Judgment upon Otes, who is convicted upon two Indictments, for two notorious Perjuries.

L. C. J. Who is Counsel for Otes?

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Wallop moved for him.

L. C. J. What is it that Mr. Wallop has to say?

Otes. My Lord, I desire I may speak one Word: It was Thursday Night before my Attorney could make an end of examining the Records; Sir Samuel Astry knows it very well: Then I sent the Rule to those Gentlemen that were assign'd to be my Counsel; and the Exceptions were delivered in but yesterday. I pray I may have a Day or two more, that my Counsel may be prepared to argue for me.

L. C. J. We cannot do that: We gave you beyond the ordinary Rules, in extending it till to Day.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, He talks of Examining the Records: He had Copies of them all this long Vacation.

Otes. My Lord, My Attorney will be ready to make Oath, that he finished the Examining but on Thursday Night.

L. C. J. We do all know they were pleaded to the last Term; and you have had all this Vacation, to consider of them: And we have indulged you beyond the ordinary Time.

Otes. My Lord, I desire but a Day or two more.

L. C. J. No, we cannot do it: We have done more already than we ordinarily do. Persons that are Convicted use to have but four Days allowed them to move in Arrest of Judgment; but you, instead of having but four Days, after had eight.

Otes. If your Lordship pleases to give me time till Monday.

L. C. J. I tell you, We cannot do it. If Mr. Wallop have any thing to say for you, we'll hear him.

Mr. Wallop. I have nothing to say.

Mr. At.

Mr. At. Gen. Here are four Exceptions delivered to me last Night, as made by Mr. Wallop.

L. C. J. But he says he has nothing to say. We know not whose these Exceptions are.

Otes. I do deliver in those Exceptions, my Lord: Pray let them be read.

L. C. J. Read them, Sir Samuel Astrey.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Dominus Rex versus Otes. The Defendant's Exceptions.

I. That a Witness, sworn in the behalf of the King in a Process of High Treason, cannot be punished for Perjury by the King.

II. That it does not appear, that the Indictments of Ireland, &c. found in Middlesex, were legally transmitted into London; and consequently, all the Proceedings thereupon were Coram non Judice.

III. That the Perjuries assign'd, are in Matters foreign to the Issue.

IV. It is Resolutio Signat' in that part of the Indictment, that mentions what the Defendant swore; and in the Perjury assigned 'tis Resolutio Signand'; and it is no good Assignment of the Perjury.

Mr. Just. Withins. These are doughty Exceptions indeed.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, What say you unto them?

Mr. At. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I think I need not say much to them; the first Exception is a plain Mistake of the Indictment: For had Mr. Otes been indicted upon the Statute, it had been something; but at the Common Law certainly he may be prosecuted by the King, tho' he was Witness for the King before. As to the second, That it does not appear Ireland's Indictment was well transmitted from Middlesex to London; that sure is well enough: For after it is recited, that they were so and so indicted, it does set forth, that the Tryals were had upon Records there depending before the Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal-delivery; and it shall be taken, that they were well brought before them. As to the third Exception, That the Perjuries assigned are foreign to the Matter in Issue; that is not so: For it is apparent, one of the Indictments is in the expresse Point of the great Treason charged against them; that is, the Consult of the 24th of April. And as to the second Indictment, it appeared upon the Evidence, That there was a treasonable Meeting sworn in August; and he swore Ireland was here in Town in the beginning of August, and in the beginning of September. And then for the fourth Matter, That he swore he saw them sign it; and the Perjury assigned is, That he did not carry it to be signed; that receives a plain Answer: For we alledge, he falsly and corruptly swore that he was present, and that he carried the Resolution to be signed, and he saw them sign the Resolution. Now, in these two things, we have laid the Perjury; 1. We say he was not there: And 2. He carried no such Resolution to be signed: Indeed, we do not say that he did not see them signed, nor we need not; for if he were not there, nor did carry it, he could not see them sign it. There is nothing in the Exceptions, my Lord; and therefore I pray your Judgment.

L. C. J. Is there any body of Counsel for Mr. Otes, that will say any thing to these Exceptions?

Otes. I pray, my Lord, that I may have liberty but till Monday, for my Counsel to prepare.

L. C. J. No, we cannot do it: Indeed, if there had been any colour or weight in the Exceptions, it might have been something; tho' we have indulg'd, in this Case already, more than ever we used to do in Cases of this nature; for it is known to every body that knows any thing of the Course and Practice of the Court, That after Conviction no more than four Days are allowed to move in Arrest of Judgment: And being the Practice of the Court, it is the Law of the Court; and I am sure, as little Favour ought to be shewn in a Case of Perjury, as in any Case whatsoever: But yet, however, because he should not think that the Extremity of the Law was aimed at by the Court in this Case, and he hindered in his legal Defence, the Court did indulge him more time than is usually granted in such Cases. Now, as for the Exceptions, certainly they are very frivolous.

For the First, It would be admirable Doctrine indeed, in case it should obtain, That if a Man be a Witness in any Case for the King, and forswear himself, he should not be prosecuted for Perjury at the King's Suit: For we know that no Man can be prosecuted for his Life, (except it be in Cases of Appeal) but at the Suit of the King; and to be sure, all Prosecutions for Treason must be at his Suit. If then Witnesses come and forswear themselves, to take away Men's Lives, and they should not be called in question for it, criminally, by the King; That were a fine way to sanctify the greatest Villainy, and make the Process of Law to become an Instrument of the most infamous Cruelty in the World. I presume, no Gentleman at the Bar would think that an Exception fit to put his Hand to.

Then as to the Second, That the Perjury is not assigned in Points material to the Issue, that is plainly otherwise; for the time must needs be very material, because it was impossible that Mr. Ireland could be guilty of the Treason sworn against him, at his Chamber in Russel-street, between the 8th and 12th of August, if he were not in Town between the 8th and 12th of August: Nor could he be privy to the Treason sworn by Bedloe, the latter end of August, or the beginning of September, in Harcourt's Chamber, if he were out of Town from the 3d of August till the 14th of September; and therefore both those Perjuries were in the very Points in Issue.

And then for the 24th of April, which is the main Perjury of all; It is not laid in this Indictment, That there was no Consult of the Jesuits upon that Day: nor is there any notice taken, That there was no Consult at the White-Horse Tavern; but it says only, that Otes did swear, there was a Consult there, and that he was present at it; and that he saw the Resolution written down by Mico, if I do not misremember the Name: And that upon the 24th of April, he went with it from Chamber to Chamber, to have them sign it. And then comes the Indictment, and assigns the Perjury, Ubi revera he was not at the White-Horse Tavern that Day; and I think it is pretty plain he was not, for he was then at St. Omers.

Then admitting all that Matter about the signing of the Resolution, to be out of Doors, a plain Perjury is assign'd and prov'd. For it was most proper for them to lay it as they did; and so it was in the other Point too. He swore he carried the Resolution from Chamber to Chamber, and saw it signed. Now, say they, He did not carry it from Chamber to Chamber, to be signed; and if so, then he could not see it it signed ; and it will all be well enough sure. And if any one part of the Oath he swore proves false, that is sufficient to maintain this Verdict ; and 'tis notoriously plain, it was false throughout.

And of this Matter he now stands Convicted, upon as full and plain an Evidence as ever was given in any Case in the World ; and I am sorry to think that any Man, who is guilty of such an Offence, should continue so obstinate and hardened in Villany as he appears to be.

But I think it not amiss for me to say something upon this occasion, for the Satisfaction of some that hear me ; and for an Example for the future. The Crime whereof this Man stands Convicted, is certainly a very heinous one, attended with such dismal Consequences that ensued upon it, that I think no Man can have a true Christian Spirit in him, but he must begin to melt with the Consideration of the great Mischiefs his Perjury has brought upon himself and us : It has brought the Guilt of innocent Blood upon many ; to be sure it hath on his own Head, and I pray God deliver all Men from having any Hand in innocent Blood.

And as the Crime is great, so it is to be known, that a proportionable Punishment of that Crime can scarce by our Law, as it now stands, be inflicted upon him. But that you may see we have considered how to punish it, as such a Crime does deserve ; We have consulted with all the Judges of England, that if the Law would allow it, he might have such a Judgment for this heinous Offence, as might be proper to terrify all others from committing the like again. For Punishment is not intended only for the sake of the Offender, to reward him according to his Deserts ; but it has a Prospect also of Example and Terror to all others, that they should take care how they offend in any such manner, and that is as considerable a part of the End of the Law as any other.

Gentlemen, It is known, that by the Old Laws of England Perjury was punished with Death ; it grew a little more moderate afterwards, not to make the Crime the less, but because of the Danger there might be of Malice of some revengeful Persons, by endeavouring by Perjury to Convict others of Perjury. But the next Step was cutting out of the Tongue, to shew that the Law in all Ages had an Abhorrency of false Oaths, and punished that impious Crime of Perjury with the most terrible Punishments.

Since that time our Ancestors have yet been more moderate, and have not extended the Judgment to Life and Member ; but by the unanimous Opinion of all the Judges of England, whom we purposely consulted with upon this Occasion, It is conceived, That by the Law, Crimes of this nature are left to be punished according to the Discretion of this Court, so far as that the Judgment extend not to Life or Member.

And I tell you this, Gentlemen, the rather, because I observe our Law-Books are more silent here, in regard the Judgments for these Offences are not so solemnly and particularly entered up, as they are in Cases Capital : But they are left more discretionary ; because that Crimes of this nature may be attended with particular Circumstances, either to aggravate, or lessen the Punishment : And therefore the Punishment might be distributed accordingly.

And for that reason, Gentlemen, it is well known to us all, that that was the occasion of taking away the Court of Star-Chamber, as the Preamble of the Act for taking it away does manifest : That inasmuch as the Authority, for the Correction of all Offences whatsoever, was by the Common Law of this Land originally fixed in the Court of King's-Bench ; and the Proceeding by Information in the Star-Chamber, when it might be by Process in this Court, was look'd upon as a double way of Vexation : Therefore that Court is abolished, and the Authority of the King's-Bench Court left entire. And it is notoriously known, how Punishments, of all sorts and kinds, were inflicted by the Court of Star-Chamber for Perjury, and such like Offences, while that Court was up ; and since that time, in Fox's Case and others that you have heard of, it has been according to the Discretion of this Court, punished, as severely as this Court thought fit, so as the Sentence did not extend to Life or Member.

Now I thought it proper for me, not only for the sake of the Case now before us ; but also for your Learning sake, to tell you, This was the Resolution of all the Judges of England, upon Consideration of the Precedents, and of all the Rules of Law ; which have been fully debated, and considered of : And this, I declare, is their unanimous Opinion.

If then this be so, and it is left to the Discretion of the Court to inflict such Punishment as they think fit ; far be it from this Court at any time, as on the one side to inflict Punishment heavier than the Crimes deserve (no, we would rather use Commiseration, than extraordinary and exorbitant Severity ;) so, on the other side, to let go Crimes so notorious and heinous as these, without the severest Mark that can, by Law, be put upon them. When a Person shall be convicted of such a foul and malicious Perjury, as the Defendant here is, I think it is impossible for this Court, as the Law now stands, to put a Punishment upon him any way proportionable to the Offence, that has drawn after it so many horrid and dreadful Consequences : We do therefore think fit to inflict an exemplary Punishment upon this villanous perjurd Wretch, to terrify others for the future ; which is not my part to pronounce : But what it is, my Brother will tell you.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, You will be pleased to remember there are two Judgments.

L. C. J. There are so, we know it very well, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. That which was tryed first, was about the Consult on the 24th of April ; we desire that some particular Mark may be set upon that Day.

Then the Judges consulted a little together, and Mr. Justice Withins pronounced the Sentence thus.

Mr. Just. Withins. Titus Otes, You are Convicted upon Two Indictments for Perjury ; I say, for Perjury : I must repeat the Word twice, because you are doubly Convicted. One of the greatest Offences, that our Law has Cognizance of ; 'tis so in its own Nature : But your Perjury has has all the Aggravations that can be thought of to heighten it. If a Man kills another with his Sword, and there be forethought Malice in the Case, he is to be hang'd for it: But when a Man shall draw innocent Blood upon himself by a malicious, premeditated, false Oath, there is not only Blood in the Case, but likewise Perjury, corrupt, malicious Perjury: I know not how I can say, but, That the Law is defective that such a one is not to be hang'd. For, if we consider those dreadful Effects which have followed upon your Perjury, we must conclude our Law defective; they are such, as no Christian's Heart can think of, without bleeding for that innocent Blood which was shed by your Oath; and every knowing Man believes, and every honest Man grieves for. God be thanked; our Eyes are now opened; and indeed we must have been incurably blind, if they had not been opened first by the Contradictions, Improbabilities, and Impossibilities in your own Testimony; but likewise by the positive, plain, direct and full Proof of forty-seven Witnesses to one particular Point: Against whom you had not one Word to object, but they were Papists and Roman Catholicks; which is no Objection at all: Tho' at the same time, it did appear, that nine or ten of them were Protestants of the Church of England. That was all you had to say; you had not one Word to justify your self from that great and heinous Perjury you were accused of. I hope, I have not been thought a Man of ill Nature; and, I confess, nothing has been so great a Regret to me in my Place and Station, as to give Judgment, and pronounce the Sentence of Law against my Fellow-Subjects, my Fellow-Creatures: But as to you, Mr. Otes, I cannot say, my Fellow Christian. Yet, in this Case, when I consider your Offence, and the dismal Effects that have follow'd upon it, I cannot say, I have any Remorse in giving Judgment upon you. And therefore having told you my Thoughts shortly about your Crime, and how readily I pronounce your Sentence; I shall now declare the Judgment of the Court upon you. And it is this:

First, The Court does Order for a Fine, That you pay a Thousand Marks upon each Indictment.

Secondly, That you be strip'd of all your Canonical Habits.

Thirdly, The Court does award, That you stand upon the Pillory, and in the Pillory, here before Westminster-Hall Gate, upon Monday next, for an Hour's time, between the Hours of ten and twelve; with a Paper over your Head (which you must first walk with round about to all the Courts in Westminster-Hall) declaring your Crime. And that is upon the first Indictment.

Fourthly, (On the second Indictment.) Upon Tuesday, you shall stand upon, and in the Pillory, at the Royal Exchange in London, for the space of an Hour, between the Hours of twelve and two; with the same Inscription.

You shall upon the next Wednesday be whipp'd from Aldgate to Newgate.

Upon Friday, you shall be whipp'd from Newgate to Tyburn, by the Hands of the Common Hangman.

But, Mr. Otes, we cannot but remember, there were several particular Times you swore false about: And therefore, as Annual Commemorations, that it may be known to all People as long as you live, We have taken special Care of you for an Annual Punishment.

Upon the 24th of April every Year, as long as you live, you are to stand upon the Pillory, and in the Pillory, at Tyburn, just opposite to the Gallows, for the space of an Hour, between the Hours of ten and twelve.

You are to stand upon, and in the Pillory, here at Westminster-Hall Gate, every 9th of August, in every Year, so long as you live. And that it may be known what we mean by it, 'tis to remember, what he swore about Mr. Ireland's being in Town between the 8th and 12th of August.

You are to stand upon, and in the Pillory, at Charing-cross, on the 10th of August, every Year, during your Life, for an Hour, between ten and twelve.

The like over-against the Temple Gate, upon the 11th.

And upon the 2d of September, (which is another notorious Time, which you cannot but be remember'd of) you are to stand upon, and in the Pillory, for the space of one Hour, between twelve and two, at the Royal Exchange: And all this you are to do every Year, during your Life; and to be committed close Prisoner, as long as you live.

This I pronounce to be the Judgment of the Court upon you, for your Offences. And I must tell you plainly, If it had been in my Power to have carried it further, I should not have been unwilling to have given Judgment of Death upon you: For, I am sure, you deserve it.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, We will take care, that the Clerk shall distinguish the Judgments in the Entries.

Then the Prisoner was taken away.

On Thursday the 27th of August, 1685. the Grand Jury for the County of Southampton, at the Sessions of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol-Delivery, holden for the said County at the City of Winchester, upon special Commission from his Majesty for those Purposes, found an Indictment of High Treason against Alice Lisle, Widow, then in Custody in the County Gaol; Upon which she was Arraigned and Try'd in manner following.

Cl. of Ar.

LICE LISLE, Hold up thy Hand.

[Which she did.]

Thou standest here Indicted by the Name of Alice Lisle, of the Parish of Ellingham, in the County of Southampton, Widow; For that thou, as a false Traytor against the most illustrious and most excellent Prince James the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, thy supream and natural Lord, the Fear of God in thy Heart not having, nor weighing the Duty of thy Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the instigation of the Devil, the Love and true, due and natural Obedience which a true and faithful Subject of our said Lord the King, towards him our said Lord the King should, and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing, and with all thy might intending the Peace and common Tranquility of this Kingdom of England to disturb, and War and Rebellion against our said Lord the King within this Kingdom of England to stir up and move, and the Government of our said Lord the King within this Kingdom of England to subvert, and our said Lord the King from the Title, Honour and Regal Name of the Imperial

Vol. III.

Crown of this his Kingdom of England to depose, cast down and deprive, and our said Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put, the 28th Day of July, in the first Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord James the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. at the Parish of Ellingham aforesaid in the County aforesaid, well knowing one John Hicks, of Keinsham in the County of Somerset, Clerk, to be a false Traytor, and as a false Traytor traiterously to have conspired and imagined the Death and Destruction of our said Lord the King, and War, Rebellion and Insurrection against our said Lord the King within this Kingdom of England traiterously to have levied and raised: Thou the said Alice Lisle afterwards, to wit, the same 28th day of July, in the first year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, at the Parish of Ellingham aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, the said John Hicks in thy Dwelling-House, situate at the Parish aforesaid in the County aforesaid, secretly, wickedly and traiterously didst entertain, conceal, comfort, uphold and maintain; and that thou the said Alice Lisle then and there, for the comforting, upholding and maintaining of the aforesaid John Hicks, Meat and

Drink

Drink unto the said John Hicks then and there maliciously and traiterously didst give and deliver, and cause to be given and delivered, against the Duty of thy Allegiance, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. How sayest thou Alice Lisle, art thou Guilty of the High Treason contained in this Indictment, or Not Guilty?

Lisle. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, By whom wilt thou be Tried?

Lisle. By God and my Countrey.

Cl. of Ar. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Then Proclamation was made for the Jurors impa-nell'd to try the Issue between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Prisoner at the Bar to appear. And the Prisoner desiring, by reason of her Age and Infirmities (being thick of hearing) some Friends of her's might be allow'd to stand by her, and inform her of what pass'd in the Court; one Matthew Brown was nam'd, and allow'd of by the Court to give her all Assistance that he could in that matter. Then the Names of the Jurors were call'd over, and the Appearance Recorded: And it being a Cause of great Expectation and Moment, the Lord Chief Justice order'd the Sheriff to take care, that a very substantial Jury should be Returned of the best Quality in the Countrey.

Then Proclamation for Information and Evidence was made in usual manner, and the Prisoner was bid to look to her Challenges, and the Jury was Sworn in this Order.

Cl. of Ar. Alice Lisle, Hold up thy Hand: You Gentlemen of the Jury that are Sworn, look upon the Prisoner and hearken to her Charge: She stands indicted by the Name of Alice Lisle, &c. Upon this Indictment she hath been Arraigned, and upon that Arraignment she has pleaded thereunto, Not Guilty; and for her Tryal has put her self upon God and the Countrey, which Countrey you are: Your Charge is to inquire, whether she be Guilty of the High Treason whereof she is indicted in manner and form as she stands indicted, or Not Guilty: If you find her Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements she had at the time of the High Treason committed, or at any time since: If you find her Not Guilty, you are to inquire whether she did fly for it; if you find that she did fly for it, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels she had at the time of the Flight, as if you had found her Guilty: If you find her Not Guilty, nor that she did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mundy. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are Sworn; This is an Indictment of High Treason against Alice Lisle, the Prisoner at the Bar; and the Indictment sets forth, That she, as a false Traytor against our Sovereign Lord King James the Second, her supream and natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in her Heart, nor regarding the Duty of her Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the instigation of the Devil, and withdrawing the Love and true Obedience which she owed to him as her Sovereign, and intending, as well as in her lay, to disturb the Peace of the Kingdom, and to depose the King and put him to Death, the 28th day of July, in the first year of this King, well knowing one John Hicks, late of Keinsham in the County of Somerset, Clerk, to be a false Traytor, and to have raised War and Rebellion against the King, she did then at Ellingham in this County, in her Dwelling-House traiterously entertain, conceal and comfort the said John Hicks, and for his maintenance and comfort then gave him Meat and Drink. This is laid to be against the Duty of her Allegiance, against the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided: To this she has pleaded Not Guilty; if we prove this Fact, you must find her Guilty.

Mr. Pallexfen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case for the King. The Prisoner that stands now at the Bar, Alice Lisle, is the Widow of one Lisle, who was in his Life-time sufficiently known: The Person mentioned in the Indictment to be entertained and concealed by her, John Hicks, is a Conventicle-Preacher, and one, that for bringing the traiterous Purposes intended in this late horrid Rebellion to effect, was one of the greatest and most active Instruments: for he was personally in this Rebellion, and did persuade and exhort some loyal Persons, that happened to have the misfortune of being taken Prisoners by that rebellious Crew, to quit their Duty and Allegiance to the King their Sovereign Lord, and become Partakers with them and the rest of his traiterous Accomplices, in taking Arms under their false pretended Prince. This, my Lord, we shall prove to you by plain, evident and undeniable Testimony ny of those very Persons whom this Seducer thus applied himself to. Gentlemen, After it pleased God, by his Blessing on the victorious Arms of the King, that the Rebels were defeated, their pretended Prince and Head, with some of the chief of his Accomplices, were taken Prisoners, and that in a place near the House where the Prisoner lived, when all the Countrey was full of hurry in pursuit after those wicked Rebels: Thus, by God's Blessing and Providence dissipated, and forced, like Vagabonds, to skulk up and down; then does this Hicks, having got from the Battle as far as Warminster in the next County, send a Messenger, one Dunne, to the Prisoner's House, to desire her and request her, that she would receive and harbour him and his Friend (who that was will appear by and by) Mrs. Lisle returns an Answer by the Messenger, that she would receive him, but does withal give particular Direction, that the time when they did come should be late in the Evening; accordingly he comes in the beginning of the Night, at 10 of the Clock, booted and spurr'd, and brings with him another Arch-Rebel, one Nelthorp, that stands Outlaw'd for a most black and horrid Treason: When they come to the Prisoner's House, they turn their Horses loose at the Gate; for the Danger was so great, and their Apprehensions of being taken so urgent upon them to conceal and shift for themselves, that they thought it convenient to let their Horses go where they would. When they came there, the Messenger, as we shall prove by himself, was convey'd away to a Chamber, but Mrs. Lisle causes Meat and Drink to be set before Mr. Hicks and Nelthorp, and they supp'd with her, and afterwards they were lodg'd by her particular Order and Direction. The next Morning Colonel Penruddock, who had some intimation, in his search after the Rebels, that some Persons lay concealed in Mrs. Lisle's House, comes thither, and tells her, after he had beset the House, Madam, You have Rebels in your House, I come to seize them, pray deliver them up: She denied that she had any in her House; but upon search, Hicks, and Nelthorp, and that other Fellow, the Messenger, were all found there, and she thereupon secured with them. The Method wherein we shall give our Evidence, will be this: We shall first begin with this piece of Evidence; That we shall prove, that Hicks was actually in the Army and in the Rebellion; and then we shall prove the several subsequent Facts as have been opened. We desire Mr. Pope, Mr. Fitzherbert and Mr. Taylor may be Sworn.

Lisle. My Lord, As for what is said concerning the Rebellion, I can assure you, I abhorr'd that Rebellion as much as any Woman in the World—— series. L. C. J. Look you, Mrs. Lisle, because we must observe the common and usual Methods of Tryal in your Case, as well as others, I must interrupt you now: You shall be fully heard when it comes to your turn to make your Defence, but any thing you say now before-hand is altogether irregular and improper. You, it may be, are ignorant of the Forms of Law, therefore I would inform you: You are first to hear what your Accusation is; you shall ask any Questions of the Witnesses that you will, after the King's Counsel have examined them, as they go along, and when all their Testimony is delivered, you shall be heard to make your own Defence, and have full scope and liberty to enlarge upon it as long as you can; it is a business that concerns you in point of Life and Death; all that you have or can value in the World lies at stake, and God forbid that you should be hinder'd, either in time or any thing else whereby you may defend your self; but at present it is not your turn to speak; for the Forms of Law require your Accusers first to be heard, and it is absolutely requisite that the usual Forms and Methods of Law be inviolably observed, and be sure it does the Prisoner no injury that the Law is kept so strictly to; and we have that Charity, as well as Justice that it becomes, and is not below all Courts to have for Persons in your Condition; and we are obliged to take care, that you suffer no Detriment or Injury by any illegal or irregular Proceedings: For tho' we sit here as Judges over you by Authority from the King, yet we are accountable, not only to him, but to the King of Kings, the great Judge of Heaven and Earth; and therefore are obliged, both by our Oaths, and upon our Consciences, to do you Justice, and by the Grace of God we shall do it, you may depend upon it: And as to what you say concerning your self, I pray God with all my heart you may be innocent. Pray call your Witnesses.

Lord Je-
Vol. III.

Mr. Pollexfen. Swear Mr. Pope, Mr. Fitzherbert, and Mr. Taylor. [Which was done.]

L. C. J. Who do you begin with?

Mr. Pollexfen. Mr. Pope, Pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know concerning this Hicks: Pray tell your whole Knowledge.

Mr. Pope. My Lord, I had the misfortune to be taken Prisoner by Monmouth's Army, going about some business of my own; and after I had been taken some few days, we happened to be brought to Keinsham, and we were put into Sir Thomas Bridges's Stables, and kept under a Guard there: Whilst we were there, I did see that Gentleman that goes by the Name of Mr. Hicks, who is now in Salisbury Gaol, and there I saw him yesterday; he came and asked for the Prisoners, which were about 4 or 5 in number, and he asked them, How they did? They made him little reply: Then he desired to know how we were dealt with; whether we were kindly used, or no? I replied, No, for we had had but a piece of Bread for two days: He made me answer, that he was sorry for that, for it was otherwise intended: And there was with him another Gentleman that was called the King's Chaplain, that is, the Duke of Monmouth's; and afterwards he pretended he would do us a kindness in speaking to the King (as he called him) for us. He talked with us some little time, and by and by he began to ask us what was the reason that we were there; we told him, we were taken Prisoners; upon which, saith he, This King (meaning, as I suppose, the late Duke of Monmouth) is a good King, and a Protestant; and a great deal to that purpose, with some reflecting Words on the Government, and upon the Person of the King; and he told us, he wonder'd what we had to say for our selves, being Protestants, that we did what we did in serving a Popish Prince, and not obeying a Protestant one. This is the Substance of what I have to say upon this matter.

[E e e e 2]

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Tho' you were pleased to phrase it, Sir, in the beginning of your Testimony, a Misfortune that you were taken Prisoner by the Rebels, yet, I suppose, you could not be without the Consolation of a good Conscience, that you suffered in the way of doing your Duty.

Mr. Pope. My Lord, I am very well satisfied I did suffer in a good Cause.

L. C. J. There is one piece of Happiness in it; that by that means you are able to give this Testimony this day, and do the King this piece of Service. But pray Sir let me ask you this Question; Are you sure the Man you saw yesterday at Salisbury, is the same Man that you spoke with at Keinsham, that goes by the Name of Hicks?

Mr. Pope. Yes, my Lord; and when I was there yesterday with him, I asked him whether he knew me; and told him, said I, you may well remember you see me at Keinsham: Saith he, I do not remember that ever I saw your Face before; said I, you remember Sir Thomas Bridges's Stables there? Said he, I remember I did see some Prisoners; said I, was not it there you saw me, and had such a Discourse with me? He seemed to deny it, but I told him, a Man of your Coat should not tell Untruths, you cannot but remember you saw me there; saith he, I will recollect my Memory if I can; and he afterwards sent to the George in Salisbury for me, and then he told me, he did recollect that he saw and talked with such a Person there.

Mr. Rumssey. Sir, I would ask you this one Question; Did you see him in the Army about the time of the Fight?

Mr. Pope. I think I saw him about a day or two before.

L. C. J. Had he any Weapon on?

Mr. Pope. I think not, my Lord.

Mr. Pollexfen. Our next Witness is Mr. Fitzberbert. Pray, Sir, will you give an Account to my Lord and the Jury, what you know of this Hicks.

Mr. Fitzberbert. My Lord, During the time that I was a Prisoner with this Gentleman at Keinsham, the 25th of June, I saw this Man, John Hicks, who held a Discourse with Mr. Pope near an Hours time, disparaging the Government and his Majesty, and extolling the Duke of Monmouth, what a brave Prince, and how good a Protestant he was.

L. C. J. Then he was among them, was he?

Mr. Fitzberbert. Yes, my Lord, he was, and I saw him yesterday at Salisbury.

L. C. J. Is that the same man that you saw in Monmouth's Army?

Mr. Fitzberbert. Yes, he owns himself to be the same man.

Mr. Pollexfen. How often did you see him there besides that time when he discoursed with Mr. Pope?

Mr. Fitzberbert. I saw him sometimes out of the Town, but I never discoursed him.

L. C. J. Did you see him there before or after that Discourse?

Mr. Fitzberbert. It was after.

L. C. J. Would the Prisoner ask this Witness, or the other, any Questions?

Lisle. No, my Lord.

Mr. Pollexfen. Then, Mr. Taylor, what say you to the matter?

Mr. Taylor. My Lord, I saw him at the same time that these Gentlemen speak of, at Sir Thomas Bridges's at Keinsham.

Mr. Pollexfen. Were you a Prisoner there, Sir?

Mr. Taylor. Yes, I was.

Mr. Pollexfen. What place was it you saw him in?

Mr. Taylor. It was in the Stables the first time that I saw him.

L. C. J. What Discourse had you with him? What did he say to you?

Mr. Taylor. He said, he wonder'd at us that we should take up Arms against so good a Prince and a Protestant as the Duke of Monmouth, and against the Protestant Religion, and hold up with Popery: Saith he, Tork is but a Papist; and a great many such Words.

L. C. J. Did you see him afterwards?

Mr. Taylor. Yes, my Lord, but I cannot tell particularly the Time and Place; up and down the Army.

L. C. J. Did you see him at Salisbury?

Mr. Taylor. Yes.

L. C. J. Is that the same man?

Mr. Taylor. Yes it is.

Mr. Pollexfen. Next, my Lord, we come to prove the Message and Correspondence between this same Hicks and the Prisoner Mrs. Lisle.

Mr. Jennings. Swear Mr. James Dunne.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Pollexfen. If your Lordship please to observe, the Times will fall out to be very material in this Case: The Battle at Kings Edmore was the 6th of July; 3 or 4 days after was the taking of Monmouth and my Lord Grey at Ringwood; upon the 26th day of July, 10 or 12 days after the taking of Monmouth, was this Message sent by Dunne to Mrs. Lisle; so we call Dunne to prove what Message he carried upon the 26th, what Answer was returned; he will tell you, that Tuesday was the time appointed for them to come, in the Night, and all the other Circumstances: But withal I must acquaint your Lordship, that this Fellow, Dunne, is a very unwilling Witness; and therefore, with submission to your Lordship, we do humbly desire your Lordship would please to examine him a little the more strictly.

L. C. J. You say well: Hark you, Friend, I would take notice of something to you by the way, and you would do well to mind what I say to you. According as the Counsel that are here for the King seem to insinuate, you were employ'd as a Messenger between these Persons; one whereof has already been proved a notorious Rebel, and the other is the Prisoner at the Bar, and your Errand was to procure a Reception at her House for him.

Dunne. My Lord, I did so.

L. C. J. Very well. Now mark what I say to you, Friend: I would not by any means in the World endeavour to fright you into any thing, or any ways tempt you to tell an Untruth, but provoke you to tell the Truth, and nothing but the Truth, that is the Business we come about here. Know, Friend, there is no Religion that any man can pretend to, can give a countenance to Lying, or can dispense with telling the Truth: Thou hast a precious immortal Soul, and there is nothing in the World equal equal to it in value: There is no relation to thy Mistress, if she be so; no relation to thy Friend, nay to thy Father or thy Child, nay not all the temporal Relations in the World can be equal to thy precious immortal Soul: Consider that the great God of Heaven and Earth, before whose Tribunal thou, and we, and all Persons are to stand at the last Day, will call thee to an Account for thy rescinding his Truth, and take Vengeance of thee for every Falshood thou tellest. I charge thee therefore, as thou wilt answer it to the great God, the Judge of all the Earth, that thou do not dare to waver one tittle from the Truth, upon any Account or Pretence whatsoever: For tho' it were to save thy Life, yet the value of thy precious and immortal Soul, is much greater than that thou shouldst forfeit it for the saving of any the most precious outward Blessing thou dost enjoy; for that God of Heaven may justly strike thee into eternal Flames, and make thee drop into the bottomless Lake of Fire and Brimstone, if thou offer to deviate the least from the Truth, and nothing but the Truth: According to the Command of that Oath that thou hast taken, tell us who employ'd you, when you were employ'd, and where, who caused you to go on this Message, and what the Message was. For I tell thee God is not to be mocked, and thou canst not deceive him, tho' thou mayst us: But I assure you, if I catch you prevaricating in any the least tittle (and perhaps I know more than you think I do; no, none of your Saints can save your Soul, nor shall they save your Body neither) I will be sure to punish every variation from the Truth that you are guilty of. Now come and tell us how you came to be employ'd upon such a Message, what your Errand was, and what was the issue and result of it?

Dunne. My Lord, there came a man to my House, and desired me to go of a Message to my Lady Lisle's.

L. C. J. Prithee tell me when it was, and what Hour of the Day?

Dunne. What, when the man came to my House?

L. C. J. Yes.

Dunne. That I will, my Lord.

L. C. J. Be sure you do, and do not speak one word but what is true, and let the Truth come out o' God's Name.

Dunne. It was Friday Night.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month was it?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I cannot exactly tell that.

L. C. J. Was it after the Fight at Weston, or before?

Dunne. It was after the Battle, my Lord.

L. C. J. How many Days after was it?

Dunne. I cannot exactly tell.

L. C. J. Was it the Friday Se'night after the Fight?

Dunne. No, it was not.

L. C. J. What was desired of thee at that time?

Dunne. He desired me to go of a Message to my Lady Lisle's.

L. C. J. Dost thou know what man it was that came to thee, and desired thee to go on this Message?

Dunne. My Lord, I can tell what manner of man he was.

L. C. J. Give me a Description of the man?

Dunne. He was a short black man.

L. C. J. You say he was a short man?

Dunne. Yes, he was so, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was he a swarthy, or a ruddy Complexioned man?

Dunne. He was not ruddy, but swarthy.

L. C. J. And what did he say to thee?

Dunne. He desired me to go to my Lady Lisle's for him, for one Mr. Hicks, and I went accordingly.

L. C. J. What were you to say when you came there?

Mr. Pollexfen. What Reward were you to have?

Dunne. That man that came to me, promised me that I should be well rewarded for my pains.

L. C. J. Where do you live (by the way)?

Dunne. In Warminster Parish.

L. C. J. How far is it from my Lady Lisle's?

Dunne. Six and twenty miles, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. You did go, you say? When?

Dunne. Upon the Saturday.

L. C. J. Well, we are got thus far; you went to my Lady Lisle's upon the Saturday, and from one Mr. Hicks: What was your Errand?

Dunne. To know of my Lady Lisle, whether she would entertain Mr. Hicks.

L. C. J. Well, now go on.

Dunne. When I came to my Lady Lisle's House, I went to the Bailiff that belonged to my Lady Lisle.

L. C. J. Ay, who was that Bailiff? Tell us his Name? I love to know Men's Names.

Dunne. His Name is Carpenter, I think.

L. C. J. Well, and what did you say to him?

Dunne. I asked him, whether my Lady would entertain one Hicks, or no: He told me he'd have nothing to do with it; but sent me to my Lady, and to my Lady I went; and when I came, I asked my Lady, whether she would entertain one Mr. Hicks, or no? She said, she did not know but she might.

L. C. J. Well, what then?

Dunne. My Lord, I'll tell you.

L. C. J. Ay, prithee take time to recollect thy self; but be sure thou speak nothing but the Truth. What said my Lady to thee?

Dunne. My Lady said, they might come to her House: And upon those Terms I went away home again, and returned that Answer to the Messenger that came to me. I came home on the Sunday Night, and that Message I delivered unto him, and told him, that upon Tuesday Night they might come to my Lady's.

L. C. J. You told him, you say, they might come on Tuesday?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. Therefore I would fain know from you, how you came to tell him, They might come upon Tuesday? For you said just now, my Lady's Answer was, That she did not know but she might entertain him. Had you any such Direction from Carpenter, or any one else, to tell him, that they might come on Tuesday?

Dunne. I had such Directions from my Lady.

L. C. J. Very well; then let us know what were the particular Directions she gave; tell us what further Directions you had from her?

Dunne. I will, my Lord, presently, when I have recollected my self.

L. C. J. Ay, prithee compose thy self, recollect thy self.

[Then he pauses for a good while.]

L. C. J. Come now, tell us, Did she give you any Directions what time of the Day they might come thither, remember your self well, and tell us what she said to you?

Dunne. My Lord, I will as near as I can, speak the Truth.

L. C. J. Ay, in God's Name, let's have the Truth whatsoever comes on it?

Dunne. I will, my Lord.

L. C. J. Come then, What time did she give Directions that they should come?

Dunne. On Tuesday in the Evening.

L. C. J. Upon your Oath, Did she say Tuesday in the Evening?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, she did.

L. C. J. What time in the Evening, early or late?

Dunne. She did not give any Directions at all about that, but only in the Evening.

L. C. J. What else did she say to you, tell us all the Discourse that passed between you?

Dunne. She said nothing else that I remember, my Lord.

L. C. J. Prithee, how did she say she would receive him, tell us what Words she used, for thou must needs imagine, we do suppose there must needs be some longer Discourse between you, than what you talk of.

Dunne. All that she said was, she would entertain him.

L. C. J. Him, Who?

Dunne. Mr. Hicks.

L. C. J. Just now you talked of them, and, they; Did you mention no body to her but Mr. Hicks?

Dunne. My Lord, I was sent to see whether she would receive Mr. Hicks.

L. C. J. Prithee Friend mind what thou hast said, and recollect thy self, I'll repeat it to thee, because thou shalt see that I remember it all very well, It seems that a Man, a short black Man came to your House in Warminster Parish to get you to go for a Message to Mrs. Lisle's, to know whether she would entertain one Hicks, and that you went upon the Saturday, and first, you met with Carpenter, and ask'd him that Question, whether his Lady would entertain one Mr. Hicks, and he told you he would have nothing to do with it, and thereupon you went to Mrs. Lisle and asked her the Question, and she told you that you should tell the Man that they should come the Tuesday following, and come in the Evening, and she would entertain him: Is not this what you have said?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, it is.

L. C. J. Well then, now let us know what other Discourse you had with her?

Dunne. My Lord, I do not remember any thing more.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray Mr. Dunne, did she ask you any Questions whether you knew Mr. Hicks or no?

Dunne. Nothing at all of that, that I remember.

Mr. Coriton. Did she believe that you knew Mr. Hicks?

Dunne. I cannot tell, my Lord.

Mr. Coriton. Do you believe that she knew him before?

Dunne. I cannot tell truly.

L. C. J. Why, dost thou think she would entertain any one that she had no Knowledge of merely upon thy Message? Mr. Dunne, Mr. Dunne have a Care, it may be more is known of this Matter than you think for.

Dunne. My Lord, I tell you the Truth.

L. C. J. Ay, be sure you do, do not let me take you prevaricating?

Dunne. My Lord, I speak nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Well, I only bid you have a Care, Truth never wants a Subterfuge, it always loves to appear naked, it needs no Enamel; nor any Covering; but Lying, and Snivelling, and Canting, and Hicksing, always appears in Masquerade. Come, go on with your Evidence?

Dunne. My Lord, I say I went back again and returned my Answer to the same Man that brought the Message to me.

L. C. J. Pray let me ask you one Question; Were you got to your House before you found him, or was he waiting there for you?

Dunne. He came to my House after I came home.

L. C. J. It was the same Man you say?

Dunne. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Had he no Company with him neither time?

Dunne. No.

L. C. J. Well, and what Answer did you return him?

Dunne. I told him, my Lady said she would entertain Mr. Hicks; he asked when he might come up, I told him upon Tuesday, and upon Tuesday they came to my House.

L. C. J. What time did they come to your House?

Dunne. About seven of the Clock in the Morning.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month was it?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I cannot readily tell what Day of the Month it was?

L. C. J. Was it one or two that came to thy House?

Dunne. My Lord, there were three in all.

L. C. J. Who were those three, prithee?

Dunne. My Lord, there was the little black Man that brought the Message, and two other People.

L. C. J. Prithee describe what two other People these were?

Dunne. One was a full fat black Man, and the other was a thin black Man.

L. C. J. Who was that thin black Man?

Dunne. My Lord, I did not know him.

L. C. J. Did you not fancy which was Hicks?

Dunne. My Lord, I never knew any of their Names.

L. C. J. How long did they stay at your House?

Dunne. About three Hours.

L. C. J. When did you go away from thence?

Dunne. About eleven of the Clock.

L. C. J. Which way did you go then?

Dunne. We went through Deverel, and from Deverel to Chilmark, and from Chilmark to Sutton, and from Sutton to the Plain, and then one Barter met me; I knew the Way no further, and he was to shew me the Way from thence.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Prithee hold; before thou goest any further, I desire to be satisfied about a Question or two; Dost thou say thou didst not know the Way?

Dunne. No, my Lord, after I came to the Plain.

L. C. J. How didst thou find the Way when thou wentst on thy Message first?

Dunne. My Lord, after I came to Salisbury-Plain, I met with one Barter, and he shewed me the Way.

L. C. J. Where is that Barter?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we have him here, we shall examine him by and by, there he stands. [Being a very lusty Man.]

L. C. J. Sure that was not the little Man thou spokest of?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Prithee let me understand thee then if I can: Thou didst say at first there was only a little Man with a black Beard that was concerned with thee about that Message; now thou talkest of some Guide that thou hadst, prithee who did guide thee, let us know?

Dunne. My Lord, I say I went so far as Fovant, and so to Chalk, but when I came upon the Plain I did not know my Way to my Lady Lisle's House at Moyle's Court, I asked twenty People in the Street which was my way, but no body would tell me, at last I spoke to one John Barter to go with me to my Lady Lisle's, and he and I did agree to go together, and he shewed me the way and carry'd me to the House.

L. C. J. Thou shouldst have told us this before, Man, that we might have understood it. Where did you lie upon the Saturday Night?

Dunne. At Fovant.

L. C. J. I thought you had said, you had come to Mrs. Lisle's on Saturday?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, I did so, and came back to Fovant that Night.

L. C. J. And where did you lie on Sunday Night?

Dunne. I lay at my own House on Sunday Night.

L. C. J. And Barter came along with you when you came on Tuesday?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. And did you go the same way upon the Tuesday that you went upon the Saturday?

Dunne. Do you mean, my Lord, the same way I came at first?

L. C. J. Ay.

Dunne. No, my Lord, we came to Sutton, not to Fovant.

L. C. J. Why did not you go the same way upon the Tuesday that you went upon the Saturday?

Dunne. Because I had appointed to meet him at such a Place.

L. C. J. Come, prithee answer me freely, and according to Truth; Who did desire thee, or order thee to go another way than that thou wentst at first? How came it to pass? Let us know the Truth?

Dunne. My Lord, I did count that to be the nearer way, and therefore I went that way.

L. C. J. That cannot be the Reason, for thou wouldst have gone the nearest way at first, I believe, come, tell us truly?

Dunne. My Lord, I know no other Reason.

L. C. J. Come, tell us what Towns and Villages you did go through then upon Saturday?

Dunne. My Lord, I went through several, Chilmark and Fovant.

L. C. J. And what Villages did you go thro' upon the Tuesday?

Dunne. I went through most of the same Towns.

L. C. J. What, and at Noon-day too?

Dunne. Yes.

L. C. J. And how chanc'd when you went that way, that you appointed Barter to meet you in another Place at Fovant?

Dunne. Because I did not know the way afterwards.

L. C. J. Then let me ask you another Question: Did you go the same way from Fovant to my Lady Lisle's as you went before?

Dunne. No, we did not.

L. C. J. How came that to pass?

Dunne. I would have went the same way, but they would not.

L. C. J. Which way did you go then?

Dunne. We went through Chalke and so thro' Rocksborne, and from Rocksborne to Fording Bridge, and so to Moyle's Court.

L. C. J. How far is this about now?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I cannot readily tell.

L. C. J. How many Miles is it from Fovant to my Lady Lisle's?

Dunne. My Lord, it is about fourteen or fifteen.

L. C. J. How many Miles was it the way that you went upon the Tuesday?

Dunne. It might be twenty, my Lord, for ought I know.

L. C. J. What was the Reason that Barter went that way?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Pray let me ask you another Question then; What Discourse had you with Barter? Or what Bargain did you make with him for shewing you the way? For you would not ask him to go with you without promising him some Reward.

Dunne. My Lord, I asked him to shew me the way to my Lady Lisle's House, and told him I was going for one Hicks, and so he took his Horse and went with me.

L. C. J. What Reward did you promise him?

Dunne. Half a Crown, my Lord, and half a Crown I gave him.

L. C. J. Well, that was the first time, and what did you promise him the second time?

Dunne. The second time one of the two Men gave him five Shillings.

L. C. J. What Man was it?

Dunne. It was the black Man.

L. C. J. What was his Name? It was not the little black Man that came first to desire you to go on the Message, was it?

Dunne. No, my Lord, it was not he that spoke to me first.

L. C. J. Did not that little Man that spoke to you first, promise you a Reward for your Pains?

Dunne. No, my Lord, that Man never promised me any thing.

L. C. J. Did he go along with you?

Dunne. No, my Lord, he did not.

L. C. J. Who were the two Men that went with you?

Dunne. Hicks and Nelthorp.

L. C. J. Which of them two was it that gave Barter five Shillings?

Dunne. It was Nelthorpe that gave him five Shillings.

L. C. J. How do you know his Name was Nelthorpe?

Dunne. At my Lady Lisle's, after he was taken I knew his Name to be Nelthorpe.

L. C. J. What Name did he go by before?

Dunne. Were I to die presently, my Lord, I cannot tell it.

L. C. J. Well, you went so much about: What time did you get to my Lady Lisle's upon the Tuesday?

Dunne. About nine or ten of the Clock at Night, my Lord.

L. C. J. Let us consider a little; you say you went from your House about eleven a Clock: What time did you get to Forvant?

Dunne. About two or three of the Clock, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where did you stay by the way?

Dunne. No where, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you ride on still?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was it before nine or after nine that you came to my Lady Lisle's?

Dunne. I believe it was rather after nine, my Lord.

L. C. J. Who came first to my Lady Lisle's, prithee tell us frankly?

Dunne. My Lord, we came all three together to the Gate.

L. C. J. Who knocked at the Gate, you or Barter, or who else?

Dunne. Barter, my Lord, was discharg'd before we came near the House, about eight Miles from it.

L. C. J. Sayst thou so; How came you then to know the way without him?

Dunne. My Lord, I'll tell you, they lost their way, and they sent me down to Marton, and there I went to a Man, my Lord, and told him one Hicks desired to speak with him.

L. C. J. Thou sayst well, now must I know that Man's Name.

Dunne. The Man's Name that I went to at Marton, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, and look to it, you tell me right, for it may be I know the Man already, and can tell at what end of the Town the Man lives too.

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot tell his Name presently.

L. C. J. Oh! pray now, do not say so, you must tell us, indeed you must think of his Name a little.

Dunne. My Lord, if I can mind it I will.

L. C. J. Prithee do.

Dunne. His Name, truly my Lord, I cannot rightly tell for the present.

L. C. J. Prithee recollect thy self, indeed thou canst tell us if thou wilt.

Dunne. My Lord, I can go to the House again if I were at Liberty.

L. C. J. I believe it, and so could I, but really neither you nor I can be spared at present, therefore prithee do us the Kindness now to tell us his Name?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I cannot mind his Name at present.

L. C. J. Alack a-day, we must needs have it, come, refresh your Memory a little.

Dunne. My Lord, I think his Name was Fane.

L. C. J. Thou sayst right, his name was Fane truly, thou see'st I know something of the Matter: Well, what didst thou say to him?

Dunne. I told him I came from one Mr. Hicks.

L. C. J. And what didst thou desire of him?

Dunne. I told him that one Mr. Hicks desired to speak with him, and when he came out to Mr. Hicks, Mr. Hicks did desire him to shew him the Way to Mrs. Lisle's.

L. C. J. Now tell us what kind of Man that was that did desire this of Mr. Fane?

Dunne. My Lord, it was the full fat black Man.

L. C. J. Now we have got him out, now we know which was Hicks: Now go on.

Dunne. My Lord, this Man went and rid along with them as far as the new House that is built there, within a Mile of that House Fane went along with us, and afterwards, whether Hicks or Nelthorpe, or who knew the way I cannot tell, but to my Lady Lisle's we went.

L. C. J. Who directed you the way when Fane left you?

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot tell, for my part I did not know the way.

L. C. J. Who went with you?

Dunne. None but Hicks and Nelthorpe.

L. C. J. How far from my Lady's House was that place where Fane left you?

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot directly tell.

L. C. J. Then Hicks knew the way it seems from thence?

Dunne. So he might, my Lord, for ought I know, for I did not.

L. C. J. Thou art strangely stiff, but now we are come thus far with you, tell me what Entertainment you had at my Lady Lisle's, and look to it that you be sure to tell me Truth, for I know it to a tittle, I can assure you that?

Dunne. They went in before me, my Lord.

L. C. J. Who went in before you?

Dunne. Hicks and Nelthorpe.

L. C. J. But the Door was shut when you came, was it not?

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot tell truly.

L. C. J. Then tell me what Entertainment you had there?

Dunne. For my own part, my Lord, I carry'd a bit of Cake and Cheese from my own House, and that I eat.

L. C. J. What became of your Companions Hicks and Nelthorpe, I pray you?

Dunne. I never see them again till after they were taken.

L. C. J. How is that, prithee recollect thy self?

Dunne. Sure, my Lord, I did not see them till then.

L. C. J. Who came to the Door to you?

Dunne. A young Girl, my Lord, I knew not who nor what she was.

L. C. J. Did they go directly into the House?

Dunne. It was dark, my Lord, I did not see what they did.

L. C. J. Was there never a Candle there?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. It was dark, very dark, was it not?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, it was so.

L. C. J. Was my Lady stirring then?

Dunne. I did not see her.

L. C. J. And this is as much as you know of the Business?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, this is all that I remember.

L. C. J. Well, and what hadst thou for all thy Pains?

Dunne. Nothing but a Month's Imprisonment, my Lord.

L. C. J. Thou seemest to be a Man of a great deal of Kindness and good Nature; for by this Story, there was a Man that thou never sawest before, (for I would fain have all People observe what Leather some Men's Consciences are made of) and because he only had a black Beard and came to thy House, that black Beard of his should perswade thee to go 26 Miles and give a Man half a Crown out of thy Pocket to shew thee thy way, and all to carry a Message from a Man thou never knewest in thy Life, to a Woman whom thou never sawest in thy Life neither, that thou shouldst lie out by the way two Nights, and upon the Sunday get home, and there meet with this same black-bearded little Gentleman, and appoint these People to come to thy House upon the Tuesday, and when they come, entertain them three or four Hours at thy own House, and go back again so many Miles with them, and have no Entertainment but a piece of Cake and Cheese that thou broughtest thy self from Home, and have no Reward, nor so much as know any of the Persons thou didst all this for, is very strange.

Dunne. My Lord, the Man that came to desire me to go on this Message said that Hicks should reward me and pay me for my Pains.

L. C. J. But why wouldst thou take the word of a Man thou didst not know?

Dunne. I was forced to take his word at that time, my Lord.

L. C. J. There was no necessity for that neither; no body could force thee to do it: Alack a-day; Thou seemest to be a Man of some consideration: I mightily wonder thou shouldst be so kind to People thou didst not know, without any prospect of Recompence whatsoever.

Dunne. All the reason that induced me to it was, they said they were Men in Debt, and desired to be concealed for a while.

L. C. J. Dost thou believe that any one here believes thee? Prithee what Trade art thou?

Dunne. My Lord, I am a Baker, by Trade.

L. C. J. And wilt thou bake thy Bread at such easie Rates, upon my word, then thou art very kind, prithee tell me, I believe thou dost use to bake on Sundays, dost thou not?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I do not.

L. C. J. Alack a-day, thou art precise in that, but thou canst travel on Sundays to lead Rogues into lurking Holes: It seemeth thou hast a particular Kindness for a black Beard, that's all thy Reason for undertaking all this Trouble: Thou hast told me all the Truth, hast thou?

Dunne. I have, my Lord.

L. C. J. But I assure thee thy Bread is very light Weight, it will scarce pass the Ballance here.

Dunne. I tell the Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. No doubt of that, but prithee tell me whose Horse didst thou ride when thou wentest first?

Dunne. The Man's Horse that came to me to desire me to go the Message.

Vol. III.

L. C. J. How came he to trust thee with his Horse?

Dunne. The Lord knows, my Lord.

L. C. J. Thou sayst right, the Lord only knows, for by the little I know of thee I would not trust thee with Two-pence: Whose Horse didst thou ride the second time?

Dunne. My own, my Lord.

L. C. J. And where didst thou put thy Horse when thou camest to my Lady Lisle's?

Dunne. In the Stable, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where did they put their Horses?

Dunne. They left them without the Gate, I think, my Lord, I did not see them take them in.

L. C. J. No, thou saidst it was so dark thou couldst not see any thing: Pray were you with the two Men when they did alight?

Dunne. We did all three come together.

L. C. J. What did you give Fane for his Pains in shewing you the Way?

Dunne. He had nothing that I know of.

L. C. J. Well, you are the best natur'd and kindest hearted People that ever I knew: Whereabouts do you live?

Dunne. At Warminster, near my Lord Weymouth's.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray Mr. Dunne will you answer me one Question; Was not there searching at that time up and down the Country for Rebels that were fled from the Battle?

Dunne. I did hear there was, some were taken.

Mr. Pollexfen. But did you hear there was searching at that time for other of the Rebels?

Dunne. I did not hear of any near me, but there were in other Places.

L. C. J. Then it being such a suspicious time when that little Man with the black Beard came to thee, didst thou not ask what that Hicks was?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. And when Mr. Hicks and the other Man that is call'd by the Name of Mr. Nelthorpe came to thy House, didst not thou ask their Names?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Nor didst not thou ask upon what Occasion they were to be conducted to my Lady Lisle's?

Dunne. No, my Lord: Hicks, the fat Man, told me they were in Debt.

L. C. J. Did not the Man that first came to you, and employ'd you to go on this Message; Did not he know Hicks?

Dunne. I cannot tell, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did not he tell you, Hicks desired you to go, and that he was in Debt, and therefore desired to be concealed?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, he did.

L. C. J. How came you to be so impudent then as to tell me such a Lie?

Dunne. I beg your pardon, my Lord.

L. C. J. You beg my pardon? That is not because you told me a Lie, but because I have found you in a Lie. Come Sirrah, tell me the Truth; What did Hicks and Nelthorpe with their Horses when they came to my Lady Lisle's?

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Why, you impudent Rascal, did not you tell me just now that they left them at the Door?

[F f f f]

Dunne.

Dunne. My Lord, I said I believ'd they might, but cannot directly tell what they did with them, I know not but one or other might have them away, but I did not see it.

Mr. Pollexfen. Prithee Friend tell the Truth, What did become of the Horses?

Dunne. I cannot tell truly, my Lord, if any body had them away, I did not see them.

L. C. J. Where didst thou lie that Night?

Dunne. In one of the Chambers.

L. C. J. Who shew'd thee the way to thy Lodging?

Dunne. The Girl.

L. C. J. Who else didst thou see in the House?

Dunne. I saw no body at all.

L. C. J. Then who shew'd thee the way to the Stable, and help'd thee with Horse-meat?

Dunne. No body helped me with Horse-meat.

L. C. J. Why, thy Horse did not feed on thy Cake and Cheese, did he?

Dunne. There was Hay in the Rack, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was the Stable-door lock'd or open?

Dunne. The Stable-door was latch'd, and I pluck'd up the Latch.

L. C. J. How came you to know the way to the Stable then?

Dunne. Because I had been there before, my Lord.

L. C. J. Thou hadst need to know it very well, for it seemeth thou wentest without a Candle or any thing in the World, and put in thy Horse; Didst thou see that Man Carpenter the Bailiff that thou spokest of?

Dunne. Mr. Carpenter gave my Horse Hay.

L. C. J. Was there any Light in the Stable?

Dunne. Not when I put in my Horse first.

L. C. J. Who brought the Light thither?

Dunne. Goodman Carpenter.

L. C. J. Did not he give thy Horse Hay?

Dunne. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. And did he not give him Oates too?

Dunne. No, my Lord, he did not.

L. C. J. Did not he conduct you into the House?

Dunne. Who, my Lord?

L. C. J. That same Goodman Carpenter.

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you see any body else but that Girl you speak of?

Dunne. My Lord, I did see the Girl there.

L. C. J. But you Blockhead, I ask you whether you did see any body else.

Dunne. I do not know but I might see Goodman Carpenter.

L. C. J. Why, thou saidst he brought the Light, and gave thy Horse Hay, but I see thou art set upon nothing but Prevarication: Sirrah, tell me plainly, Did you see no body else?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Not any body?

Dunne. No, my Lord, not any one.

L. C. J. Did you not drink in the House?

Dunne. No, my Lord, not a drop.

L. C. J. Did not you call for Drink?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not, I had nothing but my Cake and Cheese that I brought thither myself.

L. C. J. Who went up to the Chamber with you?

Dunne. The Girl, my Lord.

L. C. J. And no body else?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was the Bed made?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, it was.

L. C. J. You eat nothing in the House, you say?

Dunne. Nothing but my own Cake and Cheese, my Lord.

L. C. J. But you did not drink in the House at all?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Did you drink at Marton where you did call upon Fane?

Dunne. Yes, I did, but not afterwards.

L. C. J. Did you see any Body there the next Morning before they were taken?

Dunne. No, my Lord, but after the House was beset, I saw my Lady and Mr. Hicks, and I think I saw Goodman Carpenter.

L. C. J. They and you were taken there together, were not you?

Dunne. Yes.

L. C. J. Did you see Carpenter's Wife, upon your Oath, that Night?

Dunne. My Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Nor no Woman-kind besides the Girl you speak of?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Nor no Man besides Carpenter?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. You are sure of this?

Dunne. I am so, my Lord.

L. C. J. You are sure you did not drink there?

Dunne. I am, my Lord.

L. C. J. And you say he brought the Light into the Stable, and gave your Horse Hay?

Dunne. He did, my Lord.

L. C. J. Now prithee tell me truly, where came Carpenter unto you? I must know the Truth of that; remember that I give you fair Warning, do not tell me a Lye, for I will be sure to treasure up every Lye that thou tellest me, and thou mayst be certain it will not be for thy Advantage; I would not terrifie thee to make thee say any think but the Truth: But assure thy self I never met with a lying, sneaking, canting Fellow, but I always treasure up Vengeance for him, and therefore look to it that thou dost not prevaricate with me, for to be sure thou wilt come to the worst of it in the end?

Dunne. My Lord, I will tell the Truth as near as I can.

L. C. J. Then tell me where Carpenter met thee?

Dunne. In the Court, my Lord.

L. C. J. Before you came to the Gate, or after?

Dunne. It was after we came to the Gate, in the Court.

L. C. J. Then tell me, and I charge you tell me true, Who was with you when Carpenter met you?

Dunne. Hicks and Nelthorpe.

L. C. J. Was there any body else besides them two in the Court?

Dunne. There was no body but Hicks and Nelthorpe, and I and Mr. Carpenter.

L. C. J. You are sure of that?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Consider of it, are you sure there was no body else?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I did not mind that there was any body else.

L. C. J. Recollect your self, and consider well of it.

Dunne. Truly, my Lord; I do not know of any body else.

L. C. J. Now upon your Oath tell me truly, who it was that opened the Stable door, was it Carpenter or you?

Dunne. It was Carpenter, my Lord.

L. C. J. Why, thou vile Wretch didst not thou tell me just now that thou pluck'd up the Latch? Dost thou take the God of Heaven not to be a God of Truth, and that he is not a Witness of all thou sayst? Dost thou think because thou prevaricatest with the Court here, thou canst do so with God above who knows thy Thoughts, and it is infinite Mercy, that for those Falshoods of thine, he does not immediately strike thee into Hell? Jesus God! there is no sort of Conversation nor human Society to be kept with such People as these are, who have no other Religion but only in Pretence, and no way to uphold themselves but by countenancing Lying, and Villany: Did not you tell me that you opened the Latch your self, and that you saw no body else but a Girl? How durst you offer to tell such horrid Lyes in the Presence of God and of a Court of Justice? Answer me one Question more: Did he pull down the Hay or you?

Dunne. I did not pull down any Hay at all.

L. C. J. Was there any Hay pull'd down before the Candle was brought?

Dunne. No, there was not.

L. C. J. Who brought the Candle?

Dunne. Mr. Carpenter brought the Candle and Lanthorn.

L. C. J. It seems the Saints have a certain Charter for Lying; they may lye and cant, and deceive, and rebel, and think God Almighty takes no notice of it, nor will reckon with them for it: You see, Gentlemen, what a precious Fellow this is, a very pretty Tool to be employ'd upon such an Errand, a Knave that no body would trust for half a Crown between Man and Man, but he is the fitter to be employ'd about such Works; What Pains is a Man at to get the Truth out of these Fellows, and it is with a great deal of Labour that we can squeeze one Drop out of them: A Turk has more Title to an Eternity of Bliss than these Pretenders to Christianity, for he has more Morality and Honesty in him. Sirrah, I charge you in the Presence of God, tell me true, What other Persons did you see that Night?

Dunne. My Lord, I did not see any than what I have told you already.

L. C. J. Then they went out and brought word that thou wert come, and so he came out to meet thee; very well: I would have every body that has but the least Tang of Saintship to observe the Carriage of this Fellow, and see how they can cant and snivel, and lie, and forswear themselves, and all for the good old Cause: They will stick at nothing if they think they can but preserve a Brother or Sister Saint forsooth; they can do any thing in the World but speak Truth, and do their Duty to God and their Governours: I ask you again, Did not Carpenter meet you before you left Hicks and Nelthorp?

Dunne. No, he did not.

L. C. J. Then I ask you again once more, Did not Carpenter ask you to drink?

Dunne. No, he did not.

Vol. III.

L. C. J. Did not he light you with a Lanthorn and Candle into the House?

Dunne. I went into the House.

L. C. J. Dost thou believe we think any body thrust thee in: Did he light thee in, I ask thee?

Dunne. I went in along with Mr. Carpenter.

L. C. J. What Room did he carry you into?

Dunne. My Lord, he carry'd me into no Room, the young Woman shew'd me into a Room.

L. C. J. What Room was it?

Dunne. Into the Chamber.

L. C. J. Was not thou in the Hall or Kitchen?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. It is hard thou hadst not one Cup of Drink to thy Cake and Cheefe.

Dunne. My Lord, I had never a Drop.

L. C. J. No, nor did no body ask you to eat or drink?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Thou art the best natur'd Fellow that ever I met with, but the worst rewarded: Come, I will ask thee another Question: When was the first time thou heardst Nelthorp's Name?

Dunne. Not till he was taken.

L. C. J. What Name did the Fellow with the black Beard tell thee he had?

Dunne. My Lord, he never told me any Name?

L. C. J. Didst thou never ask him his Name?

Dunne. No, my Lord, that Man that was afterwards found to be Nelthorp, I did not know to be Nelthorp till he was taken, nor what his Name was, nor any Name he had.

L. C. J. No, prithee tell the Truth, Did not Nelthorp go by the Name of Crofts?

Dunne. He did, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then prithee, when did he first go by that Name in thy Hearing?

Dunne. My Lord, I only heard Hicks say he went by the Name of Crofts.

L. C. J. When was that?

Dunne. When they were taken.

L. C. J. Did you not hear him call'd by that Name any time of the Journey?

Dunne. I cannot recollect, my Lord, that I ever did.

L. C. J. Thou canst recollect nothing of Truth: Is this as much as you can say?

Dunne. It is, my Lord.

Mr. Jennings. You say Carpenter met you very civilly, and took Care of your Horse: Did he make no Provision for Hicks and Nelthorp's Horses? What became of them?

Dunne. I cannot tell, my Lord.

Mr. Rumsey. Did you see their Horses afterwards?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

Mr. Rumsey. When they alighted from them, were they ty'd fast to the Gate, or how?

Dunne. They were not ty'd at all, as I know of.

Mr. Jennings. Did you tell Carpenter that their Horses were there?

Dunne. I did not tell him any such thing.

L. C. J. Thou art a strange prevaricating, shuffling, snivelling, lying Rascal.

Mr. Pollexfen. We will set him by for the present and call Barter, that is the other Fellow.

L. C. J. Will the Prisoner ask this Person any Questions?

Lisle. No.

L. C. J. Perhaps her Questions might endanger the coming out of all the Truth, and it may be she is well enough pleased to have him swear as he does; but it carries a very foul Face, upon my Word.

Then Barter was sworn.

L. C. J. Is this Barter?

Mr. Pollexfen. Yes, my Lord, for his part we have his Examination before two Justices of Peace, but we hope he is an honest Fellow and will tell the Truth.

L. C. J. That is all one whether you have his Examination or not: I expect he should tell me the Truth, and the whole Truth here. Friend, you know your Soul is at pawn for the Truth of what you testify to us; the other Fellow thou seest has been prevaricating with us all this while, and swearing off and on, and scarce told one Word of Truth, I know very well: Now I know as much of thee as I do of him, therefore look to thy self, and let the Truth, and nothing but the Truth come out?

Barter. May it please your Honour, my Lord, this Man Dunne came to my House upon the Saturday, and spoke to me to ride along with him to Moyle's-Court, where my Lady Lisle liv'd, and I having no other Business at that time, did go along with him: He had a Letter in his Pocket, and I saw him produce the Letter to my Lady's Bailiff, Mr. Carpenter, but he would not meddle with it, so I suppose he went in with it to my Lady; and while I was in the Kitchen my Lady came thither, and asked me, saith she, What Countryman art thou? Said I, Madam, I am a Wiltshire Man, saith she, Do'st thou make Bricks? No said I, Madam, I cannot, I can help in Husbandry Work; saith she, If thou could'st make Bricks, I will give thee Ten Acres of Ground in such a Place: I told her, no, I could not: And then she goes to this Man Dunne, and there she was laughing with him, and looked upon me, and afterwards when we were going along, I asked him what she laughed at?

L. C. J. Ay, and now tell me what he said to thee about it?

Barter. He told me, my Lord, my Lady ask'd whether I knew any thing of the Concern, and that he answer'd her, No, this the Fellow told me was that she laughed at: After this I could not eat, nor drink, nor sleep for Trouble of Mind till I had discover'd this to some Justice of the Peace, and I resolv'd at last to go to Colonel Penruddock and consult with him about it, so I went over and told him of it.

L. C. J. What did you tell Colonel Penruddock, let us hear?

Barter. Where I had been the Saturday before, and where I should meet them again upon Salisbury-Plain upon the Tuesday, for I did expect to meet them there according to Appointment, and we did agree he should come and take them there; but afterwards missing them there, or, for some other Reason I do not know what, his Mind altered, and he came to take them in the House: So when I met them, we rode on about Ten Miles, and they would have had me to have led them a private Way over the Fording Bridge towards Moyle's-Court, but I told them, in Case they intended to have me for their Guide, they must go the Way that I could tell, but they would go that private way, and so lose their way; then they sent back this Dunne to Marton, to one Fane, that was the fat Man that sent him, but I finding that I was of no more Value then, rode away from them, and having a Relation that liv'd on that Side of the Country, I went to let Colonel Penruddock know that they were at the House, but before I went away from them, Nelthorp gave me five Shillings, half a Crown, and two Shillings and a Six-pence.

L. C. J. Now thou say'st Nelthorp did, Didst thou hear his Name named?

Barter. I never could find any of their Names till they were taken.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray Barter what Discourse had you with Dunne the first time you were going to and from my Lady Lisle's, concerning the Men that he was to bring thither, and what Estates they had?

Barter. My Lord, he said they had half a Score of Thousands of Pounds a Year a piece.

Mr. Pollexfen. Did he tell you they were to come to my Lady's?

Barter. Yes, he told me they were to come upon the Tuesday, and they were to come such a Way, and were to come to my Lady's in the Evening.

L. C. J. What wert thou to have for thy Pains?

Barter. I made no Bargain, my Lord.

L. C. J. You are all very free, kind-hearted People, I say that for you.

Mr. Pollexfen. What did Dunne say about his Gains?

Barter. He told me he had a very fine Booty for his Part, and that he should never want Money again, and that I should be very well paid, and gave me half a Crown.

L. C. J. Then let my honest Man Mr. Dunne stand forward a little. Come, Friend, you have had some time to recollect your self; let us see whether we can have the Truth out of you now: You talked of carrying a Message from Hicks to my Lady Lisle: Did not you carry a Letter?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Did not you shew a Letter to the Bailiff, Carpenter?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. What say you, Barter, to that?

Barter. My Lord, I did see him produce the Letter to the Bailiff.

L. C. J. Then I will ask you another Question: Did you not tell Barter that you should be at Salisbury Plain, with two People, upon the Tuesday?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I said between Compton and Fovant.

L. C. J. Did not you tell him, that they were brave Fellows, and had God knows how many Thousand Pounds a Year apiece?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Then one thing more: Did not you tell him, that you told my Lady, when she ask'd whether he was acquainted with the Concern, that he knew nothing of the Business?

Dunne. My Lord, I did tell him so.

L. C. J. Did you so? Then you and I must have a little further Discourse: Come now, and tell us, what Business was that? and tell it us so, that a Man may understand and believe that thou dost speak Truth.

Dunne.

Dunne. Does your Lordship ask what that Business was?

L. C. J. Yes, it is a plain Question; What was that Business that my Lady asked thee, whether the other Man knew; and then you answered her, that he did know nothing of it?

Then he paused a while.

L. C. J. Remember, Friend, thou art upon thy Oath; and remember withal, that it is not thy Life, but thy Soul that is now in danger: Therefore I require from thee a plain Answer to a very plain Question; What was that Business my Lady enquired after, whether the other Fellow knew, and thou toldst her, he did not?

Dunne made no Answer, but stood musing a while.

L. C. J. He is now studying and musing how he shall prevaricate; but thou hadst better tell the Truth, Friend: Remember what thou hast said already; Thou hast said, that thou didst tell that Man, that the Lady asked you, whether he knew any thing of the Business, and thou toldst her, he did not. Now I would know what that Business was?

Still he made no Answer, but seemed to muse.

L. C. J. Look thee, if thou canst not comprehend what I mean, I will repeat it to thee again; for thou shalt see what Countreyman I am, by my telling my Story over twice: Therefore I ask thee once again. Thou saidst thy Lady asked thee, whether he knew of the Business; and thou toldst her, he did not. Now let us know what that Business was?

Dunne. I cannot mind it, my Lord, what it was.

L. C. J. But mind me prithee: Thou didst tell that honest Man there, that my Lady Lisle asked thee, whether he knew any thing of the Business, and thou saidst, no. What was that Business?

Dunne. That Business that Barter did not know of?

L. C. J. Yes, that is the Business; be ingenuous, tell the Truth: Oh! How hard the Truth is to come out of a lying Presbyterian Knave. Prithee, Friend, consider the Oath that thou hast taken; and that thou art in the Presence of a God that cannot endure a Lie, nor whose Holiness will not admit him to dispense with a Lie: Consider that that God is an infinite Being of Purity, Holiness and Truth; and it would be inconsistent with his Being to dispense with the least Untruth; and thou hast called him to witness that thou wouldst testify the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth. I charge thee, therefore, as thou wilt answer it to that God of Truth, and that thou mayst be called to do, for ought I know, the very next Minute, and there thou wilt not be able to palliate the Truth; what was that Business you and my Lady spoke of?

Then he paused for half a quarter of an Hour, and at last said:

Dunne. I cannot give an Account of it, my Lord.

L. C. J. Oh blessed God! Was there ever such a Villain upon the Face of the Earth; to what Times are we reserved? Do'st thou believe that there is a God?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, I do.

L. C. J. Do'st thou believe that that God can endure a Lie?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I know he cannot.

L. C. J. And do'st thou believe then that he is a God of Truth?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, I do.

L. C. J. Do'st thou think that that God of Truth may immediately sink thee into Hell-Fire if thou tellest a Lie?

Dunne. I do, my Lord.

L. C. J. Do'st thou believe that he does observe every thing that thou thinkest, sayest or doest; knows the Secrets of thy Heart, and knows whether thou tellest a Lie or not, tho' perhaps it may be hid from us, and knows whether thou do'st prevaricate or not?

Dunne. I know the Lord does know all things.

L. C. J. Do'st thou believe, that he knows the Business that you and my Lady, the Prisoner, were talking of, as well as you do; that he hath an Almighty Power over all his Creatures, an All-piercing Eye, that looks into the Hearts of every one of them, and from which nothing can be concealed? Do'st thou believe it possible to conceal that very Discourse of yours from the knowledge of that infinite Being?

Dunne. My Lord, I do believe that there is a God above.

L. C. J. I ask thee then again; Do'st thou believe that that God above, who is a God of Truth himself, is Omniscient, Omnipresent, to whom all Truth is naked and open, that he knows every thing that is either thought, said or done by any of his Creatures, sees and knows the Hearts of all Hearts; Do'st thou believe all this?

He stood silent for a good while.

L. C. J. Friend, deceive not thy self; the great God does observe and know the secret workings of thy Thoughts now, and how Truth struggles to get out, but Baseness and Villany keep it in: All the private Imaginations of thy Heart are not only known to him, but registered by him, and thy Conscience will bear witness to thy Accusation when thou art called to answer for them, and answer for them thou must; for the Scripture, that is the Word of God, tells us, That every vain Thought we must account for. Do'st thou then believe, that any Discourse between you, tho' never so private, is private from the Almighty, All-knowing God?

Dunne. My Lord, I know it is not, nor can be.

L. C. J. I therefore once more adjure thee, as thou wilt answer it to that God that is the Searcher of the Hearts and Trier of the Reins, to whom all Hearts are open, and from whom no Secrets are hid, that thou make me a plain Answer to my Question; and as thou hast called God to bear Witness to the Truth of the Evidence thou givest here in this Court; so I charge thee, in his Name, to declare the Truth, and nothing but the Truth. Now tell us what was the Business you spoke of?

But

But he made no Answer.

L. C. Baron. Friend, mind what my Lord says to you, and consider, how easie a thing it is for a Man to speak Truth, and give a plain Answer to a plain Question. You cannot but understand what my Lord asks of you; you said even now, that you did tell the other Witnesses, Barter, that my Lady asked you, whether he knew any thing of the Business, and you told her, he did not. Now my Lord would have you tell us, what that Business was?

He seemed to turn his Head on one side, but returned no Answer.

L. C. J. He is going to ask that Man there, whether he shall tell the Truth.

Dunne. No, my Lord, I ask no Man any such Question.

L. C. J. Prithee tell us the Truth then now: Thou art to know, that thou standest in the Presence of the God of Truth, and hast called him to witness, that thou wouldst tell the Truth.

Dunne. My Lord, I do tell the Truth, as far as I can remember.

L. C. J. Then what was that you told my Lady Lisle, Barter did not know?

Dunne. What Barter did not know, my Lord?

L. C. J. Ay, is not that a plain Question? Of all the Witnesses that ever I met with, I never saw thy Fellow.

He stood a good while, and made no Answer.

L. C. J. I hope, Gentlemen of the Jury, you take notice of the strange and horrible Carriage of this Fellow; and withal, you cannot but observe the Spirit of that sort of People, what a villanous and devilish one it is: Good God! That ever the thing called Religion (a Word that People have so much abused) should ever wind up Persons to such a height of Impiety, that it should make them lose the Belief that there is a God of Truth in Heaven; that sees and knows, observes and registers, and will punish and take vengeance of Falshood and Perjury: It may well make the rest of Mankind, that have any sort of Faith in a Deity and a future Life, to abhor and detest both the Men and their Religion, if such abominable Principles may be called so. A Turk is a Saint to such a Fellow as this, nay a Pagan would be ashamed to be thought to have no more Truth in him. O blessed Jesus! What an Age do we live in, and what a Generation of Vipers do we live among? Sirs, is this that you call the Protestant Religion? Shall so glorious a Name be applied to so much Villany and Hypocrisie? Is this the Persuasion you hope to live, and die, and find Salvation in? Will any of you all, Gentlemen, be contented to die with a Lie in your Mouth? Do not you all expect, according to the Orthodox Doctrine of the true Church of England, that eternal Damnation will be the Portion of Liars? And thou wicked Wretch, how durst thou appear to give Testimony before even an Earthly Tribunal with so much Impudence and Falshood, when every Lye will cost thee so dear, and except a sincere and hearty Repentance, and the infinite Mercy of the great God interpose? I charge you once more, as you will answer it at the Bar of the great Judge of all the World, that you tell me what that Business was, you and the Prisoner talked about; do but consider what a Condition thou bringest thy self into by all this Shuffling and Prevarication, even as to any thing of Mercy in this Life, for indeed it is not fit thou shouldst have the least Hopes of Mercy on this side Eternity, and truly there is no Man can imagine less than infinite Mercy can pardon so flagitious a Sin, one that so impudently tells and stands in a Lye.

Still he would make no Answer.

L. C. J. Jesus God! Was there ever such a Fellow in the World as thou art: Prithee let me ask thee once again, Dost thou believe that there is a God, that this God is Spotless, Truth and Purity it self? Dost thou believe thou hast a precious and immortal Soul, that is to live in everlasting Bliss or eternal Misery after this Life accordingly as thou carriest it here; if thou dost believe it, ought not the Concerns of that precious immortal Soul of thine to be much dearer to thee than Ten thousand Worlds? Does not the blessed Word of Truth tell thee, What will it profit a Man to gain the whole World, and lose his own Soul, or what shall a Man give in exchange for his Soul? Is not this the Voice of Scripture it self? And wilt thou hazard so dear and precious a thing for a Lye, and an unprofitable Lye too? Thou Wretch, all the Mountains and Hills in the World heaped upon one another, will not cover thee from the Vengeance of the great God for this Transgression of false Witness-bearing: What Hopes can there be for so profligate a Villain as thou art, that so impudently stands in open Defiance of the Omnipresence, Omniscience and Justice of God, by persisting in so palpable a Lye, I therefore require it of you, in his Name, to tell me the Truth?

Dunne. I cannot tell what to say, my Lord.

L. C. J. Good God! Was there ever such an impudent Rascal, well, I will try once more, and tell thee what I mean; you said you told that honest Man (for truly he seems so to be) that my Lady asked you whether he knew of the Business, and you told her, he did not, prithee be so free as to tell us what that Business was?

Dunne paused, but would make no Answer.

L. C. J. Prithee what didst thou mean, or thy Lady mean by that Business?

He paused again, but would make no Answer.

L. C. J. Why, prithee dost thou think thou dost her any Kindness by this way of proceeding, sure thou canst not think so, for such a sort of Carriage were enough to convert her, if there were nothing else?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I do not think to do her any Kindness at all.

L. C. J. Then prithee let me persuade thee to have some kindness for thy self, look to thy own Soul that is in great peril of everlasting Ruin and and Destruction by these means ; Dost thou call this Religion ? It is a prodigious piece of Religion ; come, pray tell me what Business it was you talked of ? You should not have asked me a Question so often, but I would have given you a plain Answer, though I were not under the Obligation of an Oath as you are.

Dunne. My Lord, pray ask the Question over again once more, and I will tell you.

L. C. J. I will so, and I will ask it you with all the Calmness, and Seriousness, and Candour that I can, if I know my own Heart, it is not in my Nature to desire the Hurt of any body, much less to delight in their eternal Perdition ; no, it is out of tender Compassion to you that I use all these Words : I would have thee to have some Regard to thy precious and immortal Soul, which is more valuable than the whole World ; reflect upon that Scripture again which I mention'd before, which must be true, because it is the Words of him that is Truth it self : What shall it profit a Man to gain the whole World and lose his own Soul, or what shall a Man give in exchange for his Soul ? If that Soul of thine be taken away, what is the Body fit for, but like a putrid Carcase to be thrust into and covered with the Dust with which it was made ; therefore I ask you, with a great Desire that thou mayst free thy self from so great a Load of Falshood and Perjury, tell me what the Business was you told the Prisoner, the other Man Barker did not know ?

Dunne. My Lord, I told her, he knew nothing of our coming there.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, that can never be it, for he came along with thee.

Dunne. He did not know any thing of my coming there till I met him on the way.

L. C. J. Prithee mind my Question, Sure enough thou hadst told him whither thou wert going, or else he could not have been thy Guide, so that he must needs know of thy coming there, but what was the Business that thou toldst her, he did not know ?

Dunne. She asked me whether I did not know that Hicks was a Nonconformist.

L. C. J. Did my Lady Lisle ask you that Question ?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, and I told her I did not.

L. C. J. But that is not my Question ; What was that Business that he did not know ?

Dunne. It was the same thing, whether Mr. Hicks was a Nonconformist.

L. C. J. That cannot be all, there must be something more in it ?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, it is all, I know nothing more.

L. C. J. What did she say to you when you told her, he did not know it ?

Dunne. She did not say any thing, my Lord.

L. C. J. Why dost thou think, that after all this pains that I have been at to get an Answer to my Question, that thou canst banter me with such sham Stuff as this ? Hold the Candle to his Face that we may see his brazen Face.

Dunne. My Lord, I tell you the Truth.

L. C. J. Did she ask thee whether that Man knew any thing of a Question she had asked thee, and that was only of being a Nonconformist ?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, that was all.

L. C. J. That is all Nonsense, Dost thou imagine that any Man hereabouts is so weak as to believe thee ?

Dunne. My Lord, I am so baulked I do not know what I say my self ; tell me what you would have me to say, for I am clutter'd out of my Senses.

L. C. J. Why, prithee Man, there's no body baulks thee but thy own self, thou art asked Questions that are as plain as any thing in the World can be, it is only thy own depraved naughty Heart that baulks both thy Honesty and Understanding, if thou hast any, it is thy studying how to prevaricate that puzzles and confounds thy Intellect ; but I see all the Pains in the World, and all Compassion and Charity is lost upon thee, and therefore I will say no more to thee.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, because he pretends to Ignorance what Hicks was, I desire to ask Barter one Question ; Pray, what did he tell you concerning his Carriage towards these People ?

Barter. My Lord, he told me, that he had concealed them in his House Ten Days before.

Dunne. That I never did in my Life.

Barter. I know not whether you did or no, but you told me so ; and I made Answer to him again, my Lord, I wonder how he were able to keep them without being discovered, there being such Search, and he answered, He did keep them in a Chamber all Day, and then they walked out at Night, for the Searches of the Houses were usually at Night.

Dunne. My Lord, I can bring Testimony to the contrary.

L. C. J. But really I believe it will be no strange thing for me to say, I do believe him rather than thee ; I would I had half as much reason to believe thee, as I have to believe him ; I would fain have thee speak Truth if I could. What say you to the Question I asked you ?

Dunne. I cannot tell what to say, my Lord.

L. C. J. Say the Truth, Man.

Dunne. I do, as I hope for Mercy, my Lord.

L. C. J. Dost thou hope for Mercy ? Thou hast very little reason for it I assure thee. Well, I will try thee with another Question : Didst thou tell that Man, that it was the best Job thou ever hadst in thy life ?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Nor nothing to that purpose ?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. What say you, Barter, did not he tell you so ?

Barter. Yes, my Lord, he did ; and that he should never lack Money again as long as he lived.

L. C. J. Then I ask you one Question more, Barter ; Did you tell this to Col. Penruddock ?

Barter. Yes, I did, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then that will fortifie his Testimony ; therefore Swear him, because I would make these concealed Wretches (for in my Conscience I know there are some such in the bottom of this Business) know, that the Truth will out one way or other. And as for this Fellow ; I expect it from all you Gentlemen of the King's Counsel, and others that are concerned, that you take notice and remember what what has passed here, and that an Information of Perjury be preferred against this Fellow.

Then Col. Penruddock was Sworn.

L. C. J. Col. Penruddock, upon the Oath you have taken; Did that Man Barter come to you, and what did he say to you?

Col. Penruddock. My Lord, That Man Barter came to my House in the Morning, upon Monday, and told me, he had been with one Dunne, upon a Journey to Mrs. Lisle's House, to get Entertainment for some People; and that they had appointed to meet him the Tuesday following, between 9 and 11, upon Salisbury Plain, and there, if I pleased, I might take them. I ordered him to go according to the Appointment, and withal, I sent a Servant of my own to watch when they came by; but it happen'd, I suppose, by their taking another way, that he missed of them; but Barter left word, that in case he did not find them there, we must conclude, that he was gone with them to my Lady Lisle's House; and he told me withal, says he, I believe they are Rebels, because he that desired me to be their Guide, said the same to me. So early the next Morning I took some Soldiers with me, and beset my Lady Lisle's House; it was a pretty while before I could get any body in the House to hear; at length that Man that they say was the Bailiff, Carpenter, came out, and I said to him, Friend, you had best be free and ingenuous, and discover who are in your Lady's House, for I am sure there were some Strangers came thither last Night; let me know who they are, and shew me what part of the House they are in? He did confess to me there were Strangers in the House, and pointed to such a part of the House; but pray, says he, do not tell my Mistress of it. Accordingly we went in, and immediately we took Mr. Hicks and this same Dunne in the Malthouse.

L. C. J. Was Dunne taken in the Malthouse?

Col. Penruddock. Yes, he had covered himself with some sort of Stuff there.

L. C. J. Well, what did you do then?

Col. Penruddock. My Lady afterwards coming to us, I told her, Madam, you have done very ill in harbouring Rebels, and giving Entertainment to the King's Enemies: Saith she, I know nothing of them, I am a Stranger to it. Pray, said I, Madam, be so free and ingenuous with me, and so kind to your self, as if there be any other Person that is concealed in any part of your House (for I am sure there is some body else) as to deliver him up, and you shall come to no further trouble. She denied it, and said, I know nothing of them: But we went on, and searched, and at last discovered the other Man Nelthorpe, hid in a Hole by the Chimney.

L. C. J. Dunne, How came you to hide your self in the Malthouse?

Dunne. When I heard the stir and bustle, I went thro' the Chamber where I lay, and came into that Room where I was taken.

L. C. J. When thou heardest a stir and a bustle: Why, wert thou afraid of any thing?

Dunne. My Lord, I was frighted at the noise.

L. C. J. Prithee, what needest thou be afraid, for thou didst not know Hicks, nor Nelthorpe; and my Lady only asked thee whether Hicks were a Nonconformist Parson: Thou art a very innocent Soul, and surely needest no occasion to be afraid: I doubt there was something of that Business in the case that we were talking of before, if we could but get out of thee what it was.

Dunne. My Lord, I heard a great noise in the House, and I did not know what it meant, and so I went and hid my self.

L. C. J. Alack-a-day! That is very strange, that thou shouldst hide thy self for a little noise, when thou knewest nothing of the Business, nor wert acquainted with any thing of the matter at all. But Col. Penruddock, I would ask you one Question more: Did that honest Man tell you, that Dunne had told him, it was the best Job that ever he had in his Life; and that he should want no Money?

Penruddock. I cannot tell that truly, my Lord, I do not remember that, but he said, he apprehended them to be Rebels, and that Dunne had told him as much.

L. C. J. What do you say to that, Dunne? It seems you told Barter that you apprehended them to be Rebels?

Dunne. I apprehend them for Rebels, my Lord!

L. C. J. No, no, you did not apprehend them for Rebels, but you hid them for Rebels. But did you say to Barter that you took them to be Rebels?

Dunne. I take them to be Rebels!

L. C. J. You Blockhead, I ask you, did you tell him so?

Dunne. I tell Barter so!

L. C. J. Ay, is not that a plain Question?

Dunne. I am quite cluttered out of my Senses, I do not know what I say.

[A Candle being still held nearer his Nose.]

L. C. J. But to tell the Truth would rob thee of none of thy Senses, if ever thou hadst any, but it should seem that neither thou, nor thy Mistress the Prisoner had any, for she knew nothing of it neither, though she had sent for them thither.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray Colonel Penruddock, did you tell her you came to search for Rebels?

Col. Penruddock. Yes, Sir, I told her as soon as I saw her, but we had a good while beset the House before any body answered us; at length, there were some Ladies, or Gentlewomen, I imagined them to be her Daughters, that upon our noise looked out at the Window; and I told them there were Rebels in the House, and I required them in the King's Name to be deliver'd to me; but I saw not my Lady till after I had brought out Hicks and Dunne.

L. C. J. What said she to you?

Col. Penruddock. She said, she knew nothing of their being in the House; but I told her there was some body else besides, and she would do well to deliver him without trouble; but she denying of it, we searched further, and found Nelthorpe, as I told you.

L. C. J. But she denied it at first, it seems?

Lisle. My Lord, I hope I shall not be condemned without being heard.

L. C. J. No, God forbid; Mrs. Lisle; that was a sort of Practice in your Husband's time; you know very well what I mean: But God be thanked, it is not so now, the King's Courts of Law never condemn without hearing. Col. Penruddock, have you any more to say?

Col.

Col. Penruddock. No, my Lord, but here is one Mr. Dowding, that was with me when I searched the House.

L. C. J. Swear him. [Which was done.]

Mr. Pollexfen. Mr. Dowding, Pray did you go with Col. Penruddock to Mrs. Lisle's House?

Mr. Dowding. Yes, my Lord: We came to the House and beset the House round, some to the back Gate and some to the fore-Gate; we called almost half an hour before we got in; and had found two, and we came to my Lady, she said, she knew nothing of any body being in the House——

Lisle. My Lord, This Fellow that now speaks against me broke open my Trunk, and stole away a great part of my best Linnen; and sure, my Lord, those Persons that rob me, are not fit to be Evidences against me, because it behoves them that I be convicted, to prevent their being indicted for Felony.

L. C. J. Look you, Friend, you say you went with Col. Penruddock to search the House, did you find any body there?

Dowding. Yes, my Lord, I found this same Dunne in a little Hole in the Malthouse.

L. C. J. Was he covered, or not?

Dowding. He had taken some stuff or other to cover him.

L. C. J. Did you find Hicks there?

Dowding. Yes, my Lord, we did find one that said his Name was Hicks.

L. C. J. Is that the same Hicks that is in Salisbury Gaol?

Dowding. Yes, my Lord, it is, I saw him yesterday at the George in Salisbury, when he had that Discourse with those other Gentlemen.

Mr. Pollexfen. Swear Carpenter and his Wife.

[Which was done.]

Dowding. My Lord, Hicks acknowledged before me, that he was at Keinsham, in the Duke of Monmouth's Army.

Mr. Pollexfen. Come, Mrs. Carpenter, tell my Lord and the Jury; Did you know the time when these Men came to your Lady's House?

L. C. J. Is this the Bailiff's Wife?

Mr. Pollexfen. Yes, my Lord, it is.

L. C. J. Well then, what say you to the Question: Do you know the time when they came?

Mrs. Carpenter. Yes, my Lord, they came at night.

L. C. J. Did you see them there?

Mrs. Carpenter. Yes.

L. C. J. Were they lodged there?

Mrs. Carpenter. Yes but I never made the Bed.

L. C. J. Who did?

Mrs. Carpenter. My Lord, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Had they any Supper, or Victuals there?

Mrs. Carpenter. Yes, they had.

L. C. J. Who dress'd it?

Mrs. Carpenter. I did.

L. C. J. By whose Order did you dress it?

Mrs. Carpenter. By my Lady's Order.

L. C. J. Prithee where did they eat their Meat?

Mrs. Carpenter. In the Chamber, my Lord, where they lay.

L. C. J. Who was with them?

Mrs. Carpenter. My Lord, I cannot tell, for I did not stay in the Room.

L. C. J. Didst thou see them when they came into the Room?

Vol. III.

Mrs. Carpenter. My Lord, I dress'd the Meat, and carried it within the Door, and my Husband set it upon the Table.

L. C. J. Prithee tell me who was with them? Was thy Lady there?

Mrs. Carpenter. My Lady was in Presence there then.

L. C. J. How long did they stay below stairs before they went up?

Mrs. Carpenter. Truly, my Lord, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Did your Lady use to sup below stairs or above?

Mrs. Carpenter. She used to sup below, my Lord.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, if your Lordship please, this Woman and her Husband are both unwilling Witnesses; but we will examine the Husband, and see what we can get out of him: Hark you, Carpenter, did you meet with this Fellow Dunne, at his first coming to your Lady's House?

Mr. Carpenter. Yes, my Lord, I did see him there on the Saturday.

L. C. J. Well then, let me ask you a Question; and be sure you tell me Truth, for it may be I know it already: Did he offer you a Letter to be delivered to your Lady?

Mr. Carpenter. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. What do you say Barter?

Barter. I saw him produce it to Mr. Carpenter, but he refused to meddle with it.

Mr. Carpenter. My Lord, he asked me, if my Lady would give Entertainment to one Hicks, and another Person, but he did not know who that Person was.

L. C. J. Did he speak of another Person?

Mr. Carpenter. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. Who was that other Person?

Mr. Carpenter. I did ask his Name, but he said, he did not know him.

L. C. J. Well then, when they came there on the Tuesday night, how did you receive them?

Mr. Carpenter. I did not receive them.

L. C. J. Did not you light the Candle, and bring it in a Lanthorn, to light him into the Stable?

Mr. Carpenter. My Lord, that was afterwards.

L. C. J. Did not you bring the Men into the House?

Mr. Carpenter. No, my Lord, indeed I did not.

L. C. J. Did not you see them all night?

Mr. Carpenter. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then where did you see them first?

Mr. Carpenter. In the Room where they supp'd and lay.

L. C. J. Did not you meet them in the Courtyard?

Mr. Carpenter. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Who gave you Directions to light Dunne into the Stable?

Mr. Carpenter. They told me his Horse was out in the yard.

L. C. J. Who told you so?

Mr. Carpenter. The Men did.

L. C. J. Where did they sup?

Mr. Carpenter. In the Room above stairs.

L. C. J. Who supp'd along with them?

Mr. Carpenter. I cannot say any body supp'd with them.

L. C. J. Was not my Lady there?

[G g g g]

Mr.

Mr. Carpenter. She was in the Room, but I did not see her eat any thing.

L. C. J. What time of the night did they come?

Mr. Carpenter. About Ten of the Clock.

L. C. J. And where did they lie?

Mr. Carpenter. In the Room where they supped.

L. C. J. Who lay there?

Mr. Carpenter. Hicks and Nelthorpe lay there.

L. C. J. Was Nelthorpe named there?

Mr. Carpenter. No, I never heard of his Name till after he was taken.

L. C. J. What a kind of Man was he?

Mr. Carpenter. A tall, thin, black Man.

L. C. J. Well, what can you say more?

Mr. Carpenter. My Lord, this Person has sworn, that a Letter was offered me, but I refused it; but I assure your Lordship I never saw any Letter.

Barter. I am sure he met you, and, as I remember, there was a Letter produced.

L. C. J. Thou shouldst not be angry with him for he spoke very kindly of thee, that thou refusedst to meddle in it, and thereupon Dunne went in to thy Lady, and delivered his Message to her.

Mr. Carpenter. That, my Lord, I acknowledge.

L. C. J. Then, prithee let me ask thee another Question: Did you carry any Beer up into the Room?

Mr. Carpenter. My Lady gave order for the Provision.

L. C. J. Did you make Dunne drink?

Mr. Carpenter. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Did you offer him any Drink?

Mr. Carpenter. My Lord, I did not see him drink at all.

L. C. J. What say you, good Woman; Did not your Lady sup there?

Mr. Carpenter. My Lord, my Wife was little there at all.

Mr. Rumsfey. Now, my Lord, Dunne says he will tell all, whether it make for him or against him.

L. C. J. Let him but tell the Truth, and I am satisfied.

Dunne. Sure, my Lord, I never entertained these Men a Night in my House in my life; but this Hicks sent that Man to me, to go to my Lady Lisle's, to know, whether she would please to entertain him: And when I came, my Lady asked me, whether he had been in the Army or no? I told her, I could not tell, I did not know that he was. She then asked me, if he had no body else with him? I told her, I believed there was; this is the very Truth of it, my Lord: I asked her, Might the Men be entertained? She said they might. So when we came to my Lady Lisle's, on the Tuesday night, some body took the two Horses, I cannot tell who if I were to die; the two went in, and after I had set up my Horse, I went in along with Carpenter up into the Chamber to my Lady, and to this Hicks and Nelthorpe; and when I came there, I heard my Lady bid them welcome to her House; and Mr. Carpenter, or the Maid, I cannot tell which, brought in the Supper and set it on the Table.

L. C. J. And didst thou eat or drink with 'em in the Room, or not?

Dunne. My Lord, I will tell every thing that I know; I confess I did both eat and drink there in the Room.

L. C. J. I pity thee with all my Soul, and pray to God Almighty for thee to forgive thee, and to the blessed Jesus to mediate for thee; and I pray for thee with as much earnestness, as I would for my own Soul; and I beg of thee once more, as thou regardest thy own eternal Welfare, to tell all the Truth.

Dunne. My Lord, I did never know these Men were in the Army when I carried the Message to my Lady Lisle's, nor never did entertain them in my House in my lifetime, so much as one Night.

L. C. J. Prithee, I do not ask thee what thou didst not, but what thou didst?

Dunne. My Lord, I will tell all I know.

L. C. J. What Discourse had you that Night at the Table in the Room?

Dunne. I cannot tell what Discourse truly, my Lord, there was.

L. C. J. Was there nothing of coming from beyond Seas, who came from thence, and how they came? Come, I would have it rather the Effect of thy own Ingenuity, than lead thee by any Questions that I can propound, come, tell us what was the Discourse?

Dunne. I do not remember all the Discourse.

L. C. J. Prithee let me ask thee one Question, and answer me it fairly, Didst not thou hear Nelthorpe's Name named in the Room?

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot tell whether he were called Nelthorpe, but it was either Crofts or Nelthorpe, I am sure one of them.

L. C. J. Prithee be ingenuous and let's have the Truth on't?

Dunne. My Lord, I am ingenuous, and will be so.

L. C. J. I will assure you Nelthorpe told me all the Story before I came out of Town?

Dunne. I think, my Lord, he was called Nelthorpe in the Room, and there was some Discourse about him.

L. C. J. Ay, there was unquestionably, and I know thou wert by, and that made me the more concern'd to press upon thee the Danger of Forswearing thy self.

Dunne. My Lady asked Hicks who that Gentleman was, and he said it was Nelthorpe, as I remember.

L. C. J. Very well, and upon that Discourse with Nelthorpe, which I had in Town, did I give particular Direction that the Outlawry of Nelthorpe should be brought down hither, for he told me particularly of all the Passages and Discourses, of his being beyond Sea, and coming from beyond Sea? I would not mention any such thing as any piece of Evidence to influence this Case, but I could not but tremble to think, after what I knew, that any one should dare so much to prevaricate with God and Man, as to tell such horrid Lyes in the Face of a Court.

Dunne. What does your Lordship ask me?

L. C. J. Come, I will ask thee a plain Question; Was there no Discourse there about the Battle, and of their being in the Army?

Dunne. There was some such Discourse, my Lord.

L. C. J. Ay, prithee now tell us what that Discourse was?

Dunne,

Dunne. My Lord, I will tell you when I have recollected it, if you will give me time till to morrow Morning.

L. C. J. Nay, but we cannot stay so long, our Business must be dispatched now, but I would have all People consider what a Reason there is, that they should be pressed to join with me in hearty Prayers to Almighty God that this Sin of Lying and Perjury may never be laid at thy Door: What sayst thou? Prithee tell us what the Discourse was?

Dunne. My Lord, they did talk of Fighting, but I cannot exactly tell what the Discourse was.

L. C. J. And thou saidst thou didst eat and drink with them in the same Room?

Dunne. I did so, my Lord, I confess it.

L. C. J. And it was not a little Girl that lighted thee to Bed, or conducted thee in?

Dunne. It was not a little Girl.

L. C. J. Who was it then?

Dunne. It was Mr. Carpenter, my Lord.

L. C. J. And why didst thou tell so many Lyes then? Jesu God! that we should live to see any such Creatures among Mankind, nay, and among us too, to the Shame and Reproach be it spoken of our Nation and Religion: Is this that that is called the Protestant Religion, a thing so much boasted of and pretended to? We have heard a great deal of Clamour against Popery and Dispensations, what Dispensations pray does the Protestant Religion give for such Practices as these? I pity thee with all my Soul, and pray for thee, but it cannot but make all Mankind to tremble and be filled with Horror that such a wretched Creature should live upon the Earth: Prithee be free and tell us what the Discourse was?

Dunne. My Lord, they did talk of Fighting, but I cannot remember what it was.

L. C. J. Did you lie with them?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Well, I see thou wilt answer nothing ingenuously, therefore I will trouble my self no more with thee: Go on with your Evidence, Gentlemen.

Mr. Jennings. My Lord, we have done, we have no more Witnesses.

L. C. J. Then you that are for the Prisoner at the Bar, now is your time to make your Defence; you hear what is charged upon you, and you see what a kind of Shuffling here has been to fiddle the Truth, and I am sorry to find the Occasion to speak it, that under the Figure and Form of Religion such Practices should be carried on. What have you to say for your self?

Lisle. My Lord, that which I have to say to it, is this, I knew of no Body's coming to my House but Mr. Hicks, and for him, I was inform'd that he did abscond, by Reason of Warrants that were out against him for preaching in private Meetings, but I never heard that he was in the Army, nor that Nelthorp was to come with him; and for that Reason it was that I sent to him to come by Night, but for the other Man Nelthorp, I never knew he was Nelthorp, I could die upon it, nor did not know what Name he had till after he came into my House, but as to Mr. Hicks, I did not in the least suspect him to have been in the Army, being a Presbyterian Minister that used to preach and not to fight.

Vol. III.

L. C. J. But I will tell you, there is not one of those lying, snivelling, canting Presbyterian Rascals but one way or other had a Hand in the late horrid Conspiracy and Rebellion, upon my Conscience I believe it, and would have been as deep in the actual Rebellion, had it had any little Success, as that other Fellow Hicks, their Principles carry them to it; Presbytery has all manner of Villany in it, nothing but Presbytery could lead that Fellow Dunne to tell so many Lies as he has here told, for shew me a Presbyterian, and I will engage to shew a lying Knave.

Lisle. My Lord, I abhorred both the Principles and Practices of the late Rebellion.

L. C. J. I am sure you had great Reason for it.

Lisle. Besides, my Lord, I should have been the most ungrateful Person living, should I have been disloyal, or acted any thing against the present King, considering how much I was obliged to him for my Estate.

L. C. J. Oh then! Ungrateful, ungrateful adds to the Load which is between Man and Man, and is the basest Crime that any one can be guilty of.

Lisle. My Lord, had I been try'd in London, I could have had my Lady Abergavenny, and several other Persons of Quality, that could have testified how much I was against this Rebellion, and with what Detestation I spoke against it during the time of it, for I was all that time at London, and stay'd there till after the Duke of Monmouth was beheaded; and if I had certainly known the time of my Tryal in the Country, I could have had the Testimony of those Persons of Honour for me: But, My Lord, I am told, and so I thought it would have been, that I should not have been try'd as a Traytor for harbouring him, till he was Convict for a Traytor; My Lord, I would take my Death of it, that I never knew of Nelthorp's coming, nor any thing of his being Nelthorp, I never asked his Name, and if he had told it me, I had then remembred the Proclamation. I do assure you, my Lord, for my own part I did abhor those that were in that horrid Plot and Conspiracy against the King's Life, I know my Duty to my King better, and have always exercised it, I desire any body in the World that ever knew the contrary to come and give Testimony.

L. C. J. Have you any more to say?

Lisle. As to what they say of my denying Nelthorp to be in my House, I was in great Consernation and Fear of the Souldiers, who were very rude and violent, and could not be restrained by their Officers from Robbery and plundering my House: And I beseech your Lordship to make that Construction of it; and I humbly beg of your Lordship not to harbour an ill Opinion of me, because of those false Reports that go about of me, relating to my Carriage towards the old King, that I was any ways consenting to the Death of King Charles I. for, my Lord, that is as false as God is true; my Lord, I was not out of my Chamber all the day in which that King was beheaded, and I believe I shed more Tears for him than any Woman then living did; and this the late Countess of Monmouth, and my Lady Marlbrough, and my Lord Chancellor Hyde, if they were alive, and 20 Persons of the most eminent Quality, could bear Witness for me. And I do repeat it, my Lord, as I hope to attain Salvation, vation; I never did know Nelthorp, nor never did see him before in my Life, nor did I know of any body's coming but Mr. Hicks, and him I did know to be a Nonconformist Minister; and there being, as is well known, Warrants out to apprehend all Nonconformist Ministers, I was willing to give him shelter from these Warrants. I was come down but that Week into the Countrey, when this Man came to me from Mr. Hicks, to know if he might be received at my House; and I told him, if Mr. Hicks pleased, he might come upon Tuesday in the Evening, and should be welcome; but withal I told him, I must go away the Monday following from that place, but while I staid I would entertain him. And I beseech your Lordship to believe, I had no intention to harbour him but as a Nonconformist, and that I knew was no Treason: It cannot be imagined, that I would venture the hazard of my own Life, and the ruin both of my self and Children, to conceal one that I never knew in my Life, as I did not know Mr. Nelthorp, but had heard of him in the Proclamation. And for that white-headed Man that speaks of my denying them, as I said before, he was one of them that rifled and plundered my House, and tore open my Trunk; and if I should not be Convicted, he and the rest of them may be called to account for what they did, for they ought not to have meddled with my Goods: Besides, my Lord, I have a Witness that can testify what Mr. Nelthorp said, when he was examined before——

[G g g g 2]

L. C. J. Look you, Mrs. Lisle, that will signify little; but if you have any Witnesses, call them, we will hear what they say: Who is that Man you speak of?

Lisle. George Creed his Name is; there he is.

L. C. J. Well, what do you know?

Creed. I heard Nelthorp say, That my Lady Lisle did not know of his coming, nor did not know his Name; nor had he ever told his Name, till he named himself to Col. Penruddock when he was taken.

L. C. J. Well, this is nothing; she is not indicted for harbouring Nelthorp, but Hicks: Have you any more Witnesses?

Lisle. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you any more to say for your self?

Lisle. My Lord, I came but five days before this into the Countrey——

L. C. J. Nay, I cannot tell when you came into the Countrey, nor I do not care; it seems you came time enough to harbour Rebels.

Lisle. I staid in London till all the Rebellion was past and over; and I never uttered a good Word for the Rebels, nor ever harboured so much as a good Wish for them in my Mind: I know the King is my Sovereign, and I know my Duty to him, and if I would have ventured my Life for any thing, it should have been to serve him, I know it is his due, and I owed all I had in the World to him: But tho' I could not fight for him my self, my Son did; he was actually in Arms on the King's side in this Business; I instructed him always in Loyalty, and sent him thither; it was I that bred him up to fight for the King.

L. C. J. Well, have you done?

Lisle. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you a mind to say any thing more?

Lisle. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then command Silence.

[Which was done by Proclamation.]

Lisle. My Lord, may I speak one word more. My Lord, I beseech you afford me your Patience and your Advice; Keinsham, where Mr. Hicks is said to be in Arms, does not lie in this County.

L. C. J. That is nothing: But the Treason you committed was in this County.

Lisle. But I assure your Lordship I never knew he was in the Army; and for any Talk or Discourse in private about his or Nelthorp's being there, I never heard any; indeed one of them asked me, whether the Duke of Monmouth was beheaded, and I told them, yes, for so he was before I came out of Town: And that is all the Discourse that I can remember, wherein he is concerned.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more to say now?

Lisle. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then Gentlemen of the Jury: This is a Case of very great Example, and withal, of very great Weight and Moment; wherein the Interest of the Publick, and the Life of a Person of Quality and Fortune are put into your Hands: And the great Business which has detained both us and you so long, has been an endeavour (if it were possible) to find out the Truth; which indeed is the business of all Enquiries of this nature: We sit not here, nor are you there upon any other Errand; nor is any thing desired by the Court, or required of you, but that the Truth may be made manifest: 'Tis that you are bound to by the Oaths you have taken in this Service; and in that Inquiry you are to be guided by the Evidence that has here been given forth unto you; for your Oath is, That you shall well and truly try, and true deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Prisoner at the Bar, according to your Evidence, as you shall answer it to God. So that, Gentlemen, this Oath of yours being your Direction what is your Duty, and you being all Persons of Quality and Reputation in your Countrey, Men of great Understanding and known Integrity, it is to be hoped, that not any thing can move you, either to Compassion of the Prisoner on the one hand, or her Allegations and Protestations of Innocence; nor on the other hand, to be influenced by any thing that comes from the Court, or is insinuated by the learned Counsel at the Bar; but that you will entirely consider what Evidence has been given to you, and being guided by that Evidence alone, you that are Judges of the Fact, will let us know the Truth of that Fact by a sincere and upright Verdict.

And inasmuch, Gentlemen, as the Evidence has been long in giving (tho' the Substantial part of it, perhaps, be in a narrow compass) I will repeat it to you, as near as I can, with all Faithfulness and Integrity, as I shall answer it to the great Judge of Heaven and Earth, before whom you, and we, and all must stand to be judged; without any Aggravation or Alteration on the one side, and without any Omision on the other: And I shall do it, purely to help your Memories who are to determine the Fact; and I do pray and adjure, that you would do equally, according to the Trust reposed in you, and according to the Oath that you have taken: And I would repeat it once more, more, that you are not to be led by any Insinuations of the Prisoner, nor by any Allegations from the Learned Counsel, whose Business it is to open the Fact; but that Fact so opened is no further to guide you in your Enquiry than as it is proved.

Gentlemen, Before I come to the particular Evidence of this Fact, I must crave leave to say something of a Matter in general that is very well known: It was very well observed by that Learned Gentleman that opened the Cause at the beginning, that we are all of us here unspeakably oblig'd to bless the great God of Heaven, the Father of Mercies, and praised for ever be his Holy Name, for his infinite Goodness in preserving and protecting us from the imminent Ruin which the late horrid and detestable Rebellion would (had it succeeded) have inevitably brought upon us, had not he of his own infinite Mercy and gracious Goodness protected and delivered us from our Enemies, they had undoubtedly swallowed us up quick: But as the Attempts of our Enemies were very malicious, so the Preservation and Deliverance of our good God was very great and signal.

And we have Reason to bless that great God for many Deliverances he has been pleased to give us; We are by no Means to forget his Mercy towards our late Sovereign of blessed Memory, and with him towards us, when he brought him out of Exile and Bondage, and us out of that State of Confusion and Misery, which our Country had for many Years groan'd under: When all Religion as well as Sovereignty, and all Obedience, Duty and Deference to Superiors were quite lost, God of his infinite Mercy, and of his own most gracious bountiful Disposition brought our blessed Sovereign (now in Heaven) and his gracious Majesty that now reigns, and all the Royal Family after a long and tedious Rebellion, into a quiet and peaceable Possession of their undoubted Rights and Inheritances, and with him restored to us our Religion, the best of Religions, the true Protestant reformed Religion, the Religion established by Law, which now is, and I hope will ever remain established among us, as now professed and practised in the Church of England; and when we reflect on that Deliverance, we are to this Circumstance to heighten both our Admiration and our Gratitude, that it was brought about without the least drop of Blood shed, by a miraculous Providence, and by the Strength of an Almighty Arm.

Besides, Gentlemen, we cannot be sufficiently thankful to our God, for the Mercies we enjoy'd under that blessed King, for we are to consider we liv'd in all the Affluence of Peace and Plenty, we safely and uninterruptedly enjoyed our Religion, the greatest Blessing on this side Immortality, our Lives, Liberties and Properties inviolably were secured; every Man safe under the Shadow of his own Vine, and eat the Fruit of his own Labour; and while our Neighbours suffered the Calamities of War, we were surrounded with all the Blessings of Peace, and slept securely under the Government of a gracious and merciful King: Every one of us had even what our own Hearts could desire, and if we wanted any thing, it could be only thankful and dutiful Hearts to our God and our Prince, during whose Life we continued in a happy State and Condition.

But, it having pleased God, the King of Kings, the great Ruler both of Heaven and Earth, to take that blessed Prince to himself, What Thanks ought we to pay him for his gracious Goodness, in leaving so great and so glorious a Successor as his Royal Brother, our present Sovereign, whom I pray Almighty God may long live and happily reign among us: This gracious Prince, as soon as ever he came to the Possession of his undoubted Right and Inheritance, upon his Brother's Death, in the Imperial Crown of this Realm, to Entitle himself to the good Opinion of his People, and to engage them to the Expression of that Duty which the Christian Religion, and I am sure particularly the Religion of the true Church of England does oblige all it's Followers to: What does he? Even before he was ask'd, in the very first Minutes of his Reign, he begins with Bounty to his Subjects and declares his Resolution to preserve them safe in their dearest and most precious Enjoyments, in their Religion, and not only in that, but in the Laws, Liberties, Rights and Properties, with the most inviolable Security to their Lives and all that is dear unto them: And this gracious Declaration came from his Royal Mouth without any Solicitation or any Inducement, save only the generous and gracious Inclination of his own Royal Heart, and to give it the greater Edge, to the Honour of the Church of England's Religion be it spoken, he was pleas'd to tell what Opinion he had of our Religion and its true Professors, that they were the true Friends and faithful Supporters of the Government, an Opinion which I hope every honest Church of England-man will endeavour to cherish by a suitable Practice of what is certainly the Doctrine of that Religion, Loyalty and Obedience.

But alas! without Horror and Confusion, we cannot but remember that instead of making good Returns of Respect and Duty to so gracious a Sovereign for his great Bounty, Faction and Sedition, Hypocrisy and Malice had besotted and bewitched a great Part of his Subjects, and corrupted, blinded, and bigotted them to such an Height of Impiety, that a Rebellion must begin his Reign, and all the poisonous Arts of Disobedience are made use of to instigate the King's Subjects, with all the Rancour and Vengeance in the World to rise against him.

Blessed God! What is the way that this Devil of Sedition comes to bewitch People to such a height, when Almighty God had so lately delivered us from the Misery and Confusion of a Civil War? It is that way surely, we find it but too plain, which he had always found very successful, the Pretence of Saintship, Conscience, and that glorious Name, Religion; What Religion can it be? The Christian Religion had this Form of it's great Rule; Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's. But these Men act as though that were not Scripture, when yet pronounced by our blessed Lord himself, and both joined in one Sentence as indispensable Duties; and they will hardly be brought to believe that Rebellion is the Sum of Witchcraft, though the Scriptures have directly given it that Character. Good God!

God! that we should live to such an Age; when Men can call God to assist and protect them in a Rebellion, for not to reflect upon what was done in former times, it is late enough for us to remember, but not without Horror, that Men have been ty'd by all the Bonds and Contracts Hell could invent in a Combination and Confederacy to murder both the late King and his present Majesty, and all this while this must be sanctified with the Name of Religion: So that a Man that is a Murderer by the Law of God, and an Offender against the first Precept that God Almighty enjoined, Not to shed Innocent Blood, shall yet be a Saint for an Assassination upon the Account of Religion, and this shall be accounted a pious Cause to obtain Heaven.

Who did these Miscreants, that were justly by Law condemned for that barbarous Conspiracy, when they came to die, invoke? The great God to testify for them, that they died for the sake of Religion, when they come to suffer for Treason: They can bless God Almighty for the Honour he does them in dying in his Cause, and call themselves Martyrs for it.

Nay, is it not yet more strange and horrid, that some Men who call themselves Ministers of the Gospel shall come to be Belwethers of Rebellion, and cry out, they are fighting the Lord's Battle, when they are attempting to kill the Lord's Anointed?

Jesus God! that ever we should have such a Generation of Vipers among us, that can plunge themselves into the most horrid Impieties, and yet think to escape Confusion here, and purchase a Crown of Glory hereafter.

When we consider, Gentlemen, the Ring-leader of this late Rebellion, the Center of all our Trouble, the Arch-Rebel and Traitor, Monmouth I mean, should arrive to such a Height of Impudence and Villany as to bless God that he could with Satisfaction reflect upon a two Year's Life very regularly spent; But how? In manifest Adultery and Uncleaness, nor can it be spoke or thought of without inexpressible Horror.

Alack! Gentlemen, when we find Religion made use of as a Subterfuge and Cloak for such impious Practices, it gives too much Occasion for our Enemies to think us Atheists; the very Turks will hate us, and Pagans detest us, as the most irreligious prophane People in the World. When we who profess Love and Duty to Jesus Christ as our Holy and Blessed Redeemer, do these things and even boast of them, whom they that deny him blush at the very thoughts of, and never so much as name, much less act without Horror and Confusion.

Gentlemen, I do not speak this for the sake of speaking, but I should fain deliver my own Soul and yours from having any hand in such horrible Impieties, and that, by testifying our Abhorrence of them, by publicly declaring our selves to be Enemies to those Hypocrites the Nonconformist Parsons; I mean, that pretend indeed pure Religion to be their great Aim and End, and through a Scrupulosity of Conscience, cannot conform to that Decency and Duty which is required of them in the Church; but yet, without remorse, can kill, or be the occasion of the Death of Ten Thousand People, as in the Consequence of this late Rebellion perhaps it may prove. For do but consider how many Families by this means are utterly ruined, how many innocent Babes starved, or exposed to the utmost Penury and Want; how many Widows left in a distressed desolate Condition, destitute of all manner of Provision and Maintenance; and all this by the instigation of these Villains that have preached and pray'd them into it, gilding the Bait that has drawn them into it, by the specious pretence of Religion and Conscience?

Consider, Gentlemen, this is that which has brought this poor unfortunate Gentlewoman, the Prisoner at the Bar, into this deplorable Condition: What could prevail upon her to run such a Hazard as this, but only her Affection and deluded Zeal for that Wretch, that had nothing but the name of Religion, for his Soul is blacker in the Eyes of God, and the Thoughts of all honest Men, than ever his Coat was? You see by the Proofs what an impudent unsanctified Villain he was; for when these Gentlemen that have given Evidence, were in the Custody, and under the Power of the Rebels, he must tempt and provoke them to leave off and forsake their Duty to their natural Lord and lawful Sovereign the King, whom God had set over them, and submit to an Usurper, a King of their own making; and such a King too, that I dare boldly affirm, the meanest Subject within the Kingdom that is legitimate, has a better Title to the Crown than he had; and this all under the pretence of Religion, and the Protestant Religion too, and that same Prince of theirs must have the Title of a Protestant Prince; and an excellent Protestant he lived and died, living in the open Violation of the Law of God, and in manifest Rebellion against his lawful Sovereign; and he died without any Remorse for either, boasting of his own Wickedness beyond the bounds of common Modesty and Humanity.

Gentlemen, Let us all join in hearty Prayers to our God, the God of infinite Mercy; that as he has yet once more delivered our Sovereign, and us with him, out of the Jaws of these Lions and ravenous Wolves; so he would still please to preserve him and us from the hands of all our Enemies; and I pray God it may have that good effect upon all of us, as to make us more careful and conscientious in our Duty to him, and his Vicegerent the King: To him alone must all the Glory be ascribed; it was not our Hand, or Arms of the King that could have saved or protected us, had not the special Interposition of the Divine Power and Goodness wrought this Deliverance for us.

But now, Gentlemen, to come to the particular Case here before you; and the Fact, upon the Evidence, stands thus: It is very notorious this Fellow Hicks was actually in this Rebellion; you have it Sworn by three several Persons that saw him, and they particularized to you such Tokens of their Knowledge and Remembrance, that sure, if any thing can, must make him blush at the repetition of them; for they tell you, when they were in Prison he would have corrupted them from their Duty; and yesterday they saw him in Prison, and upon discourse of some Circumstances, he could not deny but he was there.

This

This Person, Mrs. Lisle, the Prisoner at the Bar, she is accused for receiving and harbouring this Person: And, Gentlemen, I must tell you for Law, of which we are the Judges, and not you; That if any Person be in actual Rebellion against the King, and another Person (who really and actually was not in Rebellion) does receive, harbour, comfort and conceal him that was such, a Receiver is as much a Traitor, as he who indeed bore Arms: We are bound, by our Oaths and Consciences, to deliver and declare to you what is Law; and you are bound, by your Oaths and Consciences, to deliver and declare to us, by your Verdict, the Truth of the Fact.

Gentlemen, That he was there in Rebellion is undeniably and unquestionably proved: That there are sufficient Testimonies to satisfy you, that this Woman did receive and harbour him, is that which is left to your Consideration; and for that, the Proofs lie thus. And truly I am sorry to have occasion for repeating the Circumstances of the Proof; I mean, the great Art that has been used to conceal it; how difficult a thing it was to come at it; what time has been spent in endeavouring to find out Truth in a Fellow, that in defiance of all Admonition, Threats and Persuasion, would prevaricate and shuffle to conceal that Truth; nay lie and forswear himself to contradict it: But out of true Christian Charity, as I told him, so I tell you; I do heartily pray (and all good Christians I hope will join with me in it) to the God of infinite Mercy that he would have mercy upon his Soul, upon which he hath contracted so great a Guilt by the impudence of his Behaviour, and pertinacious Obstinacy in those Falshoods which he hath made use of in this Case.

Gentlemen, I would willingly forget all his Prevarications, but I must take notice of them in short, to come to the Truth. First, he says, He came upon an Errand from a Man he knows not whom, to my Lady Lisle's House; and thither he is brought by one Barter; and when he comes there, he tells her, he comes in the Name of one Hicks, who desired to be entertained there: Then she asks the Question, whether Hicks had been in the Army; and he told her he did not know; and he swears now he did not: But at last it came out, that it was to entertain Hicks and another Person; but it should seem that other Person was not named; and Barter tells you, that Hicks and another Person (who afterwards proved to be Nelthorpe) are promised to be entertained, and ordered to come in the Evening. But not to go backward and forward, as he has done in his Evidence, denying what he afterwards acknowledged, that he saw any Body besides a little Girl; That he pulled down the Hay out of the Rack for his Horse; That he eat any thing but Cake and Cheese that he brought with him from home; That he was ever made to drink, or to eat or drink in the House, or ever meddled or made with any body in the House. At last we are told that Carpenter met with him, and came out with a Lanthorn and Candle, took care of his Horse, carried him into the Room where Hicks and Nelthorpe were, and the Prisoner at the Bar, Mrs. Lisle; there they all supp'd together; there they fell into Discourse; there Nelthorpe's Name was named, and they talked of being in the Army, and of the Fight; and so it is all come out, and makes a full and positive Evidence.

But then, Suppose there was no more than the other Evidence, and that the Fellow remain in an hard-hearted Obstinacy, then you are to consider the Circumstances even from his first Evidence, that this was after the Rebellion was all over; for it seems during the Rebellion she was in London, and it was notoriously known the King's Forces were in pursuit of the Rebels, and this without any positive Proof would be in it self a sufficient Testimony to convince any considerate Person, that she was to Conceal those she ought not to Conceal; because she directed the particular time wherein they should come, and that was at Night; and no Prudent Person would receive Strangers in the Night, and give such directions in such a Season, without some Extraordinary ground for it. When they came there she provided a Supper for them, and you see what Care is taken, that the Woman only is permitted to bring that Supper to the Door, and the Husband must set it on the Table; no body is permitted to attend there but he. Works of Darkeness always desire to be in the Dark: Works of Rebellion and such like are never done in the Light.

But then comes that Honest Fellow Barter (I call him so because he appears so to be, and he ought to be remembred with a great Remark for his Honesty) he tells you, he conducted him to the House, and what Discourse pass'd there in his hearing: The Prisoner asked him, what Countreyman he was, and whether he was a Brick-maker, and promised him so many Acres of Land in Carolina: The Fellow, upon Observation and Consideration, found himself under a great Load, could not sleep nor eat quietly, as Men that have honest Minds are uneasy under such things; Falshood, and Treason, and Hypocrisie are a heavy Load; and, blessed be God, things were by this means discovered; for he goes and tells Col. Penruddock; and withal, Dunne swears to Barter, it was the bravest Job that ever he had in his Life; whereas in the beginning of his Story, he would have told you a strange Story of a black Beard, and I do not know what, and that he got not one Groat by it; that he gave the Man half a Crown out of his own Pocket, and was so industrious, as when he knew the way no further, then he would hire one himself to shew him the way, and all for nothing, but only for the kindness he had for a black Beard.

Besides, Gentlemen, I am sorry to remember something that dropped even from the Gentlewoman her self, she pretends to Religion and Loyalty very much, how greatly she wept at the Death of King Charles the Martyr, and owns her great Obligations to the late King and his Royal Brother; that she had not had a Being, nor any thing to maintain it for twenty Years last past but from their Bounty, and yet no sooner is one in the Grave, but she forgets all Gratitude, and entertains those that were Rebels against his Royal Successor: I will not say what Hand her Husband had in the Death of that that blessed Martyr, she has enough to answer for of her own Guilt; and I must confess it ought not one way or other to make any Ingredient into this Case what she was in former Times: And I told a Relation of hers, Mr. Tipping by Name, that came to me last Night to desire that she might not lie under some Imputations that were gone Abroad of her, that she rejoiced at the Death of King Charles I. nor that any false Report of that Nature might influence the Court or Jury against her, that it should not: Be the thing true or false, it is to be of no Weight one way or other in the Tryal of this Case, nor is she to be accountable for it.

But I must remember you of one Particular, that is plain upon this Evidence, and is of very great Moment in this Case, that after all these private Messages and Directions given to come by Night, and the kind Reception they met with when they came, and after all this Care to lodge them and feed them, when Colonel Penruddock, after the Discovery made by Barter, came to search her House, then she had no body in it truly, which is an Aggravation of the Offence testified by Colonel Penruddock himself, whose Father likewise was a Martyr and died for his Fidelity to the Crown, and who was the Judge of that Father we all very well know. God Almighty is a just God, and it may be worth considering (especially by her) how God has been pleased to make use of him as the Instrument in this Business, and she would likewise do well to consider the Finger of God in working upon the Heart of that Man Barter, who was imploy'd in all this Affair, and that all the Truth has been told by Nelthorp, that blackest of Villains Nelthorp, that would have murdered the late King and his Royal Brother; that he that was one of those barbarous, malicious Assassins in that black Conspiracy, and Outlaw'd, should be harbour'd by one that pretends a Love for the Royal Family, and entertained and discoursed with at Night about being in the Army; yet that he and that other Villain Hicks, who pretends to Religion and be a Preacher of the Gospel, but is found in Rebellion and in the Company of Traytors should be deny'd the next Morning.

I hope they themselves are all by this time satisfied Truth will come out, and I hope you will not be deceived by any Specious Pretences. Our fore-Fathers have been deluded, but the Deception, I hope, is now at an end; and I must needs say, if all these Witnesses that have freely discovered their Knowledge, joined to that Truth which is at length drawn from that Dunne, be worthy of any Credit, it is as plain a Proof as can be given, and as evident as the Sun at Noon-day.

Gentlemen, Upon your Consciences be it: The Preservation of the Government, the Life of the King, the Safety and Honour of our Religion, and the Discharge of our Consciences as Loyal Men, good Christians and faithful Subjects, are at stake, neither her Age nor her Sex are to move you, who have nothing else to consider but the Evidence of the Fact you are to try: I charge you therefore, as you will answer it at the Bar of the last Judgment, when you and we must all appear, deliver your Verdict according to Conscience and Truth: With that great God the Impartial Judge, there is no such thing as respect of Persons, and in our Discharge of our Duty in Courts of Justice, he has enjoined us his Creatures, that we must have no such thing as a Friend in the Administration of Justice, all our Friendship must be to Truth, and our Care to preserve that inviolate.

Lisle. My Lord, if your Lordship please—

L. C. J. Mistress, you have had your Turn, you cannot now be heard any more after the Jury is charged.

Lisle. My Lord, I did not know Nelthorp I declare it before he was taken.

L. C. J. You are not indicted for Nelthorp, but we are not to enter into Dialogues now, the Jury must consider of it.

Jury-man. Pray, my Lord, some of us desire to know of your Lordship, in point of Law, whether it be the same thing, and equally Treason, in receiving him before he was convicted of Treason, as if it had been after?

L. C. J. It is all the same, that certainly can be no Doubt; for, if in case this Hicks had been wounded in the Rebels Army, and had come to her House and there been entertained, but had dy'd there of his Wounds, and so could never have been convicted, she had been nevertheless a Traytor.

Then the Jury withdrew, and staying out a while, the Lord Jefferies expressed a great deal of Impatience, and said, he wonder'd that in so plain a Case they would go from the Bar, and would have sent for them with an Intimation, that if they did not come quickly, he would adjourn and let them lie by it all Night; but after about half an Hour's Stay the Jury returned, and the Foreman addressed himself to the Court thus:

Foreman. My Lord, we have one thing to beg of your Lordship some Directions in, before we can give our Verdict in this Case: We have some Doubt upon us whether there be sufficient Proof that she knew Hicks to have been in the Army.

L. C. J. There is as full Proof as Proof can be, but you are Judges of the Proof, for my part I thought there was no Difficulty in it.

Foreman. My Lord, we are in some Doubt of it.

L. C. J. I cannot help your Doubts: Was there not proved a Discourse of the Battle and of the Army at Supper-time?

Foreman. But, my Lord, we are not satisfied that she had Notice that Hicks was in the Army.

L. C. J. I cannot tell what would satisfy you, Did she not enquire of Dunne whether Hicks had been in the Army? And when he told her he did not know, she did not say she would refuse him if he had been there, but order'd him to come by Night, by which it is evident she suspected it, and when he and Nelthorp came, discoursed with them about the Battle and the Army: Come, come, Gentlemen, it is a plain Proof.

Foreman.

Foreman. My Lord, we do not remember that it was proved that she did ask any such Question when they were there.

L. C. J. Sure you do not remember any thing that has passed? Did not Dunne tell you there was such Discourse, and she was by, and Nelthorp's Name was named? But if there were no such Proof, the Circumstances and Management of the thing is as full a Proof as can be, I wonder what it is you doubt of.

Lisle. My Lord, I hope——

L. C. J. You must not speak now.

Then the Jury laid their Heads together for near a quarter of an Hour, and at length agreed, and being call'd over, deliver'd in this Verdict by the Foreman.

Cl. of Arraignments. Alice Lisle, Hold up thy Hand. Gentlemen of the Jury look upon the Prisoner, How say ye, Is she guilty of the Treason whereof she stands indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods or Chattels, Lands, or Tenements had she?

Foreman. None that we know of.

Cl. of Ar. Look to her Gaoler, she is found guilty of High Treason, and prepare your self to die.

Then the Verdict was Recorded.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, I did not think I should have had any Occasion to speak after your Verdict, but finding some Hesitancy and Doubt among you, I cannot but say, I wonder it should come about, for I think in my Conscience the Evidence was as full and plain as could be, and if I had been among you, and she had been my own Mother, I should have found her Guilty.

Then the Court adjourn'd till the next Morning.

Die Veneris 28 Augusti, 1685.

THIS Day Alice Lisle was brought to the Bar, and being asked what she had to say for her self why Judgment of Death should not pass upon her, being convicted of High Treason, but offering nothing, she was, with the rest of the Prisoners that were to receive the Sentence of Death, Condemn'd by the Lord Jefferies, who passed Sentence thus:

L. C. J. Alice Lisle, and you the several Prisoners now at the Bar, you have been severally Indicted, Arraigned, and now stand severally Convicted of Crimes that by the Laws of the Land are to be punished with Death, you stand Convicted by your Equals, by a Jury of your Country, against whom you might have had, and were allow'd to make (and one of you did make) what Challenges you could, but upon full Evidence, by that Jury of your own Country-men you have been found guilty of those Crimes for which you are to die; and there remains now no more with the Court but to perform their Duty, which is to pronounce that Sentence, that dismal Sentence of Death, which the Law has provided for such Offenders.

Vol. III.

And sure I am it cannot but be thought uneasy, and far from pleasant, not only to me, but to every Body else that sees such a lamentable Object, such a Number of Persons that might have acquired to themselves an honest Livelihood by Diligence in their lawful Callings, being dutiful to God and obedient to their Sovereign and the Laws of the Land, who yet in Desiance of all these have brought themselves to a shameful untimely End by their own wicked Courses.

Particularly, I cannot but lament the deplorable Condition of you, Mrs. Lisle, a Gentlewoman of Quality and of Fortune, so far stricken in Years, therefore ought to have had more Discretion: One, who all your Life-time have been a great Pretender to, and Professor of Religion, and of that Religion which bears a very good Name, the Protestant Religion, but that Name has been perverted to very ill Purposes by some People who have had nothing but the Name to protect themselves under.

There is no Religion whatsoever (except that hypocritical Profession of theirs which deserves not the Name of Religion, I mean the canting, whining, Presbyterian, Phanatical Profession) that gives the least Countenance to Rebellion or Faction; and I cannot but lament to find you involved in that Herd.

And I cannot but deplore it withal, as a most sad and dismal thing; that in this little Case so many Perjuries should be added to the Crime of Treason, such, as for my part I cannot but tremble to remember; Perjuries in defiance of all the Instruction and Admonition that true Christian Charity could express, and in defiance of the Omniscience and Justice of the All-seeing God of Truth: You ought to reflect upon whose Account those Perjuries were committed, and to lay them seriously to Heart, for e'er long, in a few Hours (deceive not your self) you are to give an Account at a greater Bar for all your Thoughts, Words and Actions.

You would likewise do well to bethink your self with all Seriousness and Remorse, of your own false Asseverations and Protestations, that you upon your Salvation should pretend Ignorance in the Business, when since that time, even since the last Night, there has been but too much discover'd how far you were concern'd; no, 'tis not unknown who were sent for upon the Monday Night, in order to have that rebellious, seditious Fellow to preach to them; what Directions were given to come through the Orchard the back and private way, what Orders were given for Provision, and how the Horses were appointed to be disposed of: I only speak this, that you should bethink your self in this short time that you have left here upon Earth, to get these Sins of yours duly repented of, and truly pardoned, and not only so, but consider you have it now in your Power to make some Recompence to the publick Justice of the Nation, by discovering the Truth in this Matter, and all Religion enjoins you to do what you can: For without the infinite

[H h h h]

Mercy

Mercy of the great God you are in a deplorable Condition, and without true Contrition and Repentance, of which all the Recompence you can make, both for publick and private Injuries, is a part, you can never hope for the Mercy of that God to be extended to you.

Sirs; It is not in my Province to advise you in your Preparation for that Eternity you are all suddenly to enter into; but out of pure Charity, and hearty Compassion to you, and the miserable Condition you have brought your selves into, and out of a tender regard to your precious immortal Souls, I cannot but assure you of my own, and recommend you to the earnest and fervent Prayers of all good Christians, to the God of infinite Mercy, that he would be merciful unto you all.

And the great God of his gracious Goodness grant, that all we that are here may learn such Lessons as are proper from such Examples: From that Woman the sad and dismal Effects of Disloyalty and Treason; and from all the rest the deplorable Mischiefs that attend Licentiousness and Debauchery: For by the Course of Nature, most of these might have lived a much longer time, and that with Comfort to themselves and their Relations; but now, to the anguish of their own Hearts, and the unspeakable Grief of all their Friends, they have shortened their own Days, and brought a dismal Sentence upon themselves.

And I recommend them not only to my self and others, but chiefly and especially to the Pious, Orthodox and Learned Ministry, to give the best Assistance they can, during the short remainder of their time; for their Abode here upon Earth is but short, and God grant they may meet with a blessed Immortality.

There remains no more for me to do, I say, but to pronounce the Sentence of the Law, which is this; and the Court does award,

That you, Mrs. Lisle, be conveyed from hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence you are to be drawn on a Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where your Body is to be burnt alive till you be dead. And the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

The rest of the Prisoners had the usual Judgment, as in Cases of Felony.

L. C. J. Look you, Mrs. Lisle, when I left his Majesty, he was pleased to remit the Time of all Executions to me; that wherever I found any Obstinacy or Impenitence, I might order the Executions with what speed I should think best: Therefore, Mr. Sheriff, take notice, you are to prepare for the Execution of this Gentlewoman this Afternoon: But withal, I give you, the Prisoner, this Intimation; We that are the Judges, shall stay in Town an Hour or two; you shall have Pen, Ink and Paper brought you, and if in the mean time you employ that Pen, Ink and Paper, and this Hour or two well (you understand what I mean) it may be you may hear further from us, in a deferring the Execution.

Then the Prisoner was taken away.

But afterwards, upon the Intercession of some Divines of the Church of Winchester, she was Reprieved till Wednesday the Second of September.

On Sunday the Thirtieth of August, the following Letter was sent to the Right Honourable the Earl of Clarendon, Lord Privy-Seal, at Windsor; [Which the Earl did then read to the King; who answered, That he would do nothing in it, having left all to the Lord Chief Justice.]

My Lord,

Understanding that Mrs. Lisle is Condemned, and that many false things are reported of her, that may hinder the King from shewing her Mercy; particularly, that she was an Enemy to the King's Friends in the time of the late Wars: As to that, we can assure your Lordship, that she was a Favourer of them in their greatest extremities; and particularly of us, and of some others that are since dead: And for these late Years we have often been in her Company, and never heard her say any thing but what became a Loyal Subject. This we desire your Lordship would be pleased to represent to the King, and to intercede for her Reprieve; which will be a great Obligation to your Lordship's humble Servants,

M. St. Johns.

E. Abergaveney.

On Monday the Thirty first of August, the following Petition was presented to the King.

To the King's most Excellent Majesty:

The Humble Petition of Alicia Lisle:

Humbly Sheweth,

THAT Your Petitioner lieth under a Sentence of Death for Harboursing one John Hicks; and is sentenced to be Burnt on Wednesday next.

That she is the Daughter of Sir White Beconsaw, descended of an Ancient and Honourable able Family, and related to several of the best Families of the Nobility of this Kingdom.

Wherefore your Petitioner humbly begs your Majesty, that Execution may be altered from Burning to Beheading, and may be Repited for four Days :

And your Petitioner shall pray, &c.

To which his Majesty answered: That he would not Reprieve her One Day; but for altering the Sentence, he would do it, if there were any Precedents for it.

Thereupon the following Precedents, for the altering of the Sentence, were offered to the King.

That Execution may vary from the Judgment, see the Register, Fo. 165. in Felony, Parl. 8. E. 3. where the Judgment always is Suspendatur per collum, yet the Party may be beheaded, which is no Part of the Sentence; so was the Duke of Somerset in the Time of Edw. VI. for Felony; so was the Lord Audley, 7. Car. I. for Felony (Rape.)

Queen Katherine Howard for Treason, Hen. VIII. and Jane Grey, primo Mariæ: The Countess of Salisbury being attainted of Treason, Anno 1541. was Beheaded 32 Hen. VIII.

Whereupon his Majesty was pleased to sign the following Warrant.

James R.

Whereas we are informed that Alicia Lisle has received Sentence of Death for High Treason at the Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol-Delivery, held at our City of Westminster, for Harboursing of John Hicks a Rebel, and that the Sentence is to be executed upon her the Second of September next, by burning her alive; And whereas the said Alicia Lisle has humbly petitioned Us to alter the Manner of the said Execution, by causing her head to be severed from her Body: We being graciously pleased to condescend to her Request; have thought fit hereby to signify Our Will and Pleasure accordingly: And our further Will and Pleasure is, that you deliver the Head and Body to her Relations to be privately and decently interred: And for so doing this shall be your Warrant.

Given at Our Court at Windsor, the Thirty first Day of August, 1685. in the First Year of our Reign.

SUNDERLAND.

To our Trusty and Well-beloved the High Sheriff of our County of Hampts, and to all others whom it may concern.

Which Warrant being delivered to the Sheriff, she was, on Wednesday the Second of September, in the Afternoon, brought to Execution, which was perform'd upon a Scaffold erected in the Market-place of the City of Winchester, where she behaved herself with a great deal of Christian Resolution: She then delivered a Paper to the Sheriff, a Copy of which follows; and after some little time was executed, having her Head severed from her Body.

A Copy of the Paper delivered to the Sheriff!

Gentlemen, Friends and Neighbours,

I T may be expected that I should say something at my Death, my Birth and Education being near this Place: My Parents instructed me in the Fear of God, and I now die of the reformed Religion, always being instructed in that Belief, That if Popery should return into this Nation, it would be a great Judgment, I die in the Expectation of Pardon of my Sins, and Acceptation with the Father; by the imputed Righteousness of Jesus Christ, he being the End of the Law for Righteousness to every one that believes: I thank God, through Jesus Christ, I depart under the Blood of Sprinkling, which speaketh better things than the Blood of Abel, God having made this Chastisement an Ordinance to my Soul.

I did as little expect to come to this Place on this Occasion as any Person in this Nation, therefore let all learn not to be High-minded, but fear the Lord; the Lord is a Sovereign, and will take what way he sees best to glorifie himself by his poor Creatures, therefore do humbly desire to submit to his Will, praying him, that in Patience I may possess my Soul.

My Crime was entertaining a Nonconformist Minister, which is since sworn to have been in the late Duke of Monmouth's Army: I am told, if I had not denied them, it would not have affected me; I have no Excuse but Surprise and Fear, which I believe my Jury must make use of to excuse their Verdict to the World.

I have been told, the Court did use to be Counsel for the Prisoner, instead of which, there was Evidence from thence, which, though it were but Hearsay, might possibly affect my Jury: My Defence was such as might be expected from a weak Woman, but such as it was, I did not bear repeated again to the Jury, but I forgive all Persons that have done me Wrong, and I desire that God will do so likewise.

I forgive Colonel Penruddock, though he told me he could have taken those Men before they came to my House.

As to what may be objected, that I gave it under my Hand that I had discoursed with Neliborp, that could be no Evidence to the Court, or Jury, it being after my Conviction and Sentence.

I acknowledge his Majesty's Favour in altering my Sentence, and I pray God to preserve him that he may long Reign in Peace, and the true Religion flourish under him.

Two things I have omitted to say, which is, that I forgive him that desired to be taken from the Grand Jury to the Petty Jury, that he might be the more nearly concerned in my Death.

Also I return humble Thanks to Almighty God, and the Reverend Clergy that assisted me in my Imprisonment.

Primo Gulielmi & Mariæ : Anno 1689.

and Chief Commissioner of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol-delivery within the said County, was Convicted, Attainted and Executed for High-Treason. May it therefore please your most excellent Majesties, at the humble Petition of Triphena Lloyd and Bridget Usher, Daughters of the said Alicia Lisle: That it be declared and enacted by the Authority of this present Parliament: And be it Enacted by the King and Queens most excellent Majesties, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That the said Conviction, Judgment and Attainder of the said Alicia Lisle be, and are hereby Repealed, Reversed, made and declared Null and Void to all Intents, Constructions and Purposes whatsoever, as if no such Conviction, Judgment or Attainder had ever been had or made, and that no Corruption of Blood, or other Penalty or forfeiture of Honours, Dignities, Lands, Goods or Chattles, be by the said Conviction or Attainder incurred: any Law, Usage or Custom to the contrary notwithstanding.

 dicted, or not guilty?

Ring. Not guilty.

Clerk. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

Ring. By God and my Country.

Clerk. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Set Henry Cornish to the Bar.

Henry Cornish, hold up thy Hand.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I have been confined without any notice given me until Saturday about noon of my Tryal. My Lord, I do hope, seeing I appear before your Lordships and this Honourable Bench, who have known something of my Conversation, that you will be pleased to consider me, and grant me what is customary, and commonly done to Persons in my Circumstances.

Mr. Jones. Mr. Cornish, if you please you shall have your time of speaking hereafter, but now you are only to plead without any more ado.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I beseech you hear me a little; I have been so confined —

Lord Mayor. Mr. Cornish, you must observe the Rules of the Court.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I hope I shall be allowed what is customary in such Cases.

Lord Mayor. What is it you would have?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I do desire, if your Lordship will please to consider me —

Mr. Jones. Would you not be arraign’d, Mr.
Cornish? After you are arraign’d and have pleaded, you may speak.

Mr. Cornish. Let me tell your Lordship what my Case is: Is it reasonable not to have above half a-days time for Preparation for my Tryal, and no Counsel allowed me?

* Mr. Recorder. Nor ought, without leave of the Court, or by his Majesties special Appointment.

* Sir Thomas
Fenner.

Mr. Cornish. I have not had a Friend to come to me, but in the Presence of Major Richardson.

Mr. Recorder. None have in your Circumstances.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, ought not I to have a Copy of the Pannel? it is a thing never denied.

Recorder. It hath been denied very often.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, it is a matter wherein my Life is concern’d; and therefore I hope your Lordship will hear me.

Mr. Jones. After you are arraign’d you may speak, and put off your Tryal if you can.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I cannot go from this before I possess your Lordship with a right Understanding of it; it is beyond Precedent: no such Precedent, that any Man should be kept with that Strictness I have been.

Recorder. Mr. Cornish, I wonder you will say so: I tell you there is no Man accused of your Crime but is so kept.

Mr. Cornish. If your Lordship pleases to allow me a little time, I do not question but I can very well satisfy your Lordship, and this honourable Court, that I am a very innocent Person.

Mr. Recorder.

Mr. Recorder. You will have your proper time for that, but now you must plead, that you may hear the Particulars of your Charge, and have an Opportunity to make out your Innocence; for we must keep the same Method with you we do with all other Persons in your Circumstances; and therefore you must plead as other Persons do.

Mr. Jones. Will you, or will you not, Sir, without any more ado? the Law gives you advantage, you may challenge any body; there are fourscore returned, honest Men, and you may challenge who you please.

Mr. Cornish. Alas! my Lord, what can I do?

Council. He disputes out of time; he is to be arraign'd.

Recorder. Come, Mr. Cornish, you must plead.

Mr. Cornish. I did understand last Night His Majesty was graciously pleased to refer these matters, as to my Trial, to my Lords the Judges; and, my Lord, I do hope that the Judges, when they hear this matter, that I shall have some time allowed.

Recorder. Pray, Mr. Cornish, take the Rule of the Court; your business is now to plead; when you have pleaded, what you have to offer for the putting off your Trial may be heard then.

Clerk. Henry Cornish, hold up thy Hand.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I would do nothing that should be a dishonour to your Lordship and the Court.

Sir James Smith. You know the way of the Court, Mr. Cornish; you must plead.

Mr. Jones. If you will not plead, I will move the Court to record your standing mute.

Mr. Cornish. I have known that this Court hath heard what the Prisoner hath to say at the Bar; and I have more to say perhaps than any Man that ever stood at this Bar.

Recorder. Mr. Cornish, when you have pleaded, you have time to speak for your self.

Clerk. Henry Cornish, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Thou standest indicted by the Name of Henry Cornish.

THAT Henry Cornish, late of the Parish of St. Michael Bassishaw, London, Merchant, as a false Traitor against the most Illustrious Prince Charles the Second, late King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, then his natural Lord, not having the fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, and the cordial Love, and true due and natural Obedience, which a true and faithful Subject of our late Sovereign Lord the King towards our late Sovereign Lord the King should and of right ought to bear, altogether withdrawing; and minding, and with all his Strength intending, the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to disquiet, molest, and disturb, and War and Rebellion against our late Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England to stir up, move, and procure; and the Government of our said late Sovereign Lord the King of this Kingdom of England to subvert, change, and alter, and our said late Sovereign Lord the King from the Title, Honour, and Kingly Name of the Crown Imperial of this Kingdom of England to depose and deprive; and our said late Sovereign Lord the King to Death, and final Destruction to bring and put: the 30th day of May in the 35th Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King, and divers other days and times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Michael Bassishaw, London, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and traiterously, with divers false Traitors to the Jurors unknown, did conspire, compass, imagine, and intend, our said late Sovereign Lord the King, his supream and natural Lord, not only of his Kingly State, Title, Power and Government of this Kingdom of England to deprive and throw down; but also the said late King to kill and put to Death, and the ancient Government of this his Kingdom of England to change, alter, and altogether subvert, and a miserable Slaughter amongst the Subjects of our late Lord the King thorough this Kingdom of England to cause and procure, and Insurrection and Rebellion against our said late Lord the King to procure, promote, and assist: And the same most wicked and devilish Treasons and traiterous Compassings, Imaginations, and Purposes aforesaid to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect, He the said Henry Cornish, as a false Traitor, then and there, to wit, the said 30th day of May in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish and Ward aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, and traiterously knowing James the late Duke of Monmouth, William Russel, Esq; and Thomas Armstrong, Knight, and divers other Rebels and Traitors, then lately before in the Parish and Ward aforesaid within the said City of London, falsely unlawfully, devilishly, and traiterously, to have conspired the Death and final Destruction of our said late Sovereign Lord the King; he the said Henry Cornish, as a false Traitor, then and there, to wit, the said 30th day of May in the Year aforesaid, within the Parish and Ward in the said City of London, falsely, unlawfully, wickedly, and traiterously, did promise to the said divers false Traitors and Rebels, then and there present, That he the said Henry Cornish would be aiding and assisting in the Treasons aforesaid, to be done, perfected, and brought to effect; against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace, and against the form of the Statute, &c.

Clerk. How say'st thou, Henry Cornish, art thou guilty of this High-Treason whereof thou standest indicted, or not guilty?

Mr. Cornish. This is an heinous Charge.

Council. Answer. You know you must answer.

Mr. Cornish. I am perfectly innocent.

Council. Are you guilty, or not guilty? You must take the Words.

Mr. Cornish. Not guilty.

Clerk. Culprit, how wilt thou be try'd?

Mr. Cornish. By the great God of Heaven, and my Country.

Clerk. God send thee a good Deliverance.

L. C. J. Jones. I don't know in what state things are here in the Court; I can't tell whether there be a Jury return'd or not.

Clerk. He is arraign'd.

L. C. J. Jones. Why don't you go on with the Jury?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I humbly pray your Lordship. I have some ground for it.

L. C. J. Jones. You shall be heard in good time, Sir.

Mr. Cornish. My poor Children last night prefer'd a Petition to His Majesty, and he was pleas'd to refer it most graciously to my Lords the Judges; and I now make my Application to Your Lordships.

L. C. J. Jones. Have you any Answer to the Petition, from the King?

Mr. Cornish. It was refer'd to your Lordships the Judges, to consider my Case.

L. C. J. Jones. We may hear more of your Business anon, when Mr. Attorney and Mr. Solicitor do come: we will stay here till they come, to know whether there be any Order from the King to them concerning you.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I hope it will not be offensive if I should acquaint your Lordships what Usage I have met with since I have been under Confinement. I have been under very close Confinement, I had no notice of my Tryal till about twelve a Clock on Saturday; no Friend came to me till Eight a Clock at night; and I had no time for Preparation for my Tryal. My Lord, these are hard things; but tho' I am denied Council, I trust in God I shall not need Council, for I hope, if your Lordship pleases to allow me time, to clear my self of all matters; and I hope with such Satisfaction to your Lordships, that you will acquiesce in whatsoever I shall lay before your Lordships. I do not come to make an Harangue and Talk; my Case was such, that I had neither Pen, Ink nor Paper.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Cornish, Mr. Attorney and Mr. Solicitor will come, we must hear them.

L. C. J. Jones. You shall be heard in your proper time: it is a strange thing you won't be satisfied: you shall be heard, I tell you, in your proper time.

Mr. North. We have arraign'd one Fernley, if you please to try him, who (with Ring) was brought to the Bar.

Clerk. You the Prisoners at the Bar, those Persons you shall hear call'd, and appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and You, upon your several Lives and Deaths; if you will challenge them, or any of them, your time is to challenge them when they come to the Book to be sworn, before they be sworn.

Cryer. O Yes, all manner of Persons are commanded to keep silence upon pain of Imprisonment.

The Middlesex Jury.

Nehemiah Arnold	William Thompson
Francis Stevens	William Read
Richard Fisher	Samuel Peacock
John Howlet	Richard Fitz-gerrard
John Viguers	Richard Bromfield
Samuel Birch	John Haynes

Cryer. O Yes, If any one can inform my Lords the King's Justices, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney, before this Inquest be taken between our Sovereign Lord the King and John Fernley and William Ring, the Prisoners at the Bar, let them come forth and they shall be heard; for now the Prisoners stand at the Bar upon their Deliverance: and all Persons that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence against either of the Prisoners at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence, or else they forfeit their Recognizance, and all Jury-men of Middlesex that have appear'd and are not sworn, let them depart.

Clerk. Set William Ring to the Bar, and set by the other.

William Ring, hold up thy Hand, You that are sworn look upon the Prisoner and hearken to his Charge, he stands indicted by the name of William Ring, &c. (prout ante.) Your Charge is, to enquire whether he be guilty of the Treason whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty, &c.

Mr. Phipps. You the Gentlemen that are sworn, the Prisoner at the Bar is indicted for that knowing one Joseph Kelloway and one Henry Lawrence to be false Traitors, and to have levied War against the King, on the 20th of July did harbour, conceal, and relieve those Traitors, against the Duty, &c. Upon this he hath pleaded, not guilty, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. Gentlemen of the Jury, the course of our Evidence will be thus; Kelloway and Lawrence were in the late Rebellion in the West, in the late Duke of Monmouth's Army; and after that Battle when they were overthrown, they came up to London, and the Prisoner at the Bar receiv'd and comforted them, and not only provided a Lodging, and Meat and Drink for them, but afterwards provides another Lodging for them; and this he knew, for they were very merry, telling the whole Story of the Fight; and notwithstanding this he entertains them. We will first shew you the Record of the Conviction of Kelloway and Lawrence, and then call Witnesses to prove the other things upon the Prisoner. (The Record produced) Mr. Harcourt sworn.

L. C. J. Jones. Is that a true Copy of the Record? Mr. Harcourt answered Yes: whereupon the Clerk reads:

Joseph Kelloway stands indicted by the Name of Joseph Kelloway of Taunton in the County of Somerset, Yeoman, and Henry Lawrence of the same Parish and County Yeoman, with a great many others.

L. C. J. Jones. See what they have done.

Clerk. They are indicted of Treason for levying War against the King, and they have confessed the Indictment upon their Arraignment; and the Judgment upon the Indictment is, That the said Kelloway, and the rest of them there, should be led to the Prison from whence they came, and from thence to be drawn to the place of Execution, and upon the Gallows there to be hanged, every one of them in the said Indictment, and living to be cut down, and their Entrails to be taken out of their Bodies, their Heads to be taken off from their Bodies, and their Bodies divided into four Quarters.

Mr. Att. Gen. This shews they were Traitors. Now we will shew you, that in the mean time between their Treason and Conviction, this Prisoner did receive them. Call Mr. Barrington. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Jones. Mr. Barrington, what do you know concerning Mr. Ring?

Mr. Barrington. If it please you my Lord, on the 11th of July last I was abroad about my Master's Business, and in the mean time when I was absent, as I was inform'd, there came Mr. Ring, who lives in Witch street at the Sign of the Bible, and when I return'd I was told that Mr. Ring was at our House to speak with me, and that there was one Mr. Lawrence there at Mr. Ring's at the Bible in Witch street; and when I came there, there was Mr. Lawrence at Mr. Ring's House; and when I came to the House on the right-Hand there was his Wife, as I take it; I asked for Mr. Lawrence, and she was a little at a stand: said I, I understand Mr. Ring was in such a place to inform me Mr. Lawrence desired to speak

Speak with me, upon that she shewed me where he was: I went up to him, and he was lying upon the Bed very weary and tired; and when I had been there a while there came in one Kelloway, and they said they came both out of the West Country, and came on Friday night, and I saw them on Saturday. If it please your Lordship, I called there after and knocked at Mr. Ring's Door, and there came a Woman and made Answer, That they were gone from thence both of them, and that they were to go on Ship-board to see some Friends; and I call'd there upon Wednesday the 15th day at night, to see Mr. Lawrence at Mr. Ring's House, and Mr. Lawrence told me he was going from thence to the Pewter-Platter in Saint John; and when Mr. Common Serjeant came to examine me about these men, I made a true Confession that they were at Mr. Ring's, and removed to the Pewter-Platter; and when we came to search at the Pewter-Platter, at first they did not know any such men, till we described them; then they confessed there were such men there on Tuesday and Wednesday night, but not the night before which was Thursday night, from thence we went without Temple-bar to Mr. Ring's, where they were at first, and Mr. Crisp and I went together to enquire for these men, and there was a Woman, which I think is Mr. Ring's Wife, I can't tell. I enquired for these men, and she made Answer, That they were not there at present, and said she could not tell at present, but that they lay there the last night which was Thursday night; that was Ring's Wife, I take it, should say they were there the night before; so after that she had owned they lay there on Thursday night, she asked me what this Gentleman was, so I told her he was a Friend of mine; so afterwards we were at the Castle Tavern without Temple-Bar by St. Clements Church, and Mr. Common Serjeant was pleased to send for Mr. Ring to examine him about these men, what Lodgers he had in his House on Friday night, Saturday night, Sunday night, and Monday night. Mr. Ring knew nothing of any men that came out of the Country; so upon that, he denying it, Mr. Common Serjeant ordered his House to be searched, and in searching they found a Paper upon the Chamber Window that was brought to the Castle Tavern, where Mr. Ring was, and the Paper was produced, and Mr. Ring would confess nothing till such time as they found that Paper.

L. C. J. Jones. See, is that the Paper you speak of?

Mr. Barrington. That is all I have to say, if it please your Lordship.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you see them in the Company of Ring?

Mr. Barrington. I did not see him when I was at the House.

Mr. Finch. Mr. Sol. Gen. You say Mr. Ring would confess nothing till such time as the Paper was found; What did he say after the Paper was found?

Mr. Jones. Ring was by, what did he say upon producing that Paper?

L. C. J. Jones. Was the Paper shewed to him?

Mr. Barrington. I think not; he would have seen it.

Mr. Just. Withins. You say he would confess nothing till that Paper was produced.

Mr. Barrington. Truly, I can say no more of it.

Mr. Jones. When the Paper was produced at the Castle Tavern, what did he say then?

Mr. Just. Withins. What did Ring say at the Castle Tavern?

Mr. Barrington. I can't remember, but that he denied every thing,

Clerk. Call Mr. Barrow. (Who was sworn)

Mr. Barrow. Sir, I heard Ring confess to my Lord-Mayor in July last, that he lodged Lawrence and Kelloway, and that Lawrence and Kelloway did tell him, that they had been both in the late Western Rebellion in Monmouth's Army; and that after that he had lodged them two or three Nights, this I heard him confess.

Council. Pray speak it again.

Mr. Barrow. That Lawrence and Kelloway had told Mr. Ring, they had been in the late Western Rebellion in Monmouth's Army, and that he had lodged them two or three nights in his own House.

Mr. Common Serjeant. What did you hear him say concerning Mr. Herle?

Mr. Barrow. There was some talk concerning Mr. Herle or Hurle.

L. C. J. Jones. Did he say he lodged them, after they had told him that?

Mr. Barrow. After that. That is all I can say.

Clerk. Call Mr. Crisp. (Who was sworn.)

Council. Give my Lord and Jury an Account of what you know concerning Mr. Ring.

Mr. Crisp. I went to search Mr. Ring's House, my Lord, and in the Window there was that Letter under Mr. Lawrence's own Hand, sealed up and directed to Newberry for a Horse which he had stole from his Master, and left at Newberry; which Letter I brought to the Tavern, and when we came to the Tavern, we examined him, and he denied every thing; but at last we shewed him the Letter, and he owned he had such a Cousin, and another that he did not know, but that he did not lodge there then; and when he came to the Sessions-House, Lawrence and Kelloway were produced before him, and were examined what Account they had given to him when they came to his House; they told him after the Duke of Monmouth was beaten they ran away to London, and Kelloway being his Cousin brought Lawrence with him; they told him the Duke was beaten, and lay there Friday night, Saturday night, Sunday night, and Monday night.

Mr. Jones. He owned he knew Kelloway?

Mr. Crisp. Yes.

L. C. J. And that Kelloway had been in the Duke's Army, and that he was beaten?

Mr. Crisp. Yes.

L. C. J. What did Ring say upon it?

Mr. Crisp. Ring said nothing there to it; he confess'd he lodg'd them two or three nights.

Council. Swear Mr. Hardisty. (Which was done)

Mr. Att. G. Mr. Hardisty, pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an account of his Examination?

Mr. Hardisty. I was directed to attend my Lord Mayor at the Examination of Mr. Ring, the Prisoner at the Bar, above here in the Room, and did accordingly: and upon Examination, my Lord, he did make this Confession. This is the Examination, and it is as he gave it in himself, and signed by himself.

L. C. J. Jones. And read to him?

Mr. Hardisty. Yes, half a dozen times I believe.

Mr. Comm. Serj. My Lord, upon the appearing of Lawrence and Kelloway before him, then he confessed all.

The Examination of William Ring of the Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middlesex, Taylor, taken before the Right Honourable Sir James Smith, Kt. Lord-Mayor of the City of London, this 18. day of July, 1685. who being examined, saith as followeth:

That Joseph Kelloway, and one Henry Lawrence, the said Kelloway's Acquaintance, came to this Examinants House on Friday or Saturday last; That this Examinant did ask of Kelloway (being this Examinant's Kinsman) what did drive them to Town? That they told this Examinant, that they went to Monmouth, that he was routed, and that brought them to Town, or to that purpose; That they were in Monmouth's Army: That the night they came, he this Examinant told them, he was unwilling to lodge them; That he this Examinant did lodge them after this Discourse, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday nights, and they dined twice with this Examinant; That they were at his House on Friday morning; but where they lay on Wednesday and Thursday saith, he knows not. Saith, that Lawrence sent this Examinant to a Glover in St. Bartholomews Close who was a Journey man in the House, as this Examinant supposeth, and told the Master of the House, that there was a Kinsman of his Journey man's would speak with his Journeyman. Saith, Kelloway and his Acquaintance told this Examinant, that they left their Horses at Newberry. That a Note being produced, directed to this Examinant, to deliver several Goods therein mentioned, and being examined upon the said Note, this Examinant saith, That he this Examinant was sent for to the Castle Tavern near Shoe-lane in Fleetstreet, and one Bond brought this Examinant the Note above-mentioned, and now produced to him; believes the Note to be the hand writing of James Hooper. That this Examinant was there to enquire of one Hearne, but expected to meet James Hooper, who formerly told this Examinant that he went by the Name of Hearne. That being in Discourse with James Hooper about the time of the late Duke of Monmouth's Landing, James Hooper told this Examinant, that his the said Hooper's Brother was with the Duke of Monmouth, and that he the said James Hooper would go to him the said Duke, or to that purpose. Further, this Examinant saith, That about a Fortnight ago he carried, according to a Note from Hooper to that purpose, to a Joyner's House in Ivy-lane, London, a Cravat and a pair of Cuffs, and then enquired for Hooper of a Woman of the said house; and saith, that then he this Examinant did speak with James Hooper who lay private there, because, as this Examinant believes, the said Hooper was concerned in the Rebellion. Saith, he hath not seen him the said Hooper this Fortnight, nor heard from him otherwise than by the Note now produced. Will. Ring.

Taken before me Sir James Smith, Lord-Mayor.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Richardson, to prove that these were the same men that were carried down. (Who was sworn.) Mr. Richardson, pray give an account, whether these were the men you carried down into the West.

Mr. Richardson. My Lord, those two Persons, that is, Joseph Kelloway and Henry Lawrence, that were committed for being in the late Rebellion: I carried them both down into the West, where they were both Convicted; one is executed, and the other hath a Reprieve.

Mr. Just. Withins. Henry Lawrence was Capt. Hunt's man.

Mr. Richardson. The same, he ran away with his Horse and Arms.

L. C. J. Jones. Can you tell these were the same men, that were present at his Examination?

Mr. Richardson. The very same men; they were committed at the same time; he was examined before them, for they were all committed at the same time together.

L. C. J. Jones. What do you say Sir, you the Prisoner at the Bar, what do you say for your self?

Mr. Ring. I did not understand what they were.

L. C. J. You knew the Prisoners, one of them was your Kinsman?

Mr. Ring. I did know him, but the other I did not know; I did not know what Design they had been upon.

L. C. J. Jones. Your own Examination says, you did.

Mr. Ring. Then my Examination is wrong.

L. C. J. Jones. Hear, hear again: You did receive them, and then they told you that they were in Monmouth's Army, and that Monmouth was beaten; and afterwards you continued to harbour them in your House three nights.

Mr. Just. Withins. And dined twice with them.

Mr. Ring. My Lord, I never heard of it.

L. C. Baron. That Gentleman heard you say, they had told you they had been in Monmouth's Army, and you lodged them after.

Mr. Crisp. Yes my Lord; and when we were there, the Woman would not own them.

L. C. J. Jones. Why did you hide them in your House, and not confess it?

Mr. Ring. At first I did deny it.

Council. Yes, and did deny it, till Lawrence and the other man were brought before you.

Mr. Ring. My Lord, what I did was ignorantly done.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you hear your Examination now read?

Mr. Ring. I heard most of it, I believe.

L. C. J. Jones. Pray let it be read again.

Council. It was read over and over 4 or 5 times.

Mr. Hardisty. He was upon it, I believe, an hour together: it was taken first in parts, and as he recollected himself it was compared, and afterwards my Lord Mayor desired him to consider with himself: and then the Examination was written fair over, and he signed it, and it was read several times, 6 or 7 times.

Mr. Ring. My Lord, I do acknowledge I did lodge them, but I did not understand what Design they had been upon.

L. C. J. Jones. But you see here you have acknowledged, they said they were in the Army, and you did lodge them afterwards; they were of Monmouth's Party, they had told you so. Read that part again.

Mr. Hardisty. Joseph Kelloway, and one Lawrence the said Kelloway's Acquaintance, came to this Examinant's House on Friday or Saturday last; that this Examinant did ask Kelloway being this Examinant's Kinsman, What did drive them to Town? that they told this Examinant, that they went to Monmouth, that he was routed, and that that brought them to Town.

Mr. Ring. I never said that Word.

Mr. Just. Withins. It is under your Hand.

Mr. Ring. If it be under my hand, I never said it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that part read to him?

Mr.

Mr. Hardisty. Yes.

L. C. J. Jones. Read on.

Hardisty. That they were in Monmouth's Army; that the Night they came, this Examinant told them, he was unwilling to lodge them, and that this Examinant did lodge them after this Discovery, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday night, and they dined twice at this Examinant's House.

L. C. J. Jones. What do you say now to this? Can there be any thing more plain?

Mr. Ring. I do acknowledge, my Lord, I did lodge them, but I was not sensible what the issue of this Business would be.

L. C. J. Jones. You did not know, That to harbour known Traitors was High Treason.

Mr. Ring. My Lord, I don't know whether they came from Monmouth or no.

L. C. J. Jones. It is no great matter whether you do or no; they told you so.

Mr. Ring. I never heard such a Word from them.

L. C. J. Jones. How came it to be put in your Examination?

Mr. Ring. I don't know, my Lord, when it was taken I was in a maze. I think the Parish knew well enough, that I never kept any such Company, nor had any such Design.

Mr. Just. Withins. He confesses it over-night, causes it to be writ down next Day, and sets his Hand to it too: Nothing can be more plain.

L. C. J. That is a great Argument you were not in such surprize, that you had not the use of your Understanding; for you confessed the same thing over Night, and you had time to consider of it all Night, and you came the next Morning, and then confessed as now it is written, and put your Hand to it.

Mr. Ring. I was ordered to put my Hand to it.

L. C. J. Jones. That is, if you acknowledged it to be true.

Mr. Ring. I did not know what was put down.

Mr. Just. Levins. The matter is so plain, that nothing can be more. When they came to you, they inform'd you where they had been, and afterwards you were unwilling to lodge them; you knew therefore they had been in the Rebels Army, and so the matter is plain: and for ought I can hear, this is not the first time you have harboured such Men.

L. C. J. Jones. There is another thing touching one Hurle; but you are not charged with it in the Indictment, and so we don't trouble the Jury with any Evidence concerning that: Have you any more to say?

Mr. Ring. I do acknowledge, my Lord, that I lodg'd them; but I did not understand any thing else.

L. C. J. Jones. Why! did not you confess it?

Mr. Ring. I did not confess it.

Mr. Just. Withins. And you shifted Lodging for them, after they were known to you.

Mr. Ring. I did not.

L. C. J. Jones. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner stands indicted of High-Treason for receiving Joseph Kelloway and Henry Lawrence, who were Traitors, and known to him to be Traitors, and harbouring them in his House, and giving them Entertainment and Comfort: this, Gentlemen, is clearly High-Treason by Law; and tho' this Man himself were not in actual Rebellion, yet, if he do receive any that he knows to have been so, he is equally guilty;

he is a principal Traitor by the Judgment of the Law, and however he would now pretend his Ignorance, that he did not know that they were in the Army, or, if he did know they were in the Army, that he had incur'd so great a Danger as the forfeiture of his Life, which now he stands as well as he can to defend; yet it does appear plainly to you, not only by his own Confession taken upon his Examination, but likewise by the Testimony of the Witnesses, who were present at the time when he did confess that these Men had discoursed with him, and acknowledged that they were in Monmouth's Army, and that he was routed, and that yet he did entertain and receive them: The first Witness indeed does not say the very thing, but it is very much inducing to the Evidence that is given more express by the other Witness, for he says, that he was at his House, and he enquir'd for them there, tho' he did not see him at all, but his People; and they not only did confess that they had lodged there, but that there was a Lodging provided for them elsewhere: But however, if that were quite laid aside, and not taken at all into Consideration, yet what is testified by the other Witnesses, and upon his own Examination, makes it as clear and plain as can be, that he did receive these Persons into his House, and comfort them, and entertain them, knowing them to have been guilty of High-Treason, that is, to have been in the Army of Monmouth, of that Party, and that they came to London, and went away from the West because he was beaten; and there is an Expression in the Examination to that purpose: so that I take the Indictment to be very fully and clearly prov'd upon him; and it is not his Ignorance of the Law that will excuse him, that is, his Ignorance of the Danger that he hath incur'd by entertaining these People; altho' you cannot but take notice, that he was in some dread and fear that it was an Offence to do so; for at first he says by his Examination, that he did refuse to entertain them, which shews that he had some Consideration of the Danger that he might incur by receiving them: and yet after this plain Discourse of theirs, that they were in the Army, he entertains them: That they were the same Men that were in the Army, appears plainly; for though at first he did deny it, and did stand in it, before he was confronted by the Men, they being present; yet afterwards he did confess, that they were the Men that were entertain'd by him; and that they were the same Men, doth appear by the Testimony of Captain Richardson, who saw them and afterwards caused them to be brought down to the West, where one of them was executed for Treason. So I must leave it to you, Gentlemen. I think it is a very plain Case.

Mr. Ring. Here is abundance of these things that I know nothing of.

Council. Set John Fernley to the Bar.

(Which was done.)

Clerk. John Fernley, hold up thy Hand. You that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Charge: He stands indicted by the Name of John Fernley, &c. (prout ante.)

Mr. Phipps. This is an Indictment of High-Treason against John Fernley, the Prisoner at the Bar: It sets forth, that the said John Fernley, knowing one James Burton to be a Traitor, and to have conspir'd against the Life of the King, did traiterously conceal the said Burton two Days and and two Nights, and gave him Meat and Drink, against the Duty, &c.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this Prisoner stands indicted of Treason for receiving and harbouring one James Burton who was guilty of Treason, he knowing him to have been guilty of Treason. And the course of our Evidence will be this: We will prove that this James Burton stood out lawed for Treason before he committed a new Treason, when he went into the West, and was there with Monmouth in the late Rebellion; and tho', Gentlemen, the very Outlawry against the said Burton is enough to satisfy any man, that this Man could not be ignorant that he was a Traitor, for no man can imagine, when a Man stands out a Process till he become out-lawed for High-Treason, that any should be ignorant that he is guilty of Treason, and that it would be very dangerous to receive a Man after that, without any more Evidence: But this Burton, after he was out-lawed and fled, came again, and was in Arms with Monmouth in the Rebellion; and after their Defeat he came up to Town: and Fernley knowing he had been then in the West with Monmouth, he received him, and harboured him; and this we will prove by Witnesses. First, we will shew the Record of the Outlawry.

Clerk.—An Indictment prefer'd against James Burton and divers others for High-Treason, for which the said Burton and divers others stand out lawed, by the Return of Samuel Dashwood, Esq; and Sir Peter Daniel, Sheriffs. This is the Record it self, my Lord.

Council. Swear Mr. Ward.

Which was done.

Mr. Just. Withins. Look upon it, Mr. Ward, is that the Record?

Mr. Ward. Yes, it is, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Withins. Pray see when the Outlawry was.

Mr. Hardisty. Upon Monday next after the Feast of St. Martin, Bishop, the said Richard Rumbold, Richard Goodenough, Francis Goodenough, here are the Names of a great many Men.

Mr. Just. Withins. Is James Burton among them?

Mr. Hardisty. On Monday next after the Feast of St. Michael, the said Richard Rumbold, James Burton, Richard Nelthorpe, are out lawed, and every one of them is out lawed.— It is November was Twelve-month.

Call James Burton. (Who was sworn)

Mr. North. James Burton. stand up there: Do you give my Lord and the Jury an account concerning your being in the West, and your being entertain'd here at Mr. Fernley's House, with all the Circumstances.

Mr. Burton. I came out of the West into London on Wednesday Night from Monmouth's Army.

L. C. J. Jones. What Wednesday Night?

Mr. Burton. Truly, I have forgot the Day of the Month, but it was about three Weeks after the Rout, and I came home to my Wife and stayed two Nights, and she was not satisfied I should be there, and went to endeavour to get a Lodging for me for two or three Nights, and she went to get leave at Mr. Fernley's for me to be there two or three Nights; and I went thither on Friday Night, and on Sabbath-day in the Evening I was taken there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Speak aloud, say that again.

Mr. Burton. On Wednesday Night I came out of the Country, after I had been in the Army, I came home to my Wife, and stayed till Friday Night, and on Friday Night she got me a Lodging at Mr. Fernley's; there I went about ten a Clock at Night, and stayed there till Sunday Night, and I was taken.

Mr. Just. Withins. Did you see Mr. Fernley?

Mr. Burton. I saw him at Dinner on Sunday, and not before.

L. C. J. Jones. What Acquaintance had you before? He does not keep a Publick House, does he?

Mr. Burton. I had been gone two Years, or very nigh.

L. C. J. Jones. What was the occasion of your going?

Mr. Burton. My Wife was acquainted there.

L. C. J. Jones. What was the occasion of your going away, and your Absence for two Years?

Mr. Burton. The occasion of my going then, was, I was in the Proclamation for being with Rumbold at the Mitre Tavern within Aldgate.

Mr. Just. Levins. Fernley knew you before, did not he?

Mr. Burton. He knew me by sight.

Mr. Just. Levins. Had you any Acquaintance with him?

Mr. Burton. I lived pretty near to him for a while.

Mr. Just. Levins. How near?

Mr. Burton. I lived within two or three Doors of him.

Mr. Just. Levins. Did he know you?

Mr. Burton. Yes, Yes, he did know me.

Mr. Just. Levins. You came to lodge at his House on Friday Night?

Mr. Burton. Yes, an't please you.

Mr. Just. Levins. Had you no Discourse till Sunday you dined together?

Mr. Burton. No, not till Sunday at Dinner.

Mr. Just. Withins. Tell your Discourse at Dinner.

Mr. Burton. My Lord, I have forgot what altogether the Discourse was; I had some Discourse of the Army; he knew I was in the Army.

L. C. J. Jones. I would have you speak the Sense, so far as you remember of the Discourse at that time with him.

Mr. Burton. The Sense, as far as I remember, was, That the Army was routed.

L. C. J. Jones. And that you were there.

Mr. Burton. He knew I was there.

L. C. J. Jones. How came he to know you were there?

Mr. Burton. I believe I told him so my self.

Mr. Just. — Upon your Oath, did he know you fled upon the Account of the Proclamation before?

Mr. Burton. It is like he might know it by others, but not by me.

L. C. J. Jones. When were you taken? What Day?

Mr. Burton. I was taken on Sunday in the Evening: I had been four Days in London; two Days at Home, and two Days at his House.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you not see him before Sunday at Dinner?

Mr. Burton. My Lord, he was in the Shop all Saturday; he is a Barber.

Mr. Just. Withins. You lay privately at his House all Saturday?

Mr.

Mr. Burton. Yes, my Lord, privately.

Council. Call Mary Burton.

(Who was sworn)

Mr. North. How came this Man to lodge at Mr. Fernley's House, can you give an account? and why it was?

Mrs. Burton. Because I thought he was not safe at home; and having Acquaintance with Mrs. Fernley, lodging pretty near, and she being a young Woman, and having Children, I had Acquaintance going to and fro, and we having a close House and no Yard, I had the Privilege of going to dry Linnen there, so that we had Acquaintance and a little Familiarity, and, being acquainted, I thought I might have Entertainment there; that is all I can say.

L. C. J. Jones. Were you at Dinner upon Sunday?

Mrs. Burton. Yes, I was at Dinner.

L. C. J. Jones. What Discourse had they at Dinner?

Mrs. Burton. Indeed I can't say they had any Discourse, I was very ill and laid me down upon the Bed, and fell asleep.

L. C. J. Jones. You are upon your Oath.

Mrs. Burton. I know I am, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. What Discourse was at Dinner?

Mrs. Burton. Whilst I was eating, I did not mind.

Mr. Just. Levins. You liv'd close by, why did you ask for a Lodging there?

Mrs. Burton. We do not live close by now, I live with my Daughter, I have no House now.

Mr. Just. Levins. She knew he was your Husband, why should you lodge your Husband at another House than where you lodged your self?

Mrs. Burton. What was it you said, my Lord?

Mrs. Just. Levins. Sure you would give the Woman some account, why you lodged your Husband at another House than where you lodged your self?

Mrs. Burton. She was not altogether a Stranger, and upon the account of the Proclamation there were none of them Strangers.

L. C. J. Jones. For whom did you ask a Lodging?

Mrs. Burton. For my Husband.

Mr. North. Did you speak with Mr. Fernley himself?

Mrs. Burton. I did not speak with Mr. Fernley himself.

Mr. North. On Sunday you saw him at Dinner?

Mrs. Burton. Yes, I saw him at Dinner.

Mr. Just. Levins. Had you any Discourse with them about the Proclamation?

Mr. Att. Gen. About your Husband's going away upon that Proclamation?

Mrs. Burton. An't please you, my Lord, my distress was so great, that I was hardly in my Senses to discourse with any body; but, I thank God, I am now in my Senses between whiles.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any Discourse with your Neighbours about that Proclamation, your Husband went away upon?

Mrs. Burton. I had not indeed.

Then Mr. Reynolds was sworn.

Mr. North. Mr. Reynolds, What do you know concerning Mr. Burton's being lodged at Mr. Fernley's House?

Mr. Reynolds. Towards the beginning of August last, hearing that there were several that were in the West lurk'd about Wapping, I took the Lieutenant of the Tower's Warrant, and we had some Intimation, that a suspected Person lay at Mr. Fernley's House; I went on Sunday about eight a Clock at Night, and took Mr. Burton in Mr. Fernley's House.

Mr. Just. Withins. You took him there, did you?

Mr. Reynolds. I took him there, my Lord?

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you speak with Fernley before you took Burton?

Mr. Reynolds. I took Burton; and Mr. Fernley being Master of the House, I wished the Constable to secure him for harbouring him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did Fernley say?

Mr. Reynolds. Says I, Mr. Fernley, how come you to harbour Mr. Burton that is in the King's Proclamation; he is a Traytor you know; says he, I did not know it was Mr. Burton, but my Wife desired me to lye out of the Chamber where I lay before, that a Friend of hers might lye there for two or three Days.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did you find him?

Mr. Reynolds. He was in a Room up one pair of Stairs, up the Chimney, and while we were there he fell down the Chimney, with all the Soot about him: Mr. Fernley was then one pair of Stairs higher; I desired the Constable to go up to see for him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you no discourse with him about the business of being in the Army? with Fernley, I mean.

Mr. Reynolds. No my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you hear no Discourse between Burton and him?

Mr. Reynolds. No, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Withins. He was very friendly to lye out of his own Chamber for him.

Mr. Reynolds. They were put in two separate Chambers, by the King's Direction, till they were sent to Newgate.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you on Sunday Night that he did not know it was Burton?

Mr. Reynolds. To the best of my Remembrance, he did so, when I brought him to the Tower.

Mr. Att. Gen. And yet he dined with him on Sunday.

Mr. Reynolds. I looked upon it as an Excuse.

Mr. North. What Day was Burton taken?

Mr. Reynolds. It was Sunday.

Mr. North. What time on Sunday?

Mr. Reynolds. Sunday about eight a Clock at Night. He had been in Bed, my Lord, I believe, and before we could get open the Door I believe he got out of Bed and went to get up the Chimney.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen, you observe in the course of the Evidence, that the first Evidence we produce is James Burton; now James Burton stood outlawed for Treason, and as he stands outlawed he is not a competent Witness, but now to take off that Objection which the Prisoner ought to make, but we make it for him, we shew you here a Pardon whereby that Outlawry is discharged, so that he stands now a very legal Witness.

Mr. Just. Withins. You understand, Gentlemen, what Mr. Solicitor mentions.

(The Pardon produced) and Read.

L. C. J. Jones. What say you?

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I am charged for entertaining Burton. My Lord, I knew nothing of him when he came into my House till Sabbath day at Dinner. I asked my Wife what time Burton came in, she told me he came on Friday Night, Saturday was a busie Day with me, my Lord, on Sunday Morning I got up and went to Church, when I came from Church, I went up to Dinner, and when I came in and saw him, I asked him, what in the name of God brought him there? it hath pleased God, said he, to preserve me hitherto, and my Wife interceded so far as to procure me a Nights Lodging, which I hope may be no Detriment to you. I wish it may not, said I, and at Dinner I asked him, how he made his escape, and he told me how he did escape. Says I, what do you mean to do? says he, some Friends will procure me a Passage beyond Sea, upon this I considered with my self, and discours'd with him about the West, and his escape out of it, and about half an Hour after we had dined, one knocked at the Door.

Mr. Just. Levins. What Day was this?

Mr. Fernley. Sabbath day at Noon, some body knocked at the Door, and they told me there was one would speak with me, and I came down, and there was one Gaunt in the Shop; says he, is Mr. Burton within? may I speak with him? Yes, said I: up I went, and Gaunt with me; and when we came into the Room they embraced one another, and were very glad to see one another, and Burton gave Mr. Gaunt thanks for a Guinea he had sent him; says Gaunt, Mr. Burton, I am glad to see you; I hope in a little time I shall have a Passage for you beyond Sea; says he, if you had been here a while sooner you might have gone; there are some Gentlemen went away a while ago; says I to Mr. Gaunt, Who were they? he told me it was Major—— and his Son, and another: says I to Mr. Gaunt, Do you hear of Ferguson? no says he, I hear nothing of him as yet, but in a little time I may hear from him; and Burton asked, when he thought he might be going; in a Day or two's time said he: says Burton, I have no Money nor no Cloaths; says he, take no care for that, so he named some Gentlemen that were to go: He told him of Colonel Danvers and Major Wildman. Upon this Discourse, within my self I did consider what way I might do his Majesty a piece of Service: I thought it better to forbear, and not to seize him presently, till I had acquainted some Magistrate; and I did think in the Morning to have gone to a Justice of Peace and have had him apprehended: Burton, my Lord, I knew was secure, for he could not escape my Hands. I had no Design of concealing him; I have several eminent Gentlemen to testify for my Loyalty: I thank God, I never had an ill Thought against His Majesty in my Life, only this Misfortune hath befallen me upon the account of my Wife. I am as innocent as a Child unborn, as to any thing against the King.

L. C. J. Jones. But he plainly told you, he came from the Army.

Mr. Fernley. He did acquaint me, my Lord, he did so; as soon as I saw him, I was startled; I did look upon it as a thing sent from God Almighty; for I knew my Lord, that there was 100*l.* for him; I knew there was a Proclamation out against him; but as for the Outlawry, I knew nothing of that: a Proclamation I knew there was against him, and being a poor Man, there was no Obligation upon me to conceal him and ruine my self and Family.

L. C. J. Jones. What was the reason, you were so kind as to part with your own Lodging to entertain him?

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I had fitted my Chamber before he came to the House.

Mr. Just. Withins. It is proved, you did it upon his account.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, no body will offer to say that.

L. C. J. Jones. That you quitted your Lodging, and that he came into the same Lodging, is clearly proved.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, my Chamber was fitted above a Week before he came, not knowing of him, for I had no Thoughts of him.

L. C. J. Jones. Pray, what Servants have you?

Mr. Fernley. Only a Boy, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Could not you have sent out your Boy when he had discoursed thus treasonably with you, but keep him in your House seven or eight Hours after you had entertain'd him at Dinner?

Council. Are you a Constable?

Mr. Fernley. I am a Constable my self, and upon the account of my Office I was the more secure. It was certain he could not escape my Hands, and I thought to do his Majesty more Service.

L. C. J. Jones. How could you do His Majesty more Service?

Mr. Fernley. Gaunt told him, he would come again to him.

L. C. J. Jones. When did he come to you?

Mr. Fernley. About half an Hour after Dinner.

L. C. J. Jones. But you should have seized him immediately after Dinner. How came this Man to take so much Freedom before you that were an Officer, as to talk High-Treason?

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I thank God if I were to die this Minute, I never harbour'd a Thought against the King.

L. C. Baron. If you had had a loyal Heart, you should have kept Gaunt, if you had any Thoughts to have done it.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I will tell you why I let Gaunt go, because he promised to come again the next Day.

L. C. J. Jones. Would you, being a Constable, let a Man go upon his Word, that had confessed himself guilty of Treason?

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, if I did any thing, it was ignorantly. My Lord, as for Gaunt, when I knew there was a Proclamation out against Danvers and Wildman, I hearing Gaunt discoursing about their Design, I thought (promising to come the next Day) to know how they were to go.

Mr. Just. Levins. For God's Sake, would you trust all this to your own Breast? If you had had an honest Intention, you would have gone to some Officers, and acquainted them with it; some of the King's Justices of the Peace, or some of the Privy-Council, that such Persons would be at your House the next Day.

L. C. Baron. By your own Discourse, after you had heard all this Discourse, and after Burton had told you this, you could let him go quietly to his own Chamber: If you had such a Design as you say, you should have first seized Burton.

Mr. Fernley. Another Chamber; no, he dined in his Chamber, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Withins. You went into another Chamber from him. Have you any Witnesses?

Mr.

Mr. Just. Levins. They had a Confidence in you, otherwise Burton and Gaunt would not have talk'd so freely before you.

L. C. J. Jones. There was a great Confidence in lodging him in your House, being a Constable: no body would search a Constable's House. Have you any Witnessees to call?

Mr. Fernley. Mr. William Rush, Captain Haddock, (who were call'd.)

L. C. J. Jones. Did Burton's Wife dine with you and him?

Mr. Fernley. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Where did you dine?

Mr. Fernley. In the Chamber, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. And was this Discourse concerning Monmouth's being beaten in the West, at the time of Dinner?

Mr. Fernley. The Discourse of it? Yes, my Lord; what Discourse was, was at Dinner?

Mr. Just.—Was Burton's Wife at Dinner, or was she upon the Bed?

Mr. Fernley. She din'd at the Table, my Lord. My Lord, she went to sleep when Gaunt came in.

Mr. Just. Levins. Where did she go to sleep, in the same Room?

Mr. Fernley. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Where do you use to dine at other times?

Mr. Fernley. In the Kitchen, my Lord. My Lord, when I came from Church, the Dinner was sent up thither.

L. C. J. Jones. Woman, you are upon your Oath, remember that you are oblig'd by your Oath to confess the Truth, let it concern whom it will: The Discourse between your Husband and this Man you could not but be privy to; there was only you three at Dinner, your Husband, you and Fernley the Prisoner at the Bar: All this Discourse was at Dinner-time, how is it possible that you should not hear it?

Mr. Just. Levins. Fernley himself owns he did discourse with your Husband at Dinner that he came from the Rebels in the West.

Mrs. Burton. An't please you, my Lord, I did not hear. As I said before, I must say again, I did not hear.

Mr. Just. Withins. Nothing about Monmouth?

Mrs. Burton. No, not one Word, if I were to die as I stand here.

Mr. Just.—You were at Dinner?

Mrs. Burton. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Just.—And this Discourse was at Dinner-time.

Mrs. Burton. I did not hear it.

Mr. Just. Withins. What would you ask him, Sir?

Mr. Fernley. What account he can give of my Life and Conversation, how I have behaved my self, and carried my self.

L. C. J. Jones. What are you, Sir? What is your Quality?

Mr. Rush. I am a Distiller, Sir.

Mr. Just. Levins. Where do you dwell?

Mr. Rush. I did dwell two Years ago in Wapping, but not now: I live now at Walsham-Stow.

Officer. He is a very great Whig.

Mr. Just. Withins. If he be a Whig, he can't be a little one.

L. C. J. Jones. How long have you liv'd at Walsham Stow?

Mr. Rush. Two Years and upwards, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. That is long before any thing that this Man is charged withal.

Mr. Rush. I formerly knew the Man, he was a Barber, and us'd to trim me: I always looked upon him to be a good sober Man.

Mr. Just. Withins. A Wapping-Man, a sober Wapping-Man.

Mr. Rush. I hope there is a great many there.

L. C. J. Jones. That is all you can say for him.

Mr. Rush. I have nothing to say to his Fact: He demeaned himself always well among his Neighbours; I know nothing of the Fact for which he is here.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you know Burton?

Mr. Rush. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was Burton? was he reputed an honest Man?

Mr. Rush. I never knew him otherwise; I never was in his Company; I know he dwelt close by where I liv'd.

L. C. J. Jones. And you took him to be a very honest Man?

Mr. Rush. Before this: He has not been so lately, it seems. He is a Person I never had any Company or Conversation with in my Life.

Cryer. Captain Haddock.

Officer. He won't come in, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Well, well, let him stay there.

Cryer. Mr. Dove.

Officer. He won't come in, I can't make him come in.

L. C. J. Jones. Here are none that give any Testimony for you, at least will.—What are you?

Mr. Whittal. I dwell in Wapping, Sir.

Mr. Just. Levins. What trade are you?

Mr. Whittal. A Plumber.

Mr. Just. Levins. Who knows you?

Mr. Whittal. I am well known there, Sir.

Mr. Just. Levins. Do you go to Church?

Mr. Whittal. Here's Mr. Tanner knows me, the Clerk of the Peace.

Mr. Tanner. Yes, Sir, I know him.

Mr. Just. Levins. Do you go to Church?

Mr. Whittal. Always went to Church.

Mr. Just. Withins. There were a parcel of them that went constantly to Church trimmily.

L. C. J. Jones. Prisoner, what would you ask him?

Mr. Fernley. Only to give an account how I behaved my self.

Mr. Just. Withins. Well, Sir, what do you say?

Mr. Whittal. All I know is, he behav'd himself very well, and went to Church as other Neighbours did; and I never heard him speak against the Government.

Mr. Just. Withins. Did you know Burton?

Mr. Whittal. No, Sir; he was gone before I came to live there.

L. C. J. Jones. Have you any more to say?

Mr. Fernley. This, my Lord, may give some account that I had no Design against the Government. I am a poor Man, my Lord, and upon that account I owe a great deal of Money: I knew there was 100 l. for securing Burton, there was no gain by concealing him; he was not a Person could requite me, that I should harbour him, and lose 100 l. which was certain for taking him; which (my Lord) shews I had no Design.

L. C. J. Jones. No, this argues you to be a stronger Confederate; and that you were so firm to your Parry, you would not gain 100 l. though you might have it for doing your Duty.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I look'd upon it as sure as if I had it in my Pocket. I knew nothing of him till Sabbath-day at Noon, and I did not design to conceal him afterwards, any farther than to serve the King.

L. C. J. Jones. You tell us a Story of your self, it is to no purpose to try any Prisoner, if his Saying must be taken for Evidence: We will hear what Witnesses you have to produce, or if you can object to the Evidence that's against you.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I own it to be true, I have declared more than the Witnesses have said against me; but my Lord, I am innocent in it, God knows my Heart, I had no design in it. It was but six Hours I knew of him.

Mr. Just. Withins. You lay out of your Bed before.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, not upon his account, I was a Week before out of that Bed, to prepare it for my Wife to lie-in.

L. C. J. Jones. Is your Wife delivered?

Mr. Fernley. No.

L. C. J. Jones. You made great haste.

Mr. Fernley. It was my Wife's fault.

L. C. J. Jones. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Prisoner stands indicted for harbouring and relieving one James Burton, knowing him to have committed Treason. Gentlemen, you are to be acquainted, that this James Burton, was not only guilty of the late Rebellion in the West, but he was likewise charg'd by Process with being guilty of the Plot at the Rye-house, and thereupon there was such Proceedings by Law, that he was Outlawed, the Record of which Outlawry hath been produced to you; so that if there were no more, if you be perswaded that he is the Person guilty, whether he were in the Rebellion in the West or no, that may induce you to find this Indictment, for the Prisoner receiving him after the Rebellion in the West, and knowing him to have committed Treason, whereupon he was Outlawed, it equally makes him liable to the Offence where-with he is charg'd. But, Gentlemen, that is not all; you have express Testimony from Burton himself, who it seems was acquainted with him, and who had fled from his Neighbourhood, by the space of two Years almost, and yet he receives this Burton into his House: I will not say, at the first time that he came into his House, it doth appear by any Evidence, that he knew him to have been in the Rebellion in the West, but when he came thither upon Friday, he was so kind to him as to leave his own Chamber, and to let him have that for his Lodging, although now he gives you another Excuse plainly frivolous and false, that is, a Pretence of making way for his Wife to lie-in, who yet is not delivered. He lies there upon Saturday Night, and dines with him upon Sunday. Saturday perhaps might be a busy Day, and there is no Testimony at all given by any Evidence of any Discourse that was between them upon that Day, but upon Sunday, when they dined together, Burton swears, that he did tell him that he had been in the West in the Rebellion there, and he came thither for shelter: This Man being acquainted with this, allowed him to dine with him, and harboured him in his House for the space of seven or eight Hours more, without bringing him before any Justice of Peace, or any Magistrate who had Authority to commit him, although he had a particular Authority of his own (as he was Constable) for the Conservation of the Peace, yet he forgets his Oath as well as his Duty and Allegiance, and suffers him still to remain there. It is true the Wife of Burton dined with them, as Burton himself says; and the Woman confesses, but she was so busie at her Victuals, that she can remember nothing, she did not hear that there was any Discourse concerning Monmouth. But lest you should want another Witness, for Burton is but one Witness to that particular, you have him plainly confessing it himself, which is above a Thousand Witnesses, you have him confessing that Burton did acknowledge he had been in the West, and that Monmouth was Roured, and yet he continues him in his House: nay more, this Man doth appear to be a Person in whom there was that great Confidence, that another Person, Gaunt came, and he bids him come into his House, and there he discours'd of some Traytors, and the means of conveying away Burton, though he had confess'd it himself. Gentlemen, what he tells you, is, that he did mean to discover; when did he intend to discover? He did not discover to any body, before the Man was apprehended by an Officer: he lets Gaunt, who plainly appears to be as arrant a Traytor as could be in the World, to go away merely upon his own Parole, without taking any course to apprehend him. He pretends he is a poor Man, and he might have gain'd 100 l. if he had discover'd him, and surely he would have discover'd him, to gain 100 l. but this is a strong Argument, that he was deep in the Rebellion himself, and one in great Esteem with them, that being a poor Man, he would not do his Duty, for which he might have had a Reward of 100 l. but suffers him to escape. This is the Case, Gentlemen, that is before you, if you believe he did knowingly, as he himself upon the matter doth confess, give any comfort or relief to Burton, knowing him to be a Rebel, you ought to find him guilty.

Then the Jury withdrew to consider the Evidence.

Clerk. Set Elizabeth Gaunt to the Bar, (which was done.) Elizabeth Gaunt, hold up thy Hand, (which she did.)

THou standest indicted by the Name of Elizabeth Gaunt, Wife of William Gaunt, of the Parish of St. Mary White-Chappel, in the County of Middlesex Yeoman: As a false Traytor against our late Serene Lord Charles the Second, by the Grace of God her then natural Lord; not having the fear of God in her Heart, nor weighing the Duty of her Allegiance, but moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, and the true and natural Obedience which a true and faithful Subject of our said Sovereign Lord the King towards our said late Lord the King of right ought to bear withdrawing, and with all her Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to disquiet, molest and disturb, and War and Rebellion against our said late Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England to stir up and move, and the Government of our said late Sovereign Lord the King in this his Kingdom of England to subvert, and our said late Sovereign Lord the King from the Title, Honour, and Kingly Name of the Crown Imperial of this Kingdom of England to depose and deprive, and our said late Sovereign Lord the King to Death, and final Destruction to bring and put. The 24th Day of September, in the 36th Year of the Reign of our said late Sovereign Lord (Charles the Second, and divers other Days and Times as well before as after, within the Parish, &c. Falsly, maliciously, devilishly and traiterously with divers Rebels and Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, she did conspire, imagine, and intend our said late Sovereign Lord the King, her then supream and natural Lord, not only from his Kingly State, Title, Power and Government of this Kingdom of England to deprive and throw down, but also our said late Sovereign Lord the King to kill and put to Death, and the ancient Government of this Kingdom of England to alter and wholly subvert, and a miserable slaughter amongst the Subjects of our said late Sovereign Lord the King throughout this Kingdom of England to cause and procure, and Insurrection and Rebellion against our said late Sovereign Lord the King to procure and assist. And the said most wicked and devilish Treasons and traiterous Compassings, Imaginations, and Purposes aforesaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to pass, the said Elizabeth Gaunt, as a false Traytor, then and there, to wit, the said 24th Day of September, in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish and Ward aforesaid, well knowing one James Burton to be a false Traytor, and as a false Traytor traiterously to have compassed and imagined the Death and Destruction of our said late Sovereign Lord the King, and War and Rebellion against our said late Sovereign Lord the King within this Kingdom of England, together with other Traytors (to the Jurors unknown) to have intended to be raised; she the said Elizabeth Gaunt afterwards, to wit, the said 24th Day of September, in the Year aforesaid, within the City of London aforesaid, the said James Burton, in a certain House of a Person to the Jurors unknown, knowingly, secretly, wickedly, devilishly and traiterously, did entertain, conceal, comfort, sustain, and maintain, and then and there, for the comforting, sustenance, and maintenance of him the said James Burton, Meat, Drink, and 5 l. in Money for the Maintenance and Sustenance of him the said James Burton, unto the said James Burton, maliciously, and traiterously, she did give and deliver, and cause to be given and delivered, against the Duty of her Allegiance, and against the Peace, &c. and against the Form of the Statute, &c.

Clerk. How sayest thou, art thou guilty or not guilty?

Mrs. Gaunt. I desire to have more time to consider of it.

L. C. J. Jones. You know whether you be guilty of this Offence; what need you have any time of Consideration for that?

Mrs. Gaunt. I don't know, Sir; I am ignorant in the Law, and in things of that nature.

L. C. J. Jones. But this is not matter of Law; it is, whether you did receive these Traytors or no knowingly; this James Burton, knowing him to have committed Treason: Can't you tell whether you did or no?

Mrs. Gaunt. Not guilty.

Clerk. How wilt thou be try'd?

Mrs. Gaunt. By God and my Country?

Clerk. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Then the Middlesex Jury returning, Mrs. Gaunt was set aside, and Ring and Fernley brought to the Bar, who were both brought in guilty by the Jury.

Clerk. Set Henry Cornish to the Bar, and Elizabeth Gaunt, (which was done).— You the Prisoners at the Bar, these Men that have been now called, and here appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon your several Lives or Deaths: If you challenge any of them, you must speak as they come to the Book to be sworn, before they are sworn.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I must humbly beg leave of your Lordship and this honourable Court, that I may renew my Request. The time of notice given me for my Tryal being so short, it hath no Precedent, I think: I humbly pray your Lordship I may have time allowed for my Tryal; I have had no Council, no Pannel, no help in the World; I had not Pen, Ink, nor Paper, my Lord, these are very hard things. My Lord, His Majesty was petitioned last Night by my Children, and he was graciously pleas'd to say, that he would refer it to my Lords the Judges. I only pray your Lordships, that you would be pleas'd to allow me time: Though here is a grievous Indictment brought against me, yet I doubt not but to clear my self of what is alledged against me, if I have but time to prepare my self for it: therefore I humbly pray I may have time allotted.

L. C. J. Jones. You told us so before, that you had exhibited a Petition to the King and that the King did refer it to the Judges, you shew us nothing of that.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I can but only signify to your Lordship what I hear; my Children were with me, and told me they had petitioned the King, and his Majesty was pleas'd graciously to receive it.

Mr. Att. Gen. The King left you to the course of the Law.

Mr. Cornish. It is very hard measure; I have no preparation at all, no more than at the first moment; but I bless God I hope I shall in time satisfy you of my Innocency.

L. C. J. Jones. You were apprehended and seized upon Tuesday last, this is almost a week; you knew what you were charged withal.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I did not know what I was charged withal. I had no liberty of Friends to come to me; my Wife at length obtained leave, but it was in the presence of Major Richardson; I had no Friend with my Wife, no Pen, Ink, nor Paper.

L. C. J. Jones. Was Pen, Ink, and Paper deny'd you? did you ask it?

Mr. Att. Gen. As soon as he petition'd for it he had it.

Capt. Richardson. He had Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. J. Jones. When was that?

Capt. Richardson. On Saturday.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, it was eight a clock at night.

Mr. Just. Levins. Mr. Cornish, I would not have you think you are used otherwise than other men are; for I must tell you it is not usual to have Pen, Ink, and Paper, without leave.

Mr. Cornish. I know it hath been allowed in the like case.

Mr. Just. Withins. Ay, upon petition, never else.

Mr. Just. Levins. There are many men, and of as good quality as you, tried for killing men: does does any body give them notice? Is there any more necessity of notice in point of Treason, than in point of Murther?

Mr. Just. Withins. I told you what your offence was, when you were committed.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I remember in my Lord Russel's Case he had at least seven or eight days allowed him.

Mr. Just. Levins. It may be so; but it is not necessary. Prisoners that are tried here generally have no notice at all; if one man hath a singular favour, another man cannot claim it.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I have a material Witness above 140 miles off.

L. C. J. Jones. My Lord's Trial, I think, was put off but till the afternoon.

Mr. Cornish. With submission to your Lordship, I think he had eight days assign'd him. But my Lord, I humbly conceive I have a Witness that is very material in my Case, that is 140 miles out of Town, in Lancashire; I humbly pray I may have time allotted me to send for him.

L. C. J. Jones. Why did not you set forth that in your Petition to the King?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I did not understand the case.

L. C. J. Jones. Were not you committed for High-Treason?

Mr. Just. Withins. I told you so my self: I shew'd you the Commitment; therefore you can't pretend you were ignorant of it.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, it did not mention this King or the last: And I am not a Lawyer, I am not skill'd in these things; I am very ignorant, and hope your Lordship will consider me; my Innocence will appear as bright as any mans that ever stood at this Bar.

L. C. J. Jones. I don't believe you want that Evidence 140 miles off. Is he the only man that can make your Innocence appear?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, by what I apprehend he will be the most material Witness I have. My Lord, I shall desire nothing but with submission to your Lordship and the Bench; but I humbly conceive it is very reasonable I should have time, I humbly pray your Lordship to consider it.

L. C. J. Jones. Mr. Attorney, have you any directions?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

Mr. Cornish. I do not doubt, if I might have a little time, to make my defence.

Mr. Just. Withins. You should have applied your self to the King, it does not lie in our power.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I humbly pray you to consider my case.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Bridgman here on the Bench says, there was a Petition before the King for putting it off, and the King absolutely refus'd it.

Mr. Just. Levins. We have nothing to do, Sir; we are here by Commission to try you.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I have been denied a copy of the Pannel, I hope that is reasonable; I must desire a copy of the Pannel.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is none of your right, Mr. Cornish.

Mr. Cornish. Mr. Attorney, with submission, I hope I ought to have it.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, you ought not to have it; You have your peremptory challenges, you may challenge 35 without cause.

L. C. J. Jones. You shall have a copy of the Pannel here.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, here he may.

Mr. Cornish. It is a very hard case, when I have a material Witness so far out of Town, that I can't have a little time allotted.

L. C. J. Jones. Can't every man that comes here to be tried say the very same thing, that he hath a material Witness in France, Spain, or any where else, and that when that Witness comes his Innocence will be as clear as the Sun?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, my Witness is in Lancashire, I cannot help it; I beseech your Lordship to consider me: I apt to believe that he would so much vindicate my Reputation in this matter, that it would be a very great satisfaction to your Lordships; and I am sure you are not for oppressing any man.

L. C. J. Jones. No, Sir, that we are not.

Mr. Cornish. I am sure you are for the just vindication of the Government, for executing of Justice, and I will desire no other than that.

L. C. J. Jones. Mr. Attorney, if you pray he may be tried, we can't deny it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Cornish, I cannot defer it, I have no authority; and why you should be in another condition than other Prisoners, I don't know; you have not deserved so well of the Government.

Mr. Cornish. I have not the names of the Wards where these men live, and their Trades.

Mr. North. He hath a copy of the Pannel, and that is sufficient.

L. C. J. Jones. You may ask them where they live.

Mr. Cornish. I hope I may have Pen and Ink, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Ay, ay.

Then the Jury were called, and after Mr. Cornish had challenged 35 of them, the Jury sworn were as followeth:

Thomas Rawlinson	William Clowdissy.
Thomas Langham.	Richard Holford.
Ambrose Istead.	William Longboat.

Proclamation being made, If any one can inform, &c. Mr. Cornish was set aside, and Elizabeth Gaunt at the Bar.

Clerk. Elizabeth Gaunt, hold up thy hand. (which she did.) — You of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to her Cause: She stands indicted by the name of, &c. (as before in the Indictment.) Upon this Indictment she hath been arraigned, and thereunto pleaded not guilty, and for her Trial hath put her self upon her Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is, to enquire whether she be guilty of this High-Treason whereof she stands indicted, or not guilty. If you find her guilty, &c.

Mr. Phipps. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn, Elizabeth Gaunt the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted, for that she knowing James Burton, together with other Traitors traiterously to have conspired the death of the late King, and to raise Rebellion in this Kingdom, did harbour the said James Burton, and gave him five Pounds in Money.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn, the Prisoner stands indicted for harbouring of Burton, who was a great Traitor, and for procuring a way for his escape beyond-sea, and also for giving him 5l. to bear his charges. In the former Trial you had an account of her Husband, and in this you will hear she and her Husband were the great Brokers for carrying over such Traitors, as my Lord Shaftsbury and others; these have taken care to convey them over at all times. We will produce our Witnesses. Call Burton and his Wife.

Mr. Burton sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know Mrs. Gaunt?

Mr. Burton. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give my Lord and the Jury an account how she harbour'd you, and all the passages that pass'd between you and Mrs. Gaunt. Pray tell first whether you were engag'd in the matter of the Rye?

Mr. Burton. How I came concerned I will tell you, if it please you.

Mr. Att. Gen. Speak.

Mr. Burton. The first time I knew any thing of it, Mr. Keeling came to me one Saturday morning, and asked me if I was to go to London: I said, Yes, I was to go to the Exchange; and he desir'd me to meet him at the Miter-Tavern within Aldgate, and ask for Number Five. I came at the time, and no body being there, I was going away, and met with a Countrey-man with a stick in his hand, that had but one Eye; he came and ask'd for the same Number: So the Gentleman sent his Boy after me, and told me one stay'd for me: When I came, he ask'd me if I ask'd for Number Five; and I said, Yes. By whose appointment? By Jesiah Keeling's, said I. So he ask'd the man of the house to shew a Room: He shew'd a Box, but he would have a Room, and went up stairs, and call'd for Pipes and a Candle, and a pint of Wine. In a little while Keeling came in, and brought Barber and Thompson; and no body spake almost any thing but Rumbold, (that was Rumbold with one eye, for Keeling when he came in call'd him Capt. Rumbold) and Rumbold talk'd about Priviledges and such things at first and he said his house was a convenient house, and there they might do the business: but before they had done, I found they design'd to kill the King, but nothing troubled him but killing the Pottillion, to kill a man in cold blood. But then says we, If you are for killing, we have done, and so broke up; that was the end of that. A while after Mr. Keeling went in, and made a Discovery: I never came among them afterwards. So after Mr. Keeling had discovered, I was in the Proclamation for being there at that meeting, and absconded my self, and lay hid. A matter of two months after, Mrs. Gaunt came to enquire of my Wife where I was, to speak with me; she brought her to me. She told me there were some persons about to make an escape, and would have me go along with them. I told her with all my heart: So I ask'd her which way and how they intended to go: She told me they had provided Horses to ride down to Rochford-Hundred, and there was a Vessel to carry them over; and, says she, be ready by such an evening, and I will call for you. Accordingly she did and had me into Bishopsgate-street, and in Half-moon-Alley in a little Brew-house, up stairs in a Chamber, there were both the Rumbolds, one of them did not go, and the other and I lay there all night, and in the morning a man came and called us away, and we went to White-Chappel to take Horse, to ride down to Rochford-Hundred, and staid for the Vessel two days; and when we met the Vessel, it was a small Vessel, and bad weather, and the Master of the Vessel had but one hand, and two Boys, one a very little one; and we went down the Creek, and I asked the man where he did intend to land us; and he told us at Ostend. said I, I understood we were to go for Holland to the Brill. Says he, My Vessel is only able to go to Ostend or Dunkirk, either of them. Says Rumbold, I don't understand the Sea. Says I, This is a very small Vessel, and leaky, and the man not able to manage it. Says I, I will go back again to London. Says he, I will do as you do; and we both parted at London, and I never saw him afterwards, till I saw him at Amsterdam. I lay by a great many months after; then Mrs. Gaunt came to me again, and told me there was two other persons going and I might have a passage if I would go: So she bid me be ready by such an evening, and I was ready, and a Boat being ready at the water-side, carried me to Gravesend, where I went in a Vessel to Amsterdam.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where were you?

Mr. Burton. I was with my Wife at my Daughters: I had a Daughter married, her Husband was drown'd.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came Mrs. Gaunt to take so much care of you? give the Court an account.

Mr. Burton. She might think I knew something of her Husband if I should be taken; I suppose that might be the chief thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. What had her Husband done?

Mr. Burton. Her Husband, I suppose, knew something of the business.

Mr. Att. Gen. What business?

Mr. Burton. About seizing the Tower: He came to me, and would have had me gone with him with Capt. Walcot to the Tower, to see what force there was of Soldiers; and Capt. Walcot said he had a design to take an house over against the Tower, to put in some men there to break in upon the Tower, and Gaunt was with him.

L. C. J. Jones. What discourse had you with her about the Plot?

Mr. Burton. Nothing with her.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was it she would help you away for?

Mr. Burton. I suppose this was the reason, because she knew I knew her Husband was concern'd.

Mr. North. Did she assist you with any money?

Mr. Burton. Yes.

Mr. North. How much?

Mr. Burton. She gave me a parcel of money just as I was going away; I put it among other money.

Mr. North. How much? 30 or 40 s.?

Mr. Burton. More than that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you gone from your own house when this woman came to you?

Mr. Burton. My own house was broke up a great while before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you appear publickly when she came to you?

Mr. Burton. No an't please you.

L. C. J. Jones. Had there been any search for you before?

Mr. Burton. Yes.

Mr. North. You were in the Proclamation at this time?

Mr. Burton.

Mr. Burt n. Yes an't please you, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did she carry you to Rumbold?

Mr. Burton. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any discourse between Rumbold and her?

Mr. Burton. No. There was an elderly man in the house, I did not know him, carried me up to Rumbold, there was both of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. What money had you of her?

Mr. Burton. I believe about 5*l.* I told her I had lain a great while, and money was very bare with me; and she told me she would get me a little.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did she know what you were conceal'd for?

Mr. Burton. Every body knew that, because I was in the Proclamation.

Mr. North. What directions did she give you how you should behave your self when she went with you to Bishopsgate-street? how did she say you must carry your self?

Mr. Burton. Nothing there, she gave no order about that.

L. C. J. Jones. Did she tell you you were concern'd in the Plot with her Husband?

Mr. Burton. She did not tell me so, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you tell her you were concern'd in the Plot with her Husband?

Mr. Burton. I did not tell her so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were the two Men that were prepared to go with you that time?

Mr. Burton. One Patchil.

Mr. Att. Gen. He was kill'd in the Fight. Was Patchil in the Fight?

Mr. Burton. Yes, an't please you, he was killed.

Mr. Att. Gen. And who was the other?

Mr. Burton. T'other was a Man liv'd in South-wark; I never saw him before.

Mr. Com. Serj. What Directions did she give you about your own Name, or any others when you went in the Boat?

Mr. Burton. If I knew any body, that I should not take notice I knew them.

L. C. J. Jones. You were not to take any Acquaintance of any body in the Boat?

Mr. Just. Withins. Hark you, Sir, you looked upon all those to be engaged in the Plot. All that she endeavour'd to save were of the same level?

Mr. Burton. Rumbold was; Rumbold was in the Proclamation.

L. C. J. Jones. Did she tell you, that you were in the Proclamation?

Mr. Burton. No, an't please your Lordship, she did not tell me so.

Mr. North. Did she never discourse of your being in the Proclamation?

Mr. Burton. No, not as I remember; it was a general thing.

Mr. Just. Withins. But why should she come to you to transport you, if it were not for such a thing?

Mr. Burton. Her Husband was with me about going to the Tower.

Mr. Att. Gen. Burton, pray thus, when you came from the West, what Overtures were to help you here from her or her Husband?

Mr. Burton. Her Husband was with me at Fernley's House, and he told me there were two or three Persons to go in two or three Days, and I should go along with them.

Mr. Att. Gen. You named your Daughter, what is her Name?

Mr. Burton. Mary Gilbert.

Then Mary Gilbert was called and sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know Mrs. Gaunt?

Mary Gilbert. Yes, Sir, I know her; she was our Neighbour.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then give an account of her coming to you about your Father.

Mary Gilbert. She came to our House that Night my Father went away. I never heard a Word of the Discourse that past, for I always went out of the way.

Mr. Just. Withins. Why did you go out of the way?

Mary Gilbert. Because they were not willing I should hear the Discourse.

Mr. Com. Serj. You are upon your Oath, Mistress, you must tell the Truth.

Mary Gilbert. I do, Sir, I will tell no more.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see your Father go away? Who did he go with, in what Company?

Mary Gilbert. I can't tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Mrs. Gaunt go with him?

Mary Gilbert. I met my Father and Mrs. Gaunt in Houndsditch, my Mother and I were to meet them in Bishopsgate-street.

Mr. Com. Serj. Well, what was the reason why you did not meet?

Mary Gilbert. We were to meet at seven a Clock, and we went to the House, and they were not come; and we were coming home, and met them in Houndsditch, and my Father had Mrs. Gaunt under the Arm, and went back to a House without Bishopsgate.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Mrs. Gaunt carry him thither?

L. C. J. Jones. Do you know why your Father was to go away?

Mary Gilbert. He went upon the account of the Proclamation.

L. C. J. Jones. Then you knew of the Proclamation?

Mary Gilbert. Yes, Sir, I knew of the Proclamation.

Mr. Com. Serj. Whose Acquaintance was the Man in Bishopsgate-street?

Mary Gilbert. He was none of mine.

Council. When your Father went up Stairs into a Room, did you see any body with him?

Mary Gilbert. Yes, Sir, it was a Man that had but one Eye, a full set Man, full of Pock-holes; but I never saw him before nor after.

Council. How came you to see him?

Mary Gilbert. By going up Stairs to see my Father.

Mary Burton sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know Mrs. Gaunt there?

Mrs. Burton. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray will you tell the Court, how she came to enquire after your Husband?

Mrs. Burton. Yes, Sir, at my Daughter's House.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse happened between you?

Mrs. Burton. No Discourse, but she said if I was willing, my Husband should go away, and she would take care.

Mr. Att. Gen. But why should he go away?

Mrs. Burton. I don't know why, but only upon the Proclamation.

Council. Woman, did she take notice your Husband was gone from home, and had left his House?

Mrs. Burton. I knew my self, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Levins. Where did you go?

Mrs. Burton. My Husband went out of Doors by his own self, by Appointment, and we were to meet, my Child and I together, without Bishopsgate by the Catherine-wheel.

Mr. Com. Serj. Who made that Appointment?

Mrs. Burton. Mrs. Gaunt.

Mr. Com. Serj. Upon what account did she come to you to secure your Husband?

Mrs. Burton. Upon the account he was in the Proclamation, and I thought within my self, for fear my Husband should know any thing against her Husband; but I never said so, for I was glad my Husband should be helped away, willing to save his Life, for I knew it was Death.

Mr. Just. Levins. And you took that to be the meaning of it in reference to the Proclamation.

Mr. Att. Gen. How far did you live from her?

Mrs. Burton. Formerly we dwelt pretty near one another, when Mr. Gaunt kept a Tallow Chandlers Shop.

L. C. J. Jones. Woman, do you verily believe she knew your Husband was in the Proclamation?

Mr. Just. — Did you never see the Prisoner at the Bar at any time in Holland?

Mrs. Burton. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nor her Husband?

Mr. Burton. Nor her Husband.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ask you at this time when your Husband went away, and his House was search'd, how far did she live from you then?

Mrs. Burton. She had but Lodgings, I don't know where her Dwelling-house was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where were her Lodgings?

Mrs. Burton. At the upper end of Old-Gravel-Lane, and my Daughter in the middle of Gravel-Lane, in Worster-street, as far as it may be to New-gate, thereabouts.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it taken notice of all over the Street that the House was searched and your Husband gone? Was that taken notice of in the Neighbourhood?

Mrs. Burton. Yes, yes.

Council. Between the time your Husband went first away, and the time she came to take care of him, had you no Discourse about the reason of his going away, nor of the Proclamation?

Mrs. Burton. No.

L. C. J. Jones. What say you Woman, to this Evidence, several Witnesses say you were very busie in contriving the escape of Burton, what was the reason why you would send him away?

Mrs. Gaunt. I did not contrive to send him away.

L. C. J. Jones. The Woman says so, Burton says so, the Daughter says the same.

Mrs. Gaunt. Where Sir?

L. C. J. Jones. At Bishopsgate or Houndsditch.

Mrs. Gaunt. I deny it.

L. C. J. Jones. And you gave him Money afterwards.

Mrs. Gaunt. Who saw me give it him?

L. C. J. Jones. He swears it.

Mrs. Gaunt. He was the more beholden to me.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you or did you not?

Captain Richardson. She says she is not come here to tell your Lordship what she did.

L. C. J. Jones. Woman, did not you hear that Burton's Name was in the Proclamation about Rumbold's Plot?

Mrs. Gaunt. It is like I might.

Vol. III.

L. C. J. Jones. You might hear it.

Mrs. Gaunt. Yes.

L. C. J. Jones. And yet you would by all means help him to escape?

Mrs. Gaunt. I can say nothing against it, if they swear it.

L. C. J. Jones. Do you know what you are charg'd withal? You are accused for relieving and comforting Burton, whom you knew to have committed Treason.

Mrs. Gaunt. My Lord, he says so.

L. C. J. Jones. And for helping him to escape, and giving him Money in order to it.

Mrs. Gaunt. He says so.

L. C. J. Jones. He swears so; what do you say?

Mrs. Gaunt. Is that sufficient?

Mr. Just. — Ay, and another swears it, that is sufficient.

Mrs. Gaunt. I have not heard any body else swear it.

Mr. Justice — Yes, his Wife.

Mrs. Gaunt. Not about the Money.

Mr. Justice — You came and solicited him to go several times.

Mrs. Gaunt. It is very untrue, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you know his House had been search'd to find him?

Mrs. Gaunt. I did not know it a great while, since I might know.

Here Burton's Pardon was produced again.

Mr. Just. Wishins. It is a Pardon for Burton, now he is a good Witness, Gentlemen.

L. C. J. Jones. Have you any more, Woman, to say for your self? if you can, tell us any other Cause than that he was guilty of Treason wherein your Husband was concern'd.

Mrs. Gaunt. No, I deny that, that I knew my Husband was concern'd in any thing of that kind.

L. C. J. Jones. Wherefore then would you take so much care to send him away?

Mrs. Gaunt. I don't tell you, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. You don't tell us, but the Witnesses have sworn it.

Mrs. Gaunt. I must leave it to them.

L. C. J. Jones. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Woman stands indicted for High Treason for concealing, comforting and relieving one James Burton, a Person that had committed High-Treason; and for endeavouring that he might make his escape, and giving him 5 l. in Money. Gentlemen, the Evidence that is given, is by Burton, his Wife and his Daughter. Burton says that this Woman was very solicitous several times to help to send him beyond Sea. He does tell you, that when there was a Plot against the Life of the King, wherein Rumbold was concern'd, and one of the chief Actors, that he himself was present at one of the Consultations concerning it, and that afterwards he did withdraw himself from the Company, as he says; but he says, that this Woman's Husband being likewise concern'd in the Plot, and this Woman, as he believes, knowing that he was able to make some Discovery concerning her Husband, and knowing also his danger in respect of his own guilt, she endeavours to send him away first to Roehford, and so to go beyond Sea. And afterwards in another place in Houndsditch, and from thence he was to be conveyed beyond Sea. It is true, there is no direct Proof that there was any particular mention that Burton was in the Proclamation for that Treason, but the Woman says, and Burton himself says, that they do both verily believe, that the Prisoner at the Bar did know he was in the Proclamation, and therefore there was no particular Discourse concerning it; and she her self being examined, says, she might hear that his Name was in the Proclamation, and she might hear that his House was searched; and that he could not be found; and yet notwithstanding all this, she endeavours to conceal him. What can be the meaning of all this in this Woman, but that she was very zealous to maintain the Conspiracy, and was a great Assistant to all Persons that were concern'd in it? She will not tell you any other Cause wherefore she should be concerned to convey this Man beyond Sea, and therefore in all reason you ought to conceive it was for this; it was a known Cause, made known to all People by the King's Proclamation. If you believe she did know or believe Burton to have been guilty of that Treason, and that she did help to convey him away, as the Witnesses have proved that she did, by giving him Money, and soliciting him several times to be gone, then you ought to find her guilty.

G g g g

self

Then the Jury desiring to ask a Question, Burton was called again, but being gone out of Court, was sent for, and Mr. Cornish was set to the Bar.

Clerk. Henry Cornish, Hold up thy Hand; you of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner and hearken to his Cause; he stands indicted by the Name of Henry Cornish, late of the Parish of St. Michael Bassishaw, in the Ward of Bassishaw, London, Merchant, &c. as before in the Indictment. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraign'd, and thereunto pleaded Not Guilty, &c.

Mr. Phipps. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn, Henry Cornish, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted, for that he knowing that the late Duke of Monmouth, William Russel, Esq; the late Lord Gray, and other Traytors, had conspired the Death of the late King, and to raise Rebellion in this Kingdom, did promise to aid and assist them in compassing this wicked Imagination, against the Duty of his Allegiance, &c. to this he hath pleaded not guilty, &c.

Mr. Cornish. I am innocent of the whole matter.

Officer. Burton is come.

L. C. J. Jones. Let us make an end of that first. In the Evidence that you give against Elizabeth Gaunt, you said that you did receive Money from her, 5 l. or some such Sum.

Mr. Burton. Yes, an't please your Lordship.

L. C. J. Jones. Did she owe you any Money?

Mr. Burton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Upon what accompt was it you receiv'd that Money?

Mr. Burton. She gave it me.

L. C. J. Jones. Upon what accompt was it? To assist you in your escape?

Mr. Burton. She knew I was bare of Money, and gave it me of her free Will.

L. C. J. Jones. And it was at that time you went away?

Mr. Burton. Yes.

Mr. Just. Withins. It was to assist you in your escape?

Mr. Burton. Yes, I believe so.

Mr. Corn. Serj. Who paid your Boat-hire?

Mr. Burton. I paid none, I don't know, the Waterman can tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Mr. Cornish, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted for contriving the Death of the late King, and for raising Rebellion in the Kingdom, and is charged that he did consent to be assisting to that Rebellion that was then designed; it is not unknown to you, Gentlemen, for there have been several Tryals of that Conspiracy, that there was a great Rebellion design'd in England by the late Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Russel, and Sir Thomas Armstrong; and particularly Gentlemen, there was a Meeting (which already hath appeared in publick) at Mr. Sheppard's House, where the Lord Russel, the late Duke of Monmouth, Sir Thomas Armstrong, Mr. Rumsey, and the late Lord Gray, met to consider and adjust matters. At that Meeting Mr. Cornish indeed came in very late (for he was invited and knew their Design then) he came in late, and so was not at the whole Discourse; but there was a Declaration framed to be put out when they should Rise, and they did acquaint Mr. Cornish with it, and they read it to Mr. Cornish, and Mr. Cornish did like it very well, and promised he would be assisting, as we will prove to you Gentlemen. Another instance of Mr. Cornish's Rebellion, for I need not tell you what part he acted when he was Sheriff, and maintain'd That that was the ground Work of the Rebellion, setting the Commonalty against the Government of the City. Another instance we will give you is, His Under-Sheriff that was employed to divide the City, and to raise Men within the City, having discourse with Mr. Cornish about settling that matter, he liked it very well, and promis'd he would be assisting to him, and you may easily presume Mr. Goodenough the Under-Sheriff was very privy to all the Acts of Mr. Cornish at that time. We will call our Witnesses. Mr. Rumsey.

Mr. Cornish. I desire the Witnesses may be kept apart.

Mr. Att. Gen. They are so two times.

Mr. Cornish. You will find me guilty of neither; I am as innocent as any Person in this Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. So was my Lord Russel to his Death, Mr. Cornish: do you remember that?

Mr. Cornish. Mr. Attorney General, I speak in the Presence of the great God, I am as innocent as any Man in this Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Rumsey, pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an account of the Insurrection that was to have been in England, in the late King's Time, and what concern the Prisoner had in that Affair.

Mr. Rumsey. My Lord, about the latter end of October, or the beginning of November, my Lord Shaftsbury desired me to go to Mr. Sheppard's House, where there was a Meeting of those Gentlemen that I did name before, the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Russel, my Lord Gray, Sir Thomas Armstrong, and Mr. Ferguson, and Mr. Sheppard, and accordingly I went; I came late there my self, for they were just going away, when I came in; I told them my Message, and they told me they were disappointed by Mr. Trenchard. I had not been there a quarter of an Hour, but we were going away, and Mr. Sheppard was call'd for by his Man, and he went down Stairs and brought up Mr. Cornish; and when he came into the Room, he told the Gentlemen there met, that Mr. Alderman Cornish was come; so as soon as Mr. Alderman Cornish came into the Room, he made his Excuse to the Gentlemen that he did not come sooner, sooner, and that he could not stay with them; the reason why he could not stay with them, he told them, was, that they were to meet that Night about their Charter, and there was never another Alderman in Town but himself, and therefore he could not stay, there was a necessity of an Alderman to be there. And upon that Mr. Ferguson opened his Bosom, and from under his Stomacher pull'd out a Paper; they told him, they had that Paper read, and desired to read it to him: Mr. Ferguson read it, and Mr. Sheppard held the Candle all the while that it was reading; and after they had read it, they asked him how he liked it, and he did say he liked it very well.

L. C. J. Jones. What were the Contents of that Paper?

Mr. Rumsey. The first part of it was complaining of the misgovernment of the late King; there were two Points in it that I do remember very well, that they would declare for: One was, Liberty of Conscience; and t'other was, That all those that would assist in that Insurrection, that had any Lands of the Church, or the Kings, in the late War, should have them restored to them.

L. C. J. Jones. Was there any thing in that Paper that did engage any Body to an Insurrection?

Mr. Rumsey. I did not hear all the Paper, nor did I take great notice of it; but those two Points were in it, to engage them that would assist.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the effect of the Paper?

Mr. Rumsey. It was to be a Declaration upon the Rising; when the Rising was to have been, this was to have been dispersed abroad.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Rumsey, was there a Rising intended at that time?

Mr. Rumsey. Yes, and they met there for that purpose; and Mr. Trenchard was the Man to manage the Business about Taunton, and he dis-appointed them.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was your Message from my Lord Shaftsbury to them?

Mr. Rumsey. It was to know what issue they had come to about the Rising, and to press them to it, for such a matter as that was not to be long kept afoot; either let them come to a Resolution to rise, or let it fall for good and all.

Mr. Att. Gen. After Mr. Cornish had expressed his liking of this Business and Declaration, what follow'd?

Mr. Rumsey. He did say, he liked it very well; and that poor Interest he had, he would joyn with it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Speak that again.

Mr. Rumsey. Mr. Cornish did say, he did like the Declaration, and with the small Interest he had, he would appear to back it, or Words to that Effect.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, since he takes the Freedom to charge me with these things, I never was at a Consult in my Days.

Mr. Just. Levins. You were not then at Mr. Sheppard's that Night?

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you deny you were at Mr. Sheppard's that Night?

Mr. Cornish. I do declare, I never was at Mr. Sheppard's in any Consult in my Life, as he declares; but I have had great Dealings with Mr. Sheppard.

L. C. J. Jones. You shall be allowed your Liberty; pray, Sir, be not transported with Passion.

I doubt, before this time, notwithstanding the Confidence you seem to have, there are few believe you to be as innocent as any Person present.

Mr. Att. Gen. You will hear more from his Oracle.

Mr. Just. Levins. Were you there when my Lord Russel was there?

Mr. Cornish. I was not there when my Lord Russel was there, as I remember.

L. C. J. Jones. Were you present, hear, hear, Sir: were you present at Sheppard's when Ferguson was there?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I have been at Sheppard's several times, but I never liked the Man for his Morals, and therefore never liked to be in his Company.

L. C. J. Jones. He pull'd the Paper out of his Bosom.

Mr. Cornish. It is as great an untruth as ever was told in the World; bur, my Lord, seeing he takes this Freedom to charge me, I desire to know whether he stands here as a lawful Evidence?

L. C. J. Jones. What is your Exception?

Mr. Cornish. He stands charged guilty of Treason.

L. C. J. Jones. That it self does not disable him to be a Witness.

Mr. Cornish. Before he hath his Pardon, my Lord?

L. C. J. Jones. I don't know whether he hath his Pardon or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is no Indictment at all upon him.

Mr. Just. Levins. If he were convicted, or outlawed of Treason, it were something; an innocent Man may be charged.

Mr. Rumsey. My Lord, Mr. Cornish and I have been very well acquainted these fourteen Years or thereabouts, and have had great Concerns together; for during the time that I managed the King's Customs at Bristol, six Years I was there Collector, he did return between three and four hundred thousand Pound for me; he is a very honest Gentleman, and I appeal to himself, whether I take delight to appear here to accuse him.

Mr. Cornish. But Colonel, what is the reason that you have not accused me all this while?

Mr. Rumsey. Mr. Cornish, I hope that is not an Objection, I think I suffer for it and not you; it was Compassion, and the same Compassion makes you deny it to save others; if you would deal openly, I make no doubt, but you might partake of the King's Favour yet, as well as I have done.

Mr. Cornish. I do thankfully accept of His Majesties Favour at all times, but I thank God I am innocent in this matter, and do not stand in need of it.

Mr. Rumsey. And you say I accuse you falsely; then Mr. Cornish, you don't stand there nor I here.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, will you ask him any Questions?

L. C. J. Jones. But pray don't enter into a long Harangue.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I do humbly conceive, that he does not stand here as an Evidence.

L. C. J. Jones. You have the Judgment of the Court for that.

Mr. Cornish. Before he is pardon'd?

L. C. J. Jones. I don't talk of a Pardon; what Record have you against him?

Mr. Att. Gen. You were present and heard that resolv'd before in my Lord Russel's Case.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, Mr. Rumsey did upon his Evidence give in, and he was obliged by his Oath to speak the whole Truth.

L. C. J. Jones. Now you are making your Speech, it is not your proper time; you shall urge any thing against Mr. Rumsey's Evidence, or the credibility of it when it is your time.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I do here design it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Rumsey, pray recollect; had you never any Discourse with him at other times?

Mr. Rumsey. We have had a long Acquaintance, fourteen Years, but in my Life, I never heard him speak any thing before or since that, to my Knowledge.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Cornish, will you ask him any more Questions?

Mr. Cornish. I desire to know —

Mr. Rumsey. What would you know?

Mr. Cornish. Whether did you and I discourse of these matters at any other time?

Mr. Rumsey. No.

Mr. Just. Levins. You must not stand to dialogue between one another, but speak as we may hear you.

L. C. J. Jones. You shall argue if you will, when you come to make your Defence in the proper time, the improbability of any thing that he hath said, or the impossibility, or repugnancy to any Truth, or any Evidence that you can give to the contrary; but I say, this is not your time.

Mr. Cornish. I never was at any Consult in my Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is a Name he gives it; was you never at a Meeting about a Rising?

Mr. Goodenough sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Goodenough, are you acquainted with Mr. Cornish?

Mr. Goodenough. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I humbly conceive he is not a Witness, he stands indicted upon an Outlawry; I can produce it.

Mr. Att. Gen. We do admit it.

L. C. J. Jones. They admit your Exception, and will answer it by producing a Pardon.

Mr. Cornish. I need not say any thing against him, he is known well enough.

Mr. Just. Withins. He was your Under Sheriff, Mr. Cornish.

Mr. Cornish. Much against my Will; I oppos'd him to the utmost; and this is nothing but Malice against me.

Mr. Goodenough's Pardon Read.

Mr. Cornish. I do humbly conceive this can't be done, but by a Writ of Errour, or an Act of Parliament.

L. C. J. Jones. Can't the King pardon an Outlawry?

Mr. Just. Withins. That is no piece of Law, I am sure of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Goodenough, pray what do you know of a Rising intended against the late King?

Mr. Goodenough. All that I have to give an account of is a Discourse —

Mr. Att. Gen. Answer what I ask you; what do you know of a Rising by others?

Mr. Goodenough. I know nothing of that Business of my Lord Russel's; but there was a Design to rise, Sir, in London; we design'd to divide it into twenty parts, and out of each part to raise five hundred Men, if it might be done, to make an Insurrection.

L. C. J. Jones. What were these Men to do when they were raised?

Mr. Goodenough. They were to take the Tower, and drive the Guards out of Town.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, acquaint my Lord and the Jury what Discourse you had with Mr. Cornish.

Mr. Goodenough. Before this was agreed on by us, I chanced to be at Alderman Cornish's; Sir, said I, now the Law won't defend us, tho' we be never so innocent; but some other way is to be thought on; upon this, said he, I wonder the City is so unready, and the Country so ready. I said to him again, Sir, there is something thought of to be done here; but, says I, in the first place, the Tower ought to be seized, where the Magazine is; upon this he made a little Pause, and said, I will do what I can, or what good I can, to this purpose he answered me; and about some time after, he met me upon the Exchange, and asked me, how Affairs went? which I understood to be relating to what we discours'd; this is all that I can say. I never met after this, but only upon the Exchange, he ask'd how matters went.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Discourse about seizing the Guards?

Mr. Goodenough. I have told you the whole Discourse.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, repeat it.

Mr. Goodenough. I told him, says I, Sir, now it is plain, the Law will not defend us, tho' we are never so innocent, or to this purpose.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Upon what occasion was that Discourse?

Mr. Goodenough. Every thing going against us.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How?

Mr. Goodenough. This was in Easter Term, as near as I can remember, 83.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, 83.

Mr. Goodenough. Therefore, says I, something else is to be thought on, some Course else is to be taken: to this purpose he answered me, I wonder the City is so unready, and the Country so ready.

L. C. Baron. What Country?

Mr. Goodenough. He had been in the Country, as I understood before, that I don't know.

Mr. Cornish. What time was this, Sir?

Mr. Goodenough. In Easter Term, or thereabouts, 83. I told him then, Sir, there is something thought of to be done here in London, to this purpose; but says I, in the first place, the Tower is to be seiz'd, where the Magazine is; so he answered me, after some Pause (he paused upon it) says he, I will do what good I can, or what I can, to this purpose.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he seem to dislike seizing the Tower at all?

Mr. Goodenough. Not at all, Sir, it did not appear so to me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Discourses had you any other time?

Mr. Goodenough. I never had any Discourse of this matter, or any thing relating to it at any other time, but only when I came upon the Exchange, how things went.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And did you give him an account?

Mr. Goodenough. I said, Well. I gave him a general Answer, for that was not a place to talk in, and that I apprehended of this Discourse.

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you any other matters?

Mr. Goodenough. I had some other matters of managing the Riot, that was brought against him, and several others, and my self also.

L. C. J. Jones. Will you ask him any Questions, Mr. Cornish?

Mr. Cornish. Whether his Pardon be allowed?

L. C. J. Jones. We heard it read.

Mr. Cornish. This being a Court inferiour to the King's Bench—

L. C. J. Jones. Here is a Pardon under the Great Seal, Sir, and here is a Pardon of that Offence which you charge him with, and which you take to be a sufficient Exception against his being a Witness, we are satisfied it is sufficient.

Mr. Cornish. Pray, my Lord, is not this Pardon special?

L. C. J. Jones. What do you mean by that?

Mr. Cornish. Because, my Lord, he hath been in an Act of Treason since; therefore, my Lord, if he be not pardoned of that—

L. C. J. Jones. No, no, he is not indicted for it; we can't try him now for any Treason of that nature.

Mr. Cornish. I humbly conceive he hath not had a Pardon for his last Treason.

L. C. J. Jones. I must tell you, if he be guilty of Treason, till he is tried and convicted, it doth not take off his Testimony.

Mr. Cornish. Pray, Mr. Goodenough, remember all your Tricks, whether or no, was there any body present when this Discourse past between you and I?

Mr. Goodenough. No body but you and I.

Mr. Cornish. You were not so conversant in my House, I know.

Mr. Goodenough. Sir, I came to you about the business of the Riot.

Mr. Cornish. How many times might you be at my House? not three times, I believe.

L. C. J. Jones. You ask a Question, and answer it your self.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I desire to know, where it was these Words were spoke.

Mr. Goodenough. Sir, in your lower Room.

Mr. Cornish. In my own House?

Mr. Goodenough. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Cornish. And no Company there?

Mr. Goodenough. And no Company.

Mr. Cornish. That is very strange, and that afterwards you should meet me, and discourse this matter again.

Mr. Goodenough. No, Sir, all I say, is this, you met me upon the Exchange, and asked me how things went.

Mr. Cornish. That might be in Reference to the Suit you were managing for the Rioters; I know of nothing else.

Mr. Just. Withins. And I tell you, Mr. Cornish, that was a Branch of the Plot; take that from me.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, he was Attorney in that Cause, and I might ask, how matters went in reference to that Tryal, but I take God to witness, nothing else, as I remember.

L. C. J. Jones. But here you say, it was a strange thing that Mr. Goodenough and you should be in a Room alone, when you acknowledge him to have been the Attorney in a Cause of mighty Consequence among you.

Mr. Cornish. He was concern'd for all, and I steadfastly believe he was never with me twice about that Suit; but he hath been at Sir Thomas Player's; there he often went about that Affair, and I do not believe that ever he came to me about that Business.

L. C. J. Jones. Is that all you have to say to him, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you ask him any more Questions? if not, go on, we have done.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, Colonel Rumsey is a Person that hath acquainted the Court, that there was a long acquaintance between him and me. I have served His Majesty in my Place, and do it to this Day. My Lord, it is a very improbable thing, that I should meet him at Mr. Sheppard's, where I saw such wicked horrible Doings; and that he should never afterwards speak to me about that affair; he came to my House, I remember, about the return of some Monies for his own private Use; for he was then out of his Majesties Employment. He does declare here, he never said a Word to me, never spake to me any thing of it but there. My Lord, it is a very strange thing, that there should be such a Contrivance to ruin the King and Kingdom, and that I should be one in this Business, this Villany, and not be consulted how to carry it on, it is very strange, they should see me, and never say a Word of it afterwards to me. My Lord, I hope, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, that you will consider the improbability of it; it is as improbable as any thing in the World. I hope it doth appear to your Lordship and this Bench, that there is no probability in it; he owns we had a great deal of Freedom; he owns we were acquainted for fourteen Years together, and that I should be at such a wicked villainous place once, and see him so often afterwards, and never speak of it, and never say any thing of it, the Great God of Heaven and Earth, before whom I stand, knows that I know nothing of all that he hath sworn against me: He must swear these things to save his own Life; if he will take away my Life, he will take away many others, without question, if he can save his own. I should not urge this, but God is my Witness, I never heard any thing of a Contrivance or Plot, till my Lord Russel's Tryal: These are very strange things, if so be so good a Government as we have, shall not protect such innocent Men; truly, my Lord, I am as innocent as any Man in this Court, if I were to appear before the great God in Judgment this Moment.

L. C. J. Jones. Look you, Mr. Cornish, I would with all my Heart allow you all the Liberty imaginable, to speak pertinently to your Defence, but to oppose Confidence, and very great Assurance, upon your being in the Presence of Almighty God, against express Testimony, is the weakest Defence that can be; if you have any Witnesses, if you have any thing to urge against the Testimony of any of these Persons, besides the improbability of it, which you have often mentioned over and over again; you shall be heard with all Patience, if you have Witnesses that you will call, we will hear them likewise.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord I think his Treason being confessed, and not being pardoned—

Mr. Just. Withins. Is that all you will say, Mr. Cornish?

Mr. Cornish. I hope you will bear a little with me, I am highly concerned.

L. C. J. Jones. You are so.

Mr. Cornish. I have had no help, and it is well known, I am not skilful in the Law. I don't understand what to say, nor how to plead my Cause, having no help, nor no assistance allowed me. My Lord, it is a most improbable thing that I should be at this place, where this horrible Wick- edness was, and that it should lie all this time never mention'd : I have been my Lord, several times in Prison this Year, and I think my Vertue will be so much the greater, to be again and again purged, as I have been ; that which hath pleased me very much, hath been my innocency : Would any Man in my Circumstances have stay'd and continued in this Nation, if he had not known himself perfectly innocent ? Others have gone away, and I could as freely have gone, after I have been taken up four times.

L. C. J. Jones. I doubt there are a great many are not gone, Mr. Rumsey hath told you plainly, it was Compassion to you, though Injury to him- self, that he did not accuse you sooner.

Mr. Just. Levins. Here is Gaunt stay'd here till within this Week or Fortnight, and never stir'd.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Cornish, my Lord hath put you in the right way for your Defence, if you can invalidate the Testimony, or call any Witnesses, do it, but to talk at this rate, you may do it this Month (for ought I know) and 'twill signifie no more than it hath done already.

Mr. Cornish. The improbability is so manifest.

L. C. J. Jones. Is it enough to say, improbability, improbability, improbability ? Is that enough ? Have you said any more ?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I have said this, that this Gentleman that should be so conversant in the Town, I in his Company, and he in mine. Is it not improbable ? —

Mr. Just. Levins. Look you, Mr. Cornish, I will tell you what the Method is, to give Evidence first, and then apply it in summing up the Evidence ; if you were summing it up, the Court hath all the reason in the World to hear you ; if you have Evidence, the way is to give your Evidence, and apply it if you can.

Mr. Just. Withins. Have you any Witnesses.

Mr. Cornish. Against Mr. Rumsey.

Mr. Just. Withins. Against any body, Mr. Rumsey if you will.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I humbly conceive that this Witness, Mr. Rumsey, ought not to stand ; if your Lordship satisfies me I shall be very much obliged to your Lordship : He declared upon his Oath, when he swore against my Lord Russel, that he had nothing else to swear against any Man.

Mr. Just. Withins. How does it appear ?

Mr. Cornish. I will produce it, if your Lordship please to give me time.

Mr. Just. Withins. But afterwards he discover'd a great deal more.

L. C. J. Jones. Look you, Sir, if you have any Exception against Mr. Rumsey's Testimony, we will hear you, propound a legal Exception.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I humbly conceive, he not producing his Pardon, his Evidence is not good.

L. C. J. Jones. You have had the Opinion of the Court.

Mr. Cornish. If your Lordship over-rule me.

L. C. J. Jones. We must over-rule you.

Mr. Cornish. If that will not be granted me.

L. C. J. Jones. Then you have no more to say ?

Mr. Cornish. But for my innocency, for that (I know) I have enough to say.

L. C. J. Jones. That is in your own Breast, the Jury can't see that ; will you call any Wit- nesses ?

Mr. Cornish. I have some Witnesses to call here ; as to Mr. Goodenough, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. What is your Exception a- gainst Mr. Goodenough ?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, it was my most great Unhappiness and Misfortune, that this Goodenough was admitted into the Office of Under-Sheriff ; and my Lord, that I might fully convince your Lordship and this Court, all that I desire is, some few Men may be call'd ; besides, I think there are a thousand, I may say, that will bear me wit- nesses, I did oppose him.

L. C. J. Jones. But pray, Mr. Cornish, is that an Exception that he does not swear true, because you would not let him be your Under-Sheriff ?

Mr. Cornish. It looks like Malice.

L. C. J. Jones. You did admit him to be Under- Sheriff, all the World knows that.

Mr. Cornish. But I can set forth that I did op- pose him, and the reasons why I did oppose him.

L. C. J. Jones. You may, if you will, give Evidence, what an Instrument he was to you, and how he served you in your Office, when you were Sheriff : is this to the purpose ?

Mr. Cornish. Yes.

L. C. J. Jones. It is not at all to the purpose.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I was impos'd upon by my Partner.

L. C. J. Jones. You could not be impos'd upon, you had equal Power with your Partner.

Mr. Cornish. If your Lordship pleases to con- sider the Temper of that Man.

L. C. J. Jones. What Man ?

Mr. Cornish. Bethel, I mean, what an obstinate Man he was. My Lord, I hope I can purge my self greatly in these matters.

L. C. J. Jones. If you will, tell to what you will call them.

Mr. Cornish. The great Aversion that I had.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will admit that, he did op- pose him, because he would have had more Money.

Mr. Just. Withins. You have heard the Opinion of the Court.

Mr. Just. — It is not material whether he came in with or without your Consent.

Mr. Cornish. Mr. Gosfright, will you be pleas'd to declare to my Lord, how I was impos'd upon, by suffering Goodenough to be Under-Sheriff ?

Mr. Gosfright. My Lord, after that Bethel and Cornish were chosen Sheriffs, they had some Meet- ings together concerning an Under-Sheriff ; Mr. Bethel he named Goodenough, Mr. Cornish he named another ; they could not agree, the dif- ference did arise in three or four, or more Days Debate, as I remember, and Mr. Cornish did tell Sheriff Bethel, He was resolv'd if Goodenough were Under-Sheriff he would fine, and not hold, and told him the reason why : He said he was a Man that he would not trust a hair of his Head with, and he had no Knowledge he believ'd of the Bu- siness, but withal, he told him, he was a Man obnoxious to the Government, and he was an ill Man, man, and had done ill things, and he would not trust his Estate and his Reputation in the hands of such an Under-Sheriff: Bethel he insisted upon it, and he was resolved he would have Goodenough, and Cornish's Man should not be.

L. C. F. Jones. Who was Cornish's Man?

Mr. Gosfright. I know the Man, but forget his Name—

Millman.

L. C. F. Jones. Can you tell what Goodenough was to give for the Under-Sheriffwick?

Mr. Gosfright. No, indeed.

L. C. F. Jones. Was there no discourse?

Mr. Gosfright. Not in my hearing.

L. C. F. Jones. Was Goodenough Under-Sheriff to Cornish at last?

Mr. Gosfright. Yes Sir.

L. C. F. Jones. How did they agree?

Mr. Gosfright. I believe the animosities were so great, that they were never reconciled, for Cornish had so bespatter'd Goodenough that he was so ill a man, that Goodenough, I believe, could never digest it well.

L. C. F. Jones. Did you hear any angry words, after he was admitted to be Under-Sheriff?

Mr. Gosfright. Truly, I never was at Alderman Cornish's while he was Sheriff: But I heard that character of him.

L. C. F. Jones. And that was the reason you did not go to Mr. Cornish.

Mr. Gosfright. No, I believe Goodenough never came there, but I was at neither of their Houses.

Mr. Just. Levins. Pray, how many Juries did you help him in?

Mr. Gosfright. Truly I was so little acquainted, I could not help him.

Mr. Just. Levins. I hear other People say the contrary.

Mr. Gosfright. I was but newly come into England, and could know no Man.

Mr. Cornish. Alderman Love.

L. C. F. Jones. To what purpose do you call him, Sir? To the same?

Mr. Cornish. It is evidently to declare how much I was imposed upon.

L. C. F. Jones. Psha, I will tell the Jury, I will do this for you, upon this Man's Testimony, that you were unwilling that Goodenough should be Under-Sheriff.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, there is a great deal more in it.

L. C. F. Jones. What is there more? he never heard an angry word between you, during the time, he says, afterwards you admitted him to be Under-Sheriff?

Mr. Cornish. Mr. Love, will you please to declare to the Court, what aversion I had to Mr. Goodenough being the Under-Sheriff.

Mr. Love. My Lord, I did receive a Sub-pœna last Night, and I wonder'd at it, I confess, ever since I was so happy to get out of publick Employment, having apply'd my self to my private Affairs, I never came to Guild-Hall. But all I can say, is this, that when it was publicly talkt upon the Exchange, meeting Mr. Cornish upon the Exchange, I did hear him inclined to have another Man (one I don't know,) to be his Under-Sheriff, and that he did not like Mr. Goodenough, but was inclin'd to another Man, but it is so long ago, I believe I might perswade him, having been Sheriff above twenty years ago, to Mr. Hastings, an honest Man, I got my quietus est, without trouble: But I must say this for the Gentleman, I did hear him complain, that he was imposed upon to take this Man.

L. C. F. Jones. How long was this after the time?

Mr. Love. It was before they had pitched upon a man, and he was much inclined to one Mr. Milbourne or Millman, or some such name, that is all I can say.

L. C. F. Jones. Do you think we sit here to hear impertinencies; God forbid, Sir, I should hinder you from giving any Evidence: but this is not at all material.

Mr. Cornish. If your Lordship please to let Mr. Jekyl come, he will tell you what this man did declare, why I was against him.

L. C. F. Jones. If you had not entertain'd Mr. Goodenough, then there might be something of malice in it, but you did receive him.

Mr. Cornish. I had private Covenants with Bethel, before I would let him come into the Office. Mr. Jekyl, pray will you declare to my Lord, and the Jury, what aversion I had against Mr. Goodenough's being Under sheriff?

Mr. Jekyl. Truly, my Lord, Alderman Cornish and I, living near together, I had occasion to go to him, several times, about Bills of Exchange; and he told me, when he was Sheriff, how he was troubled with Bethel, because he would put Goodenough upon him, for I don't intend to have him, says he, for I know he is obnoxious to the King and Government, and desired me to speak to Mr. Bethel about it, but I had no acquaintance with him 'till he was Sheriff: And some came to me, to desire me to speak to Alderman Cornish to receive Goodenough. Truly, says I, I find him so averse against him, that it is not for me to persuade him, to take a Servant he must put such trust and confidence in, for I saw Alderman Cornish was so averse to it, that I would not do it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray do you think, in your Conscience, he was more obnoxious to the Government than his Partner, Sheriff Bethel, was?

Mr. Jekyl. I must confess, I have heard much of Sheriff Bethel, but I never heard that Cornish was any disaffected man to the Government.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But which was the most disaffected man to the Government, Bethel, or Goodenough?

Mr. Jekyl. Truly, as I remember, he said, he would not have him, because he was obnoxious to the King and Government.

Mr. Just. Withins. This Gentleman was in a limb of the Plot himself, as great a Rioter, and as hot as any of them, this Evidence that they call: I remember you, Mr. Jekyl, I'll assure you.

Mr. Cornish. If Sir William Turner be upon the Bench, I desire him to speak.

L. C. F. Jones. We will hear Sir William Turner any thing.

Mr. Cornish. I desire he would declare how I was used.

Sir William Turner. I don't remember that ever I saw Mr. Goodenough's face before this time, so I have nothing at all to say against him, nor can I say any thing, but what Mr. Cornish told me, and that was, he once came to my House some time after he was chosen Sheriff, and told me, that Mr. Bethel pressed very much for taking Goodenough to be his Under-sheriff, that he had no mind to accept him, and he would propose pose another, and it caused a great difference, but it was at last composed, but how I can't tell.

L. C. J. Jones. Now, Mr. Cornish, by my consent, if you will, call all the Aldermen upon the Bench; whether they will, or will not, say the same thing, for my part, I will agree, that they have given Evidence (if they will be contented themselves) to the same purpose.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I shall not give your Lordship unnecessary trouble, but I think it is convenient to call some Witnesses, to prove the manner of my Life and Conversation.

L. C. J. Jones. Your Life hath not been in the dark.

Mr. Cornish. The Dean of Canterbury, Dr. Tillotson, (who did not appear.)

L. C. J. Jones. Will any man attest your Loyalty in London?

Mr. Cornish. The Dean of Norwich, Dr. Sharp. Is the Dean of Norwich here?

Officer. No, Sir.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, hear is Mr. Lane, I desire he may be asked what he knows.

Mr. Lane. Upon the Tryal of my Lord Russel, according as Mr. Cornish desires I may be heard, it is with respect to Colonel Rumsey's Evidence; Colonel Rumsey says, in my Lord Russel's Tryal, he did not hear the Declaration read, because it was read before he came there.

Mr. North. Were you present at my Lord Russel's Tryal?

Mr. Lane. No, Sir.

Mr. Justice Levins. Sir, that signifies nothing.

Mr. Cornish. That is a very material thing, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. What is? it is no proof at all.

Mr. Cornish. Not the Printed Tryal?

L. C. J. Jones. No.

Mr. Cornish. It is by Authority.

L. C. J. Jones. Any body that was present may swear it.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I desire I may have the Minister of the Parish, Dr. Calamy, for my constancy at my Parish Church, and receiving the Sacrament, according to the Rites of the Church of England, that I am, to all appearance, a Person that does as well affect the Government as any man.

L. C. J. Jones. I doubt you are all appearance.

Dr. Calamy. My knowledge of Mr. Cornish hath been since I came to be Minister of the Parish, which is about two years, a little above two years; whenever he was in Town he did use to come to Church as constantly as any one, and come with his Family to Prayers, and did come to the Sacrament, and he did not only come at Easter, to save himself from a Presentment, but at our monthly Communion, and since I have been Minister of the place, I have often conversed with him: All that I can say, is, that I never heard him say a disrespectful word of the Government.

L. C. J. Jones. I hope he took you to be a man of another Kidney.

Dr. Calamy. I marked his words, because of the Character I had heard of him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what was the Character he had before those two years?

Dr. Calamy. That was what was publick.

Mr. Cornish. Joseph Reeve, Esq;

Mr. Reeve. My Lord, I received a Sub-pœna, from the Prisoner at the Bar, yesterday. I have been acquainted with him about fourteen or fifteen years, and had a considerable trade with him, and sometimes we had some conversation, and drank a glass of Wine together; I thought he was always very Loyal, and drank the late King's Health, and this King's Health, and all the Royal Family. I have no more to say.

Mr. Cornish. Mr. John Cook.

L. C. J. Jones. What do you examine this Witness to?

Mr. Cook. My Lord, I have dealt with him for these twenty years last past, I always found him a very honest man, and a just man, and very upright in his dealing, I always reckon'd him a very honest just man: I have dealt with him for great sums, and always knew him very just and upright.

L. C. J. Jones. Your Observation of him, as to the Government.

Mr. Cook. I never knew any thing to the contrary, but that he was always very Loyal.

Mr. Cornish. Mr. John Knap.

L. C. J. Jones. Mr. Cornish, it is not impossible for you to produce men enough, that shall say, they know nothing against you, concerning the Government, and that you have been a Loyal man, sure those you chuse will say so, you have chose them; and, perhaps, if it were the business of the King's Council, they could do contrary: you are not accused touching your general Conversation, but concerning a particular Fact.

Mr. Cornish. It is improbable I should be a Person ever concern'd in these matters, if you consider, you find Cornish mentioned only about being there.

L. C. J. Jones. Does not Mr. Rumsey tell you the meaning why?

Mr. Cornish. It is very strange a Man should be at such a Hellish Meeting, and I see him over and over so many times, and never speak of it again.

L. C. J. Jones. Mr. Cornish, Do not you know that Goodenough could not be produced, till the Rebellion in the West?

Mr. Cornish. Is it probable that I should entertain any Treasonable Discourse with Mr. Goodenough, when I had so much opposed him in coming in to the Office?

L. C. J. Jones. But you let him in.

Mr. Cornish. It is known to hundreds in this Town, that I was imposed upon by an unreasonable Man, my Innocency is as great as any Man's, and my Virtue should be considered, when I have been under these impositions; I have been Loyal and Dutiful to my Prince, and Faithful to the Government in all respects; I have opposed all manner of Heats, as much as any Man whatsoever; I can bring hundreds to shew, that where I heard Heats I allay'd them, and it is strange I should be such a Man as I am represented here.

L. C. J. Jones. Have you done, Sir?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I have thus much further to say, that I do think there is no probability that I could be at this Meeting; though a Man should have a care how he takes Gods Name in vain, I have said it, and I do in the presence of the Great God of Heaven declare it, I was never at the Debate about these Affairs; I take the Great God to Witness, I would not do it for a whole World, if I were not innocent. My Lord, it is most improbable what Mr. Rumsey says.

L. C. J.

L. C. F. Jones. It is a probable thing that Rumsey should forswear himself, it is a probable thing that Goodenough should forswear himself, who have taken the Great God to witness to the truth of what they swear against you, but it is improbable that Mr. Cornish should not speak the truth.

Mr. Cornish. I will call some other Friends, if your Lordship please, to prove my Loyalty.

Mr. Knap. I ever found him a fair, good Pay-master.

Mr. Attor Gen. He calls you for his Loyalty. Did you never hear him speak any thing against the Government?

Mr. Knap. I have not been in his Company but now and then.

Mr. Cornish. Did you ever know me speak any thing against the Government?

Mr. Knap. No Sir.

L. C. F. Jones. I marvel that you, who have been an Alderman a great while, don't call some of the Aldermen; you have call'd Sir William Turner, a very worthy Alderman, I wonder you don't call some others of your Brethren, that are known Persons.

Mr. Cornish. Mr. Carleton.

Mr. Carleton. I have been acquainted with my Cousin Cornish ever since the year 61, when, being a Merchant, Trading in Cloth, I began my acquaintance with him, and afterwards, he recommended me to the Party I married, and being Relations, we had great intimacy together; I have been several times at his House, he did always assure me of his Loyalty; I have told him what I have heard People say abroad, but he did assure me he was Loyal, and I do hope the very same of him.

L. C. F. Jones. But you remember you have heard that he was not a Person of such eminent Loyalty.

Mr. Carleton. That was upon the account, my Lord, of his being in with Besbel, but he he did always assure me of it.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I hope your Lordship will consider what temper the Man was of that I was to be with, and how obstinate he was, and I hope I shall not answer for his Crimes.

Mr. Just.—Mr. Cornish, Why did you qualifie your self to serve with him? for you were not at first qualified.

Mr. Cornish. I had been Travelling up and down in the Country.

Mr. Just.—At that time to qualifie your self to be an Officer, then you could lay aside all your Scruples, and receive the Sacrament.

Mr. Cornish. Joseph Smart, Esq;

Mr. Smart. I have known Mr. Cornish above these twenty years, and dealt with him considerably, I never knew him but a very fair Dealer.

Mr. Cornish. Mr. William Crouch.

Mr. Crouch. I have had acquaintance a great while with Mr. Cornish, and have had several dealings, I found him a very honest Dealer, and a good Pay-master.

L. C. F. Jones. What know you of his Loyalty?

Mr. Croub. For his Loyalty, I took it as the Town did, though I never knew any Disloyalty from him.

Mr. Cornish. Mr. James West.

L. C. F. Jones. Do you think you profit your self with this Testimony?

Mr. Cornish. I would not offend you.

Vol. III.

L. C. F. Jones. No, no, you don't offend, I would gladly hear you, if there were any thing pertinent to your Defence.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Cornish, you have this happiness, that you will be Tried by your fellow Citizens, of very good Quality and Understanding, I must needs tell you.

Mr. Cornish. I am satisfied I have appeared here with all the Care and Caution that becomes an honest Man, I have spoke nothing but what I have consider'd as I have been in Presence of the great God, I never was at any Meeting, nor never heard any thing of this till the Tryal about my Lord Russel, never heard one Word.

L. C. F. Jones. Gentlemen of the Jury, The Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Cornish, is indicted, that knowing that there was an Insurrection intended to be against the late King, of Blessed Memory, he did promise to be aiding and assisting in it, this is the substance of the Indictment, there have been two Witnesses produced, Mr. Rumsey and Mr. Goodenough: Rumsey's Testimony (so far as I am able to remember, after so long a Discourse, and so much time that hath been spent) was to this purpose; That the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Russel, Ferguson, and others, being in Mr. Sheppard's Houle, there came at length Mr. Cornish, and excus'd himself for coming late, and said, That he was to depart from them very speedily, because he was to go to attend the Business (as I take it) of the Charter, where the Presence of an Alderman was necessary, and none like to be there but himself; That Ferguson pull'd a Paper out of his Bosom, so says Mr. Rumsey, and upon the desire of the Company, it was read to Mr. Cornish, and Sheppard held the Candle; there were these two Points, Rumsey says, they had agreed on in that Paper, when the Rising should be, they would declare for Liberty of Conscience, and for the Restitution of those Lands, Bishops Lands, and King's Lands, to those Persons from whom they had been taken after the King's Restauration: This Paper being read to Mr. Cornish, he said, He did like it very well (these were the very words of Rumsey) and with that poor interest that he had in the World, he would join in the Assistance of them, for those Ends and Purposes that were mentioned in that Declaration. Then comes Goodenough, and he tells you, That he came to him in his Parlour, when he was Sheriff, said, Now there was no safety, no defence at all by Law, all was gone, there must be some other Course taken, for the Law would not sufficiently protect them: Why? says Mr. Cornish, I marvel they are so slow in the City, when they are so ready in the Country: Ay, but says Goodenough again to him, there hath been something done in the City; this was after the time that the City had been put into several Divisions: I don't see there is any Testimony from Mr. Goodenough, that Mr. Cornish knew any thing of that, but says he, There is something done here, the Tower is to be seiz'd, there is the Magazine, and that is to be seized upon, and then we shall be able to do something: says he, I will do what good I can, or says he, what I can, he is not confident whether of these Expressions he did use, I will do what good I can, or I will do what I can. Afterwards he meets Mr. Cornish upon the Exchange, here I confess, it is not so expressly to be applied to this Purpose, that it doth fasten directly upon the point in the Indictment; but says he, How do Affairs go? How do our Affairs go? says he, very well: This is the Testimony given against him. If this be true notwithstanding Mr. Cornish's Protestations of his innocency, sure there is nothing doth more plainly prove this Indictment, than this Testimony. He says it is improbable, very improbable that I in my Circumstances, that I should say so, it is improbable, because Mr. Rumsey had Acquaintance with me for fourteen Years together, that I have dealt with him for vast Sums, and that I should say it in his Presence never but once, and that Rumsey does say, He never heard him speak any thing to that purpose, but that one time; and therefore it is mighty improbable I should say so. But what is the reason, says he, that this was not discover'd before? To this Rumsey gives a positive answer, Truly, says he, Mr. Cornish, I had more Compassion for you, than for myself, I have suffer'd for it, you have not suffer'd for my silence. Then Goodenough ought not to be allowed to be a competent Witness, because when Mr. Cornish and Bethel were chosen Sheriffs of the City, Mr. Cornish was much against receiving Goodenough to be his Deputy, and Goodenough must say all this maliciously against him, because he so much oppos'd his being Under-Sheriff to him and Bethel. He hath produced several Witnesses to that purpose, and they say there was some reluctancy in him to the receiving Goodenough to be his Under Sheriff, but it is plain and clear to you all, Gentlemen, and every body in the City knows that Goodenough was his Under Sheriff, and how well he serv'd him, and to what purposes I believe many of you very well know. Another improbability is, That he should admit Goodenough to come into his Parlour alone, a Man that he had so much displeas'd, but if so be he was once against him, he did afterwards take him not only to be his Under Sheriff, but employ'd him to be his Attorney, and then he might very well admit him into his Parlour alone, to discourse of his Business as an Attorney, and this might fall in among other Discourse: Gentlemen, there are several other Witnesses produced concerning the honesty of his Dealing, and the honesty of his Conversation, that they have nothing at all to say against; but Gentlemen in a popular City, where he is, and hath been so well known, it is a very easie matter to bring Millions of Men to give the very same Testimony, and certainly he will bring none, having the choice of them, but such as shall speak in his Favour; but he speaks in the Presence of God, he speaks from the bottom of his Heart, that he never had any such disloyal Thought entred into his Mind: Gentlemen, hath no body any Sense of the Presence of God but Mr. Cornish? Hath not Rumsey call'd God to be a Witness to his Oath? and Goodenough hath done the like? Why is it maliciously against the Life of Mr. Cornish? for I don't know he does, in the least, object any thing against Rumsey, that there was ever any Displeasure between them two: Why should he deliver this Testimony if it were not the Testimony of his Heart? and that which he says himself, he had too long conceal'd out of the Compassion he had for him. Gentlemen, if a great many Protestations and Asseverations should make a Man as innocent as confident, no Man should die by the Sentence of the Law; it is an easie matter for any Man to take up the same Assurance and Confidence that he hath done: And for his being such a Church-man, as he now pretends himself to be; for that is one thing by which he would argue the improbability of the thing, and he would have you believe very much of his Loyalty from it. Gentlemen, all the Evidence he hath given, is but of two Years standing, and since the Tryal of my Lord Russell; and such a Man as he, and many Men that were conscious to themselves of their guilt, did think it very fit to purge themselves that way, to gain themselves a good Opinion that they were loyal to the Government. But it is not deny'd by Mr. Cornish, that before that time he did not frequent the Church, nor receive the Sacrament.

says

Mr. Cornish. These seven Years, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Who did say so? Sure no body said so yet. I repeat the Evidence truly, all you said of that was out of the Mouth of Dr. Calamy.

Mr. Cornish. Dr. Calamy came in but lately, and his Predecessor Dr. Whitchcot is dead.

Mr. Just. Withins. Sir, you were not qualified for your Office if you had not took the Sacrament.

L. C. J. Jones. You did lay aside all your Scruples to qualify your self to be Sheriff by receiving the Sacrament, which otherwise you could not have been. Others that have spoken of your Conversation likewise say, That the report was abroad, that you were not so loyal and firm to the Government as you ought to have been. Gentlemen, you have heard the Evidence; I have done my endeavour to repeat it faithfully, if you believe that he did Promise to aid or join, or agree with that Rebellion or Insurrection, then you ought to find him guilty of this Indictment.

Mr. Cornish. I am as innocent as any mortal Man.

Then the Jury withdrew, and after a considerable time return'd.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I hope I may have one word.

Mr. Just. Withins. No, not till your Verdict.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. No, no, Mr. Cornish, we can't.

Mr. Cornish. I had a Witness more that was very material, but I would not offend your Lordship: Mr. Rumsey said Mr. Sheppard held the Candle.

Mr. Just. Withins. Why did not you call him? You called a great many impertinent Witnesses.

Mr. Cornish. I was not come to him, I would have call'd them in order.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. Why did not you produce him then?

Mr. Cornish. Because your Lordship seemed to be angry.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. No, not at all.

Mr. Cornish. I did forbear purely upon that account. I pray, my Lord, let him be call'd.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. Here were eight Judges and my Lord Chief Justice, and now here is only two: Do you think we will defer things of this Nature? It is never asked. Apply your self to the Judges: It is a strange thing.

Mr. Just. Withins. This is only to delay time.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. If he does so, the Jury must go out again.

Mr.

Mr. Just. Withins. After the Jury hath been out an Hour, we must have new Allegations.

Mr. Cornish. I was tender of offending.

Mr. Just. Withins. That is a Reflection upon the Court; under favour, Mr. Cornish, I told you my self, over and over to call your Witnesses.

Clerk. Elizabeth Gaunt, hold up thy Hand.

Mrs. Gaunt. My Lord, I beseech you, hear me, you won't take advantage I hope of me.

Mr. Just. Withins. I declare my Opinion freely, it ought not to be done.

Recorder. I think she ought to have it as well as t'other.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. You call'd never a Witness.

Mrs. Gaunt. No, Sir, I could not tell, I have some to call.

Mr. Just. Withins. I am of that Opinion you ought to take the Verdict.

The Judges came again upon the Bench, and the Jury found Mrs. Gaunt guilty.

L. C. J. Jones. Is Rumsey come in?

Captain Richardson. I have sent for him, he will be here presently.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I must pray your Lordship, to consider my Tenderness in offending you, which made me omit calling Mr. Sheppard, I had him in my paper, he is in my paper.

L. C. J. Jones. Don't you begin your Preface something untowardly, as though the Court would not do you all the Kindness possible, half a dozen times you were admonish'd to call for pertinent Witnesses, you did call I am sure a great many impertinent Witnesses. Had you Mr. Sheppard's Name in your paper?

Mr. Cornish. Yes, my Lord, but I was tender of offending; pray, my Lord, be pleased to remember Mr. Rumsey's Evidence.

L. C. J. Jones. Is Mr. Rumsey here? Sir, pray hold your Tongue.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would acquaint you, my Lord, I sent a Subpœna for Mr. Sheppard, but could not find him, but I understand that Mr. Cornish's Son was with him Yesterday, and he has absconded; this I will give an account of upon Oath: This my Lord, is a dangerous Practice after Examination, and after the Jury is withdrawn.

Mr. Cornish. I pray do not aggravate the matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. I must do my Duty for the King.

Mr. Cornish. My Son went to him, and found him at Church.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now Mr. Atterbury is gone. I desire you should have all your right, but not have Tricks put upon the King's Evidence.

Mr. Cornish. His Evidence was, Mr. Sheppard's holding the Candle.

Mr. Just. Lewins. For God's sake, could you examine so many to your Reputation, and forget an evidence that was material; but I must tell you, if you will bring Mr. Sheppard to be examined, sure it is requisite, that the Witness that swears what you did there, should be face to face with him, therefore Mr. Rumsey should be here certainly.

Mr. Just. Withins. It is fit to have Atterbury here, to enquire if he did abscond; if Mr. Cornish's Son was with him, and he absconded upon that account, it is very material. This is a meer Trick put upon the King's Evidence.

L. C. Baron. Mr. Cornish, if, you intend to produce Mr. Sheppard for that, to contradict Rumsey's Testimony, I wonder that you should mis him, without you have had some notice since.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, I was not come to him: my Lord, though I have such a vile Charge, I am perfectly innocent.

Mr. Just. Withins. Now you may see what we have got.

Mr. Cornish. I beseech you, my Lord, consider me, it is as improbable a thing as any in the World.

L. C. J. Jones. This is running over the same thing twenty times. Where is Sheppard?

Mr. Cornish. He was here within this quarter of an Hour.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Cornish, Is this fairly done, when you said he was upon the spot?

Mr. Att. Gen. He was Subpœna'd by you, he would not be found to be Subpœna'd by the King.

Mr. Just. Lewins. To make the Court come down, and then to have no notice of the Person at all; sure you may give the Court leave to take notice that they are not civilly dealt with.

L. C. J. Jones. Who told you he was here?

Mr. Cornish. This Gentleman says, he saw him. Pray, my Lord, don't be offended.

L. C. J. Jones. I never saw such a thing, the time was, you and your Partner would not have allowed it.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he comes, I will give him his Oath.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, here is Major Richardson can bear Witness, I said I must Subpœna Mr. Sheppard; I named him before Major Richardson again and again, and said, I must not omit him.

Mr. Just. Lewins. Sir, I tell you what; you han't shewed so little skill to Day here, but that you could maintain so long a Discourse with Mr. Rumsey as you were allow'd to do, and should not offer to call Sheppard to contradict him, you dwelt half an hour upon it.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. And relyed only upon the improbability of the thing.

Mr. Rumsey. There is another Gentleman in the Tower, the late Lord Grey, that was in Company when the Declaration was read.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. Have you been in Company at Sheppard's?

Mr. Cornish. I have been at Sheppard's very often. Pray, my Lords, don't be offended, my Life will do you no good, I don't know but here is a Gentleman that hath been in my Company forty times over since that Business.

Mr. Rumsey. Pardon me, Mr. Cornish, not above three times since, and then there was other Company.

Mr. Just. Withins. It is impossible for any, but those that were Complices with you, to give such Evidence, and, because they were your Complices, now you won't believe them.

L. C. J. Jones. Are you Sub-pœna'd by Mr. Cornish?

Mr. Sheppard. I have a Sub-pœna from the King.

L. C. J. Jones. But were you Sub-pœna'd by Mr. Cornish?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. When?

Mr. Sheppard. Last Night, this Morning I was not at home.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was Mr. Cornish's Son with you Yesterday in the Afternoon?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what Discourse had you with his Son?

Mr. Sheppard. He was very pressing and urgent with me to be here to Day, and I told him, I could not tell whether I could or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is there any Account between you and Mr. Cornish?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. To what Sum?

Mr. Sheppard. We were always Trading.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is very true, you were Trading—To what Value?

Mr. Sheppard. About one or two Hundred Pounds.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who is Debtor?

Mr. Sheppard. I am Debtor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, since when did you Contract that Debt?

Mr. Sheppard. Since when, Sir;

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay.

Mr. Sheppard. I believe it was some six or eight Months ago.

Mr. Sol. Gen. For what was it? Upon what Account?

Mr. Sheppard. For Cloth, Sir?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there no Money lent?

Mr. Sheppard. Money lent me?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, Sir.

Mr. Sheppard. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. Is the Debt due to Mr. Cornish?

Mr. Sheppard. My Lord, the Debt is due to him.

L. C. J. Jones. Of some body for whom he is a Factor?

Mr. Sheppard. I am indebted to Mr. Cornish, for whom it is I can't tell.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you leave word, whither you went, when you went out Yesterday?

Mr. Sheppard. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Which Sub-pœna was served first upon you?

Mr. Sheppard. Mr. Cornish's Yesterday.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time was it served upon you?

Mr. Sheppard. Presently after I came out of Church in the Afternoon, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. What have you to say?

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, Mr. Rumsey was pleased to give in his Evidence, that I had been at a Consult or Meeting at Mr. Sheppard's House, where Mr. Ferguson should pluck out a Declaration out of his Bosom, and should read it by the Candle, and Mr. Sheppard should hold the Candle to him while he read it.

L. C. J. Jones. Do you remember Mr. Cornish was ever at your House?

Mr. Sheppard. At one of those Meetings that was at my House, Mr. Cornish came into the House to speak a few Words with the Duke of Monmouth, or some other, I can't be positive in that, it is so many Years ago, and did not stay half a quarter of an Hour in the House; I came up Stairs, and went out with him, and there was not one word read, and no Paper seen while he was there.

Mr. Just. Levins. Was Mr. Cornish in the Room with the Duke of Monmouth and those others?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, Do you remember that the late Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Russell, the Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armstrong were there together, and the Declaration read?

Mr. Sheppard. I remember there was a Declaration read, Ferguson pull'd out a Declaration out of his Shoe, he pull'd off his Shoe, and pull'd it out there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Cornish was by, any time that Night?

Mr. Sheppard. Truly I can't say whether it was that Night when the Paper was read, but I do positively say, that there was no Paper read, for he was not looked upon to be of the Company: Mr. Ferguson told me positively, there is the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, my Lord Russell, Sir Thomas Armstrong, Col. Rumsey, my self and you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did Mr. Cornish come to speak with, when he came to your House?

Mr. Sheppard. Truly I don't know whether it was with the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came Mr. Cornish to know the Duke of Monmouth was there?

Mr. Sheppard. Truly my Memory will not call it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did his Coach stand publickly at your Door?

Mr. Sheppard. Whose Coach?

Mr. Sol. Gen. The late Duke of Monmouth's.

Mr. Sheppard. No, Sir, they all came private, there was no Coaches at the Door as I saw, I let none of them in.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Mr. Cornish but once there, when the Duke of Monmouth was there?

Mr. Sheppard. But once.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he call the Duke of Monmouth out to him?

Mr. Just. Street. How came you to carry him up to the Duke of Monmouth, if he were none of the Company?

Mr. Sheppard. Mr. Cornish did go up into the Room and spake to the Duke of Monmouth, or some other Person, but I think the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember he was there in Company, when Col. Rumsey was there?

Mr. Sheppard. No I can't remember that.

Mr. Rumsey. My Lord, when I came to Mr. Sheppard's House, Mr. Sheppard came down and fetch'd me up, and I deliver'd my Message I had to the Duke of Monmouth, and to the Company, and indeed I was not a quarter of an Hour there, I believe, but by that time I had spoke my Words, some body knock'd at the Door, and Mr. Sheppard went down, and immediately brought up Mr. Cornish into the Room, without asking a Question of any body; and when he was come in, to the Room, Mr. Cornish said, he could not come sooner, because he had business; and could not stay, because there was a Committee for the Management of the Charter, to meet that Night, and there was a necessity of his being there, because there was never another Alderman in Town, and there must be an Alderman there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, Do you remember any thing of that?

Mr. Sheppard. No, Sir, I do not remember it, I'll assure you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you let him in at the Door?

Mr. Sheppard. No, Sir, I had word brought me up Stairs, that Alderman Cornish was below, and I went down, and brought him up.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ask for Mr. Cornish to come up?

Mr. Sheppard. I don't remember I did: When Mr. Cornish was there, there was not above three Persons.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who were they?

Mr. Sheppard. There was the Duke of Monmouth, and there was Mr. Ferguson, and truly I can't tell whether t'other was my Lord Russel or my Lord Grey.

Mr. Just. Levins. You acknowledge now, Sir, you did carry the Prisoner up to the Duke of Monmouth and those Persons. Did you use to carry all Persons up there?

L. C. J. Jones. There was a Cabal of Rebels met together, and you go and bring up this Man to them, without any leave or licence from them, which is incredible certainly, unless you knew him to be one of the Company, and equally engaged with them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, you say, when Mr. Cornish came up, there was not half the Company there. Had they been there, or were not they yet come?

Mr. Just. Withins. Look you, Sir, it is marvellous how Mr. Cornish, if he were none of the Parties, should have notice that the Duke of Monmouth was there, who came in privately at the Back-Door, and came to speak with him there.

Mr. Sheppard. My Lord, I have no Back-Door.

Mr. Just. Withins. He came in privately.

Mr. Just. Levins. Mr. Sheppard, I think I heard you say, they came privately without their Coaches.

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, Sir, they had no Coaches.

Mr. Just. Levins. They came privately, I suppose, that no body should know they were there.

Mr. Sheppard. I suppose so, Sir.

Mr. Just. Levins. Why then did you carry Mr. Cornish up? If you were below in the House, he might come about your own business; but to be carried into the Chamber where they were, looks as if it were about their business.

Mr. Cornish. I never heard any thing of the Business, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. So far, Gentlemen, you remember he confirms what Mr. Rumsey says, that Gentleman denyed he was there with the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Cornish. Pray Mr. Attorney don't strain, I have dealings with Mr. Sheppard, and have often been there, but never at any Meeting.

Mr. Att. Gen. He says, you spake with the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Cornish. I never saw the Declaration, he declares it.

L. C. J. Jones. Had you any dealings upon account with the Duke of Monmouth?

Mr. Cornish. Never for a Farthing.

Mr. Just. Withins. What business had you with him then?

Mr. Cornish. I don't know but I might enquire for him in other places.

L. C. J. Jones. Your own Witness carried you up.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, if he did, I did not stay, he says Mr. Sheppard held the Candle.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Cornish, he confirms great part of what Mr. Rumsey says.

Mr. Cornish. Not one Tittle, for he declares I was not of the Company.

L. C. J. Jones. He says no such thing.

Mr. Sheppard. My Lord, to my Knowledge, I can safely say, he knows nothing of it.

L. C. J. Jones. And yet you could bring him up among them.

Mr. Sheppard. My Lord, I declare I never spake any thing to him in my Life about the Business, nor never in any Company.

Mr. Just. Withins. It is plain, Mr. Rumsey says he was the Man that brought you up; How should Mr. Rumsey know that?

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, I will ask you this Question; Had you order from that Company not to bring up any Person? Do you remember you swore so at a former Tryal?

Mr. Sheppard. I remember when I was there, they desired I would let none of my Servants up, and that I would go down and fetch up what they wanted, and I fetch'd up Wine and what they wanted.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, Why were none of your Servants to come up?

Mr. Sheppard. Because they were in private, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were Strangers to come up therefore?

Mr. Sheppard. It is so long ago, I cannot remember.

Mr. Just. Levins. They came privately, without Coaches, because none should know they were there, and you carry Mr. Cornish up to them.

Mr. Cornish. I think this Witness is confronted.

L. C. J. Jones. Hold your Tongue Sir, he hath not done yet.

Mr. Rumsey. My Lord, as soon as Mr. Cornish had made his excuse for his not coming sooner, and that he could not stay, I could not make that, and Mr. Cornish can't say I would do any thing maliciously or spitefully against him; my Lord, as soon as he had done, all the Company went about him, and some Body did tell him, They would tell him what they had done; they told him the Declaration had been read, that Mr. Ferguson had prepared it, and they said, Look you, Mr. Cornish, you shall hear it read, and with that, this Gentleman, though he denies it, did take the Candle, and held it, they did not come to the Table, but the Company stood round while Mr. Ferguson pull'd it out of his Bosom.

Mr. Just. Withins. Mr. Sheppard, you are very forward.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would ask Mr. Sheppard a Question.

Mr. Rumsey. My Lord, the Declaration was read, and Mr. Cornish did approve of it, and did say, With that small Interest, or little Interest, or words to that effect, that he had, he would assist.

Mr. Att.

Mr. Attor. Gen. I wonder why you did not give me notice when you came in the morning. Why did not you give notice?

Mr. Sheppard. I was here attending from Eleven a Clock, till half an hour after three.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Did you send in any word?

Mr. Sheppard. I could not tell who to send in: I was here expecting to be call'd.

Mr. Just. Street. You have had a favour that no Man ever had.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen, there hath been a very great indulgence given to the Prisoner, and it is to shew you what tenderness a Court of Justice hath, and always will have, of the lives of the King's Subjects: After a full Evidence, though he had neglected his Defence, yet you were again sent for into Court, to hear what further Evidence he had to offer to you; I cannot but observe, this looks like a subtle Contrivance on the Prisoners part; you see what endeavours have been made by Mr Attorney General, to have had him here a witness for the King, you have observed he hath told you he had a Subpœna for him, but he was absent, in what Company he was absent yesterday, he hath told you, With Mr. Cornish's Son; this morning he was not to be found, after he had received this Subpœna, and a Subpœna from Mr. Cornish; he stays without, and gives no notice, but when you are withdrawn, can send intelligence to Mr. Cornish, that he hath something to say, that he hopes will excuse him; now what that is, I must beg you a little to observe: Truly I am very glad for the satisfaction of all men, that Mr. Sheppard hath now been here, and he is so far from invalidating any one part of the Testimony, that by all the circumstances you can collect from this Evidence that is given, it is a corroboration of it: Mr. Cornish was accused of being present at Consultations that have been held against the Life of the King, and for raising Rebellion at Mr. Sheppard's House; his excusing his not coming there is a sufficient Argument to prove he was privy to their Meeting, he hath gone on further, and proved to you the reading the Declaration; now what says Sheppard to this Witness? Mr. Cornish, by the way, I must observe to you, before, did deny his being there; he had been sometimes in company with Ferguson, but he did not like the man, he says, because of his Morals; now the Witness he hath produced hath given you this Testimony, that Mr. Cornish hath been there in that Company, that he came in such a manner, that no man but must be satisfied he was privy to their Designs, and did know of their Meeting, for he comes when the Duke of Monmouth, and the rest of the Conspirators, were there met in private, with a direct charge to Mr. Sheppard, that is the Witness, that they should be so private, that no one Servant should come up into the Room, yet Mr. Sheppard tells you, that when Mr. Cornish came he carried him up into the Room, without so much as acquainting any one of the Company that Mr. Cornish had a desire to come, but brings him up as if he were (and I make no doubt but you will imagine, he was) one of the Company; when he comes there, he says his business is with the Duke of Monmouth, the Head of that Conspiracy, and he himself tells you he never had any dealings with the Duke of Monmouth in his life; What can a man imagine of that man that had no dealings with the Duke of Monmouth, to find him out in a place, where no mortal could know, and none was to know, and coming to him at that time and at that place, under those circumstances of concealment, no man almost but out of his own mouth must believe that he was privy to that Conspiracy; therefore though this Witness doth seem to forget some part of the Evidence, the reading the Declaration, and holding the Candle; yet these are such circumstances that in themselves do carry a proof of the Charge, and do confirm all the rest that the Witness hath said, and this must be a great satisfaction to you, that he was there present and privy to that Design. And so I leave it to your Consideration.

Then the Jury withdrew for a short time, and returning, brought Mr. Cornish in Guilty, and found One Hundred and Forty Pounds for the King in Mr. Sheppard's Hands.

Clerk. Set Elizabeth Gaunt to the Bar, (which was done.)

Cryer. Oyez, all manner of Persons are commanded to keep silence, whilst Judgment is giving, upon pain of Imprisonment.

Clerk. Elizabeth Gaunt, hold up thy Hand, thou standest guilty of High-Treason, &c.

Recorder. You Elizabeth Gaunt, you have here been indicted for that great Crime of High-Treason, and that particular part of it, for Harbouring, and Comforting, and Assisting, and Cherishing of Traytors, more especially of one Burton; you have had your Tryal, and a very fair Tryal, and upon that, the Jury have found you Guilty: It is the Duty of my Place to pronounce the Sentence the Law hath provided for such High Crimes as these are, and that is no other but this,

That you are to be carried back to the place from whence you came, from thence you are to be Drawn, upon a Hurdle, to the place of Execution, and there you are to be Burnt to death, and the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

Mrs. Gaunt. I say that this Woman did tell several Untruths of me.

Recorder. Is that all you have to say?

Mrs. Gaunt. I don't understand the Law.

Clerk. Bring Henry Cornish to the Bar.

Henry Cornish hold up thy Hand, &c.

Mr. Cornish. My Lord, now the Law hath past upon me, I do humbly pray your Lordship, and this Honourable Bench, that you will be pleas'd to intercede for me with his Majesty, I shall lead a Peaceable, Quiet, and Dutiful Life: and I hope, when you come to reflect upon what hath been said to Day, that perhaps you will be of another Mind, and have more Charity for me than you had upon my Tryal, for, in the simplicity of my Heart, and in the presence of God, I do declare, I am Innocent, and if your Lordship, and this Honourable Bench, intercede with his Majesty, it will be an Eternal Obligation upon me, and I shall live Faithfully, Peaceably, and Loyal as long as I Live. I presume to beg this, and I promise my self, and hope it will stir up the Hearts of some Persons, that they will not leave me destitute of Friends in such a Case as this, having a Wife and several Children, it will be an Act of Charity.

Recorder. The Court does give you your Request, and if there be any misery brought upon your Family, it is done by your self.

Clerk. William Ring, hold up thy Hand, &c.

Mr. Ring. I had no notice given me, and please your Lordship.

Recorder. Where is the Executioner, is he here?

Executioner. Yes.

Recorder. Why don't you do your Duty to Mr. Cornish?

Clerk. John Fernley, hold up thy Hand; thou standest convicted of High Treason, for trayterously harbouring one James Burton; what canst thou say for thy self? &c.

Mr. Fernley. It is very hard measure I have had, I have nothing to say, but the King's Mercy.

Recorder. Is that all you have to say?

Mr. Fernley. I have nothing but the King's Mercy.

Recorder. Tye him up then, tye him up.

Crier. Oyez, all manner of Persons are commanded to keep silence, whilst Judgment is giving, upon pain of Imprisonment.

Recorder. You, the several Prisoners at the Bar, you have been severally indicted here of the high Crime of Treason; for you, Mr. Cornish, I apply my self first to you, your Crime is for Treason that was committed in his late Majesty's Life-time, being one of those notorious Conspirators that designed to raise Rebellion, and others some of them immediately designed the Life of his Majesty that then was, and his present Majesty, that was the design of some of them; and others they had another part, that was, to raise Rebellion, and particularly some of them in and about this City, and it was carried on some time before it was discover'd, may be a Year or more, under colour and pretence of Law: For so did they invade the Government first of all by packing of Juries, there was the Foundation laid whereby to bring on that business, which they had at last design'd, when they could bring it to a ripe Head. Too many Persons in that business, I believe, were very busie, meddling with that they had not to do with; clubbing and caballing how to bring their Designs about, in opposition to the Government, not to support it in the least, but to overthrow it if it were possible: But then, at last, then they must take another Course, for no longer could they carry it on by pretence of Law, as you have heard to Day: Now we must take other Measures, and take down-right Blows. This is the business, Mr. Cornish, that you have been indicted for; and, I must tell you, whatever Apprehensions you have to the contrary, and may please your self in, I am sorry to see such a sort of pleasure in your Countenance, as if you had had no favour shewed you. I believe the Court hath shewed you more favour, and had more patience with you than ever any Man that stood in your place had; for calling a Witness after the Jury hath been out, is a thing I never saw a Precedent for: And I am glad it was done, for I think it hath cleared the thing beyond all manner of Contradiction, before it looked something dark for want of Sheppard, and so it is a Happiness that that Man was called to convince you of many things that you protested so solemnly against, which I am sorry to see in you; in this Condition that you are, to make such solemn Protections, and afterwards call a Witness to confront you in them. For the other two, here is Mr. Ring is very notorious for harbouring a couple of Traytors, knowing from whence they came; and if it were not for such Persons as these are, that do harbour them when they fly, it may be there would not be so many bold Attempts to commit such Crimes as these are: To provide for them, and nourish them, and comfort them, after they have committed their Villanies, this does encourage them to commit their Villanies as they do, and so I reckon Harbourers to be worse than Traytors themselves, they are like Receivers to Thieves; there would not be so many Traytors, if there were no Harbourers: You have been convicted of these great Crimes; it is too late, and not fitting to spend time any longer, but to pronounce the several Sentences against you, which is this,

You must, every one of you, be had back to the place from whence you came, from thence you must be drawn to the place of Execution, and there you must severally be hanged by the Necks, every one of you by the Neck till you are almost dead, and then you must be cut down, your Intraills must be taken out and burnt before your Faces, your several Heads to be cut off, and your Bodies divided into four parts, and these to be disposed of at the Pleasure of the King; and the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

The Tryal of Charles Bateman, Chirurgeon, December 9. 1685.

TH E Sessions of Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Goal Delivery of Newgate, for the City of London and County of Middlesex; beginning at Justice-Hall in the Old-Bayly, on the 9th of December, 1685. Charles Bateman, against whom an Indictment of High Treason had been found, for conspiring the Death of the late King, &c. was brought in the Custody of the Keeper of Newgate in order to his Arraignment; and being ordered to hold up his hand, he desired that he might first say something for himself, in order to put off his Tryal, but was told by Mr. Recorder, he must plead before he could be heard; whereupon desiring to know whether he might have the same advantage after his pleading as before, as to gain longer time for his Tryal, and being answered he might, he held up his Hand, and then the Indictment was read:

Mr. Bateman pleaded not guilty, and desired his Tryal might be put off, saying, He was not prepared to make his Defence, and therefore prayed a longer time, saying, He had been close Prisoner for the space of ten Weeks, and was over and above very much indisposed; and farther alledged, He had had no notice nor Pannel of the Jury; as for notice of Tryal, he was answered, that it was not usual to give any in that Court, but that he ought to have expected it, and prepared for it accordingly, and as for the Pannel it was not denied him; then he prayed a Copy of the Indictment, but was told it could not be allowed; and upon his further alledging his unpreparedness and no notice of Tryal, and the like, the King's Council urged that he had Opportunity enough to take notice of his Tryal, for that it was upon an Indictment of the precedent Sessions: Then he asked what time he might have between his Arraignment and Tryal, and was answered, as much as would stand with the conveniency of the Court; and after several Hours respite, he a second time was brought to the Bar, and then upon his humble Request, Pen, Ink, and Paper was allowed him, and his Son to assist him; and then were sworn to try the Issue,

Richard Aley, Esq;	Edward Rhedish
Richard Williams	George Lilburn
John Cannum	Daniel Foulds
Patrick Barret	Peter Floyer
John Palmer	Lawrence Cole
James Raynor	John Cooper.

And he making no Exceptions to them, then the Indictment was read.

The Jurors, &c.

TH A T Charles Bateman, late of the Parish of St. Dunstan in the West, in the Ward of Farringdon without, London, Chirurgeon, as a false Traytor, against the most illustrious and excellent Prince, Charles the second; late King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and his natural Lord; not having the fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance; but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true due and natural Obedience, which a true and faithful Subject of our late Lord the King, towards him should, and of right ought to bear, altogether withdrawing, and practising, and with all his Strength, intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom, to disquiet, and disturb, and War and Rebellion against our late Lord the King, within this Kingdom to stir up, move, and procure; and the Government of our late Lord the King, of this Kingdom to subvert, and our said late Lord the King, from the Stile, Title, Honour, and Kingly Name, of the Imperial Crown of this Kingdom to depose and deprive, and our said late Lord the King to Death, and final Destruction to bring and put, the 30th Day of May, in the 35th Year of his Reign, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as afterwards, at the Parish and Ward aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and traytorously, with divers other Rebels and Traytors to the Furors unknown, did conspire, compass, imagine, and intend our said late Lord the King, then his supream and natural Lord; not only of his Kingly State, Title, Power, and Government of his Kingdom of England, to deprive and depose, but also our said late Lord the King, to kill, and to Death to bring and put, and the ancient Government of this Kingdom to change, alter, and subvert; and a miserable Slaughter amongst the Subjects of our said late Lord the King, to cause and procure, and Infurrection and Rebellion, against our said late Lord the King to procure and assist, and the same most wicked Treasons and traytorous Conspiracies, Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid to effect, and bring to pass: He the said Charles Bateman, as a false Traytor, then and there, (to wit) the said 30th Day of May, in the 35th Year aforesaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as afterwards; at the Parish and Ward aforesaid, falsely, unlawfully, most wickedly, and trayterously, did promise and undertake to the said other false Rebels and Traytors then and there being present: That he the said Charles Bateman would be assisting and aiding, in the taking and apprehending the Person of our said late Lord the King, and in taking and seizing the City of London, and the Tower of London, the Savoy, and the Royal Palace of White-Hall, against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace, &c. and against the Form of the Statute in this Case made and provided, &c.

Mr.

Mr. Phipps, Council for the King opened the Nature of it, and was seconded by Mr. Serjeant Selby and Mr. Charles Moley, after which, Mr. Josias Keeling was sworn, whose Evidence was, That he had been at divers Meetings and Consults, where the Methods had been proposed for the Purposes aforesaid; and more particularly one time with Rumbold the Master, since executed for High Treason, and that then, three papers were produced by Rumbold and opened, containing the Model of the Design, to divide the City into twenty Parts, and to raise five hundred Men in each Part, to be under one Chief, and nine or ten Subordinates whom he should appoint, the Names of the Lanes and Streets of each Division being likewise inserted therein; and at that time Rumbold proposed the business of the Rye-House, saying, He had a House very convenient to plant Men in, to seize the King in his return from New-Market, but that he somewhat boggled about the killing the Postillion, which had been proposed the better to stop the Coach, because it looked too much like an Exploit in cold Blood: He further deposed, that he had been at divers other places where it had been discoursed to the same Effect, and that Mr. Bateman was looked upon as a Person fitting to manage one Division in order to an Insurrection, to seize the Tower, City, &c. This being the Sum of Mr. Keeling's Evidence; Mr. Bateman said, that what he had sworn, did not affect or charge any Treason upon him; and was answered by the Court that it did not, and bid the Jury take notice, that what Mr. Keeling had sworn, was only to the Conspiracy in general, and did not affect the Prisoner in particular.

Then Thomas Lee was sworn, and gave Evidence, That he being made acquainted with the Design by Mr. Goodenough, &c. and how the City was to be divided into twenty Parts and managed; and being asked who was a fit Man to manage one part, he nominated Mr. Bateman, and thereupon was desired to go to him, and speak with him about it as from Mr. Goodenough; and when he came to discourse him about that Affair, he apprehended very plainly, that he was no Stranger to it, nor boggled to give his Assent, and seem much desirous to speak with Mr. Goodenough about it: That he likewise went one Day to the late Duke of Monmouth's House with Mr. Bateman; and Mr. Bateman, after he had had some Discourse with one of the Duke's Servants, came to him and told him, the Duke was willing to engage in the Business, and assur'd him, that he had divers Houses kept in the Country, to be in a readiness when matters should come to Extremity; and from thence he went with him to the King's Head Tavern, and there had discourse to the same Effect; and from thence, they came to the Devil-Tavern within Temple-Bar, where Mr. Bateman proposed the seizing the City, Tower, Savoy, White-Hall, and the Person of the late King, and promised not to be wanting therein. At another time, he met him at the Half-Moon-Tavern in Aldersgatestreet, where discoursing about the Condition the Conspirators were in, As to the intended Insurrection, he said, If he could but see a Cloud as big as a Man's Hand, he would not be wanting to employ his Interest, and that there were other Discourses tending to the Insurrection, but were broke off by the coming in of one John Allmeger, before whom Mr. Bateman would not discourse, because he knew not of his coming.

Mr. Lee being asked the Design of that Meeting, replied it was upon the account of carrying on the Conspiracy, and that Mr. Bateman had told him, that he intended to take a House near the Tower, to place men in, in order to surprise it, and that he had held divers Conferences with some Sea Captains on that Affair; and that he had been with them at Coffee-Houses, &c. at sundry other times, but there to prevent discovery, they spoke of the Design at a great distance.

To this Evidence, Mr. Bateman objected, that if he had been conscious of what was laid to his Charge he was fit for Bedlam; saying, He wonder'd if he had heard him speak such words, he had not accused him sooner; but was answered, that Mr. Goodenough was not to be had till after the Rebellion in the West; and that Lee's single Testimony in Case of High Treason in so high a nature, was not sufficient.

Then Mr. Richard Goodenough was called, who being sworn, deposed, that being in Company with Mr. Bateman (to the best of his Remembrance) at the King's Head Tavern in St. Swithings-Alley near the Royal Exchange, and having some Discourse about the intended Insurrection, and of Wade and others that had engaged to promote it. Mr. Bateman not only approved of the Design, but promised to use his Interest in raising Men; and not only to be assisting in the Division allotted him, but in surprising the City, Savoy, &c. and in driving the Guards out of Town. To this he objected, that he was not at the King's-Head with Goodenough, to which Mr. Goodenough replied, He had not sworn positive to the place, though he verily believed that was the place; but however, as to the Discourse and Words then spoken by Mr. Bateman, he was positive.

The Evidence being thus full against Mr. Bateman, and Liberty granted him to make what Defence he could, he desired that Sir Robert Adams might be heard, in relation to a false Report the said Mr. Lee had raised of Sir Robert and others, and Sir Robert being in Court, gave Evidence that there had been a Report abroad, said to be raised by Mr. Lee, that he (viz.) Mr. Lee had beaten three Knights, and that Mr. Lee came to him and asked his Pardon, acknowledging the thing in it self was altogether false.

To the same purpose Sir Simon Lewis was called, but appeared not.

Ames Child being called by Mr. Bateman, to testify his Knowledge of Mr. Lee; and being asked what he could say against him, declared, That he knew nothing to the contrary, but Mr. Lee was an honest Man.

One Baker being called by Mr. Bateman, to testify that Mr. Lee would have suborned him against him to his Prejudice, some Years since, of which he had made an Affidavit before Sir William Turner, and the said Baker not then appearing in Court, he desired Sir William Turner to give some account of Baker's Examination, which the said Sir William had taken, but it k i i i being

being about two Years since, Sir William declared, He could not charge his Memory with any of the Particulars contained therein.

Mr. Tompkins, Sir William Turner's Clerk, being called, and asked what he could say concerning any Examination of Baker's taken before Sir William, that related to Lee; he said, there was an Examination taken Anno 1683. wherein Mr. Lee was mentioned; but to the best of his Remembrance it was returned before the King and Council, and he could not give any account of the Particulars.

Then Mr. Bateman desired to know upon what Statute he was Indicted, and was informed by the Court, That the Treason wherewith he stood charged, was Comprehended within the 25th. of Edward the 3d. and the 13th of Car. 2. by Overt-Act; and having little more to say in his own Defence, after a favourable hearing of all he had materially to offer, and his Son having been allowed by the Court to assist him, in looking over his Notes, and calling his Witnesses, by reason he through sickness pretended himself incapable. Then the Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench Sum'd up the Evidence at large, and omitted nothing that might be for the advantage of the Prisoner, whereby the matter was fairly, fully, and clearly left to the Jury; and thereupon Mr. Bateman was taken from the Bar; after which, the other Prisoners being called and Tried, and the Jury ready to go forth to consider of their Verdict, Mr. Bateman's Daughter came in and besought the Court, that Baker, whom she said she had found out, might be heard against Mr. Lee, but Mr. Lee being gone, and the Tryal already over, the King's Council opposed it, unless Mr. Lee could be found (which he could not be at that time) and the Court having deliver'd their Opinion that it was not convenient to examine any Witness after the Jury had received their Charge, it being a very ill President and of dangerous Consequence; yet some of the Jury desiring it, the Court to prevent any Objections that might be made, consented, and Baker had leave to speak, whose Evidence was, that being in Company with Mr. Lee, some time in the Year 1683. and discoursing about divers matters, he had him go to the Sign of the Peacock, and to the Angel and Crown, to a Chirurgeon, and a Linnen-Draper whom he named, the former of which he remembered to be the Prisoner, and to insinuate himself into their Company and discourse them; and when he demanded of Mr. Lee to what end he should do it, or about what he should discourse them, he told him it might be about State Affairs, and by that means he would find a way to make him a great man; and when he excused his attempting to intrude into such Company as was above him, he being but a Shoemaker, Mr. Lee told him he knew that he kept Company with such and such men, and why could he not as well do it with those he had mentioned, and of this he said his Examination was taken before Sir William Turner; but this being nothing to the purpose, but was rather looked upon as a Design Mr. Lee had to make a discovery of the Conspiracy, if he could have procured further Evidence to have corroborated his own, and Baker being looked upon as a broken Fellow and that he lodged near the Sessions House, and yet came not in before, though often called, the consideration of the whole matter was left to the Jury, and an Officer being sworn to attend them went out, and after about half an hours debating that, and what else was before them, gave in their Verdict, that Charles Bateman then at the Bar, was Guilty of the High Treason as laid in the Indictment, which Verdict was accordingly Recorded, and the Prisoner re-conveyed to Newgate; and being again brought to Justice-Hall, on Friday the 11th. of December, in order to receive Sentence; and upon holding up his hand, being asked What he could say for himself, why the Court should not give Judgment against him according to the Law: He desired to know whether Mr. Goodenough was fully pardoned, and was told, that as for the Out-lawry he was pardoned, and that his Pardon hath been allowed and approved of in that Court, and in the Court of King's-Bench, and for any thing else he was not Prosecuted: Then he said his Opinion was altogether for Monarchy, and that he hoped he should have an Advocate with the King, but had nothing more material to offer.

Then Mr. Recorder, after having spoke several things in aggravation of that great Crime, whereof, after a fair and favourable Tryal, he was Convicted; advised him not to flatter himself with hopes of Life, and thereby delay his Repentance necessary for his future Happiness, pronounced the Sentence, which was, That he should return to the place from whence he came, from thence be drawn to the place of Execution, there to be Hang'd by the Neck, and whilst alive be Cut down, and his Bowels to be taken out and Burnt; his Head to be severed from his Body, and his Body divided into four Parts, and that his Head and Quarters be disposed at the pleasure of the King.

Upon this, he prayed a Divine might have leave to come to him, as likewise his Relations, which being allowed, he departed the Court, and was on Friday the 18th of December, Executed at Tyburn according to Sentence.

Remarks

Remarks upon the Tryals of Edward Fitzharris, Stephen Colledge, Count Coningsmark, The Lord Ruffel, Colonel Sidney, Henry Cornish, and Charles Bateman; As also on the Earl of Shaftsbury's Grand Jury, Wilmer's Homine Replegiando, And the Award of Execution against Sir Thomas Armstrong: By Sir John Hawles afterwards Solicitor General.

THE strange Revolution which hath of late happen'd in our Nation, naturally leads one into the Consideration of the Causes of it. The Danger of subverting the Establish'd Religion, and invading Property, alone could not be the Causes. For if it be true, that the same Causes have generally the same Effect: it is plain, that in the Reign of a precedent Monarch, the Subversion of the Establish'd Religion was as much design'd, or at least was believ'd to be so, as of late; and it is not material whether what was suspected was true, or not; and Property was as much invaded as of late, by imposing Ship-Money, and other Taxes in the Nation, but more especially Ship-Money: which at first was light and easy, but in progress of time was increas'd, according as it was found the Nation would bear it. And at length it was feared, as there was just reason so to do, that it would become as burdensome, as what is now imposed on the French Nation by the French King; and yet when the War broke out, if the History of those Times, or the Persons who liv'd about those Times, are to be believ'd, the Majority of the Nation took part with the King. There was therefore some other Reasons for the Disaffection of the Nation to the late Government, and they may be rank'd under these six Heads.

Exorbitant Fines; Cruel and illegal Prosecutions; Outrageous Damages; Seizing the Charters, Dispensing with the Test and Penal Laws; and undue Prosecutions in Criminal, but more especially in Capital, Matters.

For the first I shall only observe, That when the House of Commons in the Parliament 1680. took that Matter into consideration, and intended to impeach several Persons for the same, the highest Fine at that time complain'd of, was but 1000*l.* and yet in few Years they were

For the Second, The Punishment of Oates, Dangerfield, and Mr. Johnson; and the close Imprisonment of Mr. Hamden, Sir Samuel Barnardiston, and of several other Persons, as they were against the Law, so they were without Precedent.

For the Third, Tho the Damages given to Bolworth were the first outrageous Damages given, which were taken notice of, and in truth were such; yet in little time Damages for matters of like kind were quickly improved to 10000*l.* 20000*l.* 40000*l.* nay 100000*l.* The truth of which a great many living Witnesses to their sorrow can testify.

For the Fourth, The seizing the City and other Charters, upon the pretences they were question'd, was without Example.

For the Fifth, The dispensing with the Test and Penal Laws, was as mischievous as it was illegal; it making Persons capable, who were incapacitated by Law of being in Places, of exercising Offices, for whom the Persons who had Power to confer or bestow the same, had more affection than for the Persons who at that present enjoy'd them: the Consequences of which was quickly seen, in turning out the present Possessors to make Room for others; which was the thing which, as a Scotch Bishop said of another Matter, set the Kiln afire.

Of these five Particulars something hereafter may be said; at present this Treatise is only to consider, how far the Proceedings in Capital Matters of late Years have been Regular, or Irregular: And as to that I shall not at all consider how far the Persons hereafter mention'd were guilty of the Crimes of which they were accus'd, but how far the Evidence against them was convincing to prove them Guilty, and what Crimes the Facts prov'd against them in Law were.

Remarks on Fitzharris's Tryal.

THE first Person I shall begin withal shall be Fitzharris; and that it may not be wonder'd, that the Tryal and Condemnation of a Person who was confessedly an Irish Papist, should be complain'd of; and one whose Crimes were such, that if the Law declar'd had not made Capital, it had been just, in respect of the Malefactor, for the Legislative Power to have enacted, that he should suffer the severest Punishment usually inflicted for the highest Crime: yet in respect of the Common Good, it had been just and fit to have pardon'd him, if he would have confess'd who were his Conspirators and Setters on; for I am apt to think, that if that Matter had been thorowly look'd into, some Persons afterwards Witnesses in the Lord Ruffel's, Colonel Sidney's, and Mr. Hamden's Trials, had either never been produc'd, or had not been credited, credited if produc'd; nor would my Lord of Essex's Throat have been cut; and my Lord Ruffel and Colonel Sidney might have worn their Heads on their Shoulders to this Day.

All will agree, that there was a great Struggle between the Whigs and Tories, as they were then call'd, for hanging or saving that Man: Both agreed he deserv'd to be Hang'd; the first thought it their advantage to save him if he would confess; the last thought it was fit to Hang him for fear he would confess. And to explain the Matter, it is fit to go a little higher: It cannot but be remembred, that before the breaking out of the Popish Plot, Mr. Claypole was Imprison'd in the Tower for designing to Kill the King, in such place and manner as Oates afterwards discover'd the Papists intended to do it. In Trinity Term 1678. he had an Habeas Corpus to the King's Bench, and was brought thither in order to be Bail'd, and produced Persons of Worth to Bail him; but the Penalty of the Bail set by the Court was so high, and the Court so aggravated the Crime for which he was Committed, and the likelihood of the Truth of it, that the Bail refus'd to stand, and Claypole was remanded to the Tower. But the Term after, when the Matter of which he was accus'd appear'd barefac'd to be the Design of other People, he was let go, for fear the Examination of it should go further in proving the Popish Plot, than any thing at that time discover'd. And if it were now discover'd, upon whose and what Evidence he was committed, it would go a great way in discovering the Truth of many Matters as yet in the Dark (but that Design miscarry'd, because the Intrigue was discover'd before it took effect, and yet a like Design was still carried on; and many of the Clergy of the Church of England had been prevail'd with to cry the Popish up as a Fanaticks Plot.) The Papists and the Clergy of the Church of England being in the late Times equally Sufferers, and oppress'd by the Fanaticks, they naturally grew to have a Kindness for each other, and both join'd in hating the Fanaticks, and therefore pretended at least that they did not believe any thing of the Popish Plot, but that Report was given out by the Fanaticks, whilst they themselves were designing something against the Church of England. The Papists having so great a Part of the Clergy of the Church of England, ready to believe any thing of a Fanatick Plot, which they should forge, and observing that that which gave Credit to the Popish Plot, was Writings concurring with Oral Testimony, which it did; for very little of the Truth of the Popish Plot depended on the Credit of Oates, Bedloe, or any other Person, most of the Facts of that Design, when discover'd, proving themselves: To instance in one, Oates discover'd Coleman had Intelligence with Le Chaise of a Design on England, and that Coleman had Papers testifying as much; when those Papers were seiz'd, and own'd by Coleman, and the purport of them was what Oates said they were, it was not material, whether Oates was a Man of Truth or not, the Papers, without Oates his further Evidence, sufficiently prov'd the Design. I say, the Papists, having observ'd what the Evidence was which gave Credit to that Plot, resolv'd to pursue the same Steps, and therefore Dangerfield was made use of to leave Papers in Colonel Mansel's Lodging, who was an Acquaintance of my Lord Shaftsbury's, importing a Plot; but that was so foolishly carried on, and the then Attorney General, who had the Examination of that Matter, not being qualify'd with the Assurance his Successor had, to carry on a thing that had neither Sense nor Honesty in it, made such a scurvy Report of the matter to the King and Council, that they were enforc'd to vote Mansel Innocent, Dangerfield Guilty, and that it was a Design of the Papists to lay a Plot to the Dissenters Charge, and a further proof of the Popish Plot. But that Attorney General being remov'd to a place of more Honour, tho' of less Profit, and another put in his place, the Papists resolv'd to carry on the same Design, and no Person a fitter Instrument than Fitzharris, in respect of his Religion, and his Acquaintance; but before his Design came to Perfection, it was discover'd.

He was first imprison'd in Newgate, where some Persons (amongst whom Mr. Cornish, as I remember, then Sheriff, was believed to be one, and it was not the least of his Crime, that he endeavour'd to look into that Arcanum) went to Examine him as to the particulars of that Design; which was quickly taken notice of, and the Prisoner, in breach of the Habeas Corpus Act, remov'd from thence to the Tower, where he was kept close Prisoner.

The Parliament at Oxford meeting soon after Fitzharris his Apprehension, and the House of Commons being inform'd of as much of his Design as was then discovered, they thought themselves highly concern'd to examine him; but how to do it they knew not; only they resolv'd (upon a Report which one of their Members made them of one Hubert, who confessed himself Guilty of Firing the City of London, upon which it was resolv'd to examine him in the House of Commons the next Morning, but before the House sat Hubert was Hang'd) that Fitzharris should not be Hang'd without their Knowledge and Consent; and to effect it, they remember'd a Design to try the five Popish Lords in the Tower upon Indictments, whereupon if they should be acquitted, it was thought that those Acquittals might be pleadable to Impeachments: to prevent which, the House had exhibited general Impeachments of High Treason against them in the House of Lords; which had such Success, that the Lords were never, and the Judges gave their Opinion that they could not be, Tried on the Indictments, as long as the Impeachments were in being; for which Reason, the House of Commons exhibited a general Impeachment of High Treason in the House of Lords against Fitzharris, which was receiv'd; after which the House of Lords made an Order, that Fitzharris might or should be try'd in the King's Bench for the same Treason; suddenly after which, that Parliament was dissolv'd. Whether Fitzharris his Business was the break-neck of that Parliament, I know not, but it was shrewdly suspected it was.

There was at that time a Chief Justice in the King's Bench, who was himself under an Impeachment of High-Treason, and had not for that reason sat in Court for some Terms preceeding: and the Tryal of Fitzharris being generally look'd upon to be as Illegal as it was Odious, it was thought convenient to carry it on by a Person of better Credit; whereupon one who had been a puisny Judge of that Court, and had behaved himself very plausibly, and had gained Credit by being turn'd out, was thought to be the fittest Person to undertake it: and accordingly the then present Chief Justice was remov'd, and the other was preferred to his place.

It being resolv'd that Fitzharris should be try'd, the business was how to get Witnesses to give Evidence to a Jury, and how to get Juries to find the Bill, and to convict the Prisoner, which were difficult Preliminaries.

A Person who had been one of the House of Commons which had exhibited the Impeachment, was a principal Witness: but if he should give Evidence on the Indictment, he knew not how far he might be hereafter questionable and punishable for it, when a Parliament should sit again: but at last that Person was prevail'd upon to give Evidence, but by what means is best known to himself. And as for the Juries, Grand and Petty, they were satisfy'd with the Direction of the Court, that they not only might, but ought to find the Bill, and Verdict according to their Evidence. And I think the Court was so far in the Right.

That matter being adjusted, a Bill of High-Treason was found against the Prisoner, whereupon he was presently arraigned; and after much Contest and Declaration of the Court, that they could hear nothing till he had pleaded in chief, (which if he had done, the Plea he afterwards pleaded, which was to the Jurisdiction of the Court, had come too late) he had leave given him to plead the special matter of the Impeachment, and accordingly Council were assign'd him to draw up and argue his Plea put in to the Jurisdiction of the Court; which was, That he was impeach'd in a Superior Court for the same Treason.

Great endeavours were used to have the Plea over-ru'd, without so much as hearing the Prisoner's Council for the maintaining it; the pretences were, that the Prisoner on his Plea ought to have produced the Record of his Impeachment, and that the Plea of the Impeachment for High Treason in general was naught, without specifying what the High Treason was for which he was impeach'd; for an Impeachment or an Indictment of High Treason in general was naught; that the King had power to proceed on an Impeachment or Indictment for the same thing at his Election: That the Allegation, that Fitzharris was impeach'd, which Impeachment stood in full force, not having mention'd an Impeachment before, was naught. But afterwards the Attorney General demurr'd, and the Prisoner join'd in the Demurrer. And then a Day was given to argue the Plea till Saturday the 7th of May, at which time the Attorney added to the Exceptions he took to the Plea, whether a Suit in a Superiour Court can take away the Jurisdiction of another inferior Court, who had an Original Jurisdiction of the Cause, of the Person, and of the Fact, at the time of the Fact committed?

To maintain the Plea, the Council for the Prisoner alledged, that an Impeachment differ'd from an Indictment; the first was at the Suit of the Commons of England, and was like an Appeal, or rather an Appeal resembl'd an Impeachment; that the proceedings were different in the Tryals: in the first, the Tryal is by the House of Lords; in the last, of a Commoner, by a Jury of Commons: In the last, but little time was allowed for giving or considering of the Evidence; in the first a much longer time: That this matter was never practis'd before; that the King may pardon a Criminal prosecuted by an Indictment, but not by an Impeachment, no more than if prosecuted by an Appeal: If he should be acquitted on the Indictment, it might be a Question whether that may be pleaded in Bar to the Impeachment; and if not, the Prisoner should be brought twice in jeopardy of his Life for the same Crime, contrary the Rule of Law.

To the Objection, that the Plea was not certain, it being pleaded as an Impeachment of High Treason, not setting forth the High-Treason in particular, it was answer'd, that an Impeachment differ'd from an Indictment: for by the Custom of Parliament, which is the Law of the Land, such a general Impeachment is good; but by the Law, a general Indictment of High Treason, without specifying what, when, where, or how, is not good; and therefore the Plea of an Indictment and an Impeachment is variant.

To the Objection, that there was no Impeachment mention'd before the averment of qua quidem impetisio, it was frivolous; for it was before mention'd that he was impeach'd, and then by a necessary Consequence there was an Impeachment.

As to the Objection, that the King might, in which Court he would, prosecute for High-Treason, it was little to the purpose; for the Case did not come up to it, the Impeachment being the Suit of the Commons, and not of the King; and that the Courts of Westminster-Hall had refus'd to meddle with Matters relating to the Parliament. That though the Impeachment was general, yet it was made certain by the Averment; that it was for the same Crime for which the Indictment was: That the Attorney General might have taken Issue; that there was no such Impeachment as was pleaded; or else he might have said, that the Impeachment was not for the same Treason, for which he was Indicted; but having Demurr'd, he had confess'd both to be true: That at Common Law, if an Appeal of Murder had been brought, the King could not proceed on the Indictment, till the Appeal was determin'd; that the Judges, whereof some were then in Court, had given their Opinions to the King and Council, concerning the five Popish Lords, that they could not be try'd upon Indictments, so long as general Impeachments were depending for the same Treason; and yet their Cases and this differ'd, there the Indictments were found before the Impeachments prefer'd, and here, after the Impeachment.

In the Reply to viciate the Plea, it was insisted, that it did not conclude si curia procedere debeat as well as vult, as was usual for Pleas of that nature to do; that perhaps this matter, if the Prisoner had been acquitted upon the Impeachment, might have been pleaded in Bar to the Indictment, but it was not pleadable to the Jurisdiction of the Court; that in the Case of the five Lords the Indictments were removed into the House of Lords; that Appeals in Treason are taken away by the first of Henry the 4th; that in the Plea it ought to be aver'd; what Lex & Consuetudo Parl. are; that till Articles carried up, no Man impeach'd is oblig'd to answer; that in all Cases of Appeals a Man is put twice in jeopardy of his Life, if he be try'd upon an Indictment within a Year.

To take a short Review of what hath been recited, it was thought the King's Council run the Court upon a Rock, and it was hard for them to get off. The Court had advis'd them to take time to consider what Course they would take; but the King's Council were hasty, as they always were when they were resolv'd to carry a matter right or wrong; and having three bad Ways, they chose the worst.

If they had taken issue on the Record, or the Averment, that the Impeachment and Indictment were not for the same Treason, they might have pretended that the Journal of the House of Lords was not a Record, or that the Debates in the House of Commons were not good Evidence; or if they had reply'd the Order of the House of Lords, for trying the Prisoner in the King's Bench, to the Plea, they might have insisted on the Power of the House so to do: but having demur'd, they confessed the Truth of all the matter of the Plea, and wav'd the Benefit of that Order, and stood upon Points of Law, either conceded by the Court, or resolv'd by the Judges before, or such necessary Inferences from them as were impossible to be deny'd.

It could not be deny'd, but a general Impeachment of High Treason by the Custom of Parliament was good; it could not be deny'd, but, by the Resolution of the Judges in the Case of the Lords in the Tower, a general Impeachment of High Treason stop't proceedings upon an Indictment for the same matter. It did not differ the Case, that the Indictments in the King's Bench against the Lords were remov'd into the House of Lords; for every one knows new Indictments might have been prefer'd against them for the same Crimes. And if that had been the Reason of the Judges Resolution, why did not the Judges then in Court, all or most part of whom were Judges at the giving that Opinion, deny the Opinion, or the Reason alledg'd? which they did not. It was not a Reason to disallow the Plea, because particular Articles use to follow general Impeachments, and the impeacht are not bound to answer till the particular Articles were exhibited, which is true; for by the same Reason, a Defendant cannot plead an Action depending against him for the same matter in a superior Court, unless the Plaintiff hath declar'd against him in the superior Court, which is not true. It was not a Reason that all Records in inferior Courts must be pleaded particularly, as Indictments and the like; because such Records must be certain and particular, or else they are erroneous, and cannot be pleaded; but an Impeachment may be general.

Where the matter of a Plea is naught, no Form can make it good; tho' where the matter of a Plea is good, an ill Form may spoil it. If therefore a general Indictment or Record is naught, as in all the Cases cited against the Plea, it was no special Averment to reduce it to a certainty; or any Form can make it a good Plea: but a general Impeachment is good, and therefore it may and must be pleaded generally; and pleading it specially, would make it false, if there were no subsequent Articles, as in this Case there were not to ascertain it.

It is to no purpose, to run thro' all the Ramble of the Counsel or Court against the Plea, when they all said the matter of the Plea was not in question, but the Form; and yet when so often ask'd in what of the Form it was defective? they were not able to answer. If it be agreed that the matter of a Plea is good, but it is defective in Form, they always shew how it ought or might have been mended, which in this Case was never done: And as this Case was new in several particulars, so it is in this, that in reading all the Arguments of this Plea, no Man knows, by what was discours'd, what was the point in question.

After the Arguments, the Chief Justice, in shew at least, very favourably offers the Prisoner's Counsel Liberty to amend the Plea, if they could; which they (apprehending, as they had Reason, for I think none can shew how it might have been mended, rather a Catch than a Favour) refus'd to do; whereupon the Court took time to consider of it, and on the 11th of May, there being a great Auditory, rather to hear how the Judges would bring themselves off, than to know what the Law of the Plea was, the Chief Justice, without any Reasons, deliver'd the Opinion of the Court, upon Conference had with other Judges, that his Brothers Jones, Raymond, and himself were of Opinion that the Plea was insufficient, his Brother Dolben not resolv'd, but doubting concerning it, and therefore awarded the Prisoner should plead to the Indictment, which he did, Not Guilty; and his Tryal order'd to be the next Term.

I think it would puzzle any Person to shew, if ever a Court of Westminster Hall thought a matter to be of such difficulty as fit to be argu'd, that they gave their Judgments afterwards without the Reasons: 'Tis true, that the Courts of Civil Law allow Debates amongst the Judges to be private among themselves, but the Proceedings at Common Law always were, and ought to be, in aperta curia. Had this Practice taken place heretofore, as it hath of late (but all since this Precedent) no Man could have known what the Law of England was, for the Year Books and Reports are nothing but a Relation of what is said by the Council and Judges in giving Judgment, and contain the Reasons of the Judgment, which are rarely express'd in the Record of the Judgment; and it is as much the Duty of a Judge to give the Reasons why he doubts, as it is of him who is satisfied in the Judgment. Men sometimes will be asham'd to offer those Reasons in Publick, which they may pretend satisfy them, if conceal'd; besides, we have a Maxim in Law undeniable, and of great use, that any Person whatever may rectify or inform a Court or Judge publicly or privately, as amicus curiae, a Friend to the Court, or a Friend to Justice: But can that be done, if the Standers by know not the Reason upon which the Court pronounce their Judgment? Had the three Judges, who were clear in their Opinion, given their Reasons of that Opinion, perhaps some of the Standers by might have shew'd Reasons unthought of by them, to have made them stagger in, if not alter that Opinion; or if Justice Dolben had given the Reason of his doubt, perhaps a Stander by might have shewn him a Reason unthought of by him, which would have made him positive, that the Plea was, or was not, a good Plea.

If a Man swears what is true, not knowing it to be true, tho' it be logically a Truth as it is distinguish'd, yet it is morally a Lye; and if a Judge give Judgment according to Law, not knowing it to be so, as if he did not know the Reason of it at that time, but bethought himself of a Reason for it afterwards, tho' the Judgment be legal, yet the pronouncing of it is unjust.

Judges ought to be bound up by the Reasons given in publick, and not satisfy or make good their Judgment by after-thought-of Reasons. How very ill did it become the Chief Justice Popham, a Person of Learning and Parts, in the attainting Sir Walter Rawleigh, of which Tryal all since that time have complain'd? when he gave his Opinion that the Affidavit of the Lord Cobham, taken in the Absence of Sir Walter, might be given in Evidence against him, without producing the Lord Cobham face to face to Sir Walter (which was desir'd by him, altho' the Lord Cobham was then forth coming.) When he sum'd up the Evidence, he said, Just then it came into his Mind, why the Accuser should not come face to face to the Prisoner, because he might detract his Evidence, and when he should see himself must dye, he would think it best that his Fellow should live to commit the like Treason, and so in some sort seek Revenge. Which besides that it is against the Common Law, and Reason, it is against the express Statute of E. 6. which takes care that in Treason the Witness shall be brought face to face of the Person accus'd.

Did it become a just Man to give his Opinion, and bethink himself of a Reason afterwards? And I am mistaken if it will not herein appear, that many Persons complain'd of, have been guilty of the same Weakness or Injustice, call it which you will; so foolish are the best Lawyers and plausible Speakers, when they resolve to carry a Point, whether just or not: However they may deceive the Ignorant, yet they talk and argue very absurdly, to the apprehension of the Majority of Mankind. And they had been sooner discover'd, but that the Discoverers were quickly suppress'd and crushed, as Scandalizers of the Justice of the Nation: And I think this may be justly called the first mute Judgment given in Westminster-Hall.

But to return to Fitzharris's Tryal, which came on the 9th of June; and then the King's Council made use of their Arts in managing the Jury. And first, there were a great many Persons for Jurors, to whom Mr. Attorney had no Stomach; some challenged for Cause, for that they were no Freeholders, as John Kent, Giles Shute, Nathaniel Grantham, and several others; and the Challenge allow'd to be a good Challenge by all the Court; for tho' the Chief Justice only spoke, yet all the Court assent to what one Judge says; if they do not shew their Dissent. I do not take notice of this, as complaining of it, for I think it is a good Cause of Challenge in Treason; but then I cannot but wonder at the Assurance of the same King's Council, who denied it to be a good Cause of Challenge in the Lord Russel's Tryal. It is true, that was a Tryal in the City; but that matter had no Consideration in the Judgment: for after the Lord Russel's Council had been heard, all the Judges deliver'd their Opinions, That at Common Law, No Freehold was no Challenge in Treason; and that the 1. & 2. Phil. & Mar. had restor'd the Tryal in Treason to be what it was at Common Law: of which number of Judges, Sir Francis Pemberton and Sir Thomas Jones were two; nay, Sir Francis Pemberton ask'd Mr. Pollexfen, Whether he found any Resolution at Common Law, that no Freehold was a Challenge in Treason. And that Judgment is afterwards cited in Colonel Sidney's Tryal, fol. 63. as the Opinion of all the Judges of England, That no Freehold was no Challenge to a Juror in Treason at Common Law; and Colonel Sidney's Tryal was in a County at large.

But if it was not a Challenge at Common Law, I would know how it came to be a Challenge in Fitzharris's Case? There was no intervening Act of Parliament to alter the Law between the two Tryals that I know of.

Another Art us'd, was to challenge for the King without Cause, where no Cause could be shewn, such Jurors as they did not like.

The Prisoner was troubled at this, and appeals to the Court, whether the Attorney General was not oblig'd to shew his Cause of Challenge; but is answered by the Court, that he need not till all the Pannel was gone thro', or the rest of the Jurors challeng'd, which is true; but had the Prisoner been advis'd to challenge the rest of the Jury, as he would have been if he had had Council, the Attorney must have wav'd his Challenge, or put off the Trial. And since he was not allowed Council, why should not the Court, according to their Duty, as they have said it is, have advis'd him so to do? I am sure in Count Coningsmark's Tryal, when Sir Francis Winnington challenged a Juror without Cause for the King, the Court presently ask'd the Cause; and such Answer was made by the Prosecutor's Council as was made to Fitzharris: Whereupon the Court told the Count, that the way to make them shew their Cause of Challenge, was to challenge all the rest of the Jury; and thereupon the Challenge was waved. They were different Practices, tending to different Ends; and accordingly it succeeded, Fitzharris was convicted, and the Count acquitted.

Upon the Tryal the Evidence was this, Fitzharris was the 21st Day of February, 1681. with Everard, and gave him Heads by word of Mouth, to write the Pamphlet in the Indictment mentioned, to scandalize the King, raise Rebellion, alienate the Hearts of the People, and set them together by the Ears; the Libel was to be presented to the French Ambassador's Confessor, and he was to present it to the French Ambassador, and it was to set these People together by the Ears, and keep them clashing and mistrusting one another, whilst the French should gain Flanders, and then they would make no Bones of England: For which Libel Everard was to have forty Guineas, and a monthly Pension, which should be some thousands of Pounds; Everard was to be brought into the Cabal, where several Protestants and Parliament Men came, to give an account to the Ambassador how things were transacted. Everard asked what would be the use of the Libels? Fitzharris said, we shall disperse them we know how; they were to be drawn in the name of the Nonconformists, and to be put and fathered upon them; This was the sum of Everard's Evidence.

Mr. Smith prov'd Fitzharris's giving Instructions to Everard; and Sir William Waller and others prov'd the Libel, and the Discourse about gaining Flanders and England: Other Witnesses were examin'd to prove Fitzharris's Hand. For the Prisoner, Dr. Oates said, Everard told him the Libel was to be printed, and to be sent about by the Penny-Post to the protesting Lords and leading Men of the House of Commons, who were to be taken up as soon as they had it, and searched, and to have it found about them. He said the Court had an hand in it, and the King had given Fitzharris Money for it already, and would give him more if it had Success.

Mr. Cornish said, when he came from Newgate to the King, to give him an account in what Disposition he found the Prisoner to make a Discovery, the King said he had had him often before him and his Secretaries, and could make nothing of what he did discover; that he had for near three Months acquainted the King he was in pursuit of a Plot, of a matter that related much to his Person and Government, and that in as much as he made Protestations of Zeal for his Service, he did countenance and give him some Money; that the King said he came to him three Months before he appeared at the Council-Table.

Colonel Mansel said, that Sir William Waller gave him an account of the business in the Presence of Mr. Hunt, and several others, and said, that when he had acquainted the King with it, the King said he had done him the greatest piece of service that ever he had done him in his Life, and gave him a great many thanks: But he was no sooner gone, but two Gentlemen told him, the King said he had broken all his Measures, and the King would have him taken off one way or other, and said that the Design was against the Protestant Lords, and Protestant Party. Mr. Hunt confirm'd the same thing, and added, that he said the Design was to contrive those Papers into the Hands of the People, and make them Evidences of Rebellion; and appealed to Sir William Waller who was present, whether what he said was not true. Mr. Bethel said, Everard before he had seen Bethel, or heard him speak a word, put in an Information of Treason against him, at the Instigation of Bethel's mortal Enemy; which Information was so groundless, that tho' it was three Years before, yet he never heard a word of it till the Friday before.

Mrs. Wall said, Fitzharris had 250 l. 200 l. or 150 l. for bringing in the Lord Howard of Esrick; she added, that Fitzharris was looked upon to be a Roman Catholick, and upon that account it was said to be dangerous to let him go near the King, that he never was admitted to the King.

The Lord Conway said, that the King had declared in Council, that Fitzharris had been employed by him in some trifling businesses, and that he had got Money of him; but added, as of his own Knowledge, that the King never spoke with him till after he was taken, which was the 28th of February last.

All the Evidence being over, it was sum'd up by the Council, That upon all the Circumstances of it, Fitzharris was the Contriver and Director of the Libel; that it was a treasonable Libel, and a Jesuitical Design; that the Excuse he made, as if Everard drew him into it, or trepanned him into it, was vain, nothing of that being prov'd. That Everard could do nothing alone, and therefore Sir William Waller must be in the Contrivance; but that was unlikely: That the Prisoner would insinuate that the King hir'd him to do it, because the King gave him Money, but that was out of Charity; and therefore concluded, with a great many words, that an English Protestant Jury of twelve substantial Men, could not but find the Prisoner guilty.

The Court added, that tho' Dr. Oates said, Everard said it was a Design of the Court, and was to be put on some Lords, and into some Parliament Men's Pockets; yet Everard was there upon Oath, and testified no such thing in the World; and for the Impeachment in the Lords House, they were not to take notice of it.

After which the Jury inform'd the Court, that they heard there was a Vote in the House of Commons, that the Prisoner should not be try'd in any inferior Court: To which the Chief Justice said, That that Vote could not alter the Law, and that the Judges of that Court had Conference with all the other Judges concerning that matter; and it was the Opinion of all the Judges of England, that that Court had a Jurisdiction to try that Man. After which, Justice Jones was of Opinion, that if he were acquitted on that Indictment, it might be pleaded in Bar to the Impeachment; and Justice Raymond deliver'd his Opinion to the same purpose. It is strange that all the Judges should be of that Opinion; yet before it was said, Justice Dolben doubted. It is more strange, that if Justice Dolben was not of that Opinion, he would hear it said he was, and not contradict it. It is most strange, that if the Judges of that Court were of that Opinion, they had not declar'd so, in the arguing or giving Judgment on the Plea; for that was the matter of it, being pleaded to the Jurisdiction of the Court, that they had not power to try the Prisoner for that Crime, so circumstanced.

If the Plea had been over-ru'd as to the matter, none would have been so impertinent, as to go about to maintain the form of it.

Now to say truth in behalf of the Publick, and not on behalf of Fitzharris, the Evidence was unfairly summed up; for Everard never pretended Fitzharris drew him in, or was to trepan him: It is true, he ask'd Fitzharris what the design of the Pamphlet was, and whether he was not put upon it to trepan others? who answer'd, he was not. But afterwards being too nearly prest by the Attorney General, he said, Fitzharris told him the use of the Libels was to disperse them he knew how; that they were to be drawn in the Name of the Nonconformists, and put upon them. And Oates said, Everard said the Libels were to be printed, and sent abroad by the Penny-Post to the protesting Lords, and leading Men of the House of Commons, and the Persons seiz'd with them in their Pockets; which is all strong Evidence that the Libel was design'd to trepan others, and that was all along the import of Fitzharris his Questions, tho' cunningly not answer'd by some of the Witnesses, nesses, and as cunningly omitted in summing up the Evidence.

It is true, the Chief Justice said, Everard said no such thing as Oates had said; but why was not Everard, who was then present, ask'd whether he said what Oates had given in Evidence?

There cannot be shewn any Precedent where a Witness contradicts, or says more or less than a Witness that went before him, by the hearsay of that Witness; but the first Witness is ask'd, what he says to it? Why was not Sir William Waller, who was also present, ask'd what he said to the Evidence of Mr. Manfell and Mr. Hunt? and who it was that inform'd Sir William what the King said? It was no way in proof, nor pretended by Fitzbarris, that any Person was concern'd in that matter, but Everard and Fitzbarris tho' it was shrewdly suspected by the House of Commons; and no Man that reads the Tryal, but believes there were many more concern'd, not yet discover'd: but the Council might have brought in any Judge of the Court by the Head and Shoulders to be a Confederate, as well as Sir William Waller, who was a Jack-a-lent of their own setting up, in order to knock him down again.

It was not pretended by Fitzbarris that the King gave him any Money to frame that, or any other Libel; there was Evidence, that he had got Money of the King for some little matters he was employ'd in, perhaps for bringing in Libels dispers'd abroad, or discovering Plots.

Upon the whole Evidence, it was plain that Fitzbarris was an Irish Papist; it was plain he was the only visible Contriver of the Libel; who were behind the Curtain, is not plain, and to know them, was the design of the Impeachment.

It was plain it was a devilish Jesuitical Design, as the Court and Council, in summing up the Evidence, agreed it to be; it was plain, that the Libel was such, that if dispers'd with intention to stir up the King's Subjects against him, it had been High Treason within the Statute of the 13th of the King: but what the Intention of the contriving the Libel was, was not very certain; and therefore, consequently, what the Crime of it was, was uncertain.

To take the Evidence all the ways, as to the Design of the contriving of the Libel, it is capable of being interpreted; the easiest Construction is to say, he fram'd a Libel with intention to pretend to the King, that he had intercepted a Libel privately dispers'd; and to make it more likely, it should be framed in the Nonconformists Names, to make his Report the more credible (for of Papists or Churchmen it could not be believed) to get more Money of the King; and that matter, by all his Questions to the Witnesses, he most drove at; and that would at most be but a Cheat.

A more criminal, but less credible Construction, is to believe he design'd to disperse them, to excite and prevail upon the discontented to take up Arms.

For what effect had that Pamphlet, when it was, for it was afterwards, dispers'd, upon the Minds of the People? or what effect could any Man of Sense think it could have? for tho' it was a virulent, yet it was as foolish a contriv'd Libel as ever was writ; yet I own if it had been writ and dispers'd with that Design, it had been High Treason within the Statute of E. 3.

But the most natural Construction of the worst Design of it, was to trepan the Parliament Men, and make the Libels Evidences of a rebellious Conspiracy: This Everard confesses Fitzbarris told him was the use to be made of them; and Everard could not know the Design of them, but by what Fitzbarris told him. And Oates well explains what Everard meant by the Words, in his Evidence, put the Libel on the Nonconformists, by what Everard told him.

But yet even that, tho' in it self the highest Crime a Man can be guilty of, next to putting it in Execution, is but a Conspiracy, which was mildly punish'd in Lane and Knox their Case, tho' this exceeded that; that being a design only against one Person, this against many.

Yet tho' this was of no higher Crime by the Law as now establish'd than a Misdemeanor, it was fit for the Legislative Power to have punish'd it in the manner it was punish'd, which yet the Legislative Power ought to resent as an Injury, for an inferior Court's snatching the Exercise of that Power out of their Hands, which only belongs to the supream Authority.

That this Crime, upon Construction of the Evidence taken in the best Sense, is no Treason: tho' the Libel should in all probability incite the Subject to levy War, which it was not likely to do, or in Fact it had been the cause of a Rebellion, yet if it was not designed by the Contriver to that purpose, it was not Treason by the Statute of Edward the Third, or Charles the Second; for in the last Statute it is designing to levy War, and in the Statute of Edward the Third, it is a strained Construction, to make designing to levy War Treason; yet none ever pretended to strain the Sense of that Statute farther than designing to do it.

If the ill Effects the Libel did, or might produce, made it Treason, then Sir Samuel Astrey, who read it in Court at the Tryal, and the Printer, that afterwards printed and publish'd it, and Sir William Waller, who read it to Mr. Hunt and others, were guilty of Treason; for the Libel carried no Venom or Charm with it the more, for being fram'd by Fitzbarris, or Everard, or for being published by either of them, than if publish'd by another Person.

The difference is, Astrey read it aloud, as his Duty; the Printer printed and published it for gain; Sir William Waller publish'd it as a Novelty; and if Fitzbarris contriv'd it to put it upon the Nonconformists or Parliament Men, and not to stir up a Rebellion, tho' it tended to all the ill Consequences mention'd in his Indictment, yet it was not Treason.

But it will be urged, how shall Fitzbarris's Intention be proved? It was a Question which made a mighty sputter in arguing the Plea. How shall it be proved, that the Impeachment was for the same Treason for which the Indictment was? But in the Tryal of Fitzbarris, that Question was fully cleared; for it was proved there, that the very Libel then produced in Court, was the same Libel read in the House of Commons, upon which the Impeachment was voted.

And to say Truth, nothing can be put in Issue, but is capable of Trial: Quo animo a thing is done in all overt Acts of a design, is one of the main questions; or to speak in Law Phrase, whether done proditorie or not, an Adverb of great use and sense, tho heretofore slighted; and under which I believe a great many Persons will be enforc'd to shelter themselves from being punished by the Law establish'd.

No man will pretend, that Libel did any Man mischief but the Contriver, nor in probability could have done, if not used to the purpose Everard said to Oates. Yet other Persons have been guilty of as illegal Acts, of worse Consequences in prospect, and much worse in effect, and it did not amount to Treason. I dare say, the Allegation, that they disturb'd the Kingdom by their Acts, and War caus'd to be mov'd against the King, is true of them, and they are guilty of all the Aggravations us'd in Indictments of Treason.

To instance in some of many, did it not make a mighty heart-burning in the City against the Government, and rais'd great Jealousies between the King and People, when the Sheriffs North and Rich were impos'd on the City? Did not the taking away the City's right of Electing Sheriffs, and the suspicions for what end it was done, besides the Illegalities that followed? If what Sir Edward Herbert says in his late Vindication, fol. 16. be Law, as it hath an Aspect as if it were, that Grand Juries return'd by such as are Sheriffs in Fact, but not in Right, are illegal, and Convictions on their Presentments are illegal and void, give great disturbance, and that Opinion seems to be countenanc'd by my Lord Coke's 3d Instit. Fol. 32. in his Comment on the 11th of Henry the 4th, and consequently my Lord Russel's and other Attainders void? Did it not add to the heart-burning, the punishing those Citizens as Rioters, who were at Guildhall innocently contesting their right of Electing? Was it not an increase of the mischief, the bringing the Quo Warranto against the City, whereby the Credit of the City was lost, and many Orphans starved, and more impoverished; beyond the possibility of recovery? And it was yet heightened by the Judgment given in the highest Case that ever came into Westminster-Hall, by two Judges only, and that without one word of Reason given at the pronouncing, according to the pattern of Fitzharris his Case, and was the second mute Judgment? Did it not fright all honest Men from being on Criminal Juries, when Wilmer was so illegally prosecuted for not giving a Verdict against his Conscience, by an homine replegiando and Information? And did not that make all Merchants, who had Transactions beyond Sea, afraid to send their Servants thither, for fear they might be laid by the heels till they fetch'd them back again? Did it not startle the Lords and the Leading Men of the House of Commons mention'd so often in Fitzharris his Trial, when the Earl of Essex, Lord Russel, Colonel Sidney, Mr. Hamden, and several others were clapt up close Prisoners in the Tower? Did it not deter any honest Man from appearing to witness the Truth, when Sir Patience Ward was convicted of Perjury? Did it not provoke two Great and Noble Families, when the Lord Russel and Colonel Sidney were so illegally and unhand-somely dealt withal, as shall be hereafter declar'd? Did it not provoke all the Nation, except the Clergy and Soldiery, when all the Charters of England were seiz'd, and not regranted, but at excessive Rates, to the starving the Poor, who should have been fed with the Money which went to purchase the new Charters, and reserving the Disposition of all the places of Profit and Power, within the new Corporations, to the King, but which indeed the Confederates shar'd amongst themselves? Nay the very Election of Burgeses, the freeness of which is the great Fundamental of the Government, was monopoliz'd, and put into a few hands. Did not the unreasonable Fines, and cruel Punishments inflict'd, oppress many, terrify all, and consequently made the Government odious to the Subject? Did not the Cruelties acted in the West, enrage above a third part of the Nation? Did not the turning out many of the Soldiery and Clergy, without any reason; and for that purpose erecting Arbitrary Courts, and granting Dispensations to Persons by Law disabled, to enable them to have and enjoy the Places and Offices of such as were illegally turn'd out, and of all who should be in like manner turn'd out? And was it not seen what the Consequences of those things would be, by all who did not wink their Eyes, or who were not blinded by the Profit they made of such illegal and cruel Acts? Was not the King at last sensible, that the Consequence of what is before recited would be what afterwards happen'd? And did he not in less than a Months time, when too late, throw down all that Babel of Confusion which had been so long a building, and did all in his Power, and would have done more if he could, to have set things as right as they were before the Parliament of Oxon; for from thence the Extravagances may be dated. But alas! more mischief can be and was done by weak Brains, than the best Wits can retrieve; those that were dead could not be brought to Life; the Restitution of the Cities Charters was but in shew a Relief. How shall all those defend themselves who have acted under all the illegal Sheriffs constituted and not elected? How shall those defend themselves, who have acted under Officers appointed by the new Charters, which by the Restitution are gone as if they never had been? How shall Sheriffs, Goalers, and other Officers, who have had, or now have Custody of Prisoners; and having not taken the Test, trust to the validity of a Dispence, behave themselves? Shall they continue to keep their Prisoners in Custody, or let them go? If the last, they are subject to Actions of Escape; if the first, they are liable to false Imprisonment. These and a great many more Mischiefs, not yet seen, are the natural results of these illegal Actions.

I never reflect on these things, but I remember Tully in his Offices lays down as a Rule, that nothing is Profitable but what is Honest, and gives many Reasons for it; but nothing so convincing, as the Examples he brings in publick and private Matters: and tho the Empire was vast, and he bore a great Figure in it, and was very knowing, and was well read in the Greek and Roman Histories, yet he was not able to bring a 100th part of Examples, to prove his Position, as have been in this little Island in the space of eight Years. And the Persons, by whose advice these things were transacted, are the more inexcusable, if it be true what a certain Nobleman (who bore a considerable Character in the two late Kings Council) once said to me was true. He was complaining that the King was misled by the Advice of his Lawyers.

I ask'd him whether the King put his Judges and Council upon doing what was done, without considering whether it was Legal; as the common Vogue was he did; or that his Lawyers first advis'd what to be done, was Law? He answer'd me, on his Honor, the King's Council at Law first advis'd the King might do by Law what he would have done, before he commanded them to do it.

Yet I agree, none of those matters, tho so inconvenient and grievous, are Treason by the Statutes of E. 3. or C. 2.

For Profit in some Cases, Revenge in others, the endeavoring means to escape Punishment, and a natural propensity to Cruelty in many, were the true ends driven at, and not the bringing their Prince into the hatred of his Subjects, tho that was a necessary consequent of all recited and of many more matters omitted: And let Fitzharris his Crime, and those recited, be but examin'd, his was but a Peccadillo to the least of those; tho this was acted by an Irish Papist, and these by English Protestants, Sons of the Church of England as by Law establish'd, as they call themselves; tho I doubt, not sincere Protestants, as my Lord Ruffel said; words which were matter of Laughter to those who brought him to the Block.

But, tho neither Fitzharris his Crime, taken in the last Sense, nor the above Crimes were High Treason by any Statute; and the Judges have not Power to punish any other Treasons: yet in all times the Parliaments have practis'd, and it is necessarily incident to all Supreme Powers, in all Governments, to enact or declare extravagant Crimes to be greater than by the established Law they are declared to be, not by virtue of the Clause in the Statute of Edward the 3d. whereby some have, by mistake, thought that a Power was reserved to the Parliament to declare other matters Treason, than what is therein express'd: for admit that Clause had been omitted, there are none can doubt, but in point of Power, the Parliament could (how far in Justice they might, is another Question) have declar'd any other matter to be Treason; and the words of that Clause are very improper Expressions, either to vest or reserve a Power in the Parliament; for the words are only prohibitory to the Judges, to adjudg any other Matters Treason, than those express'd in the Act, tho they were somewhat like those express'd, and therefore might be suppos'd Treasons; and it is a sort of monition to Offenders, that they should not presume to be guilty of Enormous Crimes, upon presumption that they were not Treasons within that Act. For in the Preamble 'tis said, because many other like Cases of Treason (which in Sense are Cases like Treason declared in that Act) may happen in time to come, which could not be thought of or declar'd at that present; therefore if any such should happen before any Justice, the Justice should tarry, and not proceed to give Judgment of Treason on it, til it should be judg'd in Parliament, Treason or Felony. How well the Judges in late days have observed this prohibitory Law, let the World judg; and most certainly the Parliament might have declar'd in Fitzharris his Case, as they may in those other, that the Crimes were Treason, Felony, Misprision of Treason, Trespass, or what other Crime known in the Law, and inflict what Punishment they thought fit; and it is no injustice for the Supreme Power to punish a Fact in a higher manner than by Law establish'd, if the Fact in its nature is a Crime, and the Circumstances make it much more heinous than ordinarily such Crimes are. It was not injustice in the Parliament of the second and third of Philip and Mary to enact, that Smith and others, who were suppos'd to be guilty as Accessaries to a barbarous Murder, and were equally if not more guilty than the Principal, to enact, as they did, that if they should be found guilty as Accessaries, they should not have their Clergys, which at the time of committing the Fact Accessaries to Murder were allow'd to have. It is true, to declare or enact a Fact, after it is committed, to be a Crime, which when committed was in it self none, such as transporting Wool beyond Sea, and the like, would be high Injustice.

Remarks upon Colledge's Tryal.

BUT to return whence I have digress'd, Fitzharris being Executed according to his Sentence, though there was great grumbling amongst the Protestants, that those who set him on Work were conceal'd, and never like to be discover'd now he was Dead; yet all was quiet, and the Conspirators, who resolv'd, though Fitzharris miscarried in his Design, yet the Plot should go on, but what it should be, or where the Scene of it should be laid, or who the Plotters should be, they were not well resolv'd.

Great noise of Warrants being issu'd out there was, but at last all center'd in an considerable Fellow, one Stephen Colledge, a Foyner by Trade, who for his Honour, as a Prisoner of State, was committed to the Tower for High Treason. At first it was design'd to lay the Scene in London, and accordingly a Bill of Indictment of High Treason was exhibited to the Grand Jury (whereof Wilmer was Foreman) at the Sessions House: But the Business of Fitzharris was so new, and smelt so Rank, that the Bill could not be digested, but was spew'd out with an Ignoramus; for which Wilmer was afterwards forc'd to fly his Country.

Then it was resolv'd the Scene should be at Oxford, and accordingly the King's Council, with Irish Witnesses, at the Assizes, post thither, and prevail with the Grand Jury to find the Bill; but by what Arts is not known, for he was privately shut up with them: and I should wonder, if he, who frequently in the hearing of those who understood better than himself, had Assurance enough to impose upon the Courts, should scruple in private to impose any thing on an ignorant Jury.

I know not how long the Practice in that Matter of admitting Council to a Grand Jury hath been; I am sure it is a very unjustifiable and unsufferable one. If the Grand Jury have a Doubt in Point of Law, they ought to have recourse to the Court, and that publickly and not privately, and not rely upon the private Opinion of Council, especially of the King's Council, who are, or at least behave themselves as if they were Parties.

It is true, it is said they are upon their Oaths; and though it be not express in their Oaths, that they should do right between the King and Subjects, yet that is imply'd in the Oath I agree. But have they behav'd themselves as if they were under an Oath? besides, all Men are not capable of giving Advice to be rely'd on in so great a Matter as Life; but the Manner of doing it being in private, can never be justify'd. I know in Fitzbarris's Case, the King's Council were cajoling the Grand Jury in private for some Hours: but I did not think fit to take notice of it in that Tryal, because I think both the Grand and Petty Jury did very well, they acted according to the best of their Understanding, which is all that God or Man requir'd of them; they ask'd pertinent Questions, they were over-rul'd in some, not fully answer'd in others: not that I think either of them gave a Verdict according to Law upon the Fact, as it appear'd upon the Evidence; but that was not the Fault of the Jury, but of the King's Council, and of the Court who misled the Jury. I thought it more proper to take notice of it in this Trial, wherein the first Bill was rejected by an understanding Jury; and all Men wonder'd how the second came to be found Billa Vera; and for that reason one of the King's Council boasted at Court of his Service and cunning Management in the Matter.

The Bill being found, the next Matter was to bring the Prisoner to his Tryal: and as he had more Honour than what usually is bestow'd on so mean a Man to be committed to the Tower, though in truth it was to keep him from all means of Defence; so to carry the Matter on, he was allow'd to have, by order of the King and Council, a Council and Solicitor to come to him, and advise him for his Defence at all Events; a Favour deny'd to Fitzbarris, for his Council was to advise to the Matter of the Plea only: but that Favour in shew was only to betray him, as shall be shewn. And a third Favour he had, which no Man of his Quality ever had; there were then three of the King's Council sent from London, and all the Council that could be pick'd up upon the Spot, which were three more, and no less than four Judges to prosecute and try him; but that was to make sure Work of him.

The 17th of August, 1681. he came to his Tryal: his Indictment, as to part, was in common Form for Treason, but particularly for designing to seize the King's Person at Oxford, mixt with Words he should say, as, That there was no good to be expected from the King, he minded nothing but Beastliness, and that he endeavour'd to establish Arbitrary Power and Popery. To which being requir'd to plead, he desir'd a Copy of the Indictment, a Copy of the Jury, to know upon what Statute he was Indicted, and Council to advise him whether he had any thing pleadable in Bar, all which were deny'd him. Then he desir'd he might have his Papers, which were taken from him after he was brought from the Prison, and before he came into Court, at an House over against the Court; for so it seems the King's Council had order'd the Matter, that the Goaler Murrel, and the Messenger Sawel, after they had him out of the Prison, should run him into an House, and take away all his Papers, which they believ'd were the Instructions, as in truth they were, of the Council assign'd him when in the Tower, and bring the Papers to them, whereby they would not only disable him of his Defence, but they could be better instructed how to proceed in a way for which he had not provided himself of any Defence.

Murrel and Sawel did as the King's Council directed them; much wrangle there was whether he should have his Papers or not, all the Court agreed he should not have them till he had pleaded Guilty or not Guilty; and afterwards he should have the Use of some, and not of others, because they did not appear to be written by himself, but by some Council or Solicitor; and as they said, none is allowed in Treason, unless assign'd by the Court. The Chief Justice North said they were not taken away by him; but says Colledge, they were taken away by the Keeper under pretence of bringing them to his Lordship. The Court said they knew not what Papers he meant, and knew nothing of it; he said the Indictment mention'd something of Misdemeanor as well as Treason, but he knew not how to make his Exceptions without his Papers. I have thought fit to mention all these things, because this Tryal was the inlet to all that follow'd, and gave Encouragement to spill nobler Blood. The Injustice of the Violence us'd to the Prisoner, must be measur'd from the Reasons given for it, that the Papers were Instructions from Council and Solicitors, and none in Law was allow'd in Treason. 'Tis true, no Council are allow'd for the Prisoner in a Tryal upon an Indictment of any Capital Matter; but in an Appeal for Capital Matters, Council are allow'd even on the Trial. The reason given, that the Indictment is the Suit of the King, and no Council or Witness is allowable in a Capital Matter against the King, is foolish, as shall be hereafter shown; and as vain is the Reason that the Judges are Council for the Prisoner, which they ought to be: but I doubt it will be suspected, that in this Case and many others, they did not make the best of their Clients Case; nay generally have betray'd their poor Client, to please, as they apprehended, their better Client, the King; for so they say, they are to be Council likewise for the King in Indictments, that is to say, they are to be indifferent and upright between both, so certainly they are to be in Appeals; therefore that is not the Reason why no Council is allowed the Prisoner in the Indictment, but the true Reason in probability is, that the Prisoners in Indictments are generally so very poor that they could not be at the Charge of having Council, and so Non-usage gave Colour of a Law.

The other Reason my Lord Coke gives for it, viz. that much of the Truth may be discern'd by the Prisoner's Behaviour, or Answers, which would be conceal'd if he spoke by another, is not satisfactory; for the same is to be said in an Appeal. As to the publick, it is not material whether a Man is prosecuted and punish'd by an Indictment, or an Appeal; and that Appeals are less frequent than Indictments, is only that the first is more chargeable than the last, for though we hear not of late of any Appeals but in Murder, yet they lie in Robbery, Burglary, Felony, and and in all Crimes at Common Law punishable by loss of Life or Member: but though the Rule in Indictments is, That no Council is allow'd, yet it is confin'd to the Tryal; no Law, Common or Statute, nor any Usage says, a Prisoner shall not have Council to advise him before or after the Tryal; and in Murder and all other Crimes, it is always admitted; and why not in Treason?

In Treason say some, 'tis Criminal for one to Advise or Sollicit for the Prisoner; and the King's Council said, he had known one indicted for being a Solicitor for one in High Treason; and says the Court, it is Criminal for one to be Solicitor or Council in Cases of High Treason, unless assign'd by the Court: and whether it be so or no is worth Inquiry.

First, No Law Book as to this Matter makes any difference between Treason, and other Crimes; and Advising and Solliciting is spoken of in general Terms, which being reduc'd to Particulars, will shew the Absurdity of it.

Suppose I observing the Indictment on which the Prisoner was arraign'd, was erroneous, and should therefore advise him to move and quash it for that Error: for, say I, if you should be try'd on this Indictment, and found guilty, unless you move in Arrest of Judgment, you will be attainted; and then you can take no Advantage of that Error; and if you be acquitted you may be indicted again, and try'd again, because the first Indictment was erroneous.

If this be Law, as none can deny it, is it not lawful to advise him? and is it not fit for the Court to quash the Indictment faulty, notwithstanding all the Cant of Dilatories, Subterfuges, and defending himself by plain Matter of Fact? Or suppose I advise in Fact that I hear that such a Witness is to come against him, I know he is hired to do the Job, and I will prove it on him if call'd. Or suppose I tell him, I know such a Witness is convict of Perjury, and if he will call me, I will produce the Records of his Conviction; can any Lawyer say these things are Criminal? but if I should advise a Prisoner to escape out of Prison, shewing him the Way of doing it, it is criminal.

In all Cases comforting a Traytor is Treason, but it is meant where you do it to keep him from Justice; for else feeding a Traytor in Prison is Treason, which none will affirm. So that reducing general Words to particular Facts, clears the Sophistry of them; nor is it criminal to be a Solicitor in Treason, for where there is no positive Law, as in this Case there is not, natural Reason must take place; and better Reason cannot be given than what the Prisoner in this Case gave: If a Man be coop'd up and not suffer'd to go about his Business himself, and no Friend must be employ'd to do it for him, how is it possible for him to make his Defence? I know it is said his Innocency must defend him, but the Folly of that saying shall be shewn in another place. But say they, The Court shall assign him a Council and Solicitor; but when, and for what? only for a Point of Law. May not a Prisoner want a Solicitor for a Matter of Fact? Suppose he had occasion for a Witness which he could not readily find, or occasion for a Copy of Record, for want of which Mr. Cornish suffer'd; was it not reasonable for him to have a Solicitor? And when shall the Court assign him a Solicitor? only when the Prisoner comes upon his Tryal, and then it is too late to have any use of him; as Colledge was arraign'd at twelve, and try'd at two a Clock the same Day, and as was Mr. Cornish's Case. But, say the King's Council, they had known one indicted for High Treason for being a Solicitor in such a Case; tho' I do not believe it, yet that Authority goes no farther to prove the Matter, than an Indictment I knew against a Person once, for stealing an Acre of Land; and against another for wickedly and devilishly breaking an Award, whereby two unjust Arbitrators directed the Prisoner to convey his Land to a certain Lord, without any Satisfaction or Recompence, prov'd those Matters to be Felonies.

But tho' a Prisoner may be advis'd, yet that Advice must not be reduc'd to writing. Then suppose one Man's Memory be good, and can bear all the Advice given him, and another Man's Memory bad, and cannot do it: Is not the last hang'd for having a bad Memory, rather than for his Crime? But tho' it may be reduc'd to writing, yet it must be his own Hand writing, and not another's; how ridiculous is the Distinction? Suppose the Prisoner cannot write, then is he hang'd for his Parents Fault or Misfortune, for not educating him, or for not being able to educate him better.

Which is somewhat of kin to the late practice in the West, where many Men were hang'd for having old Jewish Names, as Obadiab, or the like, with a Jelt, that their Godfathers hang'd them. But suppose it is not lawful in general to be a Council or Solicitor, with, or to a Prisoner committed for High Treason; yet the Prosecution being the King's, he may give a Privilege which the Law of Courts doth not allow, and in this Case it was so done; for, to the Confusion of those who did this Injury, and of those Judges who would not do the Prisoner Right, they have printed the Orders of the King and Council, which appointed Mr. West and Aaron Smith to be his Council and Solicitor.

If it was lawful for the Prisoner to have Council, and to have Advice in writing; it was very unlawful, and as high a Misdemeanour in the King's Council to order his Papers to be taken away, as they were capable of being guilty of, both the Prisoner and the Matters of his Defence being under the Protection of the Court.

It is not an ancient Practice the seizing of Papers, tho' of late us'd; it began, I believe, upon my Lord Coke, whose Papers were seiz'd and carry'd to the Secretaries Office, upon the like Pretences as of late, and when return'd, were gelt of many Bonds and other Securities, to a great many thousand Pounds value, which never came to Light. It was afterwards practis'd upon some Members of Parliament, and, as I remember, voted Illegal, as undoubtedly it is: for tho' sometimes you may meet with Papers which may be evidence against the Prisoner; yet it is possible that other Papers than the Prisoner's may be mix'd with his to make good an Accusation; nay, which is worse, some of the Papers may be withdrawn, which may be the only Matter of his Defence, and that hath been often practis'd. And I cannot but remember a Story about this Matter: When Sir William Jones died, it was said, that one from Whitchall offer'd Sir William Jones his Servant a great Sum of Money but to let him search his Master's Study, to find a Paper which would discover great Matters. A certain Person discoursing with a Privy Counsellor about it, the Privy-Counsellor said, It was not true; for, says he, if we had a mind to have done it, could we not send a Messenger on pretence of searching for treasonable Papers, and bring all the Study to Whitehall, and keep what we would of them?

But tho' that hath been often practis'd, yet this was the first time that ever a Prisoner had the Instructions for his Defence taken away from him; and the manner was worse than the thing, it being done just as he was coming to his Tryal, relying upon his Writing, not his Memory, for his Defence; besides the Agony so great an Injury put him in, when he had so great a Concern upon him, as the Tryal for his Life, and he could not but know by all that Preparation, that it was more than ten to one against him: all which is well seen in his Tryal, where he so pathetically and sensibly press'd the Court for Justice in this Matter, which they excus'd with such mean Answers, that all Mankind must see they were satisfy'd of the Injustice, and were resolv'd not to do him Right: They knew not which way he came by the Papers, they knew not but he may be criminal who brought them him; they knew nothing of his Papers, they knew not what Papers he meant; that his Lordship did not take them away, and such like stuff: as if it was not the Duty of the Court to relieve the Prisoner against the Oppression of any such Persons but themselves; else why did they not ask Murrel and Sawel who stood by, and were charged with taking them, for the Papers, and have satisfy'd themselves of them? but in truth they knew before what they were. And Colledge was a true Prophet, when finding his Life so beset, he said, This was a horrid Conspiracy to take his Life: but it would not stop there, for it was against all the Protestants in England. And the Rule the Court made at last was as unjust, That he should have the use of some of his Papers after he had pleaded not Guilty, but not before; for suppose there was Matter in them which could not be made use of after such Plea, as a Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court, a Pardon, otherwise acquitted, and the like, could not be pleaded, or advantage taken of them after not Guilty pleaded; altho' there was not such, yet there might have been such Pleas for ought the Court knew. How unjust then was it for him to plead not Guilty before he should have the use of his Papers? but there was Matter in them for quashing the Indictment; and he hinted so much to the Court, as that the Indictment contain'd Crimes of different nature, as Treason and Misdemeanour, and I think it was good Cause to quash the Indictment.

In all Civil Matters, two Matters of different Natures cannot be put into one Action, as Debt and Trespass; two Capital Crimes of different Natures cannot be join'd in one Indictment, as Murder and Robbery: and for the same, and another Reason, Treason and Misdemeanour cannot be join'd in one Indictment; for the Jury may observe that one part of the Indictment, which in it self is but Misdemeanour, as that he said, The King minded nothing but Beastliness, &c. tho' charg'd in the Indictment as Treason, was prov'd, and not the material Parts of the Indictment, as designing to seize the King's Person, &c. and finding some part of the Indictment prov'd, might find him guilty generally, which extends to every Article of the Indictment, and so the Jury deceiv'd, and the Prisoner in danger; or suppose he was acquitted of such an Indictment, if it ought to have been quash'd, whether the Prisoner shew the Error or not, he may be try'd again upon another good Indictment for the same Treason. If therefore what he offer'd was an Error, or but like an Error in the Indictment, by the Law which favours Life, and the jeopardy on Life, the Court ought not to have try'd him on that Indictment, but have directed another Indictment to have been found. It is a vain Objection to have said, That that would have been troublesome. Is the Mischief of that comparable to that of putting a Man twice in jeopardy of his Life for the same thing? but it would have been a delay. I say none; for there was a Grand Jury in Court, and within the two hours time the Court adjourn'd (to give the King's Council Opportunity of viewing the Prisoner's Papers which were taken from him, and to consider of the Method of his Prosecution by them, which they did, and alter'd it from what they at first design'd it) the King's Council might have had a new Bill found; but peradventure they could not prevail with that Grand Jury to have found a new Bill; they remembred they had ill luck with the first Bill at London, which I believe was the true reason: but I'll do the Court no Injury, in supposing that to be the Cause of the Adjournment which was not; 'tis true, in the printed Tryal 'tis pretended they adjourn'd in order to dine; yet those that knew the Adjournment was by the Direction of the King's Council, and overheard their whispering with the Chief Justice (which is both an indecent and an unjust thing, and is neither better nor worse than a Plaintiff or Defendant's whispering a Judge while his Case is before him trying) and I know that the Judges had breakfasted but a little before, and had no great stomach to their Dinners, and therefore believe, that that before assign'd, and not what was pretended, was the true Cause. They might better have put off their Dinner to their Supper, than their Supper to their Breakfast, as they did, the Tryal lasting till early next Morning.

But because all Irregularities of Court and Council, in all these Matters, are shifted off and excus'd by two Sayings not understood generally; the first whereof is, That the Court is to act for the King, and the Council are for the King, and no Person must come near the Prisoner to the Prejudice of the King, as in Fitzbarris's Case was often said; a Witness was permitted to go on in an impertinent Story, of a Transaction between him and my Lord Shaftsbury, in my Lord Russell's Tryal, of which the Prisoner complain'd that it was design'd to incense the Jury; and tho' the Chief Justice declar'd it was not Evidence, yet a great while afterward he went on in a like manner; nay, the Council in summing up the Evidence, repeated the same Matter, which was permitted because it was for the King; and yet when the Earl of Anglesey began to say what the Lady Chaworth told him, he was snub'd, and cut short; and Mr. Edward Howard was serv'd the same same Sauce, because it was against the King: It is fit therefore to know what is meant in Law by those words. No body doubts what the Courts or King's Council of late Days meant; but in Law they are not so meant, for tho' many things are said to be the King's as the Protector of his People, and more concern'd in their Welfare than any private Persons; yet they are so in Preservation, and not in Property or Interest. The Highways are the King's, in preservation for the Passage of his Subjects; and whoever obstructs them wrongs the King, as he is hurt when his Subjects are hurt: but in Property the Soil generally belongs to private Persons. The King is hurt when his Subjects are oppress'd by Force, because he has engag'd to defend them; and therefore the Offender is punish'd by the King, to deter the Offenders and others from committing the same Offences, which is for the benefit of the Publick. But as a Man may be oppress'd by open Force, so he may be oppress'd by private Insinuations and false Accusations, and the King has engag'd to defend his Subjects from such; not that it is possible to prevent them but by Consequence, that is, by punishing such as shall be found guilty of those Crimes, which heretofore were punish'd with the highest arbitrary Punishments we read of: The Consequence is, That it is for the King to punish Offenders, to acquit the false accus'd, and to punish the false Accusers; that is to say, In all Cases to do right according to Law and Truth.

Surely Queen Elizabeth gave the best Explanation of the Words, when the Lord Burleigh, seeing Sir Edward Coke, the then Attorney General coming towards her, he said, Madam, here is your Attorney General, Qui pro domina Regina sequitur. Nay (says she) I'll have the words alter'd, for it should be, Qui pro Domina Veritate sequitur.

For the King and for Truth, they are synonymous words; for the King against the Truth is a Contradiction. And the Judges and King's Council having taken an Oath to advise the King according to the best of their cunning, which is according to Law and Truth; if therefore the King's Council use Means, and the Court permit them so to do, to suppress Truth, or to disable the Prisoner from making his Innocence appear, as in Colledge's Case was done; if they urge things as Evidence of the Crime whereof the Prisoner is accus'd, which by Law are not Evidence, as in this Case, in the Lord Russell's Case, Col. Sidney's Case, Mr. Hamden's and Mr. Cornish's Case, and in many more they did, and as in some of them shall be hereafter shewn, If they insinuate any Fact as Evidence, which is not prov'd, as in my Lord Russell's Tryal, That my Lord of Essex kill'd himself; if they wrest as Evidence of the Fact, what in Sense is not so, as in Colonel Sidney's Case, the writing his Book (nay, for any thing appear'd, it was writ before King Charles the Second came to the Crown) they are Council against the King, being against Truth as well as against the Prisoner.

I think no Man will deny the truth of this Proposition. That it is as much the King's Interest to have an Innocent accus'd of Treason, acquitted, as it is to have a Nocent accus'd of Treason, convicted. If that be true, then let any one shew me a reason if he can; for there is no Law against it, why he may not have the same Liberty of clearing his Innocence, as the Prosecutor hath of convicting him; I mean by free and private access of all Persons to the Prisoner, as is us'd in all other capital Matters. If it be said he may get some to corrupt the Witnesses against him, or suborn others for him, the same may be said in all other Matters; but in Treason that is not a likely matter, for generally the Prisoner never knows what he is accus'd of, and consequently cannot know his Accuser, nor how to provide a Counter-Evidence, till he comes to be arraign'd, and then it is too late: for generally he is presently tried after his Arraignment, as was the Case of Colledge, and my Lord Russell, and Mr. Cornish; and Persons committed for Treason are so much the less able to corrupt or suborn Witnesses than any other Criminals, that they generally, according to the late Practice, have no Accuser brought face to face to them on their Commitment as all other Criminals have, who always are committed upon an Accusation made upon Oath in their hearing, and their Defence heard before their Mittimus made; and whatever the Pretence may be, yet in Experience, it is found that more Perjuries are committed in Prosecutions for Treason by the Accusers, than by the Witnesses for the Prisoner.

One reason is, A Witness in Treason is more difficultly convicted than in any other Crime: for Treason is an Ignis fatuus, 'tis here and there, as Colledge was first in London, then in Oxford; it is not confin'd to place or time, as all other Crimes are; in all other Crimes, as Murder, Robbery, or the like, it must be prov'd to be within the County where laid; it must be of the Person named in the Indictment, which are Evidences of Fact, which in some sort prove themselves. And there was but one that I remember (for Oates I do not count one) was ever justly convicted of Perjury in Treason, and that too was for want of cunning, for he foolishly swore to Time as well as Place, which a Witness in Mr. Hamden's Tryal would never be brought to do: Besides, Malice and Revenge, which in Prosecutors and Accusers in Treason are generally the Motives, go farther than Money or Kindness, which if us'd in any Case, are the Motives of false Witnesses for the Prisoner.

Now as for the King and for the Truth are the same, so for the King and for the Law are the same. The Laws are the King's, as he is to see the Execution and Preservation of them; so for the King against the Law is a Contradiction.

Therefore to try a Prisoner upon a vicious Indictment, as was done in Colledge's and Colonel Sidney's Cases, is against the King as it is against Law, for by that means he is in danger to be hang'd if convicted; or tried twice, if acquitted, which is against Law.

It is no Salve of the Matter what the Judges said in Colledge's Case, that the Evidence of Misdemeanour is no Evidence of Treason; for the same may be said in an Indictment of Murder and Robbery; nor that the Judges would take care to inform the Jury which was Evidence of Treason, which of Misdemeanour, which they promis'd to do, but were not as good as their Words, as shall be shewn; for the Court may forget so to do, and the Jury may forget what the Court said to them of that Matter.

But notwithstanding all this, if the Prisoner was innocent, there could be no harm done to him, for his Innocence would defend him: This was a Saying, and as mortal it was to Fitzbarris, to Colledge, to Colonel Sidney, to Mr. Cornish, and several others, as was the Letter \odot amongst the Greeks. It is true, my Lord Coke us'd the Expression, but in another Sense than that of late practis'd: I would fain know what they meant by the Expression; Is it, that no Man will or ever did swear falsely against a Prisoner in Treason? If that be true, how came the same Persons to be so violent against Oates for what he swore against Ireland? Or do they mean, that, let an Accuser swear never so violently and circumstantially against a Prisoner, yet if he be innocent it will do him no harm? If that be true, I would fain know how the Prisoner shall escape; is it that his Innocence shall appear in his Forehead, or an Angel come from Heaven and disprove the Accuser? Neither of which we have observ'd, tho' all have said, and I believe, that some Persons have been very innocently executed. Or shall the Accuser be detected by the bare Questions of the Prisoner? that I think will not be neither; and therefore to instance in the only Person who hath of late escap'd in a Tryal of Treason, where there was a Design against his Life, which was my Lord Delamere, if he had not had Witnesses to have prov'd the Persons mention'd to have been with him at the place and time sworn against him to be in other places, it was not his denial had serv'd his turn, but he would have run the same Fate with my Lord Brandon. Nay, I am apt to think had he been tried by a Jury of Commoners pack'd, as at that time they usually were, he had not escap'd.

The truth is, when I consider the Practice of late times, and the manner of Usage of the Prisoners, it is so very much like or rather worse than the Practice of the Inquisition, as I have read it, that I sometimes think it was in order to introduce Popery, and make the Inquisition, which is the most terrible thing in that Religion, and which all Nations dread, seem easy in respect of it. I will therefore recount some undeniable Circumstances of the late Practice: A Man is by a Messenger, without any Indictment precedent, which by the Common Law ought to precede, or any Accuser or Accusation that he knows of, clapt up in close Prison, and neither Friend or Relation must come to him; he must have neither Pen, Ink or Paper, or know of what, or by whom he is accus'd; he must divine all, and provide himself a Counter-evidence, without knowing what the Evidence is against him. If any Person advise or sollicite for him, unless assign'd by the Court by which he is try'd, they are punishable: He is try'd as soon as he comes into the Court, and therefore of a Solicitor there is no occasion or use; if the Prisoner desires Council upon a point of Law, as was done in my Lord Russel's Tryal, the Council nam'd must be ready to argue presently, and the Court deliver their Judgment presently, without any Consideration. The Prisoner indeed hath liberty to except to thirty five of the Jury peremptorily, and as many more as he hath cause to except to, but he must not know beforehand who the Jury are; but the King's Council must have a Copy of them: He must hear all the Witnesses produc'd to prove him guilty together, without answering each as he comes, for that is breaking in upon the King's Evidence, as it is call'd; tho' it hold many hours, as it happen'd in most of the Tryals: he must not have any Person to mind him what hath been sworn against him, and forgotten by him to answer; for if that were allow'd, the Prisoner perhaps may escape hanging, and that is against the King: There is a Proclamation to call in all Persons to swear against him, none is permitted to swear for him; all the impertinent Evidence that can be given is permitted against him, none for him; as many Council as can be hir'd are allow'd to be against him, none for him. Let any Person consider truly these Circumstances, and it is a wonder how any Person escapes; it is downright tying a Man's Hands behind him, and baiting him to death, as in truth was practis'd in all these Cases. The Tryal of Ordeal, of walking between hot Iron Bars blindfold, which was abolish'd for the Unreasonableness of it, tho' it had its Saying for it too, That God would lead the Blind so as not to be burnt if he were innocent, was a much more advantageous Tryal for the suspected than what of late was practis'd, where it was ten to one that the accus'd did not escape. If any of these things have been legally practis'd, I have nothing to say against it, but I have never read any thing of Common or Statute-Law for it. And I can with better assurance say than any Person who hath practis'd these things, that no Law in England warrants them; and if nor, then consider the unreasonableness of these Methods.

There is yet one Objection to be answer'd, which being a very great Hardship upon the Prisoner, gives some colour of imposing other Hardships upon him, to wit, That a Witness cannot be examin'd for the Prisoner on his Oath in a Tryal upon an Indictment of a capital Matter. It is not because the Matter is Capital, for then no Witnesses ought to be examin'd upon Oath for the Appellee in a capital Matter: Neither is it because it is against the King, for then no Witness ought to be examin'd on Oath for the Defendant in a Tryal upon an Indictment of any criminal Matter; yet in Indictments of all criminal Matters, not capital, 'tis permitted to the Prisoner.

To say Truth, never any reason was yet given for it, or I think can be, if you believe my Lord Coke, 3d Instit. fol. 79. of which Opinion my Lord Hales is, in his Pleas of the Crown, that that Practice is not warranted by any Act of Parliament, Book Case, or ancient Record, and that there is not so much as scintilla Juris for it; for he says, when the Fault is deny'd, Truth cannot appear without Witnesses. As for what is pretended, that it is swearing against the King, and therefore it is not allow'd of; 'tis a canting Reason, which put into sensible English, a Man will be asham'd to own. And as slight is the Reason, that it being a matter of so high moment as a Man's Life, the Prisoner will be the more violent and eager, and the Witnesses may be more prevail'd upon to swear falsely, more than they would be in a matter of less moment: The Weakness of that Reason hath been in part, and shall be further shewn. I think none will deny, but the end of Tryals in any matters Capital, Criminal, or Civil, is the discovery of Truth: Next, 'tis as necessary for the Prisoner to have Witnesses to prove his Innocence, as it is for the King to have Witnesses to convict him of the Crime; which Proposition is agreed by the Practice, it being always permitted, that the Prisoner shall produce what Witnesses he can, but they are not to be upon Oath. In the last place, since Truth cannot appear but by the Confession of the Party, or Testimony of Witnesses of both sides, it is necessary to put all the engagement as well on the Witnesses of part of the Prisoner, as of part of the King, to say the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, as the nature of the Matter will bear: and as yet no better means has been found out than an Oath; which if deny'd to the Prisoner's Witnesses, either he is allow'd too great an advantage to acquit himself, or he is not allow'd enough.

If all that his Witnesses say without Oath, shall have equal credit as if they swore it, then he hath too much advantage; for Men may be found who will say falsely what they will not swear, as is plain enough. How often doth a Defendant say in a Plea at Law, that a Deed is not his, which yet in an Answer in Chancery he will confess to be his? If his Witnesses shall not have Credit because not sworn, to what purpose then is it permitted him to produce them? If they shall have Credit, but not so much as if sworn, I ask how much Credit shall be given? Is it two, three or ten Witnesses without Oath shall be equivalent to one upon Oath? And besides, that Question never was or can be answered, what Credit shall be given them? There is an unreasonable Disadvantage put on the Prisoner, that a Witness produc'd on his part, of equal Credit with the Witness against him, shall not have equal Credit given him, because he is not on his Oath; whereas he is ready to deliver the same things on his Oath, if the Court would administer it to him, and yet that difference was taken in Fitzharris's Case, as to the Credibility of Everard and Oates, the first being upon his Oath, the last not.

I do not offer this as any Reflection upon the late Proceedings, but as a reason why matters in capital Proceedings ought not to have been carried further than heretofore they were, against the Prisoner, by example of so unreasonable a Practice.

But to return to the Trial of Colledge, which came on in the Afternoon, when the Attorney insisted that the King's Witnesses ought not to be examin'd out of the hearing of each other; in which he was over ruled, but the Rule not observ'd; nor was it material: for the King's Council having the Prisoner's Writings, and by them observ'd how he intended to make the Witnesses against him contradict themselves, they did not produce such Witnesses as were not instructed to concur in the Evidence of the same matter, but produc'd only such as were instructed to give Evidence of distinct matters. And therefore Dugdale was first produc'd, who gave Evidence of vilifying words spoke of the King at several times at Oxford and London, by the Prisoner to himself alone; that he shew'd the Witness several scandalous Libels and Pictures, and said he was the Author of them; that he had a silk Armour, a brace of Horse Pistols, and a Pocket Pistol and Sword; that he said, he had several stout men to stand by him, and that he would make use of them for the defence of the Protestant Religion; he said the King's Party was but an handful to his Party. Stevens swore the finding of the Original of the Raree Show in the Prisoner's Chambers. John Smith swore his speaking scandalous Words of the King, and of his having his Armour, and that when he shew'd it the Witness, he said, These are things that will destroy the pitiful Guards of Rowley; that he said, he expected the King would seize some of the Members of Parliament at Oxford; which if done, he would be one should seize the King; that he said, Fitzgerald at Oxon had made his Nose bleed, but before long he hop'd to see a great deal more Bloodshed for the Cause; that if any, nay if Rowley himself, came to disarm the City, he would be the Death of him. Haynes swore he said, Unless the King would let the Parliament sit at Oxon, they would seize him, and bring him to the Block; and that he said, the City had one thousand five hundred Barrels of Powder, and one hundred thousand men ready at an hours warning. Turberville swore, he said at Oxford, that he wish'd the King would begin; if he did not, they would begin with him, and seize him; and said, he came to Oxford for that purpose.

Mr. Masters swore, That in discourse between him and the Prisoner, he justified the Proceedings of the Parliament in 1640. at which the Witness wondred, and said, how could he justify that Parliament that rais'd the Rebellion, and cut off the King's Head? to which the Prisoner reply'd, That that Parliament had done nothing but what they had just Cause for, and that the Parliament which sat last at Westminster, was of the same Opinion; that he call'd the Prisoner Colonel in mockery, who reply'd, Mock not, I may be one in a little time.

Sir William Jennings swore as to the Fighting with Fitz Gerald, and the words about his bleeding.

For the Prisoner.

Hickman said he heard Haynes swear God damn him, he car'd not what he swore, nor whom he swore against, for it was his Trade to get Mony by swearing. Mrs. Oliver said, Haynes writ a Letter in her Father's Name, unknown to her Father. Mrs. Hall said she heard Haynes own that he was employ'd to put a Plot on the Dissenting Protestants. Mrs. Richards said, she heard him say the same thing. Whaley said, Haynes stole a Silver Tankard from him. Lun said, Haynes said the Parliament were a Company of Rogues for not giving the King Mony, but he would help the King to Mony enough out of the Phanaticks Estates. Oates said, Turberville said a little before the Witnesses were sworn at the Old Baily, that he was not a Witness against the Prisoner, nor could give any Evidence against him: And after he came from Oxford, he said he had been sworn before the Grand Jury against the Prisoner, and said the Protestant Citizens had deserted him, and God damn him he would not starve: That John Smith said, God damn him he would have Colledge's Blood: That he heard Dugdale say, that he knew nothing against any Protestant in England; and being taxt that he had gone against his Conscience in his Evidence, he said it was long of Colonel Warcup, for he could get no Mony else; that he had given out that he had been poison'd, whereas in truth it was a Clap. Blake said, that Smith told him Haynes his Discovery was a sham Plot, a Meal Tub Plot.

Bolton said, Smith would have had him given Evidence against Sir John Brooks, that Sir John should say there would be cutting of Throats at Oxford, and that the Parliament-men went provided with four, five, six, or ten Men apiece; and that there was a Consult at Grantbam, wherein it was resolv'd, that it was better to seize the King than to let him go, whereas he knew of no such thing; that he would have Bolton to be a Witness against Colledge, and told him what he should say, lest they should disagree in their Evidence; that he heard Haynes say he knew nothing of a Popish or Presbyterian Plot, but if he were to be an Evidence, he car'd not what he swore, but would swear any thing to get Money. Mowbray said, Smith tempted him to be a Witness against Colledge, and was inquisitive to know what discourse passed betwixt him and my Lord Fairfax, Sir John Hewly, and Mr. Stern on the Road; and said, that if the Parliament would not give the King Money, and stood on the Bill of Exclusion, that was Pretence enough to swear a Design to seize the King at Oxford.

Everard said, Smith told him he knew of no Presbyterian or Protestant Plot, and said, Justice Warcup would have persuaded him to swear against some Lords, a Presbyterian Plot, but he knew of none; he said, Haynes told him it was Necessity and hard Pay drove him to speak any thing against the Protestants; and being question'd how his Testimony agreed with what he formerly said? answer'd he would not say much to excuse himself, his Wife was reduc'd to that necessity, that she begg'd at Raufe's Door, and mere necessity drove him to it, and self-preservation, for he was brought in Guilty when he was taken up, and was oblig'd to do something to save his Life, and that it was a Judgment upon the King or People; the Irishmens swearing against them was justly fall'n on them, for ousting the Irish of their Estates.

Parkhurst and Symons said, they had seen at Colledge his House his Arms, about the latter end of November. Yates said, Dugdale bespoke a Pistol of him for Colledge, which he promis'd to give Colledge. And upon Discourse sometime after the Oxford Parliament, Yates said Colledge was a very honest Man, and stood up for the good of the King and Government. Yes, said Dugdale, I believe he does, and I know nothing to the contrary. Deacon and Whitaker said they knew Colledge was bred a Protestant, and went to Church, and never to a Conventicle that they knew of, and thought him an honest Man. Neal, Rimington, Fanner and Norris to the same purpose; and Norris, that Smith (in company where was discourse of the Parliament Mens being agreed to go to Oxford) said, he hop'd they would be well provided to go, if they did go. El. Hunt said, a Porter in her Master's absence brought the Prints taken in Colledge's House eight Weeks before; and said, Dugdale told her, after her Master was in Prison, he did not believe Colledge had any more hand in any Conspiracy against his Majesty than the Child unborn, and he had as lieve have given an hundred pounds he had never spoke what he had, and that he had nothing to say against her Master, which would touch his Life.

Having summed up all the material part of the Evidence in the order it was given, for or against the Prisoner, let us see whether upon the whole, an honest understanding Jury could, with a good Conscience, have given the Verdict the then Jury did; or whether an upright Court could, with a good Conscience, have decla'd they were well satisfied in the Verdict given, as all the four Judges in that Case did, tho the Chief Justice North only spoke the words. And tho it is too late to advantage the deceased, yet it will do right to the Memory of the Man, to whose dexterous management on his Trial many now alive owe the continuance of their Lives to this Day: it was not their Innocence protected the Lord Fairfax, Sir John Brooks, and many others before mention'd, and many not named in the Tryal, but Colledge's baffling that Crew of Witnesses, and so plainly detecting their falshood, that the King's Council never durst play them at any other Person but the Earl of Shaftsbury, as shall be shewn; and failing there, they were paid off, and vanish, and never did more harm visibly; what under hand Practices they might be afterwards guilty of, I know not.

Who could believe any one of those four Witnesses, Dugdale, Haynes, Turberville, and Smith, if it were for no other reason than the improbability of the thing; for (as Colledge said) was it probable he should trust things of that nature with Papists, who had broke their Faith with their own Party, who could lay greater Obligations of secrecy upon them than he was able to do? That he, a Protestant, should trust People who had been employed to cut Protestants Throats? And neither of them ever discovered any of the things they swore, till after the Oxford Parliament, tho most of them were pretended to be transacted and spoken before.

Who could believe Dugdale in any of his Evidence against the Prisoner, when Oates testified against him, that he said he knew nothing against any Protestants in England? And being tax'd by Oates, that he had gone against his Conscience in his Evidence against Colledge to the Grand Jury at London, he said, it was long of Colonel Warcup, for he could get no Money else; which was a plain Confession he had sworn wrong, and of the Cause for which he did it, and of the Person who induced him to do it? That he had given out that he was poison'd, whereas his disease was a Clap; which was an ill thing in him, as it imply'd a Charge of poisoning him on other Persons? And when Elizabeth Hunt testified against him, that he said, after Colledge was in prison, that he did not believe Colledge had any more hand in any Conspiracy against the King, than the Child unborn; and that he had as lieve have given an fool. he had never spoken what he had, and that he had nothing to say against Colledge which could touch his Life? And when Yates testify'd against him, that when Yates said Colledge was an honest Man, and stood up for the good of the King and Government; Yes, said Dugdale, I believe he does, and I know nothing to the contrary?

Who could believe Haynes in any part of his Evidence against the Prisoner, when Mrs. Hall and Mrs. Richards said, he own'd he was employ'd to put a Plot upon the Dissenting Protestants? when Whaley testified against him that he was a Thief, and had stole Whaley's Tankard? when Lun testify'd that Haynes said the Parliament were a Company of Rogues, for not giving the King Money, but he would help the King to Money enough out of the Phanaticks Estates? when Hickman testified against him he heard him say, God damn him he car'd not what he swore, nor against whom he swore, for 'twas his Trade to get Money by swearing? when Mrs. Oliver said that he had writ a Letter in her Father's name, without her Father's knowledge? when Bolton testified against him, that he said he knew nothing of a Popish or a Presbyterian-Plot, but if he were to be an Evidence, he cared not what he swore, but would swear any thing to get Money? when Everard testified against him, that he said Necessity and hard Pay drove him to say any thing against the Protestants; and being taxt that his Evidence against Colledge agreed not with what he had formerly said, he said, he could not excuse it, but his Poverty and self-Preservation drove him to it? which was a plain Confession of the falshood of his Evidence, and of the reason of it? and added, it was a Judgment upon the King or People, the Irish Mens swearing against them, for outing the Irish of their Estates: which can have no other sence, than the Irishmens forswearing themselves against the English was a Judgment, &c.

How could Turberville be believed in any part of his Evidence against Colledge, when Oates testified against him, that he said a little before the Witnesses were sworn against Colledge at the Old-baily, that he was not a Witness against him, nor could give any Evidence against him: and yet afterwards at Oxon Turberville told him he had sworn against Colledge to the Grand Jury, and said the Protestant Citizens had deserted him, and God damn him he would not starve: which words I think need no explanation.

And lastly, how could Smith be believed in any part of his Evidence against the Prisoner, when it was testified against him by Blake, that he said Haynes his discovery was a Sham-Plot, a Meal-Tub-Plot; The meaning of the words I think are well known. That he would have had Bolton swear against Sir John Brooks, the Lord Shaftesbury, and Colledge, things of which he knew nothing, and told him what he should swear, lest they should disagree in their Evidence. When it was testified against him by Oates, that he said God damn him he would have Colledge's Blood? when it was testified against him by Mowbray, that he tempted Mowbray to be a Witness against Colledge, and Sir John Brooks, and was very inquisitive to know what discourse he had with the Lord Fairfax, Sir John Hewly, and Mr. Stern on the Road to Oxon; and said, if the Parliament did not give the King Money, but stood on the Bill of Exclusion, that was pretence enough to swear a design to secure the King at Oxon? when Everard, and many others testified he said he knew of no Presbyterian or Protestant Plot. Now if Colledge his Witnesses were credited, it was impossible the King's Witnesses could be credited, that was agreed by the Court to be true upon the Trial. The answer on the Trial was, that the King's Witnesses were on their Oaths, the Prisoner's were not; which was a Reason but in Words and not in Sense.

And surely what Colledge said on that matter; without any knowledge in the Law, cannot be answer'd. It is not fair dealing, said he, with a Man for his Life, because the Witnesses against him upon their Oaths deny the things the Witnesses for him prove, therefore the Witnesses against him must be believed, and the Witnesses for him disbelieved, when yet the Witnesses for him were ready on their Oaths to maintain what they said for him.

Nor is the Law so: for taking the Law to be, that a Witness for the Prisoner shall not be sworn, which is only made good by practice; the same Law, that is to say Practice, is, that a Witness without Oath for the Prisoner, is of equal Credit with the Witnesses against him upon Oath, and none can shew the contrary till of late days.

To give one Example of many, where it was necessary for the Prisoner to produce a Witness to prove his Innocency, and where the Witness for him was as much believed as the Witness against him. There was a Person, whose name I do not remember, arraign'd (at the same time that an Indictment of High Treason was endeavour'd to be found against the Lord Shaftesbury) for robbing another of Money and of a hired Horse, of which likewise the Person was rob'd; the robbing of the Money and a Horse was prov'd by himself and several others, but that the Prisoner was the Person that committed the Robbery, none positively swore but the Person rob'd, who likewise swore that the Horse on which the Prisoner was taken, was the Horse taken from him; against which the Prisoner prov'd, by the Person of whom the Horse was agreed to be hired, that the Horse the Prisoner was taken upon was not the Horse he let to hire to the Person rob'd: whereupon the Prisoner was acquitted; and yet the Prisoner's Witness was not on his Oath; and the Person robbed was on his Oath: which, besides that it proves the matter for which it is brought, shews the Folly as well as Injustice of the Practice of imprisoning Men without letting them know for what, and without confronting them with the Witnesses against them, upon the Commitment. For how could this Man have known what Witnesses to produce, unless he had known what in particular he was indicted for? and how could he have sent to such Witnesses, unless he had had the liberty of sending to the Persons who were to be Witnesses for him? And it shews the Folly of those sayings, that a Man's Innocence must defend him; and that the Evidence against the Prisoner must be as clear as the Sun at noon Day: All will agree that the Prisoner in this Case was innocent, and yet that alone, without producing a Witness to prove his Innocence, would have stood him but in little stead; and how could he have known what sort of Evidence to have ready, unless he knew what he was accus'd of?

I do not mean what Crime he was accus'd of, as Treason, Murder, Robbery, Theft, or any other Crime; but unless he knew the Person robbed, when, where, and other Circumstances: which, say some, is not to be permitted in Prosecutions of High Treason; for if so, then no Man shall be hanged for High Treason; unless there was as strong proof against him, as is requir'd in any Indictment of any Capital matter; and that; they say, is not to be expected in Treason; for no Man will call two Witnesses to be Evidences of his Words or Actions; being Overt Acts of his Design of High Treason. The Objection is too foolish to be answer'd; for it is neither better nor worse, than that if a Man shall not be hang'd for Treason without Evidence, he shall never be hang'd for Treason; for no Evidence, and Evidence which the Law rejects, is the same in sence, tho different in words; and as the intent of the mind is difficult to prove on the part of the King, so is the Prisoner's part of producing Counter-Evidence much more difficult: and therefore the Law hath taken care by the Statute of Edward the 3^d, that the Intent shall be prov'd by an Overt Act; and by the Statute of Edward the 6th, that that Overt Act shall be proved by two Witnesses. And therefore, since the Law hath taken care that there shall be a stricter proof in High Treason than in any other Crime, for the Judges to say a less proof may be admitted to convict one of High Treason than of any other Crime, is very ridiculous; unless they will at the same time say, that the Parliament who made those Statutes, were Men of little Understanding, and not to be regarded. And certainly it was a good Counter-evidence, which was given in behalf of the Prisoner by some Witnesses, tho' slighted by the Court, and not permitted by the Court to be given by others, that there were great endeavours to set up sham-Plots, and charge the Protestants with them: For let any one shew me a Reason, why the Evidence of sham-Plots, tho' they do not immediately concern the Prisoner, is not as good Evidence for him, as the Evidence of a real Plot, in which he was not concerned, is against him. The last was permitted to be given in Evidence against my Lord Russel, Colonel Sidney, and others; tho' the first was not permitted to many Witnesses in this Tryal, and it was a material Objection which Colledge made, That there was no proof of any Persons being concerned with him in the Design of seizing the King.

It was an unadvised answer the Court gave; that he alone might be so vain as to design it alone: For if from thence an Inference is made, as was insinuated by the Court to the Jury, that therefore he did alone design it, it was an Evidence of his being a Mad-man, not a Traytor. Had the Evidence been of the mischiefing the King by means which a single Person is capable of using, as Stabbing, Shooting, and the like, the matter is not impossible; but it being by means which it is impossible for a single Person to execute, it carries such disbelief with it, that it is impossible to find a Man in his Senses at the same time guilty of it: And a Man that is non compos mentis, if my Lords Coke and Hales are to be believ'd, cannot be guilty of High Treason within that Branch of the Statute, Compassing, and imagining, &c.

It is true, a Mad-man may be guilty of Treason, in attempting the King's Person; but for that he is no more said to be punish'd, than Beasts of Prey are when kill'd, which are more properly said to be destroy'd than punish'd for the publick good. But if so good a Counter-proof in Colledge's Case was not made, as ought to have been, some Allowances ought to be made for the Prisoner's ignorance of what he was accus'd of, his usage and strict Imprisonment before his Tryal, the ruffling him just before his Tryal in the manner before declar'd, the depriving him of his Notes, the giving an Evidence of many Hours long against him, before he was permitted to answer any part of it. And the use of Pen, Ink and Paper, was but of little advantage to him; for a Man that hath not been used to do it, cannot take Notes of any use. And in Truth, he complain'd he had not taken Notes of half said, but relied on the Court to do him Justice in summing up the Evidences, which they promised to do, but broke their Words.

It must likewise be consider'd, that the concern a Man hath upon him, when he is upon Tryal for his Life, is so far from fortifying that it weakens his Memory: Besides, the foul Practice, without any remorse, put upon him and his Witnesses; some of them imprison'd, that he could not have them at the Tryal; others so threaten'd, that they durst not appear for him, and the Cry of the Auditory against him and his Witnesses, were mighty Discouragements. All these things being consider'd, how could any understanding Jury take it on their Oaths, That the Evidence against the Prisoner, of a Design to seize the King, &c. was as clear as the Sun at noon Day?

As for the Evidence which Mr. Masters gave, if it were true, it was no Evidence of Treason; an erroneous Opinion may make an Heretick, but not a Traytor: it is a very distant Consequence, that because he affirm'd that the Parliament in Forty had done nothing but what was just in respect of King Charles the First, therefore the Prisoner was guilty of a Design against King Charles the Second: besides, that in all probability, tho' Mr. Masters might inveigh against the Parliament, Colledge might only justify them, by throwing the ill things done in that time upon the Papists, as Colledge in his Defence says; and Mr. Masters, after much pumping, recollected himself, and said he thought the Prisoner said, the Papists had a Hand in those things; which prov'd the Truth of Colledge's Assertion.

As for the Evidence of Colledge's saying he might be a Colonel in time; if he hop'd for what he said, it was no Crime, or Proof of a Crime, 'tis no more than what every private Soldier hopes for, and he himself had been one.

As for the Evidence of Atterbury, Sawel, and Stevens, of their seizing the Pictures; admit they swore true, it did not amount to the Proof of the Treason in the Indictment, or of any sort of Treason: And yet if Colledge's Maid said true, it looks as if the Finders or some other Person sent them to Colledge's House, in order to find them there.

Of all sorts of Evidence, the finding Papers in a Person's Possession is the weakest, because no Person can secure himself against Designs upon him in that kind. And after Dangerfield's Design upon Colonel Mansel, and the Evidence in Fitzbarris's Tryal, that the Design of that Pamphlet was to convey Copies of it into some Members of Parliaments Pockets, and then seize them, that piece of Evidence ought to have been spar'd, till those and other Practices of like kind had been forgotten.

The last Witness was Sir William Jennings, of Colledge's saying he had lost the first Blood in the Cause; but it would not be long before more would be lost; what was that more, than that he thought more would be lost in the Cause, which he interpreted the Protestant Cause? Suppose he thought so without Reason, and was mistaken; where was the Crime? But if he thought so upon good Reason, and good Reason he had to think so, there was no pretence of a Crime in it. I believe most Men thought as Colledge did, from the time of the Business of Fitzbarris; and what Imputation was it to him? Why were not all the Expressions he us'd in his Tryal as good Evidence against him as that Saying? For he then said it was an horrid Conspiracy to take away his Life, and would not stop at him, for it was against all the Protestants of England, and the like; which was his Opinion, and after times shewed him a true Prophet.

One thing was very dishonestly insinuated, that the Prisoner was a Papist, which was only to incense the Jury against him, and it had its Effect; whereas it was very plain that he was a Protestant, tho' perhaps a Dissenter, and therefore had not lately come to the publick Church; and under that notion the Papists and some Protestants were contented that Dissenters should be punish'd as Papists; yet if they could have prov'd him a Papist, no doubt they would have done it; for the Destruction of the Man was the Design of the Prosecution, and it matter'd not for what Treason he was convicted, so he was convicted. And he himself gave a pretty sort of Evidence against himself, if they could have prov'd him a Papist: he prov'd, and confess'd, he was educated a Protestant; and if they could have prov'd him reconcil'd to the Popish Religion, which was Treason, he helpt them a great deal in their Proofs: It was therefore very disingenuous in the Chief Justice to reproach him at his Condemnation, that he had not made that Proof of his Religion as it was expected, when his Religion was not the Matter of which he was indicted; that was sily insinuated to exasperate, and no Proof pretended to be made of his being a Papist. But he had more Reason to complain of the Injustice of the Court in summing up the Evidence, who did it in such a manner, that if they had been Council for the Prisoner, as they pretended, they would have been justly suspected to have taken a Fee of the other side to betray their Client.

For, as Colledge readily said, if the Chief Justice had looked on his Notes, he would have found more Evidence against Turberville and Dugdale than he had repeated. And it was a lame Excuse for the Chief Justice to say, he refer'd it to the Memory of the Jury, for he could not remember more; when as I dare say, after about thirteen Hours Evidence, the Jury remember'd no more than that they were to find him Guilty.

The Truth is, upon the whole, what Colledge said was true; they took away all helps from him for defending himself, and therefore they had as good have condemn'd him without a Tryal. Notwithstanding all which, the Courage of the Man never faint'd, but after he was condemn'd, boldly ask'd, when he was to be executed? To which the Lord Chief Justice reply'd, it depended on the King's Pleasure; but smoothly said, in those Cases of High-Treason they did not use to precipitate the Execution, it should not be so sudden but that he should have Notice to prepare himself. And in truth he had from the eighteenth, on which he was condemn'd, to prepare himself, to the one and thirtieth of August 1681, on which he was executed; a much longer time than was allow'd my Lord Russel, or Mr. Cornish, and many others. And the true Reason of so long a Reprieve, was to see how the Nation would digest the matter, and whether the Man by the Terror of Death could be prevail'd upon to become a Tool to destroy other Innocents: but when it was found that the People were quiet, and that the Prisoner could not be prevail'd upon to do an ill thing to save his Life, his Execution was order'd; yet, as a shew of Mercy, his Quarters were permitted to be bury'd; a Favour he slighted, with saying that he car'd not whether he was eaten up with Flies or Worms. The same Favour was likewise shew'd Fitzbarris, but the true Reason of both was, That they had a mind that the Tryals and pretended Crimes, for which Fitzbarris and Colledge were condemn'd, should be forgotten; which would not be so soon done, if their Quarters were always expos'd to view. But tho' all People were quiet, yet there was great grumbling, and most honest Men were afraid; and the constancy of Colledge at his Execution was such, that it made the most violent against him relent.

Remarks on the Earl of Shaftsbury's Grand Fury.

THE next Person question'd was the Earl of Shaftsbury, against whom a Bill of High Treason was prefer'd to the Grand Jury, at the Sessions House, on the 24th Day of November 1681. The Evidence was publickly given in Court, and was this; Mr. Blathwaite swore he found the Papers then produc'd in a Velvet Bag in the great Trunk, which was taken by Mr. Gwynne in the Lord Shaftsbury's House. Mr. Gwynne swore, all the Papers in the Velvet Bag, when he deliver'd them to Mr. Blathwaite, were taken by him in the Lord Shaftsbury's House: Sir Leoline Jenkins swore, the Paper produc'd was the Paper deliver'd him by Mr. Blathwaite, and it was unalter'd. Then the Paper was read, the Effect of which was a Project of an Association sign'd by no Person, and whose Hand-writing it was none knew. John Booth swore, that he was engag'd to Captain Wilkinson, who pretended to have a Commission from the Lord Shaftsbury and several others to go for Carolina;

he was about that time introduc'd into the Earl's Acquaintance by the Captain, where was a Discourse about Carolina Business; he was four or five times between Christmas and March, with the Earl and the Captain: that the Captain told him he was to command fifty Men to be the Earl's Guard at Oxon, and would have had him to be one: That if the King did not consent to several Acts of Parliament and other things, they were to purge the Guards and Court of several Persons; and tho' the Captain told him that first, afterwards he heard the Earl say the same things, particularly about a Week or ten Days before the Parliament sat at Oxon, he gave some Intimation of this to Walter Banes, and then writ it down, and sent it to the Council sealed in a Cover. Turberville swore, that the Lord Shaftsbury said about February, there was but little good to be done with the King as long as his Guards were about him. Smith re-stify'd a great deal of Discourse between him and

and the Lord Shaftsbury of something said reflecting on the King; and that he should say, that if the King should offer any Violence to the Parliament at Oxford, he would meet with a strong Opposition, for that the Gentlemen, who came out of the Country, came well provided with Horse and Arms to oppose, and that they might lawfully do it, if he offer'd any Violence to them whilst they sat. Haynes swore, that the Earl said if the King did not give Haynes his Pardon, he and others would raise the Kingdom against him; that Haynes gave the Earl an exact account of Transactions since King Charles the First's coming to the Crown, and that the Earl said the Duke of Buckingham had as much Right to the Crown as any Stuart in England. John Macnamarra said, the Earl said, the King was popishly affected, and took the same Methods his Father did, which brought his Father's Head to the Block, and they would bring his thither; and this was said in the Presence of Ivey, and he thought of his Brother; and said, the King deserv'd to be depos'd as much as King Richard the 11d. Dennis Macnamarra likewise testify'd the last Words, and that it was the latter end of March, or beginning of April. Ivey said, the Earl said, if the King deny'd Haynes a Pardon, they would rise upon him and force him to give one, and that they design'd to depose him and set up another in his stead. Bernard Dennis said, he had a great deal of Discourse with the Earl, who bid him speak to his Friends in Ireland to be in a readiness to assist the Commonwealth of England; for they intended to have England under a Commonwealth, and extirpate the King and his Family.

Then the Court told the Jury the Indictment was grounded on the Statute of King Charles the 11d, but they ought to consider of that Statute, as also the 25th of Edward the 11d.

The Question is, whether the Grand Jury ought to have found the Bill on this Evidence. First it ought to be consider'd, what the Duty of a Grand Jury is; and I think it is not what the Chief Justice said, to consider only whether there be probable ground for the King to call the Person accus'd to an account, much less do I think, that the reason of finding a Bill by the Grand Jury was for the Honour of the King, or Decency of the Matter, lest Persons accus'd should be call'd to an account by the King, where there is no kind of Suspicion of the Crime committed by them, as the Court said (which last Matter was never assign'd as a Reason of finding a Bill by the Grand Jury before) but I take the Reason of a Grand Jury to be this, that no Man for a capital Matter shall ever be question'd by the King, unless a Grand Jury take it on their Oaths that they believe the Matter of the Accusation true; I put an Emphasis on the Words question'd by the King.

It is true, it is generally said, that the Business of a Grand Jury, in capital Matters, is in favorem vite; but that taken simply is not true, for then what Reason can be assign'd, why a Man shall be arraign'd on an Appeal of Murder, Robbery or the like, which touches his Life, as much as an Indictment of those Crimes, without having the Matter of the Appeal first found to be true by a Grand Jury? But the true Reason of a Grand Jury is the vast Inequality of the Plaintiff and Defendant, which in an Indictment is always between the King and his Subjects; and that doth not hold in an Appeal, which is always between Subject and Subject: and therefore the Law in an Indictment hath given a Privilege to the Defendant, which it hath done in no other Prosecution, on purpose, if it were possible, to make them equal in the Prosecutions and Defence, that equal Justice may be done between both. It considers the Judges, Witnesses and Jury are more likely to be influence'd by the King than the Defendant; the Judges as having been made by him, and as it is in his Power to turn them out, punish, to prefer or reward them higher; and tho' there are no just Causes for them to strain the Law, yet they are such Causes, which in all Ages have taken place, and probably always will. This was the Reason of running Prerogative so high in their Judgment of High Treason before the Stat. of Ed. III. that no Man, as that Statute says, knew what was not High Treason: This was the Reason of expounding that Statute oftentimes between the making of it, and the making of the Statute of Queen Mary, that People were at as great a loss, till the last Statute, as they were before the making of the first; and even since the Statute of Queen Mary, the Exposition on the Statute of Ed. III. has been so extravagant and various, that People are at this Day as much at a loss to know what is not High Treason, as they were before the Statute of Ed. III. Nor was it, nor is it possible, but that the great Power of enriching, honouring, rewarding and punishing lodg'd in the King, always had, and yet must have an Influence on the Witnesses and Jury; and therefore it is that the Law has order'd, that at the King's Prosecution no Man shall be criminally question'd, unless a Grand Jury, upon their own Knowledge, or upon the Evidence given them, shall give a Verdict, that they really believe the Accusation is true.

I own of late Days, they have said the Duty of the Grand Jury is to find, whether the Accusation be probable or no. But that Saying is warranted by no positive Law, or ancient Authority; and therefore the Duty of the Grand Jury must be founded in the Oath administer'd to them, which is as strict as the Oath administer'd to the Petit Jury: and to say Truth, the Verdict of the Petit Jury takes credit from the Verdict of the Grand Jury; which is not only the Reason of the difference in the Names of the two Juries, but is likewise the Reason why an Attaint for a false Verdict doth not lie against a Petit Jury.

The Oath of the Grand Jury is, To present the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth: The Oath of the Petit Jury is, well and truly to try, and true Deliverance make, between the King and the Prisoner at the Bar, &c. which signifies the same thing as to present the Truth, &c. It is true, some Reasons have been offer'd, which if consider'd, are Words without Sense; as that the Presentment of the Grand Jury is but in order to bring the Prisoner to his Tryal, and he is not before the Grand Jury to make his Defence himself: but that can be no Reason why Probabilities should satisfy the Jury, because it doth not answer the Design of the Law, which will have a Man convicted by the positive Oaths of two Juries, consisting of more than twenty four, in all Indictments.

Next, why is a Grand Jury compos'd of more substantial and understanding Men than a Petit Jury, if their Business be mere Formality, or a Matter of less weight than the business of a Petit Jury? In the last place, why is less Evidence requir'd to convict a Man in his absence, than is requir'd to convict him if present? It is far from an Argument, that less Evidence is requir'd to convict one if absent than if present, that it seems to me that more Evidence should be requir'd to do it. Men may, and often do make very fair Stories in the absence of a Person accus'd, that when present, he easily answers; and there being no positive Law for the Direction of a Grand Jury in that Matter, a Grand Jurymen is excusable, nay, it is his Duty to give a Verdict according to the plain understanding of the Words of his Oath, which is to present the Truth, as far as he is convict of it; and that Truth must be found according to his Knowledge, or as it is represented to him by Witnesses.

And as for the Witnesses, they must be Persons of Credit; and all Persons are suppos'd to be so, unless the Grand Jury know the contrary, or have been so credibly inform'd. 'Tis true, a Grand Jury ought not to believe Coffee-house Stories, or light Stories; but common Fame by credible Persons, which is vox Populi, ought to prejudice them against a Witness, so as to disbelieve him: and it is no Answer to say, as the Chief Justice in this Case said, that the Credibility of the Witness is not to be consider'd by the Grand Jury, because the King is not present to defend the Credit of his Witnesses; tho' the Fact in that Case was not true, for the King's Attorney, Solicitor and Council were present, and I think the King is no otherwise present at any Criminal Prosecution; and the Jury knew by Colledge's Tryal and by Wilkinson's Depositions before the King, that the Evidence of all the Witnesses produc'd, except what were to the Paper, was question'd, but even that was afterwards quitted by the Court: when it would not be swallow'd by the Grand Jury; for afterwards the Court told them, that if they of their own Knowledge, knew any thing against the Witnesses, they might consider of it, but not of what they were credibly inform'd by others: and besides the Credibility of the Witnesses, the Possibility or Probability of the thing sworn is to be consider'd by the Grand Jury; an impossible thing they ought not to believe, tho' sworn by never so many credible Witnesses, and a very improbable thing they cannot positively on their Oaths swear they believe.

And not only the Fact, but what the Crime of the Fact alledg'd in the Bill of Indictment, the Grand Jury as far as they are capable of judging Matter of Law, ought to consider; so they were told in the Charge given them. 'Tis true, if they were ignorant in the Law, and the Court in their Directions misled them, as if the Court should tell them stealing a Horse is High Treason, and the Grand Jury find it accordingly, it is excusable in the Grand Jury, tho' punishable in the Court. But wrong Directions by the Court in finding a Fact where there is no Evidence, do not excuse the Jury.

Now to examine the Matter in hand by these Rules, could any Person who knew my Lord Shaftsbury, or that had heard of, or believ'd his Character to be what it was, believe that it was possible for him to discourse with the Witnesses at the rate they swore, to some of them at the first, to others of them the second time he saw them; to discourse of Matters of Policy, with Booth at one time, and afterwards with Haynes, and afterwards with Macnamarra, Fellows of so little Sense, that he would have been asham'd to have entertain'd them in the meanest Office about him; and yet as they pretended, he makes them his Privadoes in the Secret, of not so much what he would have had them, but of what he intended himself to do?

Who could believe any thing, Turberville, Smith or Haynes should say, where there was so much of their Falshood and of their Designs to swear falsely, prov'd against them in Colledge's Tryal? or of Ivey and the three Macnamarras after that Tryal, who tho' they were not produc'd at it, because the King's Council by Colledge's Notes saw he was able to falsify them, yet some Witnesses in that Tryal prov'd their Design of swearing falsely?

Who could believe Booth's Story of listing so many Men under Wilkinson, to be at my Lord Shaftsbury's dispose at Oxon, after Colledge's Tryal, and after what Wilkinson had testify'd to the King and Council, tho' not then prov'd to the Grand Jury?

A Judge indeed cannot take notice of any thing not prov'd (tho' he may and ought to be a Witness, if he knew any thing material of the Matter try'd before him and others) but a Grand Jury may take notice of any thing they know or believe. The Passages at Colledge's Tryal were pretty notorious, being authentically publish'd by Fra. North, and the Examination of Wilkinson by as authentick a Paper.

It was unaccountable, that the Witnesses conceal'd what they heard the Earl speak so long, of which none of them pretended to give any Reason; nor was it any Excuse to those who sign'd a Petition to the City, in which they suggested they were tempted to swear against their consciences, to say they knew not what was in the Petition: he that sets his Hand to a thing as if he assented to it, but doth not, is a Man of Falshood. Suppose one sets his Hand to a Bond, said to be seal'd and deliver'd, not having seen it seal'd and deliver'd, is not he guilty of little less than Forgery? But admitting those Witnesses had sworn Truth, yet the Jury ought not to have found the Bill; for they ought to find the Bill true according to all the material Circumstances of it, as well as the Substance of it, which was High Treason: One material Circumstance of it was, that it was said to be High Treason within the Statute of Charles II. And that made another Circumstance of the Indictment material, which was the time when that Treason was committed; because by that Statute the Prosecutions of Treason on that Statute ought to be within six Months after it is committed, and the Indictment ought to be within three Months after the Prosecution: and he being imprison'd in July, and the Bill suggesting that the suppos'd Treason was committed the 18th of March before, and divers other times both before and after, which might be interpreted to have been after the Prisoner's Commitment; had the Jury found the Bill as laid, they had found the Treason to have been committed, not only within the time the Prosecution by that Statute ought to be, but also within the time the Indictment ought to have been prefer'd; whereas in truth the Earl had been imprison'd above three months before the Indictment prefer'd, and there was no Evidence of any Treason committed by him after his Imprisonment : and therefore the finding the Bill as laid had been injurious, to bring a Man in question for his Life on that Statute, whereas by Law he ought not to have been.

For it was resolv'd in Colledge's Case, that the Prosecution for Treason on that Statute ought to be within six Months, and the Indictment within three Months, tho' the Court was of another Opinion in the Lord Russell's Tryal.

And that this Indictment was on that Statute, was expressly said to the Grand Jury, and upon good Reason ; for the Court in their Charge said, that the Intention of levying War, or designing to imprison the King, was not Treason, till the Statute of Charles the Second ; tho' in the Lord Russell's Tryal it was held to be Treason by the Statute of Ed. 3. and therefore the Time of the Treason committed was material to be found by the Jury.

As for the Writing found in the Earl's Study, it was no manner of Evidence of Treason, admitting what the Witnesses swore as to the finding it to be true ; because it was not prov'd that it was prosecuted or compos'd by the Earl of Shaftsbury, or by his Order, and that piece of Evidence was in that particular a meer Original.

In Fitzharris's Case, it was prov'd the Libel was compos'd by his Direction ; Colonel Sidney's Book was prov'd to be like his Hand ; it was pretended that Colledge said he was the Author of the Raree-show, and no Example of this Evidence was ever made use of before.

Neither was it Evidence of Treason as to the Matter, for there was not one word against the present King, but his Successor, if he should be such a Person.

It is true, one of the King's Council said that one Passage in it was, that they would join to destroy the Mercenary Forces about London, and thence infer'd it was down-right levying War against the King and his Guards ; whereas there is not any such word or thing in the Paper as he pretended to cite : and if it had been in the Paper, it would have been but Evidence of a Treason within the Statute of the late King. And then the time of writing it ought to have appear'd ; and if that had been clear'd, yet for the above Reasons it was no Evidence ; and the Grand Jury, tho' some of them afterwards smarted for it upon other Pretences, did like honest understanding Gentlemen ; and had they done otherwise, to avoid the Ignominy of being call'd, tho' in truth it was an honour to be, an Ignoramus Jury, they had justly deserv'd the Reproach which since have lighted on other Juries, such as Mr. Cornish's, and the like. And having spoken of this Ignoramus Jury, for which two of them, if not more, were afterwards upon other Pretences severely handled ; I think fit to say something of the Sufferings of one, for being in a preceding Ignoramus Jury, because it was a meer Novelty, and that was Mr. Wilmer.

Remarks on Mr. Wilmer's Homine Replegiando.

HIS Prosecution, tho' it was but Criminal and not Capital, did as much Mischief, as it struck a Terror into all Grand Juries, as any the before mention'd Matters ; and it was by the Homine Replegiando issued out against him. As for the Information against him I shall say nothing, because the Injustice of both will appear in the Discourse of the first. Mr. Wilmer had sent a Boy beyond Sea by Agreement, as Mr. Wilmer said, whether true or not as to this Matter is not material ; a Homine Replegiando is granted against Mr. Wilmer for this, at whose Prosecution is not material : for any Person upon Suggestion, back'd by an Affidavit, may have it granted. The Sheriff would have return'd on the Writ, that the Boy was sent by his own Agreement and Consent with Mr. Wilmer ; which Return was not allow'd, and the Sheriffs were told that they must either return they had replevied the Boy, and they must have him in Court, or else they would be laid by the Heels ; or else they must return that Mr. Wilmer had Essoign'd him, which is carrying him away, where the Sheriff could not find him ; and then a Writbernám would issue against Mr. Wilmer, upon which he would be taken and kept in Prison till he produc'd the Boy : and no other Return should be allow'd than one of those two, and if they did not make one of those two Returns, they should be committed. Now if the Law be so, the Court were innocent, but the Law ought then to be reform'd in that Particular ; but if the Law was not so, as I think it is not, I think Mr. Wilmer and the Nation had great Injustice done them ; for it was quickly seen what the mischief of that Judgment was, and therefore it was endeavour'd to be reform'd by an Act of King and Council afterwards : First, I say, it is lawful for a Master to covenant with a Servant to serve him beyond Sea ; in the next place it is lawful for a Master to send his Servant beyond Sea according to such Agreement. And if both these Propositions be true, as I think no Man will say they are not, it is a natural Consequence to say, that the Law hath provided a Return upon a Writ of Homine Replegiando, if it should be sued out against such Master for a Servant so sent beyond Sea, which may indemnify the Master in so doing ; and that Return can be no other than the special Matter, which in this Case was refused to be accepted. 'Tis no Argument that no such Return is ever read of in any Book : For the Law hath determin'd, that some Returns are good, and others bad ; yet it hath not said what are all the good Returns which may be made on an Homine Replegiando, and the Sheriff is no more confin'd to Returns, than a Man in the pleading of his Case, which my Lord Coke says may vary according to the nature of his Case ; and yet the Law hath said what is a good Plea, and what a bad one, but hath not express'd all all the good or bad Pleas. And therefore it is no Argument against such a Return, that no Precedent of it can be found, 'tis enough that no Judgment can be produc'd against it; and the reason of both may be, that the Case never happen'd before, that is to say, that never any Person was so malicious before, as to sue out an Homine Replegiando against a Master for a Servant sent by Agreement beyond Sea: and Returns must be vary'd according to the Case. Perhaps no Precedent can be found of a Return on that Writ, that the Person sought for is dead; yet all Persons will agree it is a good Return, it is so in Replevin of Cattel, and even that Example falsifies the Doctrine of the Court, that there are but two Returns on that Writ allowable by Law. It is not an Argument for disallowing the Return, that the Person sent beyond Sea was a Child not capable of making such a Contract (tho' I believe if the Matter were look'd into, he was of Age so do) for nothing of that doth, or can appear in the Writ or Return: It stands therefore simply upon this, whether the Sheriff may on an Homine Replegiando return, that the Person suppos'd to be in Custody, being of full Age, was by mutual Agreement sent beyond Sea by the Person in whose Custody by the Writ he is suppos'd to be, which I think is far from a Doubt. But notwithstanding all these Hardships on Juries, it was seen to be plainly impossible to procure any Bills of Indictment for High Treason, much less any Persons to be convicted on the like Evidence except in London, where are some of the best as well as the worst of Men in the Nation; and even there it was not to be done as long as the Juries were sensible and honest Men, which would be as long as the Election of Sheriffs was in the Citizens; and to the honour of the City, it was seen that they chose only honest Men to be their Sheriffs, and that when they saw the Publick Safety depend on honest Officers, tho' at other times they had rather pay a Fine, than undergo the trouble and charges of that Office, yet at that time no Man legally chosen refus'd to stand, tho' they were reproach'd and punish'd for it; and if Mr. Box refus'd, it was because he would not join with North who was impos'd on the City, for which reason it was resolv'd to take from the City the Right of chusing Sheriffs, but by what means was not presently resolv'd on.

That the City might forfeit their right of Electing, there was no great doubt; as if the Sheriffs were dead, and new ones were not chosen in a convenient time, so that there was a defect of Justice or the like: but nothing of that kind could be laid to their Charge, and therefore a new unheard of Matter was thought on and set a foot, which was to make the City forfeit their being a Corporation, and being annihilated, the Grants made to them by the Crown, as the Right of Electing Sheriffs was, would revert to the Crown again.

A Quo Warranto was therefore brought against the City in Hilary Term 1681. to shew by what Warrant they pretended to be a Corporation, and to have the Privileges mention'd in the Writ, to which the City pleaded and set forth their Right; and the King reply'd, and set forth several Matters done by them, contrary to the Duty of a Corporation: upon which there was a Demurrer, of which Judgment was not given till Trinity Term 1682. I will say nothing of the Right of the Proceeding, it having been largely and learnedly argu'd for the City; but if the Matter were so clear a Case, as the King's Council and Court would have it to be, how came it to pass that in Henry the Eighth's Time, when the King was so earnestly bent to dissolve the Religious Corporations, in which the publick Inclination join'd with him, the doing it by Quo Warranto was not thought of? It was very plain, that those pretended Religious did not observe the Rules, nor perform the Ends for which they were incorporated; and certainly their Misdemeanours against the intent of their being incorporated were better Causes of Forfeiture than was the Cities petitioning for a Parliament, &c. Yet that King took other Methods, he had formal Conveyances of their Lands from most of those Corporations, and formal Surrenders of their Corporations sign'd by every Individual of the Corporations, and those afterwards confirm'd by Act of Parliament. And sure the late King had as much Right to bring a Quo Warranto against Maudlin College for refusing, contrary to their Duty, to admit the President the King nominated, if the King had a Right to nominate the President (as some Judges asserted he had) as King Charles the Second had against the City: and it was once in debate, whether the Proceeding against that College should be by Quo Warranto, or before the Ecclesiastical Commissioners; the last was resolv'd on, not as more legal or effectual, but as more expeditious, in the one the Proceedings being de die in diem in the other from Term to Term. This only I will observe, that when the Judgment against the City was given, which was of the greatest Concern to the Nation ever contested in any Court of Westminster-Hall, it was done by two Judges only, and no reason of that Judgment rendred, whereof Withins, who was one, I think, heard but one Argument in the Case. It is true, they said Raymond, when alive, was of the same Opinion, and said Saunders who was then past his Senses was of the same Opinion, tho' I was told by one who was present, when the two Justices came to ask his Opinion in the Matter, he had only Sense enough to reproach them for troubling him about the Matter, when they were sensible he had lost his Memory. And to say truth, the delivering the Sense of an absent Judge, tho' it hath been sometimes practis'd, is not allowable; for sometimes they deliver another Opinion than what the absent Judge is of. Judge Withens did so in several Cases, when he deliver'd the Opinion of Sir Edward Herbert, which Sir Edward Herbert afterwards in open Court disown'd: Judge Holloway serv'd Judge Powel the same Trick, if the last said true. The long depending of the Quo Warranto had alarm'd all the Nation, who yet were quiet, hoping that Judgment would be given for the City, as some of the Judges and of the King's Council had given out it would; but the contrary was resolv'd on, and therefore the Nation at the time of the giving the Judgment must be amus'd with somewhat else, and nothing so proper as a Plot: but there was difficulty in that also, for if the pretended Plotters should be acquitted, it would make the Matter worse; and nothing would secure that, but imposing what Sheriffs they pleas'd on the City, and accordingly North and Rich being pitch'd on, the one by a shameless Trick, and the other by open Force, were impos'd on the City.

Having gain'd that Point, the Proceedings in the Quo Warranto were much quicker than before, and two Arguments were only permitted in it of each side, the one in Hilary Term, the other in Easter Term; and so the Case was ripe for Judgment in Trinity Term following, but must be, and was usher'd in with the discovery of a pretended Plot, which so amaz'd the Nation, that tho' Judgment in the Quo Warranto was given two days after the pretended Discovery, no body took any notice of it for several Months after it was given. The truth was, no body durst mutter against it, or question the legality of it; it was enough to have brought any Person into the Plot to have done it, it would have been call'd flying in the Face of the Government, questioning the Justice of the Nation, and such like Cant.

Remarks on the Lord Russel's Tryal.

THE Plot being nois'd abroad, the Persons before hand resolv'd on were seiz'd on, and the Lord Russel and others were clapt up close Prisoners.

The Lord Russel having been for some few Weeks a close Prisoner in the Tower, was the 13th of July, 1683. brought to the Old Baily, and arraign'd for High-Treason, in designing to raise a Rebellion, &c. and the same Morning was try'd. He desir'd he might not be try'd that Day, for he had some Witnesses which would not be in Town till Night: Which being deny'd, then he desir'd that the Tryal might be put off till the Afternoon; which was likewise deny'd. He ask'd whether he might not make use of any Papers he had? which was allow'd. He desir'd he might have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jury that was to pass on him; he was told he had a Copy deliver'd to his Servant some days before.

The Jury being call'd, he challeng'd the Foreman for being no Freeholder in London. To argue which, Council were assign'd him; who presently came into the Court, and having excus'd their not speaking more to the Matter for want of time to consider of it, argu'd, That it was a good Challenge, because at Common Law every Jurymen ought to be a Freeholder; that the Statute of 2 Hen. 5. provides none shall be a Jurymen in capital Matters, but a Freeholder of forty Shillings yearly: That there is no difference between a City and County, and a County at large at Common Law, nor by that Statute 7 Hen. 7. which takes away the Challenge of no Freehold in the Ward in London, and shews it was a good Challenge in London before that time: the 4th Hen. 8. which likewise takes away the Challenge of no Freehold in London, shews it was a good Challenge before that time, and the same was infer'd from the 23^d of Henry the 8th: But tho' none of those Statutes extended to Treason, yet if it was a good Challenge in Treason in London before those Statutes, it was so still.

The King's Council said, at Common Law it was not necessary that a Jurymen in Treason should be a Freeholder; and tho' Treason is within the 2^d of Henry the 5th, yet by the Statute of Queen Mary, the Statute of the 2^d of Henry the Fifth, as to Treason, was repeal'd; that it was a Point they would not have lost to the City of London; that if the Prisoner should peremptorily challenge thirty five, as by Law he might, there would scarce be found thirty five more Freeholders in the City, the Inheritance of the City being mostly in the Nobility and Corporations, and consequently Treasons may be committed in the City, and there would not be enough to try it; and in the Case of the City of Worcester, in a Quo Warranto brought against them, that Challenge was taken and over-ru'd by the King's-Bench, by Advice of the Judges of the Common-Pleas; that the Venire mentions no Freehold, but only Proboi & Legales Homines de Vicineto.

Then the Chief Justice ask'd Mr. Pollexfen, Whether he did find any Judgment in Treason at Common Law, that no Freehold was a Challenge? who answer'd, He did not. Whereupon the Chief Justice reply'd, That then he did not speak ad idem; for he took it in Case of Treason and Felony, at Common Law it was no Challenge; and the Statute of Henry the Fifth in that Point was introductive of a new Law, and that Statute as to Treason was repeal'd by that of Queen Mary; and that a Case cannot be found of such a Challenge in Treason since the Statute of Queen Mary, but it was a business of great Importance.

The Chief Baron was of the same Opinion; for the same reason Justice Windham and Justice Jones were of the same Opinion; the last added, the rather because the Prisoner is allow'd to challenge thirty five peremptorily: and Justice Charlton was of the same Opinion. and the rather because no Precedent had been offer'd of such a Challenge before: Justice Levins was of the same Opinion, for the same Reason: Justice Street was of the same Opinion, for the same Reasons, and thought they had been very nice when the Life of the King lay at stake, and all the Customs and Privileges of the City of London seem'd to be level'd at in that Point: Justice Withens was of the same Opinion.

Then the Chief Justice told the Prisoner, the Court over-ru'd his Challenge; but that he had no hardship put upon him, for the Reason of Law for Freeholders was, that no slight Persons should be put upon the Jury, but in his Case there were Persons of Quality and Substance put upon the Jury, which was the same in substance with a Jury of Freeholders.

These being the Reasons of over ruling that Challenge, they may be ranked under these Heads. There was no such Challenge at Common Law; if there were, yet not in Treason. And if it were a Challenge in Treason, where the Tryal is in a County at large, yet not where it is in a City and County; and if in a City and County, yet not in London.

The assigning many Reasons for one and the same thing, makes the Judgment justly suspected: for if when two Witnesses to one Fact varying in the Circumstances of it, are justly suspected in point of Truth, several Reasons for the same Judgment

Judgment make the Knowledge or Integrity of the Judges justly suspected; every Case in Law, as my Lords Coke and Hales say, standing upon its own particular Reason: and therefore when many Reasons are given, it looks as if the Judges were hunting about for Reasons to make good what before hand they are resolv'd to vent for Law, rather than that their Judgment is the Result of those Reasons.

But to consider them singly, I do indeed think there is no express Resolution, that at Common Law, in any Case of any capital Matter, it was a good Challenge (except the Case of Fitzbarris, already taken notice of) but in civil matters my Lord Coke is express, that at Common Law it was a good Challenge; and with him Sir John Fortescue seems to concur, who in his Exposition on the Statute of Henry the 5th says, if the Debts or Damages be under forty Marks, the Jurymen shall have Land to a competent Value, according to the Discretion of the Justices. My Lord Coke saith, in such Case any Freehold sufficeth; now how can that be true, if it were not necessary at Common Law to have some Freehold? for the Statute makes no Provision for Debt or Damages under forty Marks. It must therefore be by Common Law, that some Freehold was necessary, and that any Freehold shall suffice. And surely, if in civil Matters it was necessary for a Juror to have a Freehold, much more in capital Matters, and mostly in Treason. It is very plain, that at Common Law no Man was thought to be a sufficient Man but a Freeholder; and tho now, and for some time past, the Value of Trade is equal to that of Land; yet heretofore it was not so, and by what was heretofore, the Common Law is to be known.

The matter of Trade was heretofore so inconsiderable, and the Traders themselves for that reason so vile, that it was a Disparagement for a Freeholder to marry with a Tradesman, as is to be seen by the Statute of Wharton: and therefore mere Tradesmen, and not Freeholders, were not to be trusted with the concern of a Tryal in a civil Matter, and much less in a capital, and least of all in a Tryal of High-Treason.

The Chief Justice Pemberton says, that the reason of Freeholders was, that no slight Persons should be put upon a Jury where the Life of a Man, or his Estate is in question; it is plain therefore, the Concern of the thing to be tried, is the measure of the substance of the Jury-man. If that be true, the Tryal in Treason is of the highest concern: How then is it true, as some of the Judges concluded, that tho Freehold might be requisite in some Cases at Common Law, yet in Treason certainly not? it is indeed a Paradox to me.

And the peremptory Challenge of thirty five allowed the Prisoner, is no Reason against the Challenge of no Freehold; for that is only a Privilege allowed the Prisoner in favorem Vitæ; and it might as well be argued, that no Challenge at all to the petty Jury shall be allow'd the Prisoner, because he had a Grand Jury past upon him before, which is also in favorem Vitæ; that no Man at the King's Suit shall be so much as question'd for his Life, till above the number of twelve substantial Men have on their Oaths said they think the Accusation true; and after that, he is allow'd to challenge peremptorily thirty five, and with Cause without number.

Vol. III.

To affirm therefore that no Freehold is not a cause of Challenge, because he may challenge peremptorily thirty five, is a non sequitur: and tho Non-usage, that is to say, that this Challenge was never taken in Treason, was then us'd as an Argument, yet it is the weakest of Arguments, which is to be found in Littleton; tho even that Fact was not true, for the Challenge was taken and allow'd before, unless you will distinguish and say, that in that Case it was taken by the King, and therefore good, and in this by the Prisoner, and therefore bad. I'm sure that difference cannot be warranted, either by Authority or Reason; and what tho Cook and the other Regicides and other Persons did not take that Challenge, is it an Argument that they could not, or that they thought they could not? perhaps they had forgotten to do it, as much as the Judges in this Case had forgotten their Resolution in Fitzbarris's Case; or perhaps they could not take it, their Jury being Freeholders; or perhaps it was to no purpose, they being tried in Middlesex, where a Jury of Freeholders would quickly be found. Nor is it an Argument that no Case of this Challenge at Common Law is to be found in the Books; for since the Statute of Henry the 5th to the time of Queen Mary, it could never be a Case, and from that time to this it could never be a Case in Felony: and the Law being so very plain, that if the Fact were with the Prisoner it was always allowed, if against the Prisoner it was disallowed, not as not good in point of Law, but as not true in point of Fact; therefore the Challenge perhaps was not taken notice of in the Books, which only report Difficulties.

It is true of late, and it is but of late Practice, the whole Transactions of a Tryal are published for the benefit of the Publisher, rather than for the common Good; and that indeed was the Motive of publishing Fitzbarris's Tryal signed by Fra. Pemberton, and of Colledge's Tryal signed by Fra. North, and of my Lord Ruffel's signed by William Pritchard Mayor, and Col. Sidney's Tryal signed by George Jefferies, and Mr. Cornish's Tryal signed by Thomas Jones. And that is the reason, why since that Statute we find no Case of such a Challenge in capital Matters, and before that Statute the Year-Books go but a little way.

It is enough there was no Resolution that it was not a good Challenge, for it will be of the King's side to shew why that should not be a good Challenge in Treason, which was in most if not in all other Cases.

It is pretty to observe what steps were made in over-ruling this Challenge, some were of Opinion that it was no Challenge in any Case at Common Law; so said the Attorney and Solicitor General, the Chief Baron, Justice Windham, and Baron Street. The Chief Justice thought it no Challenge at Common Law in Treason or Felony only, but that the Statute of Henry the 5th made it a Challenge in Treason and Felony, but whether the Statute of Henry the 5th made it a Challenge in Treason, the Chief Baron and Justice Windham doubted. Justice Jones thought it no Challenge at Common Law in Treason; Justice Levins would not determine whether it was a good Challenge in any Case at Common Law, but he and Baron Street were clearly of Opinion it was not a good Challenge in London. The Chief Justice thought it a business of great Consequence, not only for the Prisoner, but for all other Persons: Baron Street thought the Judges had been very nice in the Matter, which in the Phrase of the Law is giving themselves a great deal of trouble in a matter very clear, or of no moment.

but

But tho they differ'd in their Reasons, yet all agreed in this, and in this only, that tryed he should be, and that presently.

Then as for the Custom of the City of London, to try without Freeholders, how did it appear to the Judges that there was any such Custom? Did they ever read of any such Custom in the City of London? Nay, were not the Statutes which were cited, where no Freehold was made no Challenge in London in particular Cases, as so many express Resolutions, that there was no such Custom in the City? for if there had been such Custom, what need those Statutes? To which the Judges never vouchsafed any Answer, because in truth they could make no Answer.

But it was objected, there was the Resolution in the City of Worcester's Case, which I agree was of as good Authority, and of no better than the Judgment in the principal Matter of the Quo Warranto. And it was likewise objected, there would be a Failure of Justice in Cities, if the Challenge were good for want of Freeholders.

I ask, would it have been a Failure of Justice at Common Law, or by reason of somewhat which hath happened of late Times? There is none who pretends to know any thing of the History of England, that will say, that heretofore the Cities were not inhabited mostly by the Gentry, and especially the City of London; partly for Luxury, partly for their Security; and then there was no want of Freeholders in the Cities, but when matters became more quiet, and Trade encreased, and made Houses in the Cities more valuable, then were Houses of equal Convenience, and less Price, situate in the Suburbs, or in the Country; the Gentry by degrees parted with their Houses in the Cities to Tradesmen for Profit, and remov'd themselves to other Places. And I believe it may be remembered, that even the Strand, in the memory of Man, could have furnish'd the County of Middlesex with a sufficient number of Freeholders; and yet now, for the above Reasons, you can hardly find a Jury of Freeholders there.

Besides it must be remembered, that London heretofore had many of the King's Palaces in it, and the Countries did not then, as now, take up with Lodgings, but were Inhabitants of Houses: and if the Failure of Justice happen by the above means, I am sure it is against the Oath of the Judges to supply that Defect with their Resolution; but it ought to have been supplied by an Act of the Legislative Power.

If the Necessity of the thing warrants the Judgment, how unlearned were the Judges in Henry the 7th and Henry the 8th's Times, that they did not supply the defect in Law in the City of London, and other Cities by their Resolutions? How vain were the Parliaments in those Times, who supplied those defects in Law, mentioned in the Acts cited by those Statutes, which were Works of time and trouble, if they had thought the Judges by their Resolutions had Power to do it? for if they had Power to do it, they could have done it extempore, as in this Case.

For the last Objection, that the Writ mentions only Probos & Legales Homines, and speaks nothing of Freeholders; Legales may be very well interpreted, to imply Men qualify'd by Law; but I take it, that Homines implies it, for by Homines de Comitatu are meant Freeholders of that County; and all others, in point of Trust, are not consider'd in Law. My Lord Coke in his Comment upon the 28th of Eliz. 1. cap. 8. which gives the Election of Sheriffs to the People of the County where the Sheriffwick is not in Fee, says, People there means Freeholders of the County; and the same is understood by Writs to the Counties to choose Coroners, Verderors and the like, tho' the Writ says per communitatem Comitatus, & de assensu Comitatus.

And tho' the Writs of Venire in civil Matters, of late days, mention what Freehold each Juror shall have, yet that is by the Statute of the 35th of Hen. 8. cap. 6. which expressly commands the Writ shall so express it, in all Issues join'd in Westminster, to be tried between Party and Party; before which time it is plain, the Venire, even in civil Matters, did not express any Freehold, and that Statute doth not extend to issues join'd on Indictments.

Now if upon all which hath been said, it is not plain, that the Challenge ought to have been allow'd, yet sure it was doubtful; and if so, and a matter of great Consequence, as the Chief Justice said it was, why might not the Council for the Prisoner have had a little more time to have consider'd of the Challenge before they had argu'd it, or the Judges have taken a little time to consider the matter before they had given their Judgment? I dare say, none of them could remember any positive Resolutions one way or other, nor upon a sudden was it expected they should; and therefore for their own sakes, if not for the Prisoner's, they might have taken the Morning, if not the Day. The Prisoner desir'd his Tryal to be put off, for to have consider'd of it; in that time perhaps some of them might have remembered, or others might have put them in mind of their Resolutions in Fitzbarris's Case; they might have consider'd how to distinguish between that Case and this, and not run away with it, that that Challenge was never made in Treason, as all the Judges affirm'd. But my Lord Russel was told by the Court, that they always tried the Prisoner in Treason the Day he was arraign'd, and could not put off the Tryal for a Morning without the Attorney General's Consent; but surely that is not true, Plunket and Fitzbarris were try'd the Term after they were arraign'd, tho' the Attorney General oppos'd it. It is true, he submitted to the Rule, as it was as much his Duty to do as the Prisoner's; but if there be a difference between an Arraignment at Westminster and the Old-Baily, as to the speeding the Tryal, the Place will not vary the reason of the thing, if there be not any Law for it, as there is not; but even at the Old-Baily, the Tryal in Treason hath been put off to another Sessions, it was done in Whitebread's Case, and in many other Cases. If it be said that was by the Attorney General's Consent, I say that makes no difference, for the Judge is to be indifferent between the Attorney General and the Prisoner. If the Court must order nothing but what the Attorney assents to, why is not the Prisoner try'd and judg'd by the Attorney alone? or what needs all the Formality of a Tryal? If it be said that that Tryal was put off, because the King's Witnesses were not ready; I say there is the same Reason to put off a Tryal, because

cause the Prisoner's Witnesses are not ready, and that was the pretended, tho' not the true Reason of putting off Fitzbarris's Tryal to another Term; and there is no Law to the contrary.

It is totally in the Discretion of the Judges to put off a Tryal, which Discretion ought to be govern'd by Reason.

But indeed this was extraordinary and without any Precedent: it can never be shewn in the Case of the greatest or meanest Persons, being accus'd of the greatest or least Crime, that ever the delay of a Day, much less of a Morning, for his Tryal was denied, where he shew'd but any Colour for what he said, when the Sessions were to continue after the time he desir'd, as in this Case it did. Fitzbarris said his Witnesses were in Holland, and tho' he nam'd no Persons, yet his Tryal was put off to the next Term; my Lord Ruffel said his Witnesses could not be in Town till that Night, yet the Respite till next Day was deny'd: all Persons agreed, that there was some extraordinary Reason for it, and before the Tryal was over the Riddle was out.

My Lord of Essex was kill'd, or to be kill'd that Morning; as to this Matter, it is not material whether by his own or another's Hand: they were sensible the Evidence against my Lord Ruffel was very defective, and that Accident was to help it out, but that would not avail unless it were a surprizing matter upon the Jury; should the Jury have had a Days or but a Mornings time to consider of it, People might have been talking with the Jury. It was very material to ask, what influence that Accident would have on my Ruffel's Tryal, whether it was any Evidence against him: they might have been told what was true, that no Person kill'd was in Law suppos'd to have kill'd himself, till a Coroner's Inquest had sat upon the view of his Body, and found it so; and if it had been so found, yet even that had been no Evidence against another, because the Coroner's Inquest never found the reason why a Man kill'd himself; and if they should find the reason, yet even that was no Evidence against another, because that other was never call'd before the Coroner's Inquest to make his Defence. They might have been told a great many Circumstances of the Improbability of the killing himself; they might have observ'd that the King's Council were so far sensible, that it was no Evidence against my Lord Ruffel, that they never attempted to prove the Earl of Essex was dead or kill'd himself: it was only silyly insinuated, together with the reason of it, which had its Effect, if the Report be true of some of the Jurymen's saying it went farther with them than all the Evidence of the Witnesses produc'd; and if that be true, there was a reason, tho' not a just one, for speeding that Tryal beyond the ordinary Methods of Tryals at the Old-Baily.

But tho' my Lord Ruffel had seemingly less favour in that Matter than any other Person, even than Colledge, who had the respite of two or three hours between his Arraignment and Tryal, (tho' that was not in favour to Colledge, but only to examine his Papers which they took from him, and instruct their Witnesses accordingly) yet in other things he had more Favour or Justice done him: his Papers were not taken from him; it was agreed to be his Right to use them without questioning from whom he had them, what they were, or the like, as in Colledge's Case was done; he had a Copy of the Pannel of the Jury, even before his Arraignment, given him; and the Chief Justice said it was never denied in Case of Life that he knew of, which was denied Colledge before he pleaded; because then 'twas pretended there was no Issue join'd, till Plea pleaded, after which the Venire is awarded; tho' all Men know, that the Sheriff summons the Jury before the Arraignment, and even after Issue join'd. Colledge was denied a Copy of the Pannel, only he was told, he should look every Jurymen in the Face before he was sworn; and as far as the Looks of a Man betrays him, he should be satisfy'd whether he was honest or not, which is an ill way of judging; for I think the Person that gave that Rule, would have deceiv'd any Man by his Countenance, who had known his Practices.

But says the Attorney General, in my Lord Ruffel's Case it was matter of Favour, and not of Right, therefore no Injustice to Colledge. I confess of all Men who ever came to the Bar, he hath laid down the most Rules, which depend totally upon the Authority of his own saying; in Colledge's Case he affirm'd, that the King's Witnesses ought not to be kept out of the hearing of each other, when they gave their Evidence (a method us'd in civil Matters, the reason of which is well known, and none can show any Law or Reason why it should not be us'd in capital Matters) with as much Reason and Authority as what now said.

First, I do affirm there is no Authority in Law, which says a Prisoner shall not have a Copy of the Pannel; in the next place I affirm, that after a Jury struck in a civil Matter, each Party ought to have a Copy of the Pannel, in order to provide himself of a Challenge, if there be any Cause: In the last place, I affirm, that by Law more Favour is allow'd a Defendant in a capital Matter to defend himself, than in a Civil. And if these Propositions be true, let any Person if he can make out the Law, or Reason of the above Assertions.

Of a like Stamp was the Saying, when my Lord desir'd a Copy of the Matter of Fact laid against him, of the Attorney that he had notice of it; for Questions were put to him about it, and he was with his Lordship himself, and examin'd him upon those Questions, which was a Favour to him, that he might know what the Matter was he was accus'd of.

I do not affirm that ever it was practis'd, to give the Prisoner a Note of the Fact; to be given in Evidence against him, proving Treason, or that it was ever denied till then, nor do I know of any Law pro or con in the Case; but if one would judge by Reason or Practice in parallel Cases, I think it ought not to be deny'd.

I know not at present of more than two sorts of general Indictments, and those are of Treason and Barretry; the last is a general Indictment, for stirring up Suits without Reason, and without mentioning any Suit in particular: and therefore if by the Rule of the Court the Defendant was not help'd, which obliges the Prosecutor to give the Defendant, some reasonable time before the Tryal, a Note of what Suits he intends to give in Evidence against him, it was impossible for the Defendant to escape, if it had been his Misfortune to have had five or six Suits.

For I never yet saw a Witness produc'd against the indicted, but he would swear the indicted brought an Action against him without Reason; and yet I have often seen, that the indicted having had notice, that that was one of the Suits he was intended to be charg'd with, hath been able to prove that he had good, or at least probable Cause of Suit, which he could not have done if he had not notice. And in Treason, for designing to kill the King, there have been so many Interpretations of Facts tending that way, that it is almost impossible for an Innocent to defend himself, unless he had notice of the Fact intended to be insisted on at the Tryal.

There are yet some Expressions which mightily puzzle me: the King's Council said in the Argument of the Challenge, that they would not have the Point of being a Juryman, tho' not a Freeholder, lost to the City of London; and one of the Judges said, 'twas the Privileges of the City were struck at in that Point. If by those Expressions be meant, that it is for the benefit of the Publick that there should be no failure of Justice, I agree to it; but if it be meant that it is for the benefit of the Citizens to be Jurymen, I deny it: and I think nothing shews it plainer, than that it is a Privilege that a Citizen shall not be drawn out of the City to be a Juryman; that a Nobelman shall not be on a Jury; that it is a Matter of Prerogative in the King, and Favour to a particular Person, to grant a Charter of Exemption from being on a Jury. So that if I consider the Law, I know what is meant by those Expressions; if I consider allow'd Practice, it is true, a Juryman may earn his Eight-pence for a Tryal; but that is too inconsiderable pay for Persons of Substance, as the Jurymen in this Case were said to be, to be fond of the Employ, or to account it a Privilege. Yet even that was but in civil Matters; in criminal Matters, not Capital, the Jury were heretofore paid if they acquitted the Defendant, but not if they found him guilty; tho' of late it hath been practis'd to give them more, and treat them higher if they convicted the Defendant, than if they acquitted him: But in capital Matters, as the Case in question was, it was never allow'd, or at least own'd to pay the Jury, be the Verdict which way it would.

Having spoken to the Preliminaries, I proceed to the Tryal, wherein Colonel Rumsey was first produc'd: he said, he was sent by my Lord Shaftsbury about the end of October, or beginning of November; who told him, he should meet at one Sheppard's the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Ruffel, Lord Gray, Sir Thomas Armstrong and Mr. Ferguson, to know of them what Resolution they were come to about the Rising of Taunton: Sheppard carry'd him where they were, and answer was made, Mr. Trenchard had fail'd them, and there would be no more done in the Matter at that time; thereupon the Lord Shaftsbury took a Resolution to be gone: Mr. Ferguson spoke most of the Message, and he thought the Lord Gray spoke something to the same purpose; he did not know how often he had been at that House, he was there more than once, or else he heard Mr. Ferguson make a Report of another Meeting to the Lord Shaftsbury, my Lord Ruffel was in the Room, and that was all they said at that time that he remembred, he was not there above a quarter of an hour. There was some Discourse about seeing in what posture the Guards at the Mews and Savoy were in by all the Company, to know how to surprize them if the Rising had gone on; Sir Thomas Armstrong and Mr. Ferguson began, all debated it; he thought the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Gray, and Sir Thomas Armstrong were sent to view them; the Rising was appointed to be the 19th of November; he was spoke to by the Lord Shaftsbury to go to Bristol if the Rising had gone on, but in what Quality was not determin'd: The Lord Ruffel agreed to the Debate. Being ask'd if my Lord Ruffel said any thing there, and what; he answer'd, My Lord Ruffel spoke about the Rising at Taunton: Being ask'd what my Lord Ruffel said, he answer'd, My Lord Ruffel discours'd of the Rising; being ask'd if my Lord gave his Consent to the Rising, he said he did.

The next Witness was Mr. Sheppard, who said, In October last Mr. Ferguson came to him in the Duke of Monmouth's Name, and desir'd the conveniency of his House for himself and some Persons of Quality, which he granted: In the Evening the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Gray, Lord Ruffel, Sir Thomas Armstrong, Colonel Rumsey, and Mr. Ferguson came, not all together, but the one after the other. Sir Thomas Armstrong desir'd, that none of his Servants might come up, and that they might be private; so what they wanted he went down for, a Bottle of Wine, or so: the substance of the Discourse was, to surprize the King's Guards; and in order to it, the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Gray, and Sir Thomas Armstrong, went one Night, as he remembred, to the Mews, or thereabouts, to see the Guards; and the next time they came to his House, he heard Sir Thomas Armstrong say, the Guards were very remiss in their places, and not like Soldiers, and the thing was feasible if they had but strength to do it: he remembred but two Meetings there; they came in the Evening; he neither heard nor saw any Coaches at his Door: When they came in, as he remembred, the Lord Ruffel was both times there; he had no business with the Lord Ruffel, nor the Lord Ruffel with him at that time, but since he had: He did not remember Colonel Rumsey discours'd the Lord Ruffel about any private Business, nor remembred any farther Discourse; he remembred no Writings nor Papers read at that time: upon recollection he remembred one Paper read by Mr. Ferguson in the nature of a Declaration, setting forth the Grievances of the Nation, the Particulars he could not tell; it was a pretty large Paper, it was shew'd for Approbation as he suppos'd, when to be set out was not discours'd; 'twas shew'd to Sir Thomas Armstrong, and as he remembred the Duke of Monmouth was present, and he thought Colonel Rumsey was present: Colonel Rumsey said, he was not present, it was done before he came. Mr. Sheppard went on and said, the design of the Paper was in order to a Rising, as he suppos'd by the Purport of it; he would not say the Lord Ruffel was there when that Paper was read, but he was there when the talk was about seizing the Guards; he could not be positive as to the times of those Meetings, but it was when the Lord Shaftsbury was absent from his House, he absented about Michaelmas Day; he could not be positive that my Lord Ruffel was at both Meetings; he thought he was at both, he was sure he was at one.

The last Witness was the Lord Howard. He said he brought Captain Walcot acquainted with the Lord Shaftsbury; and upon his account Captain Walcot soon gain'd a confidence with the Lord Shaftsbury: Walcot told him, the People were sensible all their Interest was going to be lost by the Violence offer'd to the City in the Election of Sheriffs, and that they were resolv'd to take some course to put a stop to it: that there were several meetings about it, and some Persons began to prepare to act; that some had good Horses, and kept them in private Stables, and he resolv'd to be one in it: He having an Estate in Ireland, he dispatch'd his Son thither, and order'd his Son to turn his Stock into Money; the Son went about August: that the 30th of September, Walcot din'd with him; told him, that the Lord Shaftsbury was secreted, and desir'd to speak with him: Walcot brought him to the Lord Shaftsbury, who complain'd of the Duke of Monmouth and the Lord Ruffel for deserting him; but there was such preparation made in London, that now he was able to do it of himself, and intended to do it suddenly; he had above 10000 brisk Boys ready to follow him when he held up his Finger, they would possess themselves of the Gates, and in twenty four hours they would multiply to five times the number, and would be able to possess Whitehall by beating the Guards. The Lord Howard went to the Duke of Monmouth, told him the Lord Shaftsbury's Complaint, who said, the Lord Ruffel and he told the Lord Shaftsbury from the beginning, that there was nothing to be done by them in the Country at that time. The Matter of the Discourse between him and the Duke of Monmouth, him and the Lord Shaftsbury, and him and Walcot, is too tedious to relate, and as little to the purpose, if the Jury had understood Matter of Law which they did not; in it he takes care to shew what Confidence my Lord Shaftsbury had in him, more than in the Duke of Monmouth or the Lord Ruffel; how very cautious he was, and how precipitate the Lord Shaftsbury was, and that what he told the Duke of Monmouth the Duke told the Lord Ruffel; and he heard the Lord Ruffel had been with the Lord Shaftsbury, and put off the intended Rising. At which the Lord Ruffel interrupted him, and said, he thought he had very hard measure, there was a great deal of Evidence given by hearsay only: Whereupon the Chief Justice said, it was nothing against the Prisoner; he declar'd it to the Jury, but the Attorney General bid the Lord Howard go on in the method of Time, and that it was nothing against the Prisoner, but the Witnesses were coming to it if his Lordship would have patience, he assur'd him so. The Lord Howard went on where he left off, with a story between him and Walcot of an intended Rising, and of some dark Sayings let fall by Walcot and the Lord Gray, importing a Design upon the King's Person; but the Lord Howard was very careful to put all off, but at last it was resolv'd to rise on the 17th of November: But the Lord Howard fearing it had been discover'd, because he saw a Proclamation a little before forbidding Bonfires without the Lord Mayor's leave, that of the 17th of November was also disappointed, and the Lord Shaftsbury went away and died; but considering they had gone so far that it was not safe to retreat, and likewise that so great an Affair as that, consisting of such infinite Particulars, was to be manag'd with so much fineness, they erected a Cabal of six Persons, the Duke of Monmouth, Lord of Essex, Lord Ruffel, Mr. Hamden Algernon Sidney, and himself, about the middle of January last; and about that time they met at Mr. Hamden's House, where it was consider'd whether the Insurrection should be in London, or in a place distant; what Countries and Towns were fittest and most dispos'd to Action; what Arms necessary to be provided; how to raise twenty five or thirty thousand Pounds, and how they might so order it as to draw Scotland into a Content with them.

About ten days after they met at the Lord Ruffel's House, and resolv'd to send some Persons into Scotland to the Lord Argyle, to invite some Persons hither to give an Account of that Kingdom; the Persons to be invited were Sir Jo. Cockram, Lord Melvil, Sir Campbell; that Matter was refer'd to Col. Sidney, who told him he had sent Aaron Smith; they agreed not to meet again till the return of the Messenger: The Messenger was gone about a month, it was six Weeks or more before he return'd, and then his Lordship was forc'd to go into Essex, where he had a small Concern; there he staid three weeks, and when he return'd, he was inform'd Sir John Cockram was come to Town, and afterwards he was forced to go to the Bath, where he spent five weeks; and from that time to this was five weeks, all which time was a Parenthesis to him; and that he and the five mention'd erected themselves by mutual Agreement into that Society.

Atterbury swore Campbell was in his Custody: then Col. Rumsey was ask'd, whether my Lord Ruffel heard him when he deliver'd his Message to the Company, and in what place of the Room the Company were: who answer'd, that when he came in, they were standing by the Fire-side, but all came from thence to hear him; and when my Lord Ruffel said, Col. Rumsey was there when he came in, Rumsey said, No, the Duke of Monmouth and Lord Ruffel went away together.

Then in behalf of my Lord Ruffel the Earl of Anglesey was examin'd, who said, that visiting the Earl of Bedford, the Lord Howard came in, and told the Earl of Bedford, that his Son could not be in such a Plot, or suspected of it; and that he knew nothing against the Lord Ruffel, or any body else, of such a barbarous Design: And he was going on again with what the Lady Chaworth had told him, but was interrupted by the King's Council, telling him as the Court would not permit them to give Hearsay in Evidence against the Prisoner, so they must not permit his Lordship to give Hearsay in Evidence for the Prisoner.

Mr. Howard said, that the Lord Howard took it upon his Honour, and his Faith, he knew nothing of any Person concern'd in that Business, and not only thought my Lord Ruffel unjustly suffer'd, but he took God and Man to witness; he thought my Lord Ruffel the worthiest Man in the World.

Dr. Burnet said, the Lord Howard was with him, and he did then, as he had done before, with Hands and Eyes lift up to Heaven, declare, he knew nothing of any Plot, nor believ'd any, and treated it with great Scorn and Contempt.

The Lord Cavendish testify'd as to the Life and Conversation of the Lord Ruffel, and thence concluded, it was not likely he should be guilty of any any such Matter, and heard the Lord Ruffel speak of Rumsey, as if he had an ill Opinion of him, and therefore it was not likely he should trust him. Dr. Tillotson spoke of his Conversation. Dr. Burnet and Dr. Cox spoke of his Conversation, and of his Aversness to all Risings. Dr. Cox testify'd, that my Lord Ruffel said the Lord Howard was a Man of luxuriant Parts, but he had the luck not to be trusted by any Party. The Duke of Somerset spoke of the Lord Ruffel's Conversation. The Lord Clifford, Mr. Lefveson Gore, Mr. Spencer, and Dr. Fitzwilliams spoke of the Lord Ruffel's Conversation. The Lord Howard being ask'd by the Jury what he said to the Earl of Anglesey's Evidence, own'd what the Earl said, but he did it to outface the Matter; and if he said untrue, he ought not to be believ'd on his Oath, and insinuated, that he meant what he said to be meant of a Design of murdering the King, which he did not believe the Duke of Monmouth or the Lord Ruffel guilty of.

This being the sum of the Evidence given against, or for my Lord Ruffel, let us consider how far it will justify the Verdict given against him: first consider the Improbability of Rumsey's Evidence, if my Lord Carvendish said true, that he should trust Rumsey to hear the debate about seizing the Gards, when the Lord Ruffel had an ill Opinion of Rumsey. As for Rumsey's delivering the Message, there was no great Matter in that, it is impossible to hinder Peoples speaking, and it is not Treason to conceal what's said; besides it was well known, it was Rumsey's way to talk extravagantly, in order to accuse those that heard him, if they did not discover it. But besides the Improbability of the Evidence in respect of the Person, the manner of delivering the Evidence, and the Evidence it self was such as carry'd no Colour of Truth withit: he said he deliver'd his Message, and had an Answer to it, and being ask'd what the Company said further, answer'd, that was all that was said at that time that he remember'd, and gives a very good Reason for it, for he stay'd not above a quarter of an hour, and added that he was not certain whether he then heard something of a Declaration there, or whether Mr. Ferguson reported it to my Lord Shaftsbury, that they had debated it; and yet when Sheppard said Rumsey was there when the Declaration was read, he deny'd it, and said it was read before he came in. Being ask'd to what the Declaration tended, he answer'd to another Matter, viz. that there was some discourse about seeing what Posture the Guards were in, and said that all the the Company debated it; and being drawn on by Questions, said it was in order to seize the Guards, if the Rising had gone on. Now how doth that Part of the Evidence agree with what he said before, that there was nothing more said than the delivering his Message, and the Answer to it? and how doth it agree with the time he said he stay'd, which was not above a quarter of an hour? whereas that debate, if all the Persons present being six debated it, as he said they did, it would certainly have taken up a larger time. How does the first and last part of his Evidence agree, when he said, my Lord Ruffel agreed to the Answer of his Message? and being ask'd whether and what he spoke to it, said, he spoke about the rising at Taunton, but doth not say what; and yet in the first part of his Evidence he said, when ask'd who sent the Message back, Mr. Ferguson deliver'd the Answer, the Duke of Monmouth and the Lord Ruffel were present, and he thought the Lord Gray said something to the same purpose. But what Credit could be given to any part of a Man's Evidence, whose Memory was so shallow, that he could not remember whether he was at two Meetings, or whether Mr. Ferguson related one of them to the Lord Shaftsbury? yet both were suppos'd to be within the Compass of a year, whereas a Man of Sense is suppos'd to remember all his own Acts for seven years past, which is the Reason why the Chancery obliges a Man to answer as to his own Acts positively for seven years, without saying as he believeth, or as he remembreth, or the like. What Credit is to be given to a Witness who testifieth what was said in company, and by whom, when his Memory doth not serve to answer positively, whether he was in the Company, or whether another told him what was there said? he might as well have said he was there, or dreamt he was there, or that he heard the Discourse or dreamt of it, which had carry'd equal Credit with it.

It was plain, the Man was not of sane Memory enough to make a Will, much less to be a Witness in the Tryal of a Man's Life; and nothing can be said for him, but that he was a Witness for the King, that is to say, a mad Man may be a Witness to take away a Man's Life, which is as good Law as a great deal of other *Cont*vented as a part of the Prerogative.

It is true one of the King's Council recommends Rumsey to the Jury, as a very credible Witness under the notion of an unwilling Witness: but had the same Person been a Council for the Prisoner, he would have call'd Rumsey a dancing Witness, for he said backwards and forwards; and an amaz'd Witness, for being ask'd one thing, he answer'd another; being ask'd as to the Declaration, he answer'd to the seizing of the Guards; being ask'd whether my Lord Ruffel assented to the Answer of the Message, he reply'd, yes, because he talk'd of the Rising, &c. which might be as well against as for it.

Sheppard's Evidence was to the Design of seizing the Guards, and as to the Declaration, he remember'd but two Meetings, at both which he said, as he remember'd, my Lord Ruffel was present, but he could not be positive in that, and the times of the Meetings he did not remember: he said, the substance of the Discourse was, how to surprize the King's Guards, and that the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Gray and Sir Tho. Armstrong went to see the Guards, as he remember'd; and the next time they came to the House, Sir Tho. Armstrong said the Guards were very remiss, &c. Taking this Evidence by it self, without racking Rumsey's Evidence to it, it was so far from being Evidence of Treason, that it was no Crime; for he doth not say, it was intended to be put in practice, notwithstanding all said by him; both the Discourses and the Persons viewing the Guards (which last was not Evidence, nor ought to have been given in Evidence) might be a Matter to try each others Judgments, as well as an Evidence of a thing design'd: and if it be capable of two Interpretations, the Law hath said, it shall be taken in mitiore sensu, in favour of Life; that distinction was taken by the Chief Justice in Blague's Case, the day after this Tryal, where the Evidence against him was a Discourse about taking the Tower, as high a Crime as seizing the the Guards; and upon that Blague was acquitted. It is true Rumsey said it was in order to be put in practice, when the Rising should be in the Country, but that he did not say at first; but was afterwards led to it by questions; nor did he speak it as a thing at that or at any other time determin'd, but as his own surmise or guess, because he knew of an intended Rising. Yet how foolishly did he contradict himself? for says Rumsey it was to have been put in practice, if the intended Rising had gone on, and yet at the same Meeting he had said before, the Rising was put off: how contradictory therefore is it to say they made Preparations for a thing they had laid aside before? And it is plain Sheppard speaks of the same time; for both agree, Rumsey was at that Meeting, tho they do not agree how soon he came: besides, how could Sheppard speak positively of the Discourse, or of the Design of it, when he owns he did not hear all their Discourse, and gives a very good Reason for it? for he said he went several times down to fetch Wine, Sugar and Nutmeg, and did not know what was said in his Absence: he said he heard nothing about a Rising, nor heard any further discourse; but on recollection, he heard something about a Declaration of Grievances in order to a Rising, as he suppos'd; the Particulars he could not tell. Now what sort of Evidence was that? In all civil matters, a Witness shall not be permitted to give Evidence of the Content of a Deed or Writing without producing the Deed or Writing it self, or a true Copy of it, and upon very good Reason? for he may make an untrue Construction of it. I remember a Witness who swore to the Content of a Deed of Intail, and being ask'd whether he knew a Deed of Intail, and by what he knew the Deed he spoke of to be a Deed of Intail, answer'd he knew a tailed Deed very well, and he knew the Deed to be a tailed Deed, because it had a Tail half as long as his Arm, meaning the Label of the Deed. And if this be the Practice and the Reason of the Practice in civil Matters, shew me any Authority or Reason any thing should be permitted to be given in Evidence in Treason, which is not permitted to be given in Evidence in the Tryal of any civil Matter.

If you say, as Justice Levins said in a like Case in Colledge's Tryal, that it would be the difficultest thing in the World to prove Treason against a Man, if the Law were not so, and the King would in no sort be safe; on the other hand I say as Colledge there said, if the Law should be so, no private Person is safe: and if there be Mischief of either hand, the Law is and must be Judg, which hath taken care (tho to no purpose, because it hath not been observ'd) that there shall be a stricter Proof in Treason than in any civil Matter, or in any other Crime: and how the Judges came to permit that loose Evidence in Treason to be given, which of late years they have done, no just or honest Account can be given.

The last material Witness against my Lord Russel was my Lord Howard (as for Atterbury's Evidence, it ought not to have been permitted to be given, as shall be shewn, nor was it material) to no part of whose Evidence any Credit ought to be given, even by his own Confession: he was surely in the right, when he said that the Religion of an Oath is not ty'd to a Place; and I'll add, not to a Form, but receives its Obligation from the Appeal therein made to God; and therefore if he said (tho I own he was not bound to say it) to the Earl of Bedford, Mr. Howard and Dr. Burner, what was testify'd against him, he ought not to be believ'd in any part of his Evidence. Did he say true to my Lord Bedford, when unsent for and unask'd (for ought appears after my Lord Russel was clapt into the Tower) that sure his Son could never be in any such Plot as that, or suspected for it, and that he knew nothing against him, or any body else; of such a barbarous Design; and yet he knew if he swore true that my Lord Russel was guilty of such a barbarous Design, that nothing but the Lord Howard's Duty to God, the King, and the Country, could prevail with him to give it in Evidence against a Person for whom he had so great an Affection as he had for my Lord Russel. How was it consistent with the truth of his Evidence what he said to Mr. Howard; that he knew nothing of any Man's being concern'd in that business, and particularly of my Lord Russel, whom he highly commended, and said he thought the Lord Russel unjustly suffer'd; or with what he said to Dr. Burnet with Hands and Eyes lift up to Heaven, which is as much an Appeal to God as may be, that he knew nothing of any Plot, nor believ'd any? It was an idle Evasion to say, when he spoke of my Lord Russel, he meant my Lord Russel was not guilty of the Design of murdering the King (for which that Man, as he said, was committed; meaning Walcot, the Lord Russel, or any other Person) for he is still at liberty to explain himself, and I am apt to think they were all committed by Warrants of the same Form. I know not how dextrous he is at paring an Apple; but he must be an excellent Logician that can reconcile the truth of his Evidence and Sayings: The truth is, a Man that has those Niceties in his Head ought to have no Credit; for no Man knows whether he understands what he says aright, and I am apt to think his Lordship could shew, that he did not intend what he said at my Lord Russel's Tryal in the Sense it was understood by the Court or Jury. To say, that he was to outface the thing for himself and his Party, was as vain (for besides that I think he was of no Party; because, as my Lord Russel said, he had the luck to be trusted by none) Where was the Sense of making those Protestations to Persons who could do him no good, and would do him no harm, both which my Lord Pemberton could; and therefore 'twas not alike? It is true, the Attorney General commends the Lord Howard as a Person of great Credit amongst the Party, and insinuates the Lord Gray was left out of the Cabal for his Immorality, and the Lord Howard was taken in his place. But to pass from the General of his Evidence to the Particulars of it, for about two leaves in the Print of it; it is a discourse between my Lord Shaftsbury and him; wherein he makes my Lord Shaftsbury have a wondrous Confidence in him, and discovers all the Design to him, and what number of Men he had at Command; but who they were, or what they were, was never yet discover'd, and yet the Lord Howard had not at that time been concern'd in the Matter, nor did then assent: he very prudently was resolv'd to see whether it was likely to take effect or not before he would enter on it. It was indeed a Matter of great Wonder to those who knew my Lord Shaftsbury, and knew what Opinion he had of the Lord Howard from the time he discover'd that the Lord Howard frequented the Dutchess of Portsmouth, which was before Fitzbarris his Tryal (tho' after that Tryal the Matter was publickly own'd, which was before suspected by most known to the Lord Shaftsbury) that he should so readily trust the Lord Howard with the secret, who was unconcern'd in the management before, as he says himself, and yet secreted himself from the Duke of Monmouth and my Lord Russel, who were equally guilty, if what was sworn was true. I cannot but observe that in all the time of the Lord Shaftsbury, the Lord Howard was no otherwise concern'd in the pretended Design, but in raising Difficulties, and being in great fear lest there should be a Rising or an Attempt upon the King's Person: and if he said true, he was the Man that put off the intended Risings, and likewise the intended Design on the King's Person, insomuch that I think he was so far from standing in need of a Pardon for Treason, that he deserv'd a considerable Reward, if it were for nothing else than for his fearing the Design was discover'd by the Proclamation against Bonfires, which, as he said, put off the Rising intended to be the 17th of November; and yet he and others being afraid, the middle of January they erected themselves into a Cabal of six Persons, of which there is but one Person in all his Narrative he pretends to have spoken to about that Matter before, which is the Duke of Monmouth, and but one more he pretends even by hearsay to be concern'd in it before, which is my Lord Russel. How improbable therefore was it, that those six Persons should, as it were on sight, put themselves upon such a dangerous Design, especially considering the Reason he gives for it, which was their Fears, that what had been transacted was, or might be discover'd? This likewise is observable, that from the 30th of September, the time the Sheriffs entred upon their Office, to the 17th of November following, he is very exact as to the time of each Matter, when there was no Person could contradict him; for my Lord Shaftsbury was dead, Walcot was convicted, and the Duke of Monmouth was gone, who are all the Persons mention'd to be concern'd in that time: yet when he comes to speak of the Matter in which my Lord Russel was concern'd, then he says it was about the middle of January, about ten days after, about six weeks after, about three weeks and five weeks; for had he been precise in the times, he might have been disprov'd in the Meetings he gave Evidence of: and it is much his Memory was so very good as to the former times, to be so very precise in them as he was, and so very defective in the latter times; and yet those times do not make up the space between the middle of January, and the time of the Tryal by many weeks, unless you will give large Allowances to the word about; an Exception which was taken to Mowbray's Evidence, tho' he rectify'd it by his Account in his Almanack; but it would not be admitted, tho' Colledge very sensibly desir'd of the Court for Justice sake to look on the Almanack, to see whether it was newly writ, as if done for that purpose.

Besides the Improbability, if such a thing was in hand, as the Lord Howard pretended, for him to run into the Country, and then to the Bath, when the Matter was just come to a Crisis as it were, shews him, if he swore true, rather a Madman than a Traitor.

But the Usage of the King's Council and the Court toward the Prisoner was very unjust and unfair; they permitted the Lord Howard to go on with a long Story of him and my Lord Shaftsbury, at which when my Lord Russel took Exceptions, the Chief Justice it is true said it was no Evidence; yet the Attorney General bidding him go on in the Method of time, he went on where he left off, intermixing Stories of Designs and of Attempts by other Persons upon the King's Person to exasperate the Jury, as my Lord Russel said rightly against him; a thing which no Council durst have done, and no Court would have suffer'd in any other Case, nor even in that would the Court or Council suffer it for the Prisoner. How was my Lord Anglesey checkt when he began to tell what my Lady Chaworth said, and Mr. Edward Howard when he did not speak of his own Knowledge? How unjust was it for the King's Council to repeat all the Evidence the Lord Howard gave, when they sum'd it up, even that which the Court told them before was not Evidence! How unjust was the insinuating of the Death of my Lord of Effex, as Evidence against my Lord Russel! And why did not the Court in summing up the Evidence take notice of the Liberty the Witnesses and Council had taken, and have told them what was not Evidence? No other Reason can be given than what Colledge said at his Tryal upon his Observation of Fitzbarris's business and his own, That the Matter was not to stop at him.

Remarks on Colonel Sidney's Tryal.

THE Lord Russel being executed, and the same day, what was called his Speech being published, than which nothing in Print was so eagerly accepted or sought after, which shewed the Inclination of the People, there was some respite for quieting the Minds of the People; but it was not to stop there, as Colledge said, and therefore Colonel Sidney (who was talk'd to Death under the Notion of a Commonwealthsman) was the 17th of November, 1683. brought to Westminster to be arraign'd on an Indictment of High-Treason. The Indictment at the time he came to the Hall, was so far from being found by the Grand Jury, that it was was not so much as presented to them; but the King's Council, who had packt the Jury, knew well enough that it would be accepted, that is, found upon sight by the Jury, without any Consideration, which was accordingly done, and Colonel Sidney thereupon arraign'd. The Indictment was for designing to depose the King, and to perswade the King's Subjects to rebel; and that he did write a certain Libel wherein it was contain'd, that he (meaning King Charles the Second) is subject to the Law of God as he is a Man, to the People who made him such, as a King, &c. To which Indictment he would have put in some Exceptions, express'd in a Parchment in his Hand, but was told by the Court, he must either plead or demur, and upon no other Terms Exceptions could or ought to be admitted; after which he pleaded Not guilty.

The 21st of November he was try'd, at which time he insisted to have a Copy of his Indictment, as he had done when he was arraign'd; but was both times denied. The first Witness against the Prisoner was Mr. West, against whom Colonel Sidney objected, because he was not pardon'd; but it was answer'd by the Court, that he was a good Witness in my Lord Russel's Tryal, and therefore should be in that. Then Colonel Sidney desired Mr. West might speak nothing but what he knew of Colonel Sidney, but was answer'd by the Court, he might give Evidence of a Plot in general, tho' Colonel Sidney was not concern'd in it, and it was call'd Sir William Jones's Law. Then Mr. West went on, and gave Evidence of what Colonel Rumsey, Mr. Nelthorpe, and Mr. Ferguson told him of Colonel Sidney, but of his own Knowledge he could not say any thing of the Prisoner. Rumsey give a like Evidence he had done in my Lord Russel's Tryal, with an Addition of what Mr. West and Mr. Goodenough told him. Keeling gave Evidence of what Goodenough told him, all which the Court agreed was no Evidence against the Prisoner. Then the Lord Howard gave the like Evidence from the middle of January to that time, as he had done in the Lord Russel's Tryal, saving that he said the Earl of Salisbury was brought into the Cabal, who was not mention'd before, and save that he said the meeting at my Lord Russel's was about a Fortnight or three Weeks after the meeting at Mr. Hamden's; whereas in my Lord Russel's Tryal, he says it was about ten days after the meeting at Mr. Hamden's House: and here he makes two notable Speeches for Mr. Hamden at the opening of the Consult, both which he had forgotten at my Lord Russel's Tryal, nor could remember at Mr. Hamden's Tryal, tho' in the last he was led by a great many Questions to put him in mind of them. After his Evidence given, Colonel Sidney was ask'd whether he would ask the Witness any Questions, who answer'd, he had no Questions to ask him; whereupon the Attorney General said silence—You know the Proverb.

The Record of the Lord Russel's Conviction and Attainder was given in Evidence. Sir Andrew Foster swore Sir John Cockram and the two Campbells came to London. Sir Philip Floyd proved the seizing of some Papers in the Prisoner's House, and he did believe the Papers shewn in Court to be some of them. Sheppard, Cary, and Cook swore the Writing produced was like the Prisoner's Hand-writing; the Attorney General desired some part of the Writing should be read; the Prisoner desired all of it might be read, but was answer'd by the Court, that the Attorney must have what Part of it he would to be read, and afterwards the Prisoner should have what Part of it he would to be read; but he persisted to desire all of it should be read; then the Writing was read, (which was plainly an answer to a Book, but what Book was not mention'd) in which the Right of the People was asserted. The Earl of Anglesey gave the same Evidence for the Prisoner, of the Lord Howard's speaking of my Lord Russel and the Plot, as he had done in my Lord Russel's Tryal. The Earl of Clare said that the Lord Howard, after Colonel Sidney's Imprisonment, said, if he was questioned again, he would never plead; the quickest Dispatch was the best, he was sure they would have his Life; and speaking of the Primate of Armagh's Prophecy, he said, the Persecution was begun, and he believed it would be very sharp, but hoped it would be short; and said, he thought Colonel Sidney as innocent as any Man breathing, gave him great Encomiums, and bemoaned his Misfortune; and as for Colonel Sidney's Papers, he said he was sure they could make nothing of them. Mr. Philip Howard said, the Lord Howard said it was a Sham-Plot; Dr. Burnet gave the same Evidence as he did in my Lord Russel's Tryal: Mr. Ducas gave Evidence, that the Lord Howard said he knew nothing of Colonel Sidney's being in any Plot. The Lord Paget gave Evidence to the same purpose. Mr. Edward Howard gave Evidence to the same purpose. Tracy and Penwick gave Evidence to the same purpose. Mr. Blake testified, that the Lord Howard said he had not his Pardon, and could not ascribe it to any other reason, than that he must not have it till the Drudgery of swearing was over. Now to review what hath been said, it is strange to see what a Progress was made in the Resolutions of Points of Law, to take away a Man's Life; to say it in Colonel Sidney's Words, as if the Court and Council thought it their Duty to take away a Man's Life any how. Mr. West and several others are admitted to give Evidence by hearsay against the Prisoner, and their Evidence summed up and urged as Evidence to the Jury; and the reason given for it was, that he was admitted a good Witness of a like matter, in the Lord Russel's Tryal, which besides that it was not true, for it was rejected in that Tryal, as it appears it was in the Print; yet if he had been admitted, of no Authority, as Colonel Sidney said; because perhaps he was not excepted to. Of a like stamp is the Evidence of the Conviction of the Lord Russel, tho' I agree the Lord Russel's Conviction was as good Evidence against Colonel Sidney, as the Earl of Essex's Murder was against my Lord Russel, and no better. The same may be said of Rumsey, Keeling, Foster and Atterbury's Evidence. Against the Lord Howard's Evidence there were the same Objections, as in the Lord Russel's Tryal, with the addition of several other Persons testifying, he said he knew not, nor believed any thing of the matter; and that he could not have his Pardon, till he swore others out of their Lives, which in truth was the Sense of his Expressions.

The King's Council indeed had thought of something since the Tryal of my Lord Ruffel to palliate the matter of the Lord Howard's sayings (for they lean'd hard upon his Reputation, and lookt as if he would perjure himself at the expence of some Persons Lives, as his Words are in the Lord Ruffel's Tryal) Would you, say they, have had him confest the matter to those Persons to whom he had denied it?

I think there is a difference between confessing and denying: Who ask'd him the Question? What did it avail him to deny it to the Persons testifying against him? and therefore when he voluntarily said a thing untrue, unasked, not provoked or compelled to do it, and which could do him no good, it was good Evidence of his Untruth, and that no Credit ought to be given to what he swore.

As for the last part of the Evidence, which was about the Writing, both the Indictment and the Evidence was defective.

As for the Evidence, if the Subject Matter of the Writing had been Evidence of Treason, the Indictment ought to have express'd that he published it, which the Indictment in this Case did not; and upon good reason, which was, that the Jury might be put in mind, that the Publishing of it was necessary to make it known; whereas they very well knew that the Evidence would not, nor did come up to it. This was the first Indictment of High-Treason, upon which any Man lost his Life, for writing any thing without publishing it; for in Fitzharris's Indictment, he was charged with publishing his Libel; and so in all other Indictments for Writing, and upon good reason: for this being made an overt Act of Treason, it must be an Evidence of a Design to kill or depose the King, or the like; and as the Consequence of what the Writing contain'd, which was that the Power was in the People, &c. being in its nature no other, nor urged by the King's Council to any other intent than to corrupt the Subjects minds, could not be Evidence of such matter, unless proved he had writ and published it, whereof the last was not pretended to be proved.

That it was necessary to be express'd in the Indictment, and proved at the Tryal, appears by the Resolution of all the Judges of England in Hugh Pines Case, reported in Cro. Car. Fol. 89. at a time when Prerogative run pretty high; wherein besides the resolution that no Words charging the King with any personal Vice, was Treason, there is the Case of one Peacham, in 33^d of Henry the 8th, cited, who was indicted for Treason, for Treasonable Passages in a Sermon never preached, nor intended to be preach'd, but found in writing in his Study; he was found guilty, but never executed; for many Judges at that time were of Opinion it was not Treason, as the Book says: which I think, according to the Evidence here given, was the express Case of Col. Sidney, admitting he writ the Book produced, and that the Passages in it were Treasonable.

And as this Indictment was an Original in the particular before mentioned, so it was a second of an Innuendo Indictment of Treason, Fitzharris was the first. The Prosecution against Car, as I remember, was an Information, and Judgment arrested after a Verdict, because it was by Innuendo, of which no Precedent could be produc'd; and altho in Actions for Words it was permitted, yet in Criminal Matters being Penal, it was resolv'd it ought not to be permitted; and certainly much less in Treason: and as this Indictment was an Original in one part, and a Second in another, the Evidence on it was an Original in another part, which was proving the Book produc'd to be Col. Sidney's Writing, because the Hand was like what some of the Witnesses had seen him write; and Evidence never permitted in a criminal Matter before. The Case of the Lady Carre was well cited by Col. Sidney, against whom there was an Indictment or Information of Perjury, in which it was resolv'd that Comparison of hands was no Evidence in any criminal Prosecution: and it must be own'd that at that time, besides Keeling and Twisden, there then sat in that Court Sir Wadham Windham, whom all will own to have been the second best Judge which sat in Westminster-Hall since the King's Restoration: and if it be not Evidence in a Prosecution of Misdemeanor, much less in Treason, as Col. Sidney said; which Inference, besides the reason of the thing, is back'd by the Authority of my Lord Coke.

But admitting Col. Sidney wrote that Book, and published it; yet if it were not done with a design to stir the Subjects up into a Rebellion, but was writ and published only disputandi gratia, as the import of the Book shews plainly it was, it was no more Treason than the discourse between Blague and Mate Lee about taking the Tower was. And suppose it was wrote with that design, yet it not appearing when it was writ, how could a Jury upon their Oaths say it was done with a design to raise Rebellion against King Charles the Second, when for ought appeared it was writ before he was King or thought of? It might for ought appeared be writ in King Charles the First his time, or Cromwell's time, and design'd against either of them, or any Foreign Prince, and therefore could not be Treason against King Charles the Second.

The Evidence was an Original in this Particular; also it was the first time that ever a particular Expression in a Writing was given in Evidence against a Man in Treason without reading the whole Writing, and for a very good reason given by the Jury in Fitzharris his Case, which was, that there might be something in the Writing not express'd in the Indictment, which may explain the Clauses in the Indictment, so that they may bear another construction: and in that Tryal it was agreed, the whole Writing ought to be read, and was read accordingly; and it was the duty of the Court to have ordered it, whether the Prisoner or Jury had desired it or not, as they are upon their Oaths to do right: but in Col. Sidney's Case, when pressed by him, it was denied; only some particular Passages he might have read if he would, which he did not accept, upon a very good reason which he gave, which was, that he knew not the Passages of the Book, or at least he did not remember them, and therefore could not call for them. 'Tis true that Practice in Civil Matters is allowed to save time, where the mischief is not very great: because of a Passage in a Deed or Writing material for either Party omitted in reading, the Matter may be brought about again; but in Criminal, much less in Capital Prosecutions, they cannot be, unless a way can be found to bring a Man to Life again.

Almost all the Circumstances of this Tryal are Originals; the summing up of the Evidence against him was barbarous, being Invectives and no Consequences. It was said he was not only guilty of the Practices he was accused of, but that he could not have been otherwise, because his Principles led him to it; and it might with as good reason have been urged, that he not only was become, but was born a Traitor. The last Matter remarkable in the Tryal was that of an Overt Act, of which the Court said it was resolved by all the Judges of England, that if I buy a Knife of J. S. to kill the King, and one Witness prove I bought a Knife, and another prove I bought it for that purpose, it is two Witnesses of an Overt Act within the Statute of Edward 6th.

It were fit to know who the Judges were who gave that Resolution, if it were but for the Authority of the Case; for I doubt the reason of it will convince no Man: they might as well have resolved that eating or drinking, or the most ordinary Acts of a Man's Life, is an Overt Act of High Treason.

The Law hath taken that care for the Evidence of High Treason, which it hath not done in any other Case, that it must be proved by an Overt Act, proved by two Witnesses. One would think at first sight of the Statute that there should be two Witnesses to the same Fact; but that hath been adjudged otherwise, yet still it was resolved there must be two Witnesses: but if this Resolution be Law, it is plain there needs but one. 'Tis true, if a Man does an Act for which he can give no reason, as placing a Mine of Powder in a Place the King usually passeth over, or planting a piece of Cannon to shoot at a place the King usually passeth by, if he cannot give a credible reason why he did it, and another swears the purpose of the thing, it is two good Witnesses within the Act.

It hath been said, if a Man be bound to his good behavior, and wears a Sword, it is a breach of the good behaviour; and perhaps heretofore when Swords were not usually worn but by Soldiers, it might be so, because it struck a Terror in other People as much as a Blunderbuss, or the like unusual Weapon, or the going armed in a Coat of Mail for any Person but a Soldier doth at this day. Yet no Man will say that now Swords are usually worn by all sorts of People, it is a breach of the good behaviour; and so that which heretofore was a Crime, by Custom now is become none. It is therefore the unusualness and the unaccountableness of the Circumstance make it an Evidence, which cannot be assigned as a reason in the Overt Act mentioned.

The last thing I take notice of is, that Col. Sidney refused to ask the Lord Howard any Questions, from whence was inferred that he assented to the truth of the Matter sworn: but it is well known, 'tis no Prudence to ask a thorough-pac'd Witness a question; in Mr. Hamden's Tryal, his Council refused so to do for that Reason.

The next who fell a Sacrifice, according to Colledge's Prophecy, was James Holloway; he was outlawed and taken beyond Sea; and being induced with promises of Life to accuse himself of things (whether Guilty or not) enough to make good an Indictment of High Treason against him, it was indeed generously offered him that his Outlawry should be set aside, and he have the liberty to be tried, and defend himself as well as he could: but knowing that what he had said since he was taken would be brought in Evidence against him, he refused his Tryal; and because he would not purchase his Pardon at the expence of innocent Mens Blood, by accusing others, of what he did not know they were guilty (if his dying Speech is to be believed) he was executed.

I should not have mention'd this, but for the sake of the next Person's Case, which was Sir Thomas Armstrong's, who was outlawed for High Treason; when he was beyond Sea, he was taken and brought to the Kings-Bench-Bar.

Remarks upon the Award of Execution against Sir Thomas Armstrong.

A T Common Law, if a Person was beyond Sea when an Outlawry was pronounc'd against him, it was an Error in Fact, for which the Outlawry was to be revers'd; and it is an Error in all Outlawrys but for High Treason to this day. By the 6th of Edward VI. that Error is taken away in High-Treason, but there is a Proviso in that Statute, that if the Person outlaw'd shall within a Year after the Outlawry pronounc'd, yield himself to the Chief Justice of the Kings-Bench, and offer to traverse his Indictment, and on his Tryal shall be acquitted, he shall be discharg'd of the Outlawry. Upon the Construction of this Statute, no Judgment was ever given that I knew of; and the reason is, no Man outlaw'd was ever deny'd a Tryal till this time; if he was taken within a competent Time. The reason of making that Statute was this; Men would commit Treason, and presently fly beyond Sea, and stay there till the Witnesses who should prove the Treason were dead; then return, and reverse the Outlawry for the Error of their being beyond Sea; and the Witnesses being dead, they were safe: and therefore this Statute takes away that Error in part, tho not in the whole, and doth in effect say, that the Person outlaw'd shall not have advantage of that Error, unless he comes and takes his Tryal within a competent time, which that Statute limits to a Year after the Outlawry pronounc'd.

This being plainly the Sense of the Statute, it was Injustice to deny the Favour or Right of a Tryal to Sir Thomas Armstrong, which was never deny'd any Person before nor since, where it was was agreed that all the Witnesses against the Person accus'd were alive, as in Sir Thomas Armstrong's Case they were, barely upon the quibble of the word render, which in no Case that ever I read was differenc'd from taken, but in one Case, which is Smith and Ashe's Case in Cro. Car. 42. in an Outlawry for Debt against Husband and Wife, which will not extend to, or warrant the Judgment in this Case: and if there were but a Doubt in the Case, as it cannot be deny'd there was, the Outlawry ought to have been wav'd, or at least Council for the Prisoner heard as to the Point.

It was a vain and unjust Reason (and only tending to incense the thing) assign'd by the Attorney, That the Prisoner was one who actually engag'd to go, upon the King's hasty coming to Town, to destroy him by the way; whereas the Prisoner offer'd to prove his Innocence in that and other Matters of which he was accus'd: and even that Objection against him was an Invention of the Attorney's for any thing appears; but then it was resolv'd to stop at nothing, and Success had made them fearless. Fitzbarris and Colledge 'twas own'd had hard measure, and that their Cases might be forgotten, their Quarters were buried; but Sir Thomas Armstrong's were expos'd, tho the Proceedings against him were equally as unjustifiable as in the other two Cases.

Remarks on the Tryal of Count Conningmark.

I Think fit to remember in the same Reign, tho before this time, one Case, to shew how the Courts of Justice were remiss or violent, according to the subject Matter.

All will agree, that the Murder of Mr. Thynne was one of the most barbarous and impudent Murders that ever was committed; and of that Murder Count Conningmark, tho he escap'd Punishment, was the most Guilty.

I do not complain that in that Tryal the Chief Justice directed the Prisoner the way to make the King's Council shew the Cause of Challenge against the Persons call'd on the Jury, and challeng'd for the King, without any Reason. It was his Duty so to do; and he ought to have directed Fitzbarris the same Method, which he did not: but he was blameable that he did not ask the Lieutenant and Polander what they had to say for themselves, which was always done before and since that time, and ought to be, which was an Injustice; and therefore two of the Prisoners at the time of their Sentences said, they were never try'd, tho I believe no great Injury to them, because they had little or nothing to have said for themselves.

But if they had been askt, they would have said as they did before their Tryals to the Justice of Peace who committed them, and as they did after their Condemnations, that Count Conningmark put them upon doing what they did, which might have influenc'd the Jury to have found the Count guilty, which was contrary to the Design of the Court; and it was for the same Reason the Chief Justice would not permit the Justice of Peace to read the Examination of Sterne and Borosky.

I do agree, that what they said before the Justice of Peace was not Evidence against the Count; I agree that the Count being indicted and try'd as Accessory, at the same time the Principals were indicted and try'd, the Principals could not be good Witnesses against the Count, because properly a Principal ought to be convicted before the Accessory be try'd: and therefore tho for Expedition both are try'd together, yet the Verdict always is and ought to be given against the Principal, before that of the Accessory.

But I deny what was in that Tryal laid down for Law, that the Accessory being in the same Indictment with the Principal, must be try'd at the same time. It is true, the Count desir'd his Tryal might be put off for two or three days, which the Court knowing what was best for the Count deny'd, and not for the above pretended Reasons; for an Indictment against many may be joint, and yet the Tryals may be several: the truth is, in such Cases the Indictment is joint and several.

Suppose the Accessory, at the Tryals of the Principals, had not been in Custody; will any Person say, that if afterwards he was taken, he can't be try'd upon that Indictment in which he was join'd with the Principals?

But besides a hundred Precedents not printed, there is the Case of George Salisbury & al. in Flowden Fol 100. where it was resolv'd, that tho an Indictment against many is joint, yet the Venire may be several against each Person, and consequently the Tryals may be several; and if so, then the times of the Tryals may be several: but that which is to be complain'd of is, that the Count in the Opinion of all Mankind at that time and since was the most guilty Man, yet the care taken to punish the less guilty, as Sterne and Borosky, was in order to let the most guilty escape; for I think both Sterne and Borosky might, and would have been good Witnesses against the Count if the Court would have permitted it: the Count might have been indicted as Accessory to Wratts only; for the Accessory to all the Principals is Accessory to every of them severally: and when the Court in their private Consciences were satisfy'd the Count was most guilty, they ought to have been cunning, astuti, as my Ld Hobart calls it, to have brought him to Punishment. But 'twas said, Sterne and Borosky being indicted of the same Crime with the Count, they could not be good Witnesses against him, which I think is no more Law than Truth: Truth it was not, for the Count was indicted as Accessory, the rest as Principals. But raking it that all were indicted and try'd as Principals for the same Fact at the same time, why is not the Evidence of the one good against the other?

First,

First, I think there is no exprefs Resolution for that Point of Law, but a late Rule given at Kingston Affizes upon the Tryal of a Maid and one Saterwaite for burning of an House; and therefore there is a liberty to examine by Reason how the Law is. I agree, if a Man is indicted and try'd for killing another, he shall not be admitted to say, B. did it by himself; but I think he may be a good Witness to prove that he and B. did it, that is to say; he shall not give any Evidence against another, which tends to acquit himself as well as accuse another; and I think he may give Evidence which accuses another of the same Crime whereof he is indicted, if it doth not tend to acquit himself.

For it is agreed on all hands, that being guilty of the same Crime, doth not disable a Witness; for then Rumsey and several Persons in the Lord Russel's Plot, as it was call'd, had not been good Witnesses. In the next place, the Circumstances of an Indictment against the Witnesses for the same thing he testifies against another, do not disable him; Widdrington was indicted for the same things, of which he gave Evidence against several others as his Complices in Robberies. Nay, the Law hath given somewhat more credit to the Evidence of a Person indicted, as a Witness of the same things against others, than it does to a Person not indicted; as in the Case of an Approver, which, as Stamford says, was a Person in Prison (not at large) for the Fact for which he was indicted, arraign'd upon an Indictment, or an Appeal of Felony, who before a Coroner assign'd by the Court, confesses himself guilty of the Felony of which he is indicted, and not of any other, and confesses other Persons naming them as Coadjutors with him in committing the Crime of which he is indicted, and not of any other Crime; so much Credit shall be given to that Confession, that Process shall be made out against the Person peach'd, who, if taken, shall be arraign'd on that Approvement, as if an Indictment by a Grand Jury had been found against him: and if the Law gives so much Credit to an Approver, I think no Person can shew me a Reason why a Person indicted is not a good Witness against another for the same Crime.

It is true, Stamford says, if a King gives an Approver a Pardon, he is a good Witness; which implies, that otherwise he is not: But it must be consider'd, that the reason of that is, that an Approver being indicted, as he always is, and confessing the Indictment; is convicted, and a Person convicted of Felony cannot be a Witness till pardon'd. But it will be no Argument why Sterne or Borowsky had not been good Witnesses against the Count before they were convicted; and it was a like Piece of Justice, that whereas the Count was the most guilty, he was acquitted.

Wrats being the next greatest Offender, was honourably interr'd, and Sterne and the Polander; who were the least Offenders in that Matter, were hang'd in Chains.

It was somewhat like the New England Law, remember'd by Hudibras, of hanging an useless innocent Weaver for an useful guilty Cobler.

Remarks upon Mr. Cornish's Tryal.

THERE yet remain two Persons Prosecutions to speak of; the one is Mr. Cornish, who was taken the — of October 1685. and was arraign'd on an Indictment of High-Treason the Monday after, for conspiring to kill the late King Charles the Second; and knowing James Duke of Monmouth, William Russel, Esq; and Sir Thomas Armstrong to be Rebels and Traitors, promis'd to be assisting to them in their Treasons: To which he pleaded Not Guilty. He desir'd to put off his Tryal, because he had no notice till the Saturday before at twelve a Clock, and he could get no Friend to come to him till eight a Clock at Night, and then he was permitted to speak with no body but in the presence of the Goaler; he had been allow'd no Pen, Ink, or Paper. He was told by the Court he ought not to have it, without leave given on a Petition prefer'd by him, and that he was taken Tuesday before, which to that time was almost a Week. He said his Children had petition'd the King the Night before to put off his Tryal, and it was refer'd to the Judges; he did not know whether he was committed for High-Treason against the present, or the former King, and he had a material Witness an hundred and forty Miles off; but was told by the Court, they had no Power to put off his Tryal. It is true, they said the Lord Russel's Tryal was put off till the Afternoon (which was true) but that was a Favour which could not be challeng'd by another Person as a Right. He complain'd he had not a Copy of the Pannel, but was answer'd it was not his Right to have it. Then the Attorney said, he had not deserv'd so well of the Government as to have his Tryal delay'd, and therefore he was presently try'd.

Rumsey swore, that about the latter end of October, or beginning of November, the Earl of Shaftsbury desir'd him to go to Mr. Sheppard's House, where was a Meeting of the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Russel, Lord Gray, Sir Thomas Armstrong, Mr. Ferguson, and Mr. Sheppard; he came late, and they were just on going away; he deliver'd his Message, and they told him that Mr. Trenchard had disappointed them: he had not been there above a quarter of an hour, but Mr. Sheppard was call'd down, and brought up Mr. Cornish, and told them Mr. Cornish was come, who came into the Room, and excus'd his not coming sooner, and that he could not stay, for he was to meet about the Charter; whereupon Mr. Ferguson open'd his Bosom, and under his Stomacher pull'd out a Paper: they told Mr. Cornish they had had it read, and desir'd to read it to him: Mr. Ferguson read it, Mr. Sheppard held the Candle while it was reading, and afterwards they ask'd Mr. Cornish how he lik'd it; who said, he lik'd it very well: he remember'd two Points in it very well, the one was for Liberty of Conscience, science, the other was, that all who would assist in that Insurrection, who had Church or Kings-Lands in the late War, should have them restor'd to them. He did not hear all the Paper, and observ'd only these two Points, it was a Declaration on a Rising, and when the Rising was to have been, it was to have been dispersed abroad; there was a Rising intended at that time, and Mr. Cornish said, he lik'd the Declaration, and what poor Interest he had he would join with it. He had great dealings with Mr. Cornish, and Mr. Cornish was a very honest Man, it was out of Compassion he had not accus'd Mr. Cornish before.

Mr. Goodenough said there was a Design to rise in London, and for that Purpose to divide the City into twenty parts, and to raise five hundred Men out of each part, to take the Tower, and to drive the Guards out of Town. Before that was agreed on, he being by chance at Mr. Cornish's House, said, the Law will not defend us; some other way was to be thought on. Mr. Cornish said, he wondred the City was so unready, and the Country so ready: Mr. Goodenough reply'd, there is something thought of to be done here, but in the first place the Tower must be seiz'd, where the Magazine is; Mr. Cornish paus'd a little, and said, I will do what good I can, or what I can, or to that purpose, he said.

He afterwards met Mr. Cornish on the Exchange, who ask'd him how Affairs went, and this was in Easter Term 1683. He had some Matters with Mr. Cornish about managing the Riot, which was brought against him, Mr. Cornish, and others: He came to Mr. Cornish's House about the business of the Riot, and no Person was by at the discourse. Mr. Gosfright testify'd for Mr. Cornish, that he oppos'd Mr. Goodenough's being Under-Sheriff, and said he would not trust an Hair of his Head with him, he was an ill Man, obnoxious to the Government, and had done ill things, and he would not trust his Estate and Reputation in the Hands of such an Under-Sheriff; and he believ'd Mr. Goodenough and Mr. Cornish were never reconcil'd. Mr. Love, Mr. Fekil, and Sir. William Turner testify'd to the same purpose; Mr. Lane spoke out of the printed Tryal of my Lord Russel, and said Rumsey in that Tryal said he did not hear the Declaration read, for it was read before he came. Dr. Callamy said, Mr. Cornish did often come to Church, and receive the Sacrament; Mr. Sheppard said he was subpena'd by the King, and by Mr. Cornish the Night before; and that Mr. Cornish his Son was with him the Afternoon of the day before, who prest him to be at the Tryal the next day; that there were Accounts depending between him and Mr. Cornish, whereon there was about one or two hundred Pounds due to Mr. Cornish, and Mr. Cornish's Subpena was serv'd first upon him. At one of those Meetings at his House, Mr. Cornish came to speak a few Words with the Duke of Monmouth or some other, he could not be positive in that, it was many years ago; he did not stay above half a quarter of an Hour in the House; Sheppard came up Stairs, and went out with Mr. Cornish, and there was not one Word read, nor no Paper seen while Mr. Cornish was there: he remembered there was a Declaration read, Ferguson pull'd it out of his Shoo: he could not tell whether Mr. Cornish was at his House the Night the Declaration was read, but he was positive no Paper was read while Mr. Cornish was there, for Mr. Cornish was not look'd on to be one of the Company: he did not know who Mr. Cornish came to speak with, when he came to his House; Mr. Cornish was but once at his House when the Duke of Monmouth was there: he did not remember that Mr. Cornish was in the Company when Mr. Rumsey was there; he said, he had attended the Court from eleven a Clock till half an Hour past three.

This being the Sum of the Evidence given in the Tryal for and against the Prisoner, let us see whether those Inferences could be made from it as were made by the Court and Council: and whether on the whole an honest Jury, tho but of little understanding, could have found him guilty of the Treason in the Indictment.

It is agreed on all hands, that a petty Jury may and must consider the Credibility of a Witness (tho in the Lord Shaftsbury's Case it was said a Grand Jury ought not to do) and if so, surely Rumsey was not a credible, tho he was not a disabled Witness, no more than a Man who owns himself to be a Man of Falshood, a profligate Wretch, and perjurd by his own Confession; tho not convicted of it; he had notoriously confessed himself guilty of High-Treason, and of being in the Design of an intended barbarous Murder; he had sworn in the Lord Russel's Tryal, he had nam'd all the Persons at the Meeting he spoke of, of which Mr. Cornish was none; and being taxt in this Tryal with it, he excuses his Perjury with Compassion to the Prisoner, which was mean, foolish and contradictory: he perjurd himself to save the Prisoner, and then swore Truth to hang him. He had not presence of mind enough to excuse himself in the manner a Witness in the Lord Russel's Tryal did, that his God, his King and his Country put him unwillingly to act that part: besides that in the Lord Russel's Tryal, Rumsey swore he was not at the reading the Declaration, and contradicted Sheppard, who swore he thought he was there.

But that passage was prov'd only by a Witness who had read it in the Tryal, which I confess in strictness of Law is not Evidence; nor if the Witness had said, he heard Rumsey swear so at the Lord Russel's Tryal, it had not been Evidence, unless a Record of that Tryal had been produc'd in Court, which was not done. But all those things being but mere Circumstances, shew the Injustice of speeding his Tryal, and denying him Council: Would not any Council have told him that in strictness of Law a Passage in a printed Tryal was not Evidence, and was it not easy for him to have got a Witness to have said that he had heard Rumsey swear so at that Tryal? were not all the Judges who sat upon him, and all the King's Council who were against him, present at the Lord Russel's Tryal, and perfectly remembred what Rumsey then swore as to the pretended Declaration, and might he not have subpena'd them to have testify'd that Matter? Nay, was it not their Duty to have done it even without a Subpena?

To say it was against the King, and therefore they could not do it; or they were in the Commission to try him, and therefore they could not do it, is neither Law nor Reason. Every Man knows that a Judg in a civil Matter try'd before him, and a Council even against his Client, has been enforc't to give Evidence (provided it be not of a Secret communicated to him by his Client) for in that particular a Judg ceases to be a Judg, and is a Witness; of whose Evidence the Jury are the Judges, tho he after re-assume his his Authority, and is afterwards a Judge of the Juries Verdict.

A Judge may sue, and must be sued in his Court, but in that Case he ceases to be a Judge and is a Suitor, tho' he re-assumes his Authority in all other Matters: and if it be so in civil Matters, let any Man shew me a Reason why the Law is not so in criminal Matters; there is no express Law against it, and it will be absurd in reason to say the Law is not so; for at that rate the King may put any Witness, he knows the Prisoner intends to produce for himself, into the Commission for trying him, and so deprive the Prisoner of the benefit of his Evidence; as in this Case Sheppard, whose Evidence ought to have been of great use (as shall be shewn) tho' it was not of any avail to the Prisoner, might have been put into the Commission to have try'd Mr. Cornish, for he was as much qualify'd for it, as Sir James Smith then Lord Mayor, or any Judge upon the Bench: and if they might have been Witnesses for the Prisoner, if subpœna'd, they might have been Witnesses for him even without asking; and it was a Duty incumbent on them, tho' not as Judges, yet as Christian Men, so to be.

Humanity commands the Discovery of Truths, which prevent the shedding innocent Blood; and Christianity commands a Man to do as he would be done by. I think the Question need not be ask'd what they would have had done, if it had been their Case.

The reason that all matters of Law are, or ought to be transacted publickly, is, That any Person, unconcern'd as well as concern'd, may, as amicus Curie, inform the Court better, if he thinks they are in an Error, that Justice may be done: and the reason that all Tryals are publick, is, That any Person may inform in point of Fact, tho' not subpœna'd, that truth may be discover'd in civil as well as criminal Matters.

There is an Invitation to all Persons, who can inform the Court concerning the matter to be try'd, to come into the Court, and they shall be heard. It is true, if the Judges or any Person had testify'd what Rumsey said at my Lord Russel's Tryal, it had not been Evidence without the Record of the Tryal; and it is as true, that neither the Record, nor a true Copy of it could have been procur'd between Mr. Cornish's Commitment, if it were on Friday (as I have heard it was) tho' the Court said it was on Tuesday, much less between the notice of his Tryal which was Saturday-noon, and the time of his Tryal which was Monday-morning.

But then what Justice was there in speeding his Tryal, so as to deprive him of the Circumstances of his Defence? for that was but a Circumstance, and not an essential Matter. And what account can be given why the Court, when they were well satisfy'd that it was in the Prisoner's power to procure such a Witness, and such a Record, did not stay till he did it? or if it would be too long in doing, why should they not have put off the Tryal for that time, and given the Prisoner a convenient time to do it?

The first in civil Matters hath been frequently done, when a Deed or Witness hath been wanting, if it could be done in a convenient time, and a Tryal has been put off before it came on, tho' after it came on they have not done it, because there is no great Mischief in that, for either Party hath Power to bring it about again; but not so in capital Matters, and therefore Juries in capital Matters have been frequently discharg'd after sworn, where the Evidence hath been defective.

It is true, my Lord Coke saith that a Jury once charg'd with a Prisoner cannot be discharg'd but must give their Verdict; but it is as true that he says so in favour of the Prisoner, that when the Evidence against him appears defective, he shall not be continued a Prisoner till more Evidence can be found, or procur'd against him, tho' the Practice of late days hath been quite contrary, viz. to discharge the Jury where the Evidence against the Prisoner hath been defective, but enforce them to give a Verdict where the Prisoner's Defence hath been defective, tho' to their Knowledge if he had longer time to do it, he had been able to produce the Witnesses who could clear him, but by what Law or Reason I am to seek. Yet I confess, if Rumsey's owning his Perjury in the Lord Russel's Tryal, in the very point sworn against the Prisoner, and so frivolously excusing it, would not discredit him, I know not that any Record, Witness, or Evidence would have avail'd Mr. Cornish.

And add to Rumsey's contradicting himself, that Sheppard, who never contradicted himself, and had been a Witness in both Tryals, agrees, that what Rumsey had sworn in my Lord Russel's Tryal as to Mr. Cornish's not being there, was true.

But admitting Rumsey had never perjur'd himself, but was of equal Credit with Sheppard, yet when they contradicted each other in a point, which carried no probability or improbability with it; in a capital Matter the Jury ought to believe in favorem vite; for it makes the matter at least doubtful: and therefore the Jury ought to have acquitted the Prisoner, for a reason in Law, and which was given in Colonel Sidney's Tryal (tho' shewishly) by the Court, viz. that it is better that twenty Noents should escape than one innocent suffer.

But to pass from the credibility of the Witness to the matter of his Evidence, this was the second time that this sort of Evidence in any Case criminal or civil was permitted to be given in Evidence; and there are the same Exceptions to it, as are above assign'd to the Evidence of Sheppard. As to the Declaration in my Lord Russel's Tryal, if a true Copy of part of a Deed or Writing was never yet permitted to be given in Evidence, much less hath or ought the purport of part of a Writing be given in Evidence, especially when such a reason is given why the Witness remembred but part of it, as is given by Sheppard in my Lord Russel's Tryal, and by Rumsey in this Tryal, viz. that he did not hear all the Paper read.

And surely Goodenough could no way fortify Rumsey's Evidence, being clearly of another matter, and that so very uncertain that no heed ought to have been given to it. When Goodenough told Mr. Cornish something ought to be done in the City, but in the first place the Tower ought to be seized, to which he answer'd he would do what he could, or what good he could, these words may as well relate to Goodenough's present Discourse, where he complains that the Law would not defend them tho' innocent, as well as to the seizing the Tower; and if they should refer to the last, yet they may well enough be interpreted, that he would do what he could, or what good he could, to prevent the seizing the Tower: and if they are capable of two Senses, they ought to be interpreted in the best for the Prisoner.

Besides, the Words are spoken not as a thing designed, but as a matter without which all other matters were in vain, and might be meer matter of Discourse, as was that between Blague and Mate Lee about taking the Tower: and if there was such a Design on foot, it doth not appear that Mr. Cornish was ever acquainted with it. The same may be said as to what he asked Goodenough, when he ask'd how Matters went: may not those words well enough be applied to the business of the Riot, Goodenough managed for Mr. Cornish and others? And if what Goodenough said was Evidence of a Design of seizing the Tower, that, as well as the Treason against the Guards, was Treason by the Act of the late King, and not by the 25th of Edward the Third, if it be true Doctrine which was laid down in the Charge to the Earl of Shaftsbury's Grand Jury: and if so, he ought to have been prosecuted for it within six Months, and indicted within three Months, if the Doctrine in Colledge's Tryal be true; and yet this Design, if true, was in Easter Term 1683, and the Prosecution not till October 1685.

There was yet one piece of Evidence urged against him, viz. of his own Witness Sheppard, who positively testify'd for him as to the main, yet in a Circumstance seem'd to testify against him, which was Mr. Cornish's being at his House when the Duke of Monmouth and the rest were there, when the Declaration was read; and upon that piece of Evidence, as if it had contradicted what Mr. Cornish said before, there was a mighty Triumph: whereas, the most that could have been made of it was, that Mr. Cornish in part of his Defence was guilty of an untruth, and even that was not so in Fact; for being charged to have been at Sheppard's the Night the Declaration was read, he answered he was never at a Consult in his Life, he never was at Sheppard's in any Consult, he never was there with my Lord Russel, as he remembred; he had been at Sheppard's several times, but never liked Ferguson for his Morals, and therefore never liked to be in his Company, and he did not know but that he might enquire for the Duke of Monmouth in other Places, and this is all Mr. Cornish says to that matter.

Sheppard says, Mr. Cornish came into his House at one of the Meetings to speak with the Duke of Monmouth or some other, he could not be positive in that, it was so many Years ago, and did not stay half a quarter of an hour; he could not say it was the Night the Declaration was read; he did not know whether Mr. Cornish came to speak with the Duke of Monmouth or not; he could not remember whether Mr. Cornish was there in Company when Rumsey was there; there were not above three Persons there when Mr. Cornish came, which was the Duke of Monmouth, Mr. Ferguson, and he could not tell whether the other was the Lord Russel, or the Lord Gray.

Now it would be hard to find out the Contradiction between Mr. Cornish's Sayings and Shep- pard's Evidence; both agree that Mr. Cornish hath been often at Sheppard's House, and neither denies or affirms that he was or was not there the Night the Declaration was read, for a good reason, which was, that Mr. Cornish knew nothing of it, and Sheppard knew not which of the Nights he was there: Mr. Cornish said he was not there with my Lord Russel as he remembred, and Sheppard doth not affirm he was there with the Lord Russel; Sheppard says that he was there when the Duke of Monmouth was there, and Mr. Cornish doth not say that he was not there with the Duke of Monmouth; Sheppard said, he spoke to the Duke of Monmouth, or some other Person, but he thought it was the Duke of Monmouth, which is no direct Affirmation that he spoke to the Duke; and Mr. Cornish doth not say, he did not speak to the Duke of Monmouth. So that if the account of the Tryal, set out by the Authority of, and signed by Thomas Jones, be true, I cannot see any manner of Contradiction between Mr. Cornish and Sheppard: and therefore, as the Court and King's Council did infer, that Sheppard's Evidence, who positively denies the Truth of Rumsey's Evidence, was so far from invalidating, that it corroborated Rumsey's Evidence, and cleared the thing which was before somewhat dark, beyond all manner of Contradiction, is a piece of effrontery; so admitting Sheppard had said Mr. Cornish was at his House the night the Declaration was read, and had contradicted Mr. Cornish, is it a necessary Consequence, that he heard the Declaration read, and promised his assistance to it? which must be the Inference, if it must support Rumsey's Evidence.

If it be not a necessary Consequence, but a probable one, that ought not to weigh with a Jury, to convict a Person of a capital Crime, especially not of Treason. The Statute of Edward the Third says, probably Convict, that is, says my Lord Coke, convicted upon direct and manifest Proof, not upon probable conjectural Presumptions, or Inferences, or Strains of Wit: And to say truth, when Verdicts have been given on such Evidence, they have been often faulty.

To give some Instances of many, it is remembred in our time where Persons were convicted of the Murder of a Person absent, but not dead, barely by Inferences upon the Evidence of foolish Words and Actions; but the Judge before whom it was tried, was so unsatisfy'd in the Matter, because the Body of the Person supposed to be murdered was not to be found, that he reprieved the Persons condemned; yet in a Circuit afterwards, a certain unwary Judge, without inquiring into the Reasons of the Reprieve, ordered Execution, and the Persons to be hanged in Chains, which was done accordingly, and afterwards, to his Reproach, the Persons supposed to be murdered appeared alive.

My Lord Coke relates a Story in his Time, of an Uncle who beat his Niece that had an Estate, which on her Death would descend to him; the Girl was heard to cry, good Uncle do not kill me; after which she run away, and conceal'd herself some few Miles from London: the Girl being missing, and the Neighbours remembring the Cry of the Girl, and tacking it to the Probability that the Uncle might be induced, for his Advantage, to murder his Niece, apprehends him him, and he was indicted for it at the Sessions; and the Judges being unsatisfy'd in the Evidence, by reason the Body of the supposed murdered Girl did not appear, the Uncle saying that she was run away; they gave him time to the next Sessions to find her out, which he being not able to do, thought to defend himself by producing another Girl very like his own Niece, which he did accordingly; and being detected, it increased the Suspicion, and by Inferences from all those Circumstances, he was convicted, and afterwards executed.

Some Years after which the Girl appeared, and claimed her Estate: and therefore it is a most dangerous and unwarrantable thing for a Jury, in capital Matters, especially in Treason, to convict a Person upon the Evidence of Probabilities.

As the Evidence in this Case against the Prisoner was weaker than in any of the precedent Cases, so the usage of the Prisoner was more rigorous than in any of them: in all the other Cases, the Prisoners had more Weeks allowed them to prepare for their Tryals, than this Person had Days; all the other Persons, after notice of their Tryal, were permitted to have Friends, nay Council, freely to come to them, and confer with them in private, without the Presence of a Goaler, which was denied this Person; all the others, except Colonel Sidney, had soft Words given them on their Tryals; but this Person was rudely handled.

How often was he snub'd and bid hold his Tongue? How often did he beg the Patience of the Court, to hear him and his Witnesses? and when he was heard, how was all he said ridicul'd? and if he said he was innocent, he was bid remember my Lord Russell said so to his Death, when he said he was as innocent as any Person in the Court, he was told for all his Confidence few believed him. If he said the Matter sworn against him was improbable (which hath been taken for a pretty good Topick for the disbelief of a Matter testify'd) how is it ridicul'd by Improbability, Improbability, Improbability? If he go to prove he is an honest Man, he is told that is all Appearance. If he says he employed Goodenough about the Riot, he is told that is a Branch of the Plot. If he call Mr. Gospright as a Witness for him, the Witness is reproached with having helpt the Prisoner in packing Juries; if he call one to prove he received the Sacrament, he is told, that was in order to qualifie himself to be a Sheriff, and as such his usage before, and at the Tryal, such was it afterwards, to order him to be ty'd when he was sentenc'd, was an Indignity not us'd to Persons of his Quality, a thing indeed permitted, not commanded to be us'd, on boistrous Criminals, who may be suspected to do a sudden Mischiefe, if their Arms were at liberty.

Of like kind was the Reproaching him with the Chearfulness of his Countenance at his Condemnation, and that it might be all of a Strain, his Quarters were expos'd, a Severity us'd to none abovementioned, but Sir Thomas Armstrong; and in all these Tryals, Colledge made the best Defence, and perhaps, Circumstances considered, the best Defence ever made upon an Indictment of a Capital Matter, and Mr. Cornish's was the weakest, though it signified nothing; for I believe that none who reads his Tryal, but will plainly see he was so beset, that the Defence he, or any for him could make, would have availed him nothing, and no account can be given for the Proceedings against Mr. Cornish, in the above manner, but that some of the Judges, whereof three of them on the Bench, had newly come out of the West, where they had been so flush and hardned, that nothing seem to them rigorous or cruel, and the rest seem'd to vie with them in the Practice.

Remarks on the Tryal of Charles Bateman.

THE last Person which concluded the Tragedy, was one Charles Bateman a Chyrurgeon, his Demerits were, that he had been, or at least was reputed to have been, Chyrurgeon to the Earl of Shaftsbury, and one whom his Lordship had a Kindness for, and therefore according to the Cant of the Time, he was called a factious Fellow; and he had reviv'd the Memory of his Demerits, by attending when Oates came from his Whipping, and letting him Blood; whether either of those Circumstances were true or not, I know not, but they were believed: And therefore the 9th of December 1685. he was indicted and try'd for High Treason. On his Tryal he seem'd to be distracted, and therefore out of abundance of Charity, the Court appointed his Son to make his Defence for him.

The Witnesses against him were Keeling, who only spoke of a Design in general, without mentioning Bateman to be concern'd in it. Thomas Lee and Richard Goodenough swore, at several times and places, his Discourse to them severally, of seizing the Tower, City and Savoy. Baker for the Prisoner said, Lee in the Year 1683. would have had him insinuated himself into the Prisoners Company, and discourse about State Affairs, and by that he would find a way to make Baker a great Man: upon the Evidence the Prisoner was found guilty. Against Goodenough's Evidence, there is only this to be said, that he was pardon'd but so far only, as to qualifie him to be a Witness, though not a very credible one, not only the Guilt sticking to him, but even the Punishment of what he had then lately done, hanging over his Head; and what was said for some time, of all the Witnesses for the King, at that time, and for some time before, was true, they hunted like Cormorants with Halters about their Necks, though even that matter by one of the Kings Council was boasted to the Jury, as a circumstance of more credibility; for he assured them there was not a Witness which he produced had a Pardon, as the Witnesses in the Popish Plot had. 'Tis true; in the Popish Plot, upon very good reason the Witnesses having confessed what they pretended to know, of matters in which they had an hand, it was not thought proper to use them as Witnesses, though they had used them as Informers, till they were pardon'd, lest it might happen to be, or at least it would have been suspected, that the terror of the Punishment of the Crimes confess'd might influence them to swear falsely to the jeopardy of other Mens Lives, to save their own, which as the Lord Howard truly said, was the drudgery of Swearing. But to Lee's Evidence, besides the Evidence of Baker against him, that he would have procured Baker to have been a Witness against the Prisoner, and enticed him with the promise of making him a great Man, and besides that it appears in Rouse his Tryal, that Rouse and he were upon the Trepan with each other, to bring each other into the pretence of a Plot, in order to make some advantageous discovery of it, of which Lee got the start of Rouse; the objection which was made to his Evidence, why Lee had not accused the Prisoner sooner, there being near three Years between the pretended design, and the discovery of it, was never satisfactorily answered. It was a foolish story to say Goodenough could not be had before, and a single Testimony in High-Treason was not sufficient; every one knows, that though a single Witness is not enough to convict a Man of High-Treason, yet a single Persons Testimony is enough to commit a Person accused, and upon Conviction on the Testimony of a single Witness, to make him a Prisoner for his life, witness Mr. Hamden and others, besides the subjecting him to other Corporal punishments, inflicted at discretion, witness Mr. Johnson and Oates; and in 1683, when the words were pretended to be spoken, Bateman had not been spared if accused; and though it be a good reason for the Court to have given, why they did not proceed against the Prisoner till that time, because there were not two Witnesses against him, yet it was no reason for Lee, why he did not accuse the Prisoner before that time, especially he having been several times before that time examined, not only of what he knew, but of what Persons he knew concerned: but to say truth, Lee in the Tryal did not pretend to answer the Objection, but the Court in the manner before endeavour'd to answer it for him.

The last Matter observable in this Tryal, was the permitting Bateman's Son to make his Father's Defence, which was an extraordinary unparallel'd favour, it was the first and last time that, or any thing like it, had been done; the Lord Russell's Lady indeed was permitted to take Notes at the Tryal for her Lord, but he only was permitted to make use of them. Fitzbarris his Wife when she but whisper'd her Husband, or but told him what Jurors he should challenge, and what not, was severely corrected, and threatn'd to be thrust out of Court, for doing it in prejudice of the King. In Colledge's Tryal, he was told that Persons that advis'd a Prisoner in Treason, even before a Tryal, were guilty of a high Misdemeanour; nay, a Solicitor had been indicted of High-Treason for it; and therefore nothing can excuse the allowing the Prisoner Council in matter of Fact, as was done in this Case (it is not material, whether the Son was a Barrister at Law or not) but the weakness of the Prisoner, who to all appearance was mop'd mad.

But the Court by excusing their Favour upon that account incurred a worse Censure; for nothing is more certain in Law, than that a Person who falls mad after a Crime suppos'd to be committed, shall not be try'd for it; and if he fall mad after Judgment, he shall not be executed: tho I do not think the reason given for the Law in that Point will maintain it, which is, that the End of Punishment is the striking a Terror into others, but the execution of a Madman had not that effect; which is not true, for the Terror to the living is equal, whether the Person be mad or in his Senses; and that is the reason of breaking the Person executed for Treason, and exposing his Quarters, which is done rather to deter the living, than for punishing the dead. But the true reason of the Law I think to be this, a Person of non sana Memoria, and a Lunatick during his Lunacy, is by an Act of God (for so it is call'd, tho the means may be humane, be it violent, as hard Imprisonment, terror of Death, or natural, as Sickness) disabled to make his just Defence, there may be Circumstances lying in his private Knowledge, which would prove his Innocency, of which he can have no advantage, because not known to the Persons who shall take upon them his Defence; and that is the reason many civil Actions die with the Persons against whom they lay in their Life-times, and that is the reason why in criminal Matters, Persons by ordinary course of Law cannot be convicted after their deaths.

For in all civil Actions there is as much reason for the Person injur'd, to have satisfaction out of the Estate of the Person who injur'd him, in the hands of his Heir or Executor after his death, as there was to have it out of the Estate of the Injurer in his own hands in his Life-time: and there is as much reason that the Heir or Executor of a Person who hath committed a Crime, which by Law would have forfeited his Estate, if in his Life-time he had been attainted of the same, should forfeit the Estates they claim from him, as if he had been attainted in his Life-time, which had prevented the said Estates vesting in them. And it hath been sometimes practis'd, where the Crimes of the Persons deceas'd have been notorious, and without any doubt; as was the Case of several Persons mention'd in the Act of Pains and Penalties, which Act had example from many other Acts of Parliament in other Reigns, where the Persons were dead before Punishment overtook them.

And tho of late Years it hath been pretended, that the King's Safety depends upon the speedy Tryal and Execution of a Person guilty of High-Treason; yet this was never thought so heretofore, nor in truth in it self is so: for it is plain, in Reason as well as Experience, that what is said of Witches is true of all Malefactors when once they are in Custody, their Power of doing Mischief ceases.

The King is therefore no otherwise benefited by the destruction of his Subjects, than that the Example deters others from committing the like Crimes; and there being so many to be made Examples of, besides those on whom the misfortunes fortunes of Madneſs fall, it is inconſiſtent with humanity to make Examples of them; it is inconſiſtent with Religion, as being againſt Chriſtian Charity to ſend a great Offender quick, as it is ſtil'd, into another World, when he is not of a capacity to fit himſelf for it. But whatever the reaſon of the Law is, it is plain the Law is ſo; and for remedying it in High-Treaſon, was the 33d of Henry the Eighth made, whereby it is enacted, That if a Man ſhall mad after he hath committed High-Treaſon, he ſhall notwithstanding be try'd in his abſence; and if a man ſhall mad after he is attainted of High-Treaſon, he ſhall notwithstanding be executed. Which Statute extending only to High-Treaſon, the Law continu'd, and yet is as it was at Common Law in all other capital Matters; and even that Statute was call'd a cruel and inhumane Law, and therefore liv'd not long, for it was afterwards repeal'd: ſo that the Law as to this Matter when this Man was try'd and executed, was as it was at Common Law; and therefore if he was of non ſana Memoria, he ought not to have been try'd, much leſs executed.

I know it will be objected, that if this Matter of non ſana Memoria ſhould be permitted, to put off a Tryal or ſtay Execution, all Malefactors will pretend to be ſo: But I ſay there is a great difference between Pretences and Realities, and ſana and non ſana Memoria hath been often try'd in capital Matters, and the Priſoners have reap'd ſo little benefit by their Pretences, it being always discover'd, that we rarely hear of it. In this Caſe the Priſoner might have been try'd as well abſent as preſent, according to that repeal'd Statute, for any advantage he did or could reap by being preſent: and it ſeems very probable the Court thought him diſtemper'd; for if he was of ſane Memory, his Son ought not to have been permitted to make his Father's Deference; if he was diſtemper'd, he ought not to have been try'd, much leſs executed. And this Perſon being the laſt Man, as far as I can remember, or can find by the printed Tryals; who ſuffer'd for the Plot of High-Treaſon firſt ſet on foot by Fitzbarris, and carry'd on againſt Colledge, and the other Perſons herein mention'd; and the Deſign ſtopping here, I think fit to end my Remarks on the Proceedings of all Capital Matters with him. But I think it is fit for me to make ſome Apology for the thing, and for my ſelf; for taking on me to cenſure the Opinions and Actions of Perſons whoſe Characters carry'd Authority with them. I confeſs I never thought that either the great Seal or a Garment added to a Man's Senſe, Learning or Honesty; but he remain'd juſt ſuch as to thoſe Qualities after his preferment as he was before: and as to many of the Perſons reflected on in theſe Remarks, the Cenſure of Col. Sidney was true; and for the beſt of them, it is plain they not only vary'd from one another in their Opinions, but even from themſelves in the Judgment of the ſame Caſe, but always tending to the deſtruction of the Perſon try'd for his Life, witneſs the Opinion of the Court in the Challenge of Jurors not having a Freehold and the deſigning to levy War not Treaſon within the Statute of Ed. and forty other Matters. And that not only gives a liberty to enquire, but naturally puts one upon the enquiry which of the two Opinions is right; tho it is impoſſible for one not to think meanly of the Perſon, who in ſo great a Concern as a Man's Life, ſhould be ſo raſh as to give his Opinion without Conſideration; or ſo unſteady as to give different Opinions in the ſame Caſe: for if the Truth of a Man who tells Hiſtory backward and forward, is juſtly ſuſpected in point of Truth; the knowledge and ſincerity of a Man, who gives different Opinions in the ſame Caſe, is juſtly ſuſpected in point of Law; which together with the fullom, but injurious ſtuff vented for Crown-Law; was the firſt Matter which put me on conſidering and writing what I have done.

And for my ſelf; if Tully thought it a Reproach to his Son if he did not abound with Philoſophy, having heard Cratippus ſet the ſpace of a whole Year, and that at Athens; ſurely one who hath had his Education at one of the three great Schools for ſome Years, and afterwards at the University, and laſtly twenty five Years conſtant Reſidence in an Inn of Court, and twenty Years attendance at Weſtminſter-Hall; and not diverted by the uſual Employments of a Solicitor or Attorney, may be allow'd without the imputation of Confidence to give his Cenſure; upon Conſideration, on the extempore Judgments or Opinions of Perſons, tho' of greater Standing and Character than himſelf.

The Tryal of John Hambden, Gent. on the 30th of December, 1 Jac. II. 1685.

HIS Day being appointed for the Tryal of Mr. Hambden, after the Judges came to the Court, and the Court was called, the Officer was commanded to proceed to call over the Jury whilſt Mr. Hambden was bringing down.

Crier. O Ye, you good Men of the County of Middleſex, ſummon'd to appear here this Day, to try the Iſſue which ſhall be between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner that ſhall be call'd to the Bar, answer to your Names as they ſhall be call'd, every one at the firſt call, upon Pain, and Peril that ſhall fall thereon.

Clerk. Set John Hambden to the Bar.

 (Which he did.)

Middlesex. THE Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, upon their Oaths present, that John Hambden, late of the Parish of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Gent. as a false Traytor, against the most Illustrious and Excellent Prince, our Lord Charles the Second; late King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, thy Natural Lord; the fear of God in thy Heart not having, nor the Duty of thy Allegiance any ways weighing; but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true due and natural Obedience, which a true and faithful Subject of our said late Lord the King, towards him our said late Lord the King of Right, ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and imagining, practising, and with thy whole Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to disquiet, molest and disturb, and War and Rebellion against our said late Lord the King, within this his Kingdom of England to stir up, move, and procure, and the Government of our said late Lord the King, of this his Kingdom of England to subvert, change and alter; and our said late Lord the King, of the Title, Honour, and Royal Name, of the Imperial Crown of this his Kingdom of England to depose and deprive: And him our said late Lord the King, to Death, and final Destruction to bring and put, the 20th Day of July, in the Year of the Reign of our said late Lord the King, Charles the Second of England, &c. the 35th, and divers other Days and and times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and traitorously, with divers other false Rebels and Traytors unknown, didst conspire, compass, imagine, and intend our said late Lord the King, then thy supream and natural Lord, not only of his Royal State, Title, Power, and Government of this his Kingdom of England; to deprive and cast down, but also our said late Lord the King, to kill, and to Death, to bring and put, and the ancient Government of this Kingdom of England to change, alter, and wholly to subvert; and a miserable Slaughter amongst the Subjects of our said late Lord the King, through his whole Kingdom of England, to cause and procure, and Insurrection and Rebellion, against our said late Lord the King, within his Kingdom of England to procure, and these thy wicked, abominable and devilish, Treasons and traytorous Conspiracies, Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, to fulfill, perfect and bring to pass, Thou the said John Hambden as a false Traytor, then and there, (to wit) the said 20th Day of July, in the Year of the Reign of our said late Lord the King, 35th aforesaid, and divers other Days and times, as well before as after; at the Parish of St. Giles in the Fields aforesaid, in the said County of Middlesex, falsly, unlawfully, wickedly, devilishly and traitorously, with James late Duke of Monmouth, and divers other false Traytors unknown: Did assemble your self, meet together and consult, and consent to move and procure divers great sums of Money, and a great number of Men armed, to War and Rebellion, against our said late Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, traytorously to levy and make against the Duty of thy Allegiance, and against the Peace of our said late Lord the King, and against our Lord the King that now is, their Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statutes in that Case made and provided, &c.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, I perceive that I am here indicted for a Fact, for which I was indicted above two Years ago, and I was convicted of it, and did suffer Imprisonment in Execution upon the Judgment that was given against me, and am still under Execution for the Fine that was set upon me by way of Punishment for that Fact. I think, my Lord, I have as much to say in point of Law for my self, as any Prisoner that ever came before your Lordship upon such an account, twice tried, twice convicted, and twice punished, for the same Fact must be very extraordinary, but, my Lord, I do pass by all Pleas whatsoever, and cast my self wholly upon the King's Mercy; that is my Resolution, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then you must plead Guilty or not Guilty. But you say you have been tried twice for the same Fact, were you ever tried for High-Treason before? The very Punishment that you alledge to be inflicted upon you for it, is a plain Proof that you were not tried for High-Treason, for that is not usually punished by Fine and Imprisonment.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord I only insinuate that the Fact is the same.

L. C. J. You must plead Guilty or not Guilty. Clerk. Are you Guilty or not Guilty of the High-Treason; whereof you stand indicted, John Hambden?

L. C. J. You must plead directly; say you are Guilty, or you are not Guilty.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, I do plead Guilty to the Indictment.

Will your Lordship be pleased to hear me: My Lord, I do confess my offence against the King is very great, I am very sorrowful for it. My Lord, I know the King is the Fountain of Mercy as well as Justice, an inexhaustible Fountain of Mercy, and if I may be so happy to obtain your Lordships intercession to his Majesty on my behalf; I doubt not but that Grace and Goodness which hath been extended to others, may be bestowed upon me.

L. C. J. Mr. Hambden; as the King is the Fountain of Mercy, so it comes freely from him. I confess as the circumstances of your Case are; you have pleaded the best plea to find Mercy; but how far the pleading guilty when there is full Evidence to prove you so, may move the King to have Mercy upon you I don't know; you must apply your self to the King.

Mr. Hambden. I humbly beg your Lordship's intercession, I know none can do it better than your Lordship.

L. C. J. You must record the Plea:

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, I humbly beg your Lordship that you would be pleased to represent to his Majesty what my past sufferings have been, and how sorrowful I am for having offended his Majesty, and that your Lordship would be pleased to beg his Majesties gracious Pardon in my behalf, I humbly beseech your Lordship to do it, and it shall be the endeavour of all my Life to behave my self as Dutiful and Loyal Subject as any the King hath.

L. C. J. The King shall have an account of what you say.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, there is one thing I would humbly beg the Liberty for; there are words in the Indictment concerning the death of the King, my Lord, what construction the Law may put upon such an Action I am ignorant of, but for any direct intention of taking away the Life of the King, no Man does abominate and abhor more than I have done.

L. C. J. Mr. Hambden, it is but a necessary construction that the Law puts upon it, it is a construction confirm'd by woful Experience. We see that Rebellion, let the beginning be what it will, never stops, unless by God's great Mercy and the Justice of the King's Cause, but it will end in the Death of the King, it hath a natural tendency that way, but however you are understood that you had not any thoughts of killing the King, but only to raise Rebellion within the Kingdom, which must necessarily end in the Death of the King.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, no Man doth abhor that more than I do.

L. C. J. You may ask Mr. Hambden if he hath any thing to say why Sentence of Death should not pass upon him.

Clerk. John Hambden, hold up thy Hand. Thou standest Convicted of High-Treason by your own Confession, what can you say for your self why Sentence should not pass upon you?

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, I humbly cast my self upon the Kings Mercy. My Lord, I would humbly humbly move your Lordship in one thing, that I may have the liberty of my Friends and Relations to come to me in Prison as they did before.

L. C. J. You must apply your self to the King.

Mr. Hambden. Will your Lordship be pleased to order it, my Lord; I had two or three of my own Relations the King was pleased to grant to come to me.

L. C. J. It is easie for you Mr. Hambden, to make your Application to the King, it will be better for you: I direct it as the better way to apply your self to the King.

Mr. Hambden. I only beg it my Lord.

L. C. J. In the presence of a Keeper I don't know why his Relations should not come to him, but I think it had been better to apply your self to the King.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, I have two or three near Relations allowed to be without the presence of a Keeper.

L. C. J. Mr. Hambden, that we cannot do, that was an extraordinary favour, and as that came from the King, so you must apply your self to the King again, but in the presence of a Keeper we grant it, we cannot grant it without a Keeper, if you will apply your self to the King for that you may.

Cryer. Gentlemen of Middlesex, that have been Summon'd upon the Kings Service this Day, the Court discharges you.

Then after the Judges did withdraw, the Clerk was commanded to proceed.

Clerk. John Hambden, hold up thy Hand. You stand Convicted of High Treason by your own Confession, what can you say for your self, why the Court should not pronounce Sentence upon you?

Mr. Hambden. I only plead the Kings Mercy. I rely upon no other thing.

Cryer. Oyez, all manner of Persons are commanded to keep silence whilst Judgment is giving upon pain of imprisonment.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Hambden, you have been Indicted for High Treason, and the Indictment hath been read to you, and whereupon according as the Law doth require, it hath been demanded of you, that you should plead to it; and thereupon you have pleaded Guilty to this Indictment, which is recorded accordingly; and therefore I need not say any thing for to let you know the heinousness of this Crime, for I perceive you are sensible enough of it your self, and I do verily believe you have taken a very wise and discreet Course to confess the truth, for you were brought hither to be Tried for this Crime in case you had pleaded not Guilty to this Indictment, which now you have prevented by this your candid Confession. However it is the Duty of my Place to pronounce the Judgment that the Law hath provided for such Crimes as these are, and that is this,

You must be had to the place from whence you came; and from thence you must be drawn to the place of Execution, and there you are to be hang'd by the Neck; and whilst you are alive you must be cut down, and your Entrails be taken out, and Burnt before you, and your Head must be cut off, and your Body quartered; and your Head and your Quarters to be disposed of at the Kings pleasure, and the Lord have mercy upon your Soul.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, I hope I shall have your Lordships intercession with his Majesty.

Mr. Recorder. I don't doubt, Mr. Hambden, but you have used the best means to obtain so great a Favour, and as it is the Duty of my place to give an account of this to His Majesty, so I shall truly and faithfully represent it with the advantages your Demeanour this day hath serv'd.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, I humbly beg the Favour that my Wife may come to me without the presence of a Keeper.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Hambden, 'tis too late for us to give any directions in this matter, because you ask'd this while the Judges were here, but I don't doubt upon your Application to His Majesty, but you will have all things that you can reasonably desire, if you please to apply your self to him for this and what else you shall be advised may be fitting and convenient for you to beg.

Then his Grace the Lord High Steward addressed himself to the Lord Delamere the Prisoner at the Bar in this manner.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, the King being acquainted that you stand accused of High Treason, not by common Report or Hearsay, but by a Bill of Indictment found against you by Gentlemen of great Quality; and known Integrity within the County Palatine of Chester, the place of your Residence, has thought it necessary in Tenderness to you, as well as Justice to himself, to order you a speedy Tryal.

My Lord, if you know your self innocent, in the name of God, do not despond, for you may be assured of a fair and patient hearing, and in your proper time a free Liberty to make your full Defence: and I am sure you cannot but be well convinced, that my Noble Lords that are here your Peers to try you, will be as desirous and ready to acquit you, if you appear to be innocent; as they will to convict you if you be guilty.

But, my Lord, if you are conscious to your self that you are guilty of this heinous Crime; give give Glory to God, make amends to his Vicegerent the King by a plain and full discovery of your Guilt, and do not, by an obstinate persisting in the Denial of it, provoke the just indignation of your Prince, who has made it appear to the World, that his Inclinations are rather to shew Mercy than inflict Punishments. My Lord, attend with patience, and hear the Bill of Indictment that hath been found against you read. Read the Bill of Indictment to my Lord.

Cl. of Cr. Henry Baron of Delamere, Hold up thy hand.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I humbly beg your Grace would please to answer me one Question, whether a Peer of England be obliged by the Laws of this Land to hold up his hand at the Bar, as a Commoner must do; and I ask your Grace this question the rather, because in my Lord Stafford's Case it was allowed to be the privilege of the Peers not to hold up their hands.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, this being a matter of the privilege of the Peerage, it is not fit for me to determine it one way or the other; but I think I may acquaint your Lordships, that in point of Law, if you are satisfied this is the Person indicted, the holding, or not holding up of the hand is but a Formality, which does not signifie much either way.

L. Delamere. I humbly pray your Grace's direction in one thing farther, whether I must address my self to your Grace when I would speak, or to your Grace with the rest of these Noble Lords my Peers.

L. H. Steward. You must direct what you have to say to me, my Lord.

L. Delamere. I beg your Grace would please to satisfy me, whether your Grace be one of my Judges in concurrence with the rest of the Lords?

L. H. Steward. No, my Lord. I am Judge of the Court, but I am none of your Tryers. Go on.

Cl. of Cr. Henry Baron of Delamere, thou standest Indicted in the County Palatine of Chester by the Name of Henry Baron of Delamere of Mere in the said County of Chester, For that thou as a false Traytor against the most Illustrious and most Excellent Prince James the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, thy natural Lord, not having the fear of God in thy Heart, nor weighing the duty of thy Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true, due, and natural Obedience which a true and faithful Subject of our said Lord the King, towards him our said Lord the King, should and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and contriving, practising, and with all thy might intending, the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to disquiet, molest, and disturb; and War and Rebellion against our said Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to stir up, move, and procure, and the Government of our said Lord the King of this Kingdom of England to subvert, change and alter, and our said Lord the King from the Title, Honour, and Kingly Name of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England to depose and deprive, and our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put; the fourteenth day of April in the first Year of the Reign of our said Lord James the Second now King of England, &c. and divers other Days and times as well before as after, at Mere in the County of Chester aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and traiterously, with divers other false Traytors and Rebels, to the Jurors unknown, didst conspire, compass, imagine, and intend our said Lord the King, thy supreme, true and natural Lord, not only from the Kingly State, Title, Power and Government of his Kingdom of England to deprive and cast down, but also the same our Lord the King to Kill, and to Death to bring and put, and the ancient Government of this Kingdom of England to change, alter, and wholly to subvert, and a miserable Slaughter among the Subjects of our said Lord the King throughout his whole Kingdom of England, to cause and procure, and Insurrection and Rebellion against our said Lord the King within this Kingdom of England, to procure and assist, and the same thy most wicked, most impious, and devilish Treasons and traiterous Compassings Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid to fulfil and bring to effect, thou the said Henry Baron of Delamere, as a false Traytor then and there, to wit, the said fourteenth day of April in the first Year above-said, and divers other days and times as well before as after, at Mere aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, falsely, unlawfully, wickedly, and traiterously with Charles Gerrard, Esq; and other false Traytors to the Jurors unknown, didst assemble thy self, gather together, consult, and agree to raise and procure divers great Sums of Money, and a great number of armed Men, War and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England to levy and make, and the City of Chester in the County of the same City, as also the Castle of our said Lord the King of Chester at Chester in the County of Chester aforesaid, and all the Magazines in the same Castle then being, to enter, take, seize, and surprise, and into thy possession and power to obtain; and that thou the said Henry Baron of Delamere afterwards, to wit, the 27th day of May, in the first Year above-said, falsely, unlawfully, wickedly, and traiterously didst take a Journey from the City of London unto Mere aforesaid, in the County of Chester aforesaid, thy traiterous purposes aforesaid to fulfil and perfect: And that thou the said Henry Baron of Delamere, afterwards, to wit, the fourth day of June, in the first Year above-said, at Mere aforesaid, in the County of Chester aforesaid, in further prosecution of thy unlawful, most wicked and traiterous purposes aforesaid, divers Liege People and Subjects of our said Lord the King, to the Jurors unknown, with thee the said Henry Baron of Delamere, and the aforesaid other false Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, falsely, unlawfully, and traiterously, in the War and Rebellion aforesaid, and in thy traiterous purposes aforesaid, to join and adhere didst excite, animate, and perswade, against the duty of thy Allegiance, against the Peace of our said Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and against the form of the Statute in that case made and provided. How say'st thou Henry Baron of Delamere, art thou Guilty of this High Treason whereof thou standest Indicted, and hast been now Arraign'd, or not Guilty?

L. Delamere

L. Delamere. My Lord, I humbly beg the Indictment may be read again.

L. H. Steward. Let it be read again. (Which was done).

L. Delamere. May it please your Grace, I humbly beg the favour to be heard a few words before I plead to this Indictment.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I am very unwilling to give your Lordship any interruption, but according to the Methods of Law, which must be observed in your Case, as well as all others, You must plead to the Indictment before you be heard to any thing else.

L. Delamere. May it please your Grace, I have something to offer to your Grace's and their Lordships consideration which is a matter of Law.

L. H. Steward. I know not what matter of Law you have to offer: If you have a mind to demur to the Indictment, you may.

L. Delamere. Will your Grace please to hear what I have to say? and then I shall submit it to your Grace's Judgment.

L. H. Steward. I would hear what you have to say, my Lord, with all my heart, if I could: But I must then pass by all the Forms and usual Methods of proceeding, and that without any advantage to you too, and that I suppose your Lordship will not desire of me. Ask my Lord, Whether he be guilty, or not guilty?

Cl. of Cr. How sayst thou, Henry Baron of Delamere, Art thou guilty of this High-Treason whereof thou hast been indicted, or not guilty?

L. Delamere. I beseech your Grace to hear me what I have to say; I shall not detain your Grace very long, but I beg your Grace to hear me.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I must keep you to the known Rules and Methods of Law: This is not your time to speak but to plead; in your proper time you shall be fully heard whatsoever you have to say.

L. Delamere. If your Grace please, I have something to say which concerns all the Peers of England in point of Right.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, you must either plead, or demur to this Indictment, that is the usual Practice before any thing else can be done.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I have a Plea to offer to your Grace and my Lords; and it is with reference to the Priviledg and Right of the Peers of England.

L. H. Steward. If you have any Plea to offer, it must be received, my Lord.

L. Delamere. My Lord, amidst the hardships I have lain under by my frequent Imprisonments and close Confinement —

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, You must keep up to the Legal Method of Proceedings: In Cases of this nature I would, as far is possible for me to do, indulge a Person of your Quality, and in your condition; but withal I must do right to the Court, and not permit any Breach to be made upon the Legal Course of Proceedings. You must plead, or demur to the Indictment before you are heard to say any thing.

L. Delamere. Will your Grace be pleased to hear me tell you my Reasons why I offer you a Plea of this nature to the Indictment.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, if you have any Plea, put it in.

L. Delamere. Will your Grace be pleas'd to accept it as I have done it? It may be it is not so formal, because I have had no Council allowed me to peruse and sign it. But as it is, I here offer it to your Grace's consideration.

L. H. Steward. Ay, put it in.

Then it was delivered to the Clerk.

L. H. Steward. Read it.

Cl. of Cr. The humble Plea of Henry Lord Delamere, to the Indictment of High Treason against him, now to be tryed by the Lord High Steward and Peers here assembled.

THE said Lord Delamere saving to himself all benefit of Advantage of any further or other matter of exception to the Generality, Incertainty or Insufficiency of the said indictment, and all matters and things which do or may concern the same, for Plea hereunto saith, That he was by His Majesty's Writ Summoned to this present Parliament which began the Nineteenth Day of May last, and attended his Duty there as a Peer of this Realm.

That for High Treason supposed to be committed by him, during the Sitting of the same Parliament; he was the Twenty sixth Day of July last, committed, by Warrant of the Earl of Sunderland one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to the Tower of London.

That the Peers in Parliament assembled, taking Notice by his Petition of the Ninth of November last, of his being absent from his Attendance in Parliament, sent a Message to His Majesty to know the reason why he the said Henry Lord Delamere, a Peer of that House, was absent from his Attendance there.

Upon the Tenth Day of November last, the Lord Treasurer reported His Majesty's Answer to the said Message, viz. That the said Lord Delamere was absent from his Attendance in Parliament, because he stood committed for High Treason, for levying War against the King this last Summer, testified upon Oath, and that his Majesty had given directions that he should be proceeded against with all speed according to Law.

The House of Peers not being satisfied with this Answer, the Debate thereof was adjourn'd till the Monday morning following.

On which Day the Lords resuming the Debate concerning the Lord Delamere and the King's Message; after some Debate, the Lord Chancellor, by His Majesty's Command, gave the House an account what Proceedings had been against the Lord Delamere since his Majesty's Answer to their Address concerning his absence from the House, which was to this Effect:

That the King had given Order for a speedy Prosecution of him: That the Treason whereof he was accused was committed in Cheshire; and that being a County Palatine, the Prosecution ought to be there, and not in the King's Bench; as it might be if the Treason had been committed in another County: and that therefore his Majesty had given Order for a Commission of Oyer and Terminer into Cheshire, in order to the finding of an Indictment against him for the said Treason: And that accordingly a Commission of Oyer and Terminer was already sealed; and if the Indictment be not found before the end of the Term, the said Lord Delamere's Prayer being entred in the Kings Bench, he should be Bailed.

All which Proceedings do more fully appear in the Journals of the said House of Peers; to which the said Henry Lord Delamere doth refer himself.

Afterwards, that is to say, upon the Day of the said Parliament was Prorogued by His Majesty unto the Tenth Day of February next, as by the said Journals it doth appear.

Upon all which Matters the said Henry Lord Delamere doth humbly tender this his Plea to the Jurisdiction of your Lordships in this Cause, and doth humbly conceive your Lordships ought not to proceed in the Tryal of him upon the Indictment of High Treason now before you: And that for these following Reasons.

First, Inasmuch as it appears by the said Petition of the said Henry Lord Delamere, and the several Orders of the Lords, and the King's Answers to the Message of the Lords thereupon, That the said House are already possessed of his said Cause, which is the same supposed Treason for which he was at first committed, and which is the same Treason for which he now stands indicted before your Lordships. And for this Reason your Lordships, as he humbly conceives, by the Law and Custom of Parliament, which is part of the Law and Custom of the Land, ought not to proceed against him upon the said Indictment; but his said Cause ought wholly to be determined and adjudged in the said House of Peers, and not elsewhere, as in like Cases has been formerly done.

Secondly, Whereas it is the Right and Privilege of the Peerage of this Realm, That no Peer thereof ought to be Tried or proceeded against for High Treason during the continuance of the Parliament, except in the said House of Peers, and before the whole Body of the Peers there. And whereas the aforesaid Parliament is now continuing by Prorogation until the tenth day of February next aforesaid, the said Henry Lord Delamere humbly conceives that by the Law and Custom of Parliament hitherto used, which is part of the Law and Custom of the Realm, he ought not, nor can be Tried before your Lordships for the said Treasons, because the said Parliament is still continuing, and not dissolved.

And lastly, The said Henry Lord Delamere doth further say, That he is the same Henry Lord Delamere mentioned in the Commitment, Petitions, Messages, Answers and Indictment now read unto him, and the said Treason for which he was Committed is the same Treason mentioned in the Commitment, Petition, Messages, Answers, and Indictment, as aforesaid.

To which said Indictment he humbly conceives he is not bound by Law to make any further or other Answer.

L. Delamere. May it please your Grace, and you my Noble Lords, I do not offer this Plea out of any diffidence or distrust in my Cause, nor out of any dislike I have to any of your Lordships that are here Summoned to be my Tryers; I cannot hope to stand before any more just and noble, nor can I wish to stand before any others; but your Grace and my Lords will pardon me if I insist upon it, because I apprehend it a Right and Privilege due to all the Peerage of England; which, as it is against the Duty of every Peer to betray or forego, so it is not in the power of any One, or more, to waive it, or give it up without the consent of the whole Body of the Peers, every one of them being equally interested.

This, my Lord, I humbly demand as my Right and Privilege as a Peer of England, and submit to the direction of your Grace and my Noble Lords.

L. H. Steward. What say you to it, Mr. Attorney?

L. H. Steward. May it please your Grace; This Plea that is here offered by this Noble Lord, is a Plea to the Jurisdiction, but, with submission, it needs very little Answer, for it has very little in it: The Force of the Plea is, That he ought to be Tried by the whole Body of the House of Peers in Parliament, because the Parliament is still continuing, being under a Prorogation and not dissolved; and because there was some agitation of the matter concerning this Prosecution, upon his Petition, in the House of Lords; and therefore it concludes, That he ought not to be Tried by your Grace and these Noble Lords upon this Commission, but by all the Lords in Parliament. With submission, my Lord, This is contrary to all the ancient Precedents, and against the known Rules of Law; for the Law is, If the King pleases to try a Peer in Parliament, then the Record may be brought into the House, and there they proceed as in other Cases, and all the Peers are Judges. Thus it is in the time of a Session of Parliament; but if the Parliament be Prorogued, there are many instances (and indeed none to the contrary) that after a Prorogation, the Proceedings are before the High Steward by Commission. And as to the other part of the Case, I have this to say to it, That there is nothing at all depending in the House of Lords that can out this Court of the Jurisdiction; for there was not so much as any Indictment returned there, no, nor so much as found during the Session of Parliament. All the agitation was only upon my Lords Petition, and the King's Answer; that he intended as speedy a Prosecution as could be: Besides, my Lord, your Grace sees it is a Plea in Paper and in English, without any Council's Hand, and therefore I hope your Grace does not expect that I should formally Demur to a Plea in this Form, and that contains no more of Substance in it. But I must desire your Grace to over-rule it, and that the Prisoner may plead in chief.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I humbly pray that I may have Council assigned me, to put my Plea into Form, and to argue the matter of it.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I am sure I ought and ever shall be as tender of the Privileges of the Peers of England, as any other Person whatsoever: For I am concerned, as well in interest as inclination so to be, having the Honour to be one my self: But I know your Lordship will not think the Privilege of the Peers is concerned in this matter; nor will your Lordship, I dare say, insist upon matters that are purely dilatory; if your Lordship be satisfied that they are so: And therefore give me leave, my Lord, to mind you of a few things, whereby your Lordship will easily see, That the chief things on which you insist are grounded upon mistakes: First, You say, The House of Peers was possessed of the Cause; which could not be, and I will tell you why: Because there was no Indictment ever removed thither, or lodged there. Which plainly proves that the Lords were never possessed of the Cause. Nor indeed was the Bill found, upon which you are now arraigned, till after the Prorogation of the Parliament.

So

So that they could never come to be possessed of this matter. These are mistakes in Point of Fact, and your Lordship cannot but well know them to be so.

And there is as great a mistake in the Law, That during the continuance of a Parliament (though it were Prorogued, yet if not Dissolved) a Peer cannot be tryed but by the House of Lords. This certainly is a very strange Doctrine, and is not only against the reason and methods of Law, but contrary even to your Lordships own Experience. For your Lordship cannot but very well remember, that during the continuance of the Parliament, after a Prorogation, the Lord Cornwallis was tryed before the High Steward, and such a number of Peers as were then Summoned, upon such a Commission as I now sit here by. But indeed during the Sitting of the Parliament, then all the Peers are both Tryers and Judges, as was in the Cases of my Lord Stafford, and my Lord of Pembroke; they being a Court of Judicature, then actually sitting; and therefore this Plea is grounded as upon mistake in Fact, so, upon a mistake in point of Law. So that though, as I said at first, it is both my duty and interest to preserve the privileges of the Peers, yet I must take care that no injury be done the Law, and truly I take this Plea to be altogether dilatory, and I suppose your Lordship is satisfied of it, and will not insist upon it.

L. Delamere. If your Grace please, It was alledged and agreed in the Case of my Lord of Bristol, that the Cause of a Peer in time of Parliament properly belong'd only to the House of Lords; And that which possessed the House of Lords of his Case, was, as I apprehend, no more than is in my Case, a Petition upon the account of being absent; and there the Lords claim the cognizance of the whole Cause, and nothing was done but in the House of Lords. And as to the Instances your Grace has mentioned of my Lord Cornwallis, (and there was another of them, my Lord Morley) this Question was never under Debate in those Cases; therefore I suppose they cannot be admitted as Precedents.

L. H. Steward. But, my Lord, it would have been an Error in the whole Proceedings, if this Court had not Jurisdiction: And sure the Judges, who are always called to assist in such Cases: and who, in matters of Life, even in the Cases of common Persons, are so tender and careful, that there be no irregularity in the Proceedings, would not have let things pass in that manner, had they been erroneous.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I think no other Precedents are produced but those two, and there the Question was never debated.

L. H. Steward. I only put you in mind of those that were lately within Memory; but no question of it there are a great many more Instances to be given.

Mr. Attor. Gen. I pray your Grace's Judgment to over-rule the Plea, and that my Lord may plead in chief.

L. Delamere. I hope your Grace will be pleased to assign me Council to put my Plea in Form; and that I may have time for it, that they may be heard to make a solemn Argument in Law.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, if you insist upon it, and think it worth the while to have Council heard, we will hear them.

L. Delamere. I submit it to your Grace, I only offer it that I may not be wanting to the support of the Peers Privileges; I assure your Grace, I speak not to put off the Cause, for I am willing to come to my Tryal, and I have reason so to be; for I question not but to make my innocence appear.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I tell you what my opinion of the Plea is, but if you insist upon it to have your Council heard, I will hear them.

L. Delamere. I have no Council here, if your Grace please to give me time to send for them; and that they may prepare to argue it.

Mr. Attor. Gen. No, my Lord. If your Grace will hear Council, I for the King must pray that it may be done presently; for a Plea to the Jurisdiction is never favoured, nor is the party to be allowed time to maintain it, but he must be ready at the time it is offered.

L. Delamere. Pray, my Lord, how was it done in the Case of Fitzbarris? His Plea was a Plea to the Jurisdiction, and he had four days allowed him to put his Plea in form, and to instruct his Council.

L. H. Steward. I am not able at present to remember what was done in such or such a particular Case: But according to the general method and course of Law, the Plea to the Jurisdiction is not favoured, nor time allowed to it; but the party must be ready to maintain it presently.

Mr. Attor. Gen. But, with Submission, my Lord, that Case of Fitzbarris is nothing to this noble Lord's Case neither: There was a formal Plea put in Writing, and drawn up in Latin, and a formal Demurrer joined; and thereupon I did take time to speak to it. But, with your Grace's favour, by the Law, the Prisoner must be always ready to make good his Plea, if he will oust the Court of their Jurisdiction.

L. H. Steward. Mr. Attorney, if my Lord Delamere does insist upon having his Council heard, it is not fit for me to refuse hearing what they can say.

Mr. Attor. Gen. But that must be presently then, my Lord.

L. Delamere. It is my Duty, my Lord, to submit to what your Grace and my noble Lords shall determine: I would insist upon nothing that should offend your Grace or them.

Mr. Attor. Gen. If your Grace please, you are the only Judge in this Case in Matters of Law: For these noble Lords, the Peers, are only Tryers of the Fact. Therefore, I appeal to your Grace's Judgment, and pray for the King, that this Plea may be over-ruled; it being vitious and naught, both in Form and Substance.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I must acquaint you, That according to the Constitution of this Court, Matters of Law are determined by me, as the sole Judge, while I have the Honour to act under this Commission: But if your Lordship insist upon it, to have your Council heard, God forbid that I should deny it You. I will hear what your Council will say; and afterwards I will, according to the best of my Understanding, deliver my Judgment.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I have never had any Council assigned me.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, if you have any Council ready, we will hear them.

L. Delamere. If your Grace please to assign me Council, and give me Time to send for them, and and them Time to prepare, I will obey your Grace's Directions ; but I could have none here ready, because none were assigned me.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, You cannot, by the Course of Law, have Council allowed You in the Case of a Capital Crime, till such time as the Court, where You are called to Answer, is apprized, that there is some matter of Law in your Case, that may need Council to be heard, to inform their Judgment, and which they may think convenient to hear Council to: For if in case any Prisoner at the Bar shall before-hand be allowed to have Council to start frivolous Objections, such as this (and we all know, that there are some, who will be easily prevailed with to endeavour to pick Holes where there are none) and to offer Matters foreign from the things whereof the Party stands accused ; and upon the Prisoner's bare Request, Council must be heard to every trivial Point, the Courts of Law would never be at an end in any Tryal ; but some dilatory Matter or other would be found to retard the Proceedings: But it does not consist with the Grandeur of the Court, nor your Lordship's Interest, to let such a frivolous Plea interrupt your Lordship's Tryal. However, if your Lordship has Council ready, I will not refuse to hear them.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I hope the Privilege of the Peers of England, is not frivolous. I assure your Grace, I do not offer this Matter, as if I thought it more conducing to my Interest, than my Tryal now. No, my Lord, it is not for my self, but for the whole Body of Peers; of which I have the Honour to be a Member: And if my Lords here are satisfied it is not the Right and Privilege of the Peers, I acquiesce.

L. H. Steward. Pray, good my Lord, do not think that I should say any such thing, that the Privilege of the Peers is frivolous; for you do not hear me say, That this is one of their Privileges. As I would not willingly mistake You; so I desire your Lordship would not misapprehend or misrepresent Me. I spoke not at all of the Peers Privilege, but of your Plea: I tell your Lordship, I think your Plea is not a good Plea, to Oust this Court of the Jurisdiction of your Cause. But if your Lordship have a mind to have your Council heard to it, in Gods Name, let them come; they shall be heard: And when that is done, to satisfy you the more, I will advise with my Lords the Judges, that are there to assist, what they take to be the Law in the Case; and, upon the whole, I will deliver my Judgment as well as I can.

L. Delamere. I hope, your Grace will be pleas'd to advise with my Lords the Peers here present; it being upon a Point of Privilege.

L. H. Steward. Good my Lord, I hope You that are a Prisoner at the Bar, are not to give Me direction, who I should advise with, or how I should demean my self here.

L. Delamere. I beg your Grace's Pardon; I did not intend to give your Grace any Direction.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I shall take care to perform that Duty that is incumbent upon me, and that with all Tenderness to your Lordship: And, I assure your Lordship, I will have as much care that I do not injure You, as I will that I do not wrong my own Conscience; and I will endeavour to discharge my Duty to both, with the utmost Fidelity.

L. Delamere. I humbly thank your Grace; I question it not: But if your Grace please—

L. H. Steward. My Lord, you must pardon Me; I can enter into no further Interlocutions with your Lordship. If your Lordship have any mind to have Council heard, and your Council be ready, we will hear them.

L. Delamere. If your Grace require of Me to produce Council presently, and they to argue it immediately, I must acquaint your Grace, I cannot do it: For I have none here.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I cannot tell how to help it; the Plea must then be over-ruled and rejected.

Clerk of the Crown. Henry, Baron of Delamere, Art thou Guilty of the High-Treason whereof thou standest Indicted, and hast been now Arraign'd, or Not Guilty?

L. Delamere. Not Guilty.

Clerk of the Crown. Culprit, How wilt thou be Tried?

L. Delamere. By God, and my Peers.

Clerk of the Crown. God send thee a good Deliverance. Sergeant at Arms, Make Proclamation.

Sergeant at Arms. Oyez. If any one will give Evidence on behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, against Henry, Baron of Delamere, the Prisoner at the Bar, concerning the High Treason whereof he stands Indicted, let them come forth, and they shall be Heard; for now he stands at the Bar, upon his Deliverance.

Then His Grace gave the Charge to the Peers Tryers in this manner:

L. H. Steward. My Lords, I know You cannot but well remember, what unjust and insolent Attempts were made upon the rightful and unalterable Succession to the Imperial Crown of these Realms, under the pretence of That, which has been so often found to be the Occasion of Rebellion, I mean, the specious Pretence of Religion; by the fierce, froward, and Phanatical Zeal of some Members of the House of Commons, in the last Parliaments under the late King, CHARLES the Second, of ever Blessed Memory.

Which, by the wonderful Providence of Almighty God, not prevailing, the Chief Contrivers of that horrid Villany, consulted together how to gain that Advantage upon the Monarchy by open Force, which they could not obtain by a pretended Course of Law.

And in order thereto, it is too well known, how they had several Treasonable Meetings, made bold and riotous Progresses into several Parts of the King's Dominions; thereby endeavouring to debauch the Minds of the well-meaning, though unwary and ignorant, Part of the King's Subjects.

But these their evil Purposes, it pleased God also to frustrate, by bringing to Light that cursed Conspiracy against the Life of His Sacred Majesty, King CHARLES the Second; as also, against That of our dread Sovereign, that now is, whom God long preserve.

These Hellish and damnable Plots one would have thought, could not have survived the just Condemnation and Execution of some of the chief Contrivers of them; especially considering, that after it had pleased Almighty God, to take to Himself our late Merciful and dread

Sovereign; no sooner was his Sacred Majesty, that now is, Seated in the Royal Throne of his Ancestors, but he made it his utmost Endeavour, not only to convince the World, that he had quite forgot those impudent and abominable Indignities that had been put upon him, only for being the best of Subjects, and the best of Brothers: but did also give forth the most Benign Assurances imaginable to all his loving People, that he would approve himself to be the best of Kings.

And further to evince the reality of these his Gracious and Heroick Resolutions, he immediately called a Parliament; and therein repeated, and solemnly Confirmed his former Royal Declarations of having a particular Care of maintaining our Establish'd Laws and Religion: With which that Wise, Great, and Loyal Assembly, were so fully and perfectly satisfied, that they thought they could not make sufficient Returns of Gratitude for such Gracious and Princely Condescensions.

And yet, my Lords, while the King and the Parliament were thus, as I may say, endeavouring to out do each other in Expressions of Kindness, that wicked and unnatural Rebellion broke out; and thereupon the Arch-Traytor, Monmouth, was, by a Bill brought into the Lower House, and pass'd by the general Consent of Both Houses, (and I could wish, my Lords, for the sake of that Noble Lord at the Bar, that I could say, it had Pass'd the Consent of every particular Member of each House) justly Attainted of High-Treason.

My Lords, What share my Lord at the Bar had in those other Matters, I must acquaint You, is not within the Compass of this Indictment, for which you are to try him, as his Peers; For That is for a Treason alledged to have been Committed by him, in his Majesty's Reign that now is.

Give me Leave, my Lords, to detain You but with a Word or two more on this Occasion; and that is, To let You know, That as my Lord at the Bar may, with great Safety and Security to himself, rely upon your Lordships Candor and Integrity, that You will be tenderly careful, and ready to acquit him of the Treason whereof he is accused, if upon the Evidence that shall be given You, You shall find him Innocent: So I must tell You, the King has an entire Confidence in your Resolution, Fidelity, and good Affections to Him, that you will not, by reason of the Prisoner's Quality, and nearness to You, as being a Peer of this Realm, acquit him if he shall appear to be Guilty.

My Lords, I have one thing further to mind your Lordships of, That, according to the usual Forms of Proceedings in these Cases, if your Lordships have any Questions to propound, wherein you would be satisfied as to any Matter either of Fact or Law, your Lordships will be pleased to put those Questions to Me, and I shall take care to give your Lordship the best Satisfaction I can.

L. Delamere. My Lord High Steward, I beg the Favour of your Grace, I may have One to write for me.

L. H. Steward. Ay, by all means. Let my Lord have whom he pleases to write for him.

Then Sir Thomas Jenner, One of His Majesty's Serjeants at Law, and Recorder of the City of London, opened the Indictment thus:

Mr. Recorder. May it please your Grace, my Lord High Steward of England, and You my Noble Lords, the Peers of the Prisoner at the Bar: Henry Baron of Delamere, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted for that 'He, as a False Traytor against the most Illustrious and most Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord the King that now is; not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, the Fourteenth Day of April last, at Meer, in the County of Chester; did maliciously Conspire, with other False Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, the Death and Deposing of the King: And for the better, and more effectual fulfilling of those his Treasons, the said Fourteenth Day of April, at Meer aforesaid, did Maliciously and Trayterously Assemble, Consult, and Agree with Charles Gerrard, Esq; and other False Traytors, to Raise great Summs of Money, and procure Numbers of Armed Men, to make a Rebellion against the King, and the City and Castle of Chester to seize, with the Magazines there: And that afterwards, the Twenty Seventh Day of May last, he took a Journey from London to Meer aforesaid, to accomplish his Treasonable Intentions. And further, That upon the Fourth Day of June, in further Prosecution of his Trayterous Purposes at Meer aforesaid, he did encite divers Subjects of our Lord the King, to joyn with him, and other false Traytors, in his Treason: And this is laid to be against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. To this Indictment, may it please your Grace, and the rest of these Noble Lords, my Lord Delamere, the Prisoner at the Bar, has pleaded Not Guilty; and for his Tryal has put himself upon his Peers. We shall therefore call our Witnesses for the King; and if We prove him Guilty, We do not question, but your Lordships will find him so.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Grace, my Lord High Steward of England, and You my Noble Lords the Peers: My Lord Delamere, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands Indicted for Conspiring the Death of His Majesty, and in order thereunto to Raise a Rebellion in the Kingdom.

My Lords, In proving this Charge upon him, we crave Leave to give your Grace, and your Lordships, some short Account by Witnesses, that we have here, of a former Design that was previous to this Matter, for which this Noble Lord stands here accused: And We shall not trouble your Grace, and your Lordships, with any long Evidence, because it has received many solemn and repeated Tryals; and, as to the Proof of it, has been Confirmed by as many Verdicts: But We do it rather, to give some Account as an Introduction to a Material Evidence, by shewing, That Cheeshire, which was the Province of this Noble Lord, was One of the Stages, where that Rebellion was principally to be acted; and that, preparatory to it, great Riotous Assemblies, and Tumultuous Gatherings of the People, were set on foot by the Conspirators.

We shall then shew, my Lords, That after the late Duke of Monmouth, (the Head of the Conspiracy) went beyond Sea, (especially after the Death of the late King) frequent Messages, and Intercourse of Correspondency, were sent and held between him, and the rest of his Accomplices abroad, and their Fellow-Conspirators here at home.

And particularly, We shall prove, That a little before the Rebels came over last Summer into the West, the Duke of Monmouth did dispatch one Jones (who was one of the most considerable Agents in this Contrivance) to come from Holland into England, to let his Friends know, that though he had intended to go into Scotland, and begin his Work there; yet now his Resolutions were for England; where he hoped, his Friends would be prepared for him. And with this Message, and Resolution of his, Jones was to acquaint some Lords, (who they were, the Witnesses will tell your Lordships; but) among others, this Noble Lord, the Prisoner, was one: And to acquaint them besides, That he would immediately set sail for England, whither he would come so soon as he could get. That he had a Design to have Landed in Cheshire, where he expected to be most readily receiv'd; but finding That inconvenient, they should have notice Four or Five Days before-hand, of the Place of his Landing; which he intended, should be in the West. And among the Directions that Jones had to give to those Lords, one was, That they should immediately repair into Cheshire, there to wait for the News.

These Instructions Jones had given him in Writing; but Sealed up with an Injunction, not to open them till he came to Sea; and then he was to peruse that Writing, and deliver his Message according to his Instructions: And in that Writing was the Name of this Noble Lord, as one that was principally relied on, to carry on the Rebellion in Cheshire. And We shall give You an Account, That the late Duke of Monmouth did look upon Cheshire, as one of his main Supports; and upon my Lord Delamere, as a Principal Assistant There.

My Lords, This Message was Jones to communicate to Captain Mathews, and Captain Mathews was to transmit it to this Noble Lord, and the other Persons that were concern'd with him. Jones arrived with this Message here in England, upon the Twenty Seventh of May; [And I must beg your Lordships, to observe the Time particularly:] But Captain Mathews, to whom he was directed, was not to be found; nor Major Wildman, to whom, in the Absence of Captain Mathews, he was to apply himself, as You will hear more fully from the Witness's own Mouth: Thereupon he sends for one Disney, (a Name which your Lordships cannot but know, he being since Executed for Treason) and one Brand, whom your Lordships will likewise hear of; and they meet with this same Jones, who communicates his Message to them, and they undertake to deliver it to the Persons concern'd; Captain Mathews being out of Town, and Major Wildman not to be found.

That very Night, my Lords, this same Brand and Disney they meet this Noble Lord, my Lord Delamere at the Coffee-House, and give him an Account of the Messages: And as soon as ever he had received the Message, upon that Twenty Seventh of May, at Ten of the Clock at Night, does my Lord Delamere dispatch out of Town, with only one Servant to attend him, and two other Friends that he had pickt up, or appointed to meet him, and go with him.

With all these Badges of Plot and Design, does my Lord Delamere set out that Night. It was the same Night that Jones came to Town: It was late at Night. He changed his Name, and went by the Name of Brown. He chose to go all the By-Roads, and would not keep the High-Common-Road; and went with great speed, as We cannot but presume according to the Message delivered by Jones, on purpose to repair into Cheshire.

And if your Lordships please to observe, You will find several remarkable Instances of Plot and Contrivance in the matter: First, That a Nobleman, and one of so considerable a Character in his Country, as my Lord Delamere, should make such hast out of Town with so small an Equipage, as but one Servant; Then, that he should go so late at Night: Again, that he should change his Name; and That should prove to be a Name not casually taken up, as the first Name he could think of next his own; but a Name of distinction, that he was known by among all his own Party: For all the Communications between the Confederates and him, were managed, as to him, under the Name of Brown: By that Name, several of the late Duke of Monmouth's Trayterous Declarations were sent for; which were to be sent to him, or by him, into Cheshire: And that alone, with Submission, my Lords, would be a shrewd Circumstance of Suspicion, that a Noble Lord, such an one as my Lord Delamere, should assume the Name of a Commoner, and post out of Town so ill accompanied in a Disguise at that time of Night; especially the Parliament being then Sitting, as really it was.

But besides all this Circumstantial Evidence, We shall prove, by Positive Testimony, what the hasty Business was, that made my Lord undertake this Journey in this manner: For, having notice of the Duke of Monmouth's Intention to Land speedily in England, when he comes into Cheshire, he actually sets about the Work to put that County in a forwardness to assist in the Rebellion, endeavours to stir up the People to joyn with him; and acquaints One that he employed in that Affair, with the whole Design, that he was engaged to raise so many Thousand Men, and so much Money, to be ready by such a Day.

Nor does my Lord rest here: But, after the Duke of Monmouth was Landed in the West, to corrupt the Minds of the People, We shall prove what Discourses he had, (and these will testify his Inclinations to the Cause) concerning the great Victories he had obtained over the King's Forces, and how he applauded his Conquests.

My Lords, We shall plainly shew You all this that I have opened in plain Proof; And then, We shall submit it to your Lordships Judgments, Whether this Noble Peer be Not Guilty, as he has Pleaded to his Indictment.

L. H. Steward. Call your Witnesses, Mr. Attorney; Who do you begin with?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord Howard of Epswick: We desire he may be first sworn.

(Which was done.)

L. H. Steward. Well, what do you ask my Lord Howard?

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I call You to give an Account what You know of a Design of an Insurrection that was to have been; and in what Parts; and what share Cheshire was to have had in it, in the late King's Time.

Lord H. Steward. You hear the Question; What say you to it, my Lord?

Lord Howard. My Lord I am to direct my self to speak to what was done in the late King's Time: For as to that Noble Lord at the Bar, I have nothing to say against him.

Lord H. Steward. My Lord Howard, if I apprehend Mr. Attorney aright, You are not called as a particular Witness against my Lord Delamere; but only to give an Account, what was agreed upon in any Consultations, where You were present, in the late KING's Time, about a Conspiracy for an Insurrection?

Lord Howard. If so, my Lord, then I am called, not to be an Evidence against my Lord Delamere, but, against my Self; that is to repeat what I have often delivered at several Tryals, in the Courts of Justice; and which I must always repeat with Shame and Confusion for my Guilt, as I cannot but always reflect upon it with Sorrow and Horror. But if it be for the Service of his Majesty, and this Honourable Court, for me so to do, I shall endeavour to comply with it, and repeat it as well as I can, by the Assistance of a broken Memory; it being an Account of things done several Years past, and from a Memory interrupted by such Accidents as are very well known, and as have disabled me to make a more distinct and particular Relation before so great an Auditory.

My Lords, I suppose, it will be expected, I should begin my Account with the Occasion and Ground, and the Time when those Things happened.

L. H. Steward. Take your own Method, my Lord.

L. Howard. Truly, my Lord, I am not able to fix the particular Time, unless you will give me leave to reckon the Years by the Sheriffs of London, as the Romans used to do theirs by their Consuls; for I have no other means of computing the exact Time.

L. H. Steward. Pray, my Lord, tell the Times as near as you can, and use what helps for your Memory you think best.

Lord Howard. My Lords, It was in that Year, when Mr. Shute and Mr. Pilkington were Sheriffs for the City of London: And at that time, it is well known how great Heats did arise upon the Contests that were in the City, about Election of Officers for the Year ensuing,——

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Grace, My Lord Delamere seems to be faint with standing: If your Grace please, a Chair may be provided, for my Lord to sit in.

L. H. Steward. Ay, by all means: Let a Chair be provided for my Lord to sit down. Go on, my Lord.

Lord Howard. My Lord, I was saying, that the Contest about the disputed Election of Sheriffs, had occasioned such heats in the City of London, and other Places, that it was even beyond the common expressions of discontent: I knew nothing of any particular Design there was in hand till about six Weeks after, when Captain Walcot came to me, a Person I had known some time before, and upon discourse, acquainted me, that he had found out that there were some Persons engaged in a considerable Action that was near its Execution, and that in order to it, he had had notice given him to make preparation, and thereupon he had thought fit, for that reason, to withdraw from the place where he did at that time lodge, (which was in Red-Lyon Court in Fleet-street, as I remember) and betake himself to a private Lodging, that he might be the readier for Action; and to put himself into a better Equipage for joyning in the Enterprize, he had bought himself a Horse; and sent his Son into Ireland to turn all he could into ready Money, and return it, that he might be the better able to go through with the Underraking. My Lords, this was a great surprize to me; for though I knew, as all the rest of the World did, that there were great discontents, yet, till then, I never had any intimation of any particular design: I told him I was going into the Country, but should be glad to know how things went, and desired him to write to me, and gave him a little Cabala or Cypher to disguise the matter he was to write about: and when I was in the Country, I did receive several Letters which intimated something of a design that was going on, and at last he writ, with some warmth to me, of a necessity we were under to enter into Action; and of the readiness of my Correspondents; (for the Style of the Letters was that of Merchants, for so was the Cant that I had given him): But truly I was not over-hasty in my return to London, because I rather chose to see what would be the issue of what was then projected, before I did intermeddle in such an Affair, and so made use of all the delays I could to retard my return, and came not to Town till that Week which determined the long continued Controversy in London; Nay, and then also avoided meeting with any body in any setway, till I could better see how things were managed, and what event they would probably come to; thereupon I would not go to my own House, but took up my Lodging at Mile-end, and lay there three or four Days, till the Day came for confirming the new elected Sheriffs, and the election of a new Lord Mayor, which, as I take it, is on the day before Michaelmas-day, and Michaelmas-day: When that day was over, I could not find there was any intention of entering into any sort of Action; I found indeed there were great murmurings in the Mouths of all sorts of People, and very angry warm speeches, and nothing else: So I thought the business was over for that time, and thereupon away I went to my own House. This, my Lords, was upon the Saturday as I remember: Upon the Monday Morning, Captain Walcot came to me, and desired that he might have some private discourse with me in my Garden; and there he told me, My Lord Shaftsbury had withdrawn himself, and that he did believe things were in a great Preparation for Action: I desired him to tell me what it was; he answered me, That he desired to be excused in that, for I must go to my Lord Shaftsbury, who would give me an account of the whole; and withall he told me, my Lord Shaftsbury had been much deserted and ill used by those Lords upon whose concurrence he had rely'd, and that was the reason why he had withdrawn himself, and kept himself so private: I told him, I did not know my Lord Shaftsbury had any desire to speak with me; yes he said he had, for he had sent him to me on purpose, and he was to bring back my answer, whether I would joyn or no. I told him, if my Lord desired to speak with me, I would wait upon him, and thereupon I went with him, and he carried me to a place where my Lord Shaftsbury was retired in the City, somewhere about Foster-Lane or Wood-Street, at the house of one Watson: When I came there, after Salutation, my Lord Shaftsbury began to make great reflections upon the misery and badness of the times, particularly upon the issue of that great Affair, the election of the Sheriffs, which had ended so unfortunately to the terror of all good men: For whereas before, the great and sure resort of innocency was to the Integrity of our Juries, when returned by fair and equal Sheriffs, they looked upon the eagerness of getting those Persons sworn that were then in Office to be a design to intrap the innocent, the elected Sheriffs being esteemed persons that would accommodate themselves to the humour of the Court; and now every man must be run down for crimes that he was no way guilty of, if the finger of the Court did but point him out to destruction. The apprehension of this, he said, had made him withdraw himself, not knowing how soon he might be seiz'd, should he have remain'd in publick; and he thought the danger was as imminent upon, and likely to reach to others, as well as to him; and particularly to my self, and therefore, he said, the fence of this danger ought to put every Englishman that had a value for his Country, and any thing that was dear to him in it, upon using his utmost endeavours to give some prevention to those calamities which were impendent over us, and which threatned the destruction of all men that stood up for the rights of the people; and this, he said, was his resolution.

My Lord, In order to this, he declared to me, what Preparations had been made for the Raising of Force for this purpose; he said, there were eight or ten Thousand Men (I cannot fix the particular number) that he was well assured to have ready in the City; That there had been divers Horse (I think about Four-score or an Hundred he named) that about a Fortnight before; had been, by parcels, drawn into the Town, without being observed; and these were in daily expectation to go into Action; but through the unhandsome Disappointment of the Duke of Monmouth, and the other Lords that adhered to him, who were to have joyned in the Action, and have set the Wheels at work in other Parts, he was left alone to do the whole in his Province of London, they being not ready to concur according to their Engagement: But as he should have the greater Danger, so he should have the greater Glory; and he resolved to go through with the Attempt, or Perish in the Execution. To all this Discourse, I gave such an Answer as the nature of the thing required: I told my Lord Shaftsbury, I could not deny all those things to be true, as he had represented them in his Discourse; and that I would not distrust his Judgment so much, as to suppose, he would enter upon such an Affair, without due deliberation of all the Circumstances requisite to it; and so I would not question, but there was such Preparations, and that he had assurance of such a Force, as he had spoke of, whenever they should begin any Action: But I told him something stuck with me, and troubled me very much,

That, in a time of such difficulty, when the convenient Help of the Nation was all little enough to joyn in the Work, he should stand by himself, and engage in such an Enterprize, in Separation from those other Lords, of whose Help there would be so much need: He said, he could not help it, they had appointed this time and that, but now, when it came to the push, they were not ready to do their parts; but the People were now in such expectation of something to be done, especially in London, that it was impossible to restrain them, and as impossible to get those Lords ready to joyn with them: I told him, I was altogether unacquainted with the proceedings in this Affair, and that all of it was wholly new to me: But pray, My Lord, said I, give me leave to act that part in this business, that, I think, will most conduce to the Successful Issue of it, which is, to be a Mediator between You; and let me desire you to let things rest as they are, till I have endeavoured to create a better Understanding between your Lordship, and those Lords, of whose Tergiversation you seem to complain. Upon this, my Lord was in a great heat, and express'd himself with great warmth; but at last, with much ado, he gave me Permission to go to the Duke of Monmouth, and assure him, and the rest of the Lords that were concern'd, and tell them from him, That, if they would be ready to take the Posts that were assign'd them, according to their own former Agreement, and immediately enter upon Action, he would joyn with them; but if not, he was resolved to go on alone. This was, as I remember, upon Tuesday, the Second of October; upon the Wednesday Morning, I went to find out the Duke of Monmouth, but coming to his Lodgings, he was gone to Moor-Park, where, when I came, I found several Persons with him, but after a little time, I separated him from the Company, and whispering to him, I gave him to understand, how great a Disorder I found my Lord Shaftsbury in, and how great a Complaint he made of his being deserted by him, and the other Lords engaged with him, and what Resolution he had taken to set upon the Work alone: "My Lord, says he, I think the Man is Mad, his Fear makes him lose his Understanding; I do not know why he hides himself from his Friends, that no body can tell where he is; but as to that which he speaks of, of our forsaking him, and breach of Faith, he is mistaken; For, 'tis true indeed, we are about doing the Thing, that he is so eager for, but we are not for doing it so hastily, as his Fears precipitate him to do; and he must excuse us, if we comply not with his Humour, to hazard the whole Undertaking by a rash beginning. Upon that, I said to him, My Lord, I shall not discourse the Particularities of the business with your Grace; but this is all that I at present address to your Grace for, to be a means, if I can, with your Grace, as I have been with him, to procure a Meeting between you, that you may settle it with one another. With all my heart, says the Duke, pray let it be so; for, though my Lord Shaftsbury is angry without a cause, yet I would not have him lose himself in a temerarious Undertaking: My Lord, said I, I will tell him what you say, and will see if I can work him to a Compliance with the Proposal. The next day, being Thursday, my Lord, I went to my Lord Shaftsbury again, and reported to him the Discourse course I had with the Duke of Monmouth, and what Answer he had given to his Complaint of their deserting him: He Reply'd, 'It was false, they had positively engaged to be ready by such a time, and had appointed the very Day; but now they were off, and would not tell when they would be ready; and withal, he told me, he greatly suspected the Duke of Monmouth to have a secret Correspondence with the King. I then desired him, That he would please to consent to the Treaty that was proposed, and give the Duke of Monmouth, and the Lords a Meeting; he, in great heat, Replyed, No, he would come no more at them: It is strange, my Lord, said I, that you should have such an Opinion of these Men, that they would go about to betray you; they are not Men of that size: but he persisted in it, that they had dealt perfidiously with him: For, after a positive Agreement, when the Thing was brought just to the Birth, they withdrew their helping-hand; but he was sure, in London, he could Raise a sufficient Force to do the Work, and if he were but once set on Horse-back, he would head them himself: But yet he was willing to put it off for a Fortnight, or three weeks longer, if they would be sure to keep pace with him. With this Proposal I went the next day, which was Friday, to the Duke of Monmouth, and had the same Answer from him, that I had before; but withal, he bid me tell my Lord Shaftsbury, That he did make it his earnest Request to him, to give him, and his other Friends a Meeting before he engaged in this business: For he found by his precipitation, he was about to destroy himself, and all that adhered to him. Thereupon, I came to my Lord Shaftsbury again, upon the Saturday; and when I came there, after a long and importunate urging all the Arguments I could think of; I so far prevailed with him, that he agreed to give them a Meeting, upon condition, that it should be the next day; and because it should be so private, that no notice might be taken of it, he chose to have the Meeting at his own House, where no body would suspect him to be, and whither he would be conveyed, under the Disguise of a Parson. I went back with this Message to the Duke of Monmouth, who did undertake, that the other Lords should be there.

Lord H. Steward. My Lord Howard, not to interrupt you, Did he name those other Lords? If he did, pray acquaint my Lords, who they were?

Lord Howard. My Lord Shaftsbury named my Lord Ruffel, and my Lord Gray, and a great many more that should bear their parts. I went to the Duke of Monmouth, and told him of it, I say, and he engaged, that they should certainly be there: But, upon the Sunday Morning, when I came to the Temple, there I found a Message left for me, That my Lord Shaftsbury had receiv'd an Alarm, That there was some great Tories living near his House in Aldersgate-Street, who were continually Spying about; and so great a Company might make their more than ordinary Observation. That this gave him such a Jealousy, as would not permit him to meet according to his Appointment: Afterwards, I came to a better understanding of the Reason of this; and found there was some fineness in it, which I could not comprehend before; But after this time, I never saw my Lord Shaftsbury, for he removed then to other Lodgings. So that, what I now speak of him, is only what I had, by hear-say, from others: For, I had no knowledge of what pass'd, as to him, but what I had from Capt. Walcot; who told me, That after that, there were several days of Meeting appointed, but still, from time to time, put off; but upon what reason, I cannot particularly remember.

This is all I know of my Lord Shaftsbury; and the latter Part is wholly by Hear-say from Walcot: But by reason of this Agitation, we continued under Expectation till such time as my Lord Shaftsbury went into Holland; where he shortly after died. And truly, I thought, at that time, much of the Design was quashed, and laid aside: But, soon after, Ferguson came over; who, when he came here, began to revive and quicken the Business, and push it on to Execution. I spoke with him at the One Bell in the Strand; and there he gave me an Account of all the Steps that had been taken: He told me what Preparations had been made in the City, in general; what to seize the Gates of the City; what to possess themselves of the Tower; what to attack the Guards; and several other Things, which I can't now so well remember; the Impressions of them being worn out of my Memory, by length of Time, and other Accidents.

This, in general, is all that I can say, as to what was previous to the particular Engagement wherein I was concern'd: For, at last, after many Discourses, the Troubles and Difficulties of the Times increasing, and the Dangers that threatned us, as we thought, growing higher and higher, this gave an Occasion for our uniting Councils, and entering into a kind of Juncto; which, I suppose, is Foreign to this Affair before your Lordships; and therefore, I suppose, would be likewise impertinent for me, to trouble your Lordships with.

L. H. Steward. Mr. Attorney, Do you desire my Lord Howard should give an Account of the other Meetings, and Consultations, at which he was present?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think there will be no need of it; and I am unwilling to take up your Grace's Time, to no purpose.

Lord Howard. As for that Noble Lord at the Bar, I know nothing concerning him.

Lord H. Steward. Then, Gentlemen, Will You have him asked any more Questions?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

Lord H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, Will You ask him any Questions?

Lord Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Before my Lord Howard goes, I would ask him one Question in general, Whether he knew of any Design of a Rising in Cheshire?

Lord Howard. No, my Lord, I knew of none at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we desire my Lord Gray may be sworn.

(Which was done.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Will You give his Grace and my Lords an Account, what You know of any Designs of an Insurrection or Rebellion, when You were beyond Sea, or before? and who were engaged in it?

Lord Gray. My Lord, I am Subpn'd hither on behalf of the King; and I am also Subpn'd on behalf of my Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar. I do not know any thing, that I can speak of my own Knowledge, against the Prisoner; nor have

I any thing to say, that I know of, that will be for his Advantage. But I am here ready to answer such Questions, as shall be ask'd me, either of one side, or the other.

Mr. Attor. Gen. My Lord, the Question I ask you, is, what do you know of any Design of a Rising in Cheshire, and when?

Lord Gray. About the Time of Election of Sheriffs for the City of London; I mean, that memorable Time of the contested Election, which furnished the World with so much Discourse, and was the occasion of such Heats and Animosities: About that time, the Duke of Monmouth, and my Lord of Shaftsbury began to discourse about making use of that, as an Opportunity to accomplish their Design; for they thought the Ferment was so high, that Men would easily be disposed to an Insurrection: and after many Discourses to that purpose, they came to this Resolution, That they would apply themselves to make what Interest they could, to procure a Rising in three several Parts of the Kingdom at once: one in Cheshire, whither the Duke of Monmouth was to betake himself; and there be advised by my Lord Macclesfield, my Lord Brandon, my Lord Delamere that then was, and the Prisoner at the Bar, what Gentlemen were proper to apply to, for joyning in the Design: The second was in London, which was assigned to be the Province of my Lord of Shaftsbury: And the third was, in the West; which was committed to the Care of my Lord Russel. The Duke of Monmouth did accordingly go his Progress into Cheshire, as is very well known; and, upon his Return, was taken into Custody by the Serjeant at Arms: Upon which, Sir Thomas Armstrong was sent Post to Town, to get an Habeas Corpus; and withal, to deliver a Message to me, to be Communicated with my Lord Russel, and my Lord Shaftsbury: Which Message, as near as I remember, was to this Effect; That he had been kindly receiv'd by the Gentlemen of the County; and had discours'd the Matter with them, and found them all inclined very much to his Satisfaction: That upon his being Arrested, he had been advis'd to make his escape into Cheshire, and rise immediately; but that he would not do a Matter of that great Importance, without the Approbation of his Friends. This is all that I know of any thing, that was designed in Cheshire.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, what do you know of any Messages that Captain Matthews or Jones brought over from Holland, and to whom, and from whom?

L. Gray. Sir, I will give the best account I can, upon the sudden, for I am not prepared to give a particular distinct account, in regard I did not know it would be expected from me, nor indeed that it would affect the Prisoner at the Bar.

L. H. Stew. Pray, my Lord, give my Lords the Peers as succinct and particular an account as you can.

L. Gray. My Lord, soon after the late King's Death, the Duke of Monmouth was at Amsterdam with my Lord of Argyle, where there was an account given of the Design that was in hand, of an Insurrection in Scotland, and the Preparations that had been made in order to it; and at that time there came over to Holland Mr. Crag, that came as I was inform'd from Major Wildman, and his Errand was to promote and recommend a Reconciliation between the Duke of Monmouth, and my Lord Argyle, who till that time had acted in separate Interests; and Crag then gave an account that Means and Money were prepared; he had no particular Message to the Duke, because he did not know of meeting him there at that time: The Duke of Monmouth upon this Encouragement, did send Captain Matthews into England, with a Message to Major Wildman, wherein he did desire him that he would procure a Meeting with my Lord Macclesfield, my Lord Brandon, my Lord Delamere, and I think Mr. Charleston, and acquaint them that he had received a full account of my Lord Argyle's Affairs, and the Preparations that had been made for it, and accordingly he had ordered his own Affairs to join with him; he likewise sent Crag with a Message to the same purpose to other Friends in London, and he dispatch'd away one Battescorn into the West, to prepare things there. When Crag return'd back again to the Duke, he gave him an account that Major Wildman had procur'd a Meeting with those Lords and Gentlemen, that I mentioned before, who were all of Opinion, that the Duke of Monmouth should go for Scotland, for they thought that his coming there, would be the best Service he could do the interest at present, and they should know the strength of the Enemy here, by their sending Forces to suppress the Rebellion there. There was likewise a particular Message from Major Wildman to the Duke of Monmouth, That he desired he would bring over with him a Broad Seal to Seal Commissions with, and to take upon him the Title of King; the other particular branches of the Message I do not so well remember, but only this, he was particularly ask'd, whether the Prisoner at the Bar was there, and he said he was,——

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord Gray, will you give an account what you know of Jones's coming over, and what Errand he was sent of?

L. Gray. Jones came some time after Crag return'd, and he gave an account of other things conformable to what Crag had said, and was sent back again to England by the Duke of Monmouth to give an account of his being ready to sail; he gave him also a Letter, the Contents whereof I did not see. I had some short account of it, but whether it were written to any particular Person, I cannot tell; the sum of his Message was, That he would land by that time he could get thither.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord Gray, you had frequent Discourse with the Duke of Monmouth, and so I suppose you can give an account who he kept Correspondence with, and upon whose Assistance he relyed.

L. Gray. I suppose few People will believe we were so weary of our Lives, as to come and throw them away with Threescore, or a very few more Men, (for it was but a very small number we began with) except we had had expectation of good assistance. This I am sure of, by all Discourses with the Duke of Monmouth, he did depend very much upon Cheshire, and was resolv'd to have landed and begun there; but afterwards he considered of it, and thought better to send some sort of excuse for not landing in Cheshire; that the Persons that were to be apply'd to there, being Men of great Quality and Interest in their Country, and able to manage it without his Assistance; but in the West, the Friends he relyed on, were not of that considerable Quality, and therefore he chose to land there.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Lords did he name, that he depended upon?

L. Gray.

L. Gray. I did name them; my Lord Macclesfield, my Lord Brandon, and my Lord Delamere; but I observed when the Duke of Monmouth spoke of his Friends in Cheshire, he did name my Lord Macclesfield, and my Lord Brandon as Persons.

Earl of Nottingham. My Lord Steward, I humbly pray this Witness may be asked, to whom that Letter was written, that he saith the late Duke of Monmouth sent by Jones?

L. H. Steward. You hear my Lord's Question, who did Monmouth send that Letter by Jones to?

L. Gray. My Lord, I never saw the Letter, nor do I know any Directions there were upon it; I always looked upon it as a paper of Instructions given to him about the time when, and the name of the place where the Duke was to land.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will give an account of that by Jones by and by, my Lord. Now swear Nathaniel Wade.

(Which was done.)

Lord H. Stew. Well, what do you ask this Witness?

Mr. Attor. Gen. Wade, That which I call you for, is, this, to give an account what you know of any design of landing in Cheshire, or elsewhere, and of Jones's coming over, and what Errand he was sent upon?

Mr. Wade. My Lord, I shall give an account as far as I know; after the death of the late King, Captain Matthews came to Amsterdam and gave an account there, that the Duke of Monmouth intended to be there shortly to meet and consult with my Lord Argyle, who, we understood, then was preparing for an Expedition into Scotland; thereupon I was sent into Ireland to desire my Lord Argyle to come to Amsterdam, which he did; and there the Duke of Monmouth did consult with him, and they did agree together, that at the same time that my Lord Argyle made an Insurrection in Scotland, the Duke of Monmouth should invade England, and to that end, that he should send to those Friends he had in England, to be ready to assist him when he came there; and in order to it, he did send Captain Matthews, who amongst other things, was to go to the Duke's Friends in Cheshire, and amongst them, my Lord Delamere was named to be one, and the business was to desire them to be ready to assist him when he should land; accordingly Captain Matthews went; but a little after his going away, I think one Crag came over, and he came from Major Wildman, and his business was to endeavour a good understanding between the Duke of Monmouth, and my Lord Argyle, who were then at some Difference; and to endeavour to make them act jointly by united Councils; a little after he was sent back again into England to Major Wildman, to desire him to assist them with some Money; he went back again, and returned, but brought no Money; thereupon he was sent again by the Duke of Monmouth, because the first time he was not sent by him; the Sum demanded was Six Thousand Pounds, or Four Thousand Pounds, and at last he sent for a Thousand Pounds; Crag returned with this Answer, That they could not assist them with Money, for they did not know to what end they should have Money, but to buy Arms, and for that the People were well provided enough already, and there was no need of Money for that purpose. The Duke of Mon- mouth a while after sent Mr. Crag, and pawn'd all the Jewels he had, to raise Money, and fitted out Three Ships for this Service, laden with Ammunition, and because he had promised my Lord Argyle to make a Diversion in England, while he invaded Scotland, he resolved to go with that Provision he had, and desired by Mr. Crag, that since those Lords and Gentlemen that were to assist them, had sent no Money, as was desired of them, and expected from them, they should now trouble themselves with no further needless Consultations; but should repair each Man into his own Country, where their Interest was greatest, to be ready when he should come; and in order to this, the Duke of Monmouth did set sail from Holland, and came to Lyme, and landed there; and did afterwards order his March, so that he might most conveniently meet with his Cheshire Friends; that is, towards Gloucester, and so to get Gloucester Bridge; that thereby gaining the command of the River of Severn, those of Cheshire, if they did, as was expected, make an Insurrection at the same time, they might easily join together. In pursuance of this Design we came to Keinsham Bridge, and there a party of the King's Horse set upon us, and we took some Prisoners, and thereupon thought it advisable not to let the King's Army join together, but to go back and engage those that were already come together, and that was the reason we did not go over the Bridge.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of Jones's coming into Holland, and for what?

Mr. Wade. My Lord, I had forgot that; a little before Crag's going last away, Jones came over, and his Business was to know why we staid so long, for the Duke of Monmouth's Friends in England had expected him long before, and he was dispatch'd away quickly to acquaint them the Duke was coming.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was it he sent to, to acquaint with his coming?

Wade. To Major Wildman, he was directed to Major Wildman.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who else were to be acquainted with it?

Wade. Among the rest, my Lord Delamere, my Lord Macclesfield and my Lord Brandon were to be acquainted that he was coming, and expected that they should raise what Forces they could to assist him.

L. H. Steward. Will my Lord Delamere ask me any Questions?

L. Delamere. No my Lord, I never saw his Face before, that I know of.

L. H. Steward. Who do you go to next, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. Next we call Richard Goodenough; Swear him, (which was done). That which I would know of you, Mr. Goodenough, is, Whether Jones was sent of any Message, and about what?

Goodenough. My Lord, I was beyond Sea with the Duke of Monmouth, and Mr. Jones was sent (among other Persons) to my Lord Delamere to give him notice that he should be ready against the time that the Duke should land, and take care to secure himself, that he might not be seized here in Town, for we were apprehensive such a thing would be attempted.

Mr. Att. Gen. What directions were given him, what Lords to go to?

Goodenough. My Lord, we were informed in Holland, that my Lord Delamere was one of those Lords Lords that had promised to draw his Sword in his behalf.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any discourse with the Duke of Monmouth about it at any time?

Goodenough. Yes, I have discoursed with the Duke of Monmouth several times.

L. H. Steward. Ay, what did he say to you about it?

Goodenough. My Lord, he said (among other things) that he hoped my Lord Delamere would not break his promise with him?

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, will you ask him any Questions?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord. I never saw his Face before, that I know of, I will assure you.

L. H. Steward. That is pretty strange, so famous an Under-Sheriff of London and Middlesex, as he was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then swear Jones, (which was done): Pray will you give an account what Message you received from the Duke of Monmouth upon your going over into Holland, and to whom you were to deliver it, and what became of it?

Jones. My Lord, I went to Holland about the latter end of April last; my going, as I have acquainted his Majesty and the Council, was not only about this Affair, for I had other business that called me thither, which I shall not now take up your time, or trouble you with repeating of; but having some knowledge from Mr. Disney, that there were some intentions of doing something, tho it was communicated to me but very darkly, and therefore that little I did know, made me the willinger to go for Holland so soon as I did; but before I went, I had a mind to understand something more of the design; and therefore the night before I went, I came to Mr. Disney, and acquainted him with my intended Journey; Mr. Disney did perswade me against it, thinking that I had gone upon this account, but I told him the occasion, which he partly knew, why I went; but withal I told him, I did intend to see the Duke of Monmouth, and if he had any Message that he would have delivered to him, I would deliver it very safely; he told me all the Message I should deliver to the Duke of Monmouth, if I saw him, was to desire him to keep to the last Conclusion which he would find in a Letter that had been sent to him, and that if he had not yet received the Letter, it was to come by the Crop-hair'd Merchant, or the Crop-ear'd Merchant, I cannot say which, but I think it was the Crop-hair'd; I asked him what that Message was, lest the Letter should miscarry, for I told him, if I should go to the Duke of Monmouth, and refer him to a Letter wherein a Message was to be brought him, which he was to keep to, and that Letter should miscarry, I should in effect bring no message at all to him; my Lord, thereupon he told me, that I should acquaint the Duke of Monmouth that his Friends in England would not by any means have him come for England, but that he should continue where he was, or if he thought good to go for Scotland, they approved of it; this is the sum of what he said to me, as near as I can remember. When I came to Amsterdam, there was one Mr. _____ that was kill'd at Philips Norton, went with me to the Duke of Monmouth's, and when I came to him, I acquainted him, as Mr. Disney appointed me to do, that there was such a Letter sent by such a person, and that such a Message was included in it; My Lord, he was in a great passion, I know not how to express it, and seemed to be very much troubled, and did reflect very much upon Major Wildman, and said, that was Wildman's work; and he said, (as I think that was the word he used) Wildman was a Villain, or to that purpose; but withal he said it was too late to send such a message now, and that he was resolved to come for England; and he would make Wildman hang with him, or fight for it, with him; that Wildman did think by tying his own purse, he should tye his hand, but he should find it should not be so, and some other words of the like nature, he used; but this is the substance of what he said. He gave some account what preparations had been made, he said Money was very short, and he had been fain to pawn all he had to raise what Money was raised, upon his own charge. He asked me if I did think to return to England shortly; I told him if he had any service to command me for England, I had some little business to do at Rotterdam, which I would dispatch, and then I would perform his Commands; he told me, he would be glad I did return as soon as I could for England, and that this should be the Message I should carry to Wildman in answer to the Message he had sent him, That he would come for England, and he should either fight with him, or hang with him, and that was all he had to say to him. I was coming away from him, but he stopped me, and told me he would not have me go out of Town till he had spoke with me again; this was upon the Sunday; accordingly I did go in the Evening to him, and when I came, he told me, he would have me stay till Tuesday Morning, for he was going out of Town, and intended to be back again at that time, but if not, I should receive from my Lord Gray what he had to say to me. He did not come upon the Tuesday, but my Lord Gray did come, and I think to the best of my remembrance Mr. Gray was with me; he told me all he had to say was, That the Duke intended to be in England within nine days, and that upon the Thursday seven-night after I came away, the Duke would be in England; and he bid me to remember to tell Brand, that when he heard the Duke was landed, he should acquaint Sir Robert Payton with it, but not till he was landed; for tho' they did think that he would join with them when the thing was begun, yet they ought to be careful who it was communicated to, for fear it should be discovered and disappointed; this was all that I had in command from my Lord Gray. I came to Rotterdam, and dispatch'd my business there, and would have come away, but it happened there were no Ships coming for England, nor would there be any in a Fortnights time; thereupon I returned to Amsterdam; when I came back, I went to see the Duke to give him an account how it happened that I was not gone for England; the Duke told me he was glad I was not gone; for now he had a further Message for me to carry, and he would have me stay two or three Days in Town for it; I stay'd three Days, and came again to him, but he told me he was not ready for me yet; then I stayed two or three Days longer till the 21st of May, to the best of my remembrance; it was upon a Thursday that he gave me the Message that I was to bring into England; I came to him in the Morning, and he told me I should come to him upon the Evening of that Day, and when I came, there there was a Paper lay before him on the Table, and he took the Paper and seal'd it up, I cannot say he wrote all that was in that Paper, but the Paper that lay before him was not finished when I came in, and that he did not write, while I was there, I am sure; but he took it up and sealed it before me, and when he had sealed the Paper, he told me, I must as soon as I came to London, see for Captain Matthews, Sir Thomas Armstrong's Son in Law, who lodged at Mr. Blake's in Covent-Garden, and desire him to acquaint my Lord Macclesfield, my Lord Brandon, and my Lord Delamere with his design of coming for England, and that he was resolved to set out upon the Saturday Morning after I came away, which was upon the Friday; he told me Captain Matthews was to send one Post to that place that was named in the Note to receive Intelligence of his landing, and that should be brought to his Friends here immediately (he designed should be twenty four Hours before the Court had notice of it in Town,) and those Lords were to be in readiness, that as soon as they knew he was landed, they might repair to their several Posts to assist him. I told him that I would deliver what Message he gave me, and asked him, what I was to do with the Paper he put in to my hands; thereupon, as near as I remember, he used these Expressions to me, I do by you, as Princes do by their Admirals, when they send them out upon any considerable Expedition, which requires Secrecy in the Management of it, they have their Commission delivered to them sealed, which they are not to break open till they are at Sea. So here I deliver you your Instructions sealed up, which you are not to open till you are at Sea; and when you have opened them, and read what is contained in them, I would have you tear the Paper, and throw it into the Sea, or otherwise dispose of it, lest you be surprized and searched at your landing, and my Papers found about you. My Lord, I asked him, because I would be as punctual in my Message as I could, what those Lords were to do when they came out of Town, whether they should come directly to him or no; he told me no, nor that, but they should go into the Country, and secure their Interest for him there. I ask'd him then, if Captain Matthews be out of the way, and I be disappointed of meeting with him, shall I deliver this Message to the Lords my self; he told me no, by no means, for those Lords were Persons of Quality, and that that was not a thing to be done by me; What shall I then do, my Lord, said I, if Captain Matthews be out of the way? You need not question that, saith he, but if you meet not with Matthews, speak to Wildman.

My Lord, with these Instructions (and this as near as I can remember is the Sum of all he said to me) I came away, and came to Sea; when I was out at Sea, I broke open the Letter that I had given me by the Duke, and I will tell you as near as I can, what were the Contents of it; there was written in it to this Effect:

TAUNTON in Somersetshire is the place to which all are to resort; the Persons to be acquainted with the time of landing, are the Lord Macclesfield, the Lord Brandon, and the Lord Delamere; the place to send the Coach to, is to Taunton, to Mr. Savage's House at the Red-Lyon; the place where the Post was appointed to return, was Captain Matthews's Lodging, at Mr. Blake's, and he was to receive the Message, or if he did not, he was to appoint one that should receive it; or if it were to return to any other place, that was left to him to do as he thought fit.

And this was all, as near as I can remember; when I had seen this, I came to London, and being very weary and tired, when I came home, I went to Bed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray tell the Court as near as you can, what day it was you came?

Jones. I came out of Holland the 22d of May, I came home the 27th, and looking upon my Almanack, I find that it was the Wednesday Fort-night before the Duke landed, that I came; when I was come home, I sent for Mr. Disney, and he came to me immediately; I told him I had seen the Duke, and desired that he would help me to the Speech of Captain Matthews; he told me he was out of Town; then I desired to speak with Major Wildman, he told me he was gone out of Town too; then I told him I must deliver my Message to him, and I told this Message as I have told your Lordships before, and therefore left it to him to convey it to the Knowledge of those Lords that were concerned; he did seem to be unwilling, and told me he did not know how to communicate it to those Lords, and asked me why I would not deliver the Message my self; I told him I did ask the Duke of Monmouth that very Question, whether I might, and he had forbid me, and ordered me to deliver it either to Captain Matthews, or to Major Wildman; and since they were absent, I knew not any to communicate it to, but only to him, in order to their having notice of it. He told me he would do what he could.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray who were present when you had this Discourse with Disney?

Jones. There was none present but himself then, for it was the first time that I spoke with him after I came from Holland; I told him there was a Post to go to receive Intelligence, which should bring notice of his landing 24 Hours before it could be known at Whitehall, and therefore it were fit they should be in a readiness; he did scruple at it, and said he did not know where to get any one that could convey the Message to them, but he would do what he could; and concluded to meet at night in Smithfield, and he did so, and there were two Persons with him, Mr. Crag, and Mr. Lisle, and another, I think his name was Brand, and he took me and Brand aside, and did ask me where was the place that the Post was to go; I told him where, and then he did discourse of the Dukes coming over, but I mentioned not any thing of the Lords, but only to Disney; and after an Hours talk or thereabouts, we parted. I saw Mr. Disney once afterwards, but what he did with the Message I cannot tell, he gave me no account of it; I did indeed before I went out of Town see him at the Half-Moon Tavern in

I went out of Town, and met the Duke of Monmouth at Lyme where he landed, and when I came to him, I told him what I had done with my Message, and how it happened that I could not deliver it to the Persons that he had ordered; the Duke told me he was satisfied that I had done what I could, but seemed to be troubled that Matthews was out of Town. And this is the Sum of what passed in my Knowledge as near as I can remember:

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you no Discourse with Disney what he had done with the Message, when you met at Smithfield?

Jones. No, because those Men were Strangers to me, and I had never seen them before.

Mr. Att. Gen. But afterwards had you no discourse with Brand nor Lisle about it?

Jones. No, not at all: Brand I never spoke but once with, and Lisle would not own that he was the Man that was there.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Questions to ask him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, will your Lordship ask him any Questions?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord, I never saw his Face before this time, that I know of, in my Life.

L. H. Steward. Then who do you call next, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Witness that we call, my Lord, is Story.

(Who was sworn).

L. H. Steward. Well, what do you ask him?

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Story, pray will you give an account what notice you had of Jones's Message, and what was done upon it, and what Discourse you had with any body concerning my Lord Delamere, the Prisoner at the Bar, and with whom?

Story. My Lord, I had notice of it by one — that lived at Bishopsgate, who told me the 28th of May last, that Mr. Jones was returned home from Holland upon a Message from the Duke of Monmouth, and that he had agreed to go to Taunton, and there he expected Mr. Dare or Mr. Williams to bring an account that the Duke was landed; and he said that Mr. Jones's Message was delivered to Disney, in the absence of Captain Matthews, who was out of Town; that after Disney had receiv'd the Message from Jones, he went and had some discourse with my Lord Delamere, and that that night my Lord Delamere went out of Town with two Friends, and went a by-way through Enfield Chase, towards Hatfield.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray when was it you went out of Town, Story?

Story. The 28th of May.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who went out of Town with you?

Story. No body, but I overtook Mr. Brand that Evening.

L. H. Steward. Pray repeat what it was he acquainted you with?

Story. He told me that the day before, Jones was returned home with a Message from Holland, which Message was to be delivered to Captain Matthews, but in his absence Disney received it, and that Evening after he had discoursed with my Lord Delamere, my Lord that night went out of Town, and two Friends of mine he said went with him, and did convey him away by a by-way through Enfield Chase towards Hatfield.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Questions to ask him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, had you any discourse with the late Duke of Monmouth at Shepton Mallet? and about what?

L. H. Steward. By the way, Friend, where is that Brand that you speak of?

Story. He is kill'd; I did not see him dye, but he is said to be kill'd at Keinsham Bridge.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what discourse had you with the late Duke of Monmouth about the Prisoner at the Bar?

Story. I heard the late Duke of Monmouth say at Shepton Mallet, that his great Dependance was upon my Lord Delamere and his Friends in Cheshire, but he was afraid they had failed him, or betray'd him or some such word he used; and he said he could have been supplyd otherwise but that he had a dependance upon them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what Office had you under the Duke of Monmouth?

Story. I was Commissary General.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, we have done with you.

L. H. Steward. Will you ask him any Questions, my Lord Delamere?

L. Delamere. If your Grace please, I have a Question to ask him.

L. H. Steward. Ay, with all my Heart; what Question you will, my Lord.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I desire to know whether he knows one Saxon.

L. H. Steward. What Saxon does your Lordship mean, one that was in the Army?

L. Delamere. Yes, one Thomas Saxon.

Story. Yes, my Lord, I knew him a Prisoner in Dorchester Prison, where I was a Prisoner my self.

L. H. Steward. Has your Lordship nothing more to ask him but that?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, my Lord, we call some Persons to prove, that that very night when Jones came to Town, my Lord Delamere the Prisoner at the Bar goes out of Town without any Servant, changes his Name, and goes a by-way: Swear Vaux and Edlin.

Vaux was sworn.

L. H. Steward. Well, what says this Man?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give my Lords an account whether you went out of Town with my Lord Delamere, and when?

Vaux. My Lord, perhaps I may not remember the very words that I gave my Evidence in before, but I will repeat the Substance.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is not so long ago, but you may easily recollect your self; pray what day was it that my Lord Delamere sent for you?

Vaux. The 26th day of May, and I went out of Town the 27th.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are upon your Oath, and you must remember you are sworn to tell the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Vaux. Sir, I shall take care to do it as far as I can remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither was it that he sent for you?

Vaux. To the Rummer Tavern in Queenstreet, and the next day I went out of Town with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What day of the Month did you go out of Town?

Vaux. It was the 27th day of May.

Mr. Att. Gen. What time of the night was it you went out of London?

Vaux. It was about nine or ten of the Clock.

Mr. Att. Gen. What name did my Lord Delamere then go by?

Vaux. He went by the name of Brown.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would acquaint your your Grace, that this is an unwilling Witness, and we are forc'd to pump all out of him by Questions?

Vaux. I do tell you the truth of all that I know.

Mr. Att. Gen. How far did you ride that night?

Vaux. To Hoddesden.

Mr. Att. Gen. What time did you get thither?

Vaux. About twelve of the Clock.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither did you go then?

Vaux. We went to Hitchen, and I return'd back again the next day.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither was my Lord Delamere going then?

Vaux. To see his Son that was sick in the Country.

L. H. Steward. What? he told you so, did he?

Vaux. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. What other Company went with you?

Vaux. Two Gentlemen, the one I knew, th' other I did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the name of him you did know?

Vaux. It was Edlin.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray was that the direct Road to Cheshire that you went?

Vaux. We made it our way.

Mr. Att. Gen. You made it your way; but I ask you whether it be the best way?

Vaux. It is the freest Road from dust.

Mr. Att. Gen. But I ask you a plain Question, upon your Oath is it the best way into Cheshire?

Vaux. Truly, my Lord, I do not know that.

L. H. Steward. Pray who gave you Directions to call my Lord Delamere by the name of Brown?

Vaux. Himself, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Was that the first time my Lord went by that name, as you know of?

Vaux. Yes, my Lord, I never heard that he was called by that name till that time.

L. Delamere. I was called by the name of Brown at that time, and I will give your Grace an account by and by of the reason of it.

L. H. Steward. Has your Lordship any Question to ask him?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Then go on to the next.

Mr. Att. Gen. Our next Witness is Edlin, pray swear him (which was done). Pray will you give my Lords and the Court an account whither you went with my Lord Delamere out of Town, and when?

Edlin. The 27th of May last, I was at the Custom-House, and there came Mr. Vaux, the Gentleman that was here last, who told me he was going out of Town as far as Hitchen, and asked me to go along with him; he said he was to go that Evening; I asked him what time he intended to return? he told me he was resolved to return the next day. I told him, then I would go along with him, and we appointed the place of meeting to be at the Bell-Inn in Coleman-street; when I came there, he said there was a Friend that was going along with him, one Mr. Brown, we went as far as Hoddesden that night.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Edlin, will you look upon that Gentleman that stands at the Bar; is that he that went by the name of Brown?

Edlin. Yes, my Lord, that is he.

Vol. III.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well then, what time did you set out?

Edlin. It was very near nine of the Clock.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray when was it that Vaux met you at the Custom-House?

Edlin. It was about ten of the Clock in the Morning.

L. H. Steward. Pray did you hear or know upon the Road, whither he was going?

Edlin. My Lord, I did never see my Lord Delamere before in my life.

L. H. Steward. But did not he tell you as he went along, whither he was going?

Edlin. He said he was going for Cheshire to see a sick Child.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say, Sir, that you went first for Hoddesden?

Edlin. We did so, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, how long were you riding that, from the Bell in Coleman-street to Hoddesden?

Edlin. It was three Hours I believe, or about three Hours and a half.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then you rid hard out of Town.

Edlin. My Lord, it was towards nine of the Clock when we got on Horse-back, and it was about twelve or a little more, when we came to Hoddesden.

L. H. Steward. Well, Mr. Attorney, is that all you have to ask him?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Will you ask him any Questions, my Lord Delamere?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, to confirm this Evidence, and to explain it, I shall call you a couple of Witnesses to prove that this Gentleman went by the name of Brown in the Cant of those that were engaged in this Business, that the name was known as his name by all the Party, and called so constantly in their Letters and Messages; swear Tracey Pounceford, and Thomas Babington. (which was done)

L. H. Steward. Which will you begin with first?

Mr. Att. Gen. We begin with Pounceford; Pray will you give his Grace and these Lords an account what discourse you heard at Disney's concerning the Prisoner at the Bar, and what name was he usually called by, in your Meetings?

Pounceford. My Lord, I shall give as just an account as I can; I was acquainted with Mr. Disney, and the 14th of June I was at his House--

L. H. Steward. What June do you mean?

Pounceford. Last June, my Lord, and there were three more besides, one Joshua Lock, and a Country Gentleman that I have understood since to be one Hooper, and there was one Halfey; and being there, Lock staid for some Declarations.

L. H. Steward. What Declarations were those you speak of?

Pounceford. The Declarations of the late Duke of Monmouth.

L. H. Steward. Were they printed at that time?

Pounceford. They were not ready at four of the Clock in the Afternoon; but about nine of the Clock they were finished, and three were printed off, and were delivered to Joshua Lock, and when he had received them at that time, there

R r r r

there was a discourse of having them sent into Cheeshire to one Mr. Brown; after we had received them, we came over the Water together, and we landed at Salisbury Stairs, and Lock was very earnest for going out of Town that night, with those three Declarations, which, as he said, were to be carried to one Mr. Brown: This was at nine of the Clock, and so we parted.

L. H. Steward. Pray into what Country was he to carry them?

Paunceford. A little way out of Town, he said.

L. H. Steward. Just now you said they were to go to Cheeshire.

Paunceford. My Lord, the discourse at Disney's House was, that they were to be sent into Cheeshire, but when we came over the Water, Lock said he was to go a little out of Town to one Mr. Brown.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray who was that Mr. Brown as they meant, as you apprehended?

Paunceford. I understood Mr. Brown to be my Lord Delamere by some discourse.

L. H. Steward. Whose discourse did you understand it by?

Paunceford. The first time my Lord, that I heard of my Lord Delamere's going by the name of Brown, was upon a discourse with one Edlin.

L. H. Steward. Pristhee tell us what that discourse thou hadst with Edlin, was.

Paunceford. Mr. Edlin, about the latter end of May last, went out of Town, as I heard, and when he came back again, I asked him whicher he went? he said he was invited by a Friend to go with him out of Town, and my Lord Delamere went along with them, and went by the name of Brown.

Mr. Att. Gen. What discourse had you with Disney, or any body else about my Lord Delamere's going by the name of Brown?

Paunceford. Mr. Disney did use to mention my Lord Delamere by the name of Brown.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Pray were you at any Meeting with any body, and whom, at any Tavern, and what Tavern where any such discourse was had?

Paunceford. My Lord, I was at a Meeting at the Castle-Tavern with Mr. Vermuyden, and my Brother Babington, and one Manning, but there was no mention then of any Brown that I remember, nor of my Lord Delamere, but only there was something in relation to the landing of the Duke of Monmouth; the Question was asked where he was to land, and Mr. Vermuyden made answer he did not know.

L. H. Steward. Will your Lordship please to ask this Witness any Questions, my Lord?

L. Delamere. Pray, Sir, did you ever know any body else that went by the name of Brown besides me?

Paunceford. May I answer this Question, my Lord?

L. H. Steward. Answer it, yes you must, you are sworn to tell the Truth, and the whole Truth, Man.

Paunceford. My Lord, there was a discourse of Mr. Vermuyden's going by the name of Brown.

L. H. Steward. Will you ask him any more Questions, my Lord?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Then go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Babington, do you tell my Lords what you know of my Lord Delamere's going by the name of Brown?

Babington. My Lord, I shall give an account. When I first knew any thing of the Transactions, I was with my Brother Paunceford, Mr. Vermuyden, and one Chadwick that went into the West, and there was a discourse of two Gentlemen that went by names I did not know; Brown was one, and I was desirous to know who was meant by it; I was at that time but newly acquainted with the Concerns of these People; and so I found they were fearful to entrust me; but afterwards I was at the Castle-Tavern where my Brother, and my Uncle Vermuyden was, and in discourse of Mr. Brown, some body happened to name my Lord Delamere's name, but he was presently taken up, you mean Mr. Brown; ay, faith he, I do.

L. H. Steward. About what time was this, pray you?

Babington. About the middle or latter end of May last.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you at Disney's when the Declarations were printed there?

Babington. Mr. Attorney, I will give an account of that afterwards, but I have something else to say first; After this, I was diligent to know of my Uncle Vermuyden and my Brother, who this Mr. Brown was; my Uncle told me it was my Lord Delamere, and desired me whenever I discoursed of him, to call him by that name, and I have very good reason to believe Mr. Vermuyden knew of the matter, because he was acquainted with a great many of that sort of People, and declared he had collected and knew of Moneys that were gathered for that Purpose; and he had a good account of Monmouth's landing, and of the Force he had in the West, and how long it was presumed that he could maintain that Force without Assistance from any body else, and so I presume he was very well acquainted with the whole Transaction: Afterwards I happened to be at Disney's over the Water, there was my Brother Paunceford, Mr. Halfey, and my self.

Mr. Att. Gen. Tell what passed there at that time.

Babington. Disney shew'd me a Declaration that was not perfected quite, but after that we fell into a discourse about Mr. Brown, and afterwards my Lord Delamere's name was named by some body, that some of the Declarations were to be sent to him, and I remember Mr. Disney said he was afraid my Lord Delamere was not capable of doing that Service that was expected from him in Cheeshire for want of some of those Declarations, which would be mighty useful to him to inform the People, they being Monmouth's Declarations.

L. H. Steward. Had Lock any of those Declarations away for that Mr. Brown you speak of?

Babington. I never knew Lock, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. What number of Declarations did Disney print?

Babington. Disney told us he hoped in twenty-four Hours to have 500 printed, a good number of them were to be sent to my Lord Delamere, and several of them were dispersed.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Questions to ask him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Will you ask him any Questions, my Lord Delamere?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then may it please your Grace, the next Witness we shall bring, shall be to prove that my Lord Delamere took frequent Journeys backward and forward in a very little compass of time, and the same Witness will likewise tell you what Discourse he had with my Lord during the very time of Monmouth's Rebellion, to stir up the People to joyn with him. Swear Hope, (which was done). Pray tell my Lords what discourse you had with my Lord Delamere, and when?

Hope. Upon the Sunday before the Coronation, my Lord Delamere came down Post to my House, towards his own House in Cheshire—

L. H. Steward. Prithee where is thy House? for these Noble Lords do not know thee, perhaps so well as I do, therefore tell us where it is.

Hope. My Lord, my House is at the Three Tuns in Coventry.

L. H. Steward. Well, go on, tell what thou knowest.

Hope.—Some time after that he came down Post again, and a little after he went up again Post, and he told me he went down another way; and after that, the 21st of June, he came down Post again, this was upon a Sunday, the Sunday Seven-night after the Duke of Monmouth landed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had he any Servant with him at that time?

Hope. Yes, he had.

L. H. Steward. Had he a Servant with him every time he came down Post?

Hope. No, he came over I remember, without any Servant, only with a Post-Boy.

L. H. Steward. Well, and what discourse had you with him at that, or at any other time?

Hope. My Lord, that Sunday the 21st of June, my House was very full of People to enquire News, it being in the time of the Rebellion, every one was desirous to know how things went; and there was one Ingram in the House, that came to me, and asked what News from London, for they say, saith he, that the Duke of Albemarle is killed, and his Hearse brought to Westminster Abby; thereupon I knowing my Lord Delamere was come from London, I went into the Room to my Lord, and desired to know of his Lordship what was the News in London; he told me he was little at Court, and therefore could not tell much News; I then asked him what he heard concerning the Duke of Albemarle; said I, they say here he is killed; saith my Lord, I am sorry for it, if it be so, but I fear it is too true; but if he be killed, it is said he is killed by his own Party; I asked him how? He told me a Party of the Duke of Albemarle's Men were commanded to fire at the Duke of Monmouth's Men, but instead of shooting at them, they shot into the Ground, upon which they were very severely handled by their Officers, which so enraged them, that they fired upon them, and killed several of them, and amongst others, the Duke of Albemarle was killed; and he told me the Duke of Monmouth had several Field Pieces, and Arms sufficient for near 30000 Men.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, did he shew you any Places in any Maps?

Hope. There was in the Room Adams's Map of England, and my Lord Delamere shewed me which way Monmouth went, and pointed out such and such Towns that he was possessed of, and withal said, he did fear there would be many bloody Noses before the Business was at an end.

Mr. Att. General. How many times do you think my Lord did ride post to and fro?

Hope. About five times I believe.

L. H. Steward. Within what space of time?

Hope. From the Sunday Sev'night before the Coronation to the Twenty first of June following.

L. H. Steward. Have you done with him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. General. Yes, my Lord.

L. Delamere. My Lord High Steward, with your Grace's leave, may I ask this Witness any Questions?

L. H. Steward. Yes, my Lord, what you please.

L. Delamere. Pray, Did I go down post four or five times, do you say in that space?

Hope. My Lord, I say you did go so often backward and forward.

L. Delamere. What time was that, you say, I came without any Servant, only with a Post-boy?

Hope. I cannot tell.

L. H. Steward. Will your Lordship ask him any more Questions?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. General. Then, my Lord, we desire Thomas Saxon may be sworn (which was done) Pray, Mr. Saxon, will you give an account to his Grace, and my Lords, what you know of my Lord Delamere, the Prisoner at the Bar, concerning any Insurrection or Rebellion designed by him in Cheshire, and when?

Saxon. At the beginning of June last, I was sent for to Mere, my Lord Delamere's House in Cheshire, where when I came I was conveyed into a lower Room, where were my Lord Delamere, Sir Robert Cotton and Mr. Crew Offceys, and they told me I was recommended to them by my Lord Brandon, who had said, I was an honest useful man, and they hoped I would prove so: For they had sent to the Duke of Monmouth, who was in Holland, and received an answer by one Jones, and as soon as they had an answer, my Lord Delamere came away post into the Country under another Name, and by being conveyed through Morefields, came down to raise Ten thousand men for the Duke of Monmouth in Cheshire, by the first of June; but now they had considered of it, and found they could not raise them till Midsummer, for they must have time to raise a Sum of money, forty thousand pounds in that Country to maintain the men: They asked me, whether I would not undertake to carry a Message to the Duke of Monmouth, I told them I would, and I had there given me eleven Guineas, and five pounds in Silver for my Journey, and I did hire a Horse afterwards, and did deliver my Message to the Duke of Monmouth.

L. H. Steward. When was this do you say?

Saxon. This was the beginning of June.

L. H. Steward. What day of June?

Saxon. I cannot tell to a day, what day in June it was, for I did not set it down; but I believe it was the third or fourth of June.

L. H. Steward. How came you to be recommended by my Lord Brandon to these Gentlemen: Were you acquainted with my Lord Brandon?

Saxon. I was acquainted with him: The first time I was with him was at Over, the next time was at my Lord's own House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, pray tell my Lord, how you came acquainted with my Lord Brandon?

Saxon. Upon the Monday in Easter Week last, being at Over, I was sent for by my Lord Brandon to drink a glass of Ale, and smoke a pipe of Tobacco with him, and when I came thither, my Lord told me he had a desire to be acquainted with me; so we drank a considerable while; and he was attended at that time with one Hollingshead, and one Mr. Lee; and after we had drank pretty smartly, and after some discourse, Lee and Hollingshead went forth, being called out to speak with some body, about an Estate or a Tenement that they were concerned in: After they were gone out, my Lord Brandon began to discourse about the Elections of Parliament-men, how unfairly they had been carried; he said, he stood both for the Town and County of Lancaster, but had lost it by an unfair Election; for the other Party had made Seventy-score Freemen in one night in the Town; and by that means had carried it against him; which had exasperated the Country so much, that they were resolved to make it an occasion of raising up the Country in Arms, under pretence of maintaining the Christian English Liberties; and that they had a design to send for the Duke of Monmouth, and make him King; and that they must make use of such men as me, that were men of Interest in the Country, to stir up the People to rise in Arms; and if I would come to Gosworth, his House, upon the Monday after, he would tell me more of that Business: I went according to the time, and there he told me a great deal to the same purpose, and withal he shewed me a Letter that he had written to the Duke of Monmouth; which Letter I afterwards saw at Bridgewater.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Questions to ask him?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord; But if my Lord Delamere please to ask him any Questions, he may.

L. Delamere. I humbly pray he may repeat the Evidence he hath given against me, for I have not heard what he has said.

L. H. Steward. Turn toward my Lord Delamere, and repeat the Evidence that you gave against him, so as he may hear you: Which he did to the same effect, as before,

L. H. Steward. Pray, from whom did you receive that money?

Saxon. I received it from my Lord Delamere.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, will you ask him any Questions?

L. Delamere. Yes, may it please your Grace.

L. H. Steward. Then the Method you are to take, is this, you must propound your Questions to me, and then I will propound them to the Witness?

L. Delamere. I desire to know, may it please your Grace, when was the first time that he declared this that he has now sworn against me.

L. H. Steward. My Lord desires to know of you, when it was that you first made known this against him?

L. Delamere. And to whom, my Lord?

Saxon. I suppose I told Mr. Storey of it first, my Lord, at Dorchester after I was taken Prisoner for the Rebellion.

L. Delamere. When did he tell it Storey, my Lord?

Saxon. I think it was a Fortnight after my acquaintance with him.

L. H. Steward. Were you then in the same Prison with Storey?

Saxon. Yes, I lay with him in the same Bed.

L. Delamere. If your Grace please, I would ask him another Question.

L. H. Steward. Ay, what you will.

L. Delamere. I desire to know, when was the first time that he made Oath of this, and upon what occasion it was?

L. H. Steward. What say you to that?

Saxon. The first time I made Oath of it, was when I lay sick.

L. Delamere. Will your Grace please to ask him, where that was, and when?

Saxon. It was before His Majesty's Counsellors, that were sent to take my Examination in Newgate.

L. H. Steward. Prithee, I do not know when thou camest to Newgate, it may be thou hast been there oftner than once.

Saxon. I gave my first Information immediately after I was brought to Town; when I was removed from Dorchester Goal to Newgate.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I desire your Grace would ask him what time he came up?

Saxon. The beginning of the last Term.

L. Delamere. Then I desire to know, my Lord, whether he did remain a Prisoner in the Country all the other time?

Saxon. Yes, I did so, from the Tenth of July, till the time that I was brought up to Newgate.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I desire to know of him, whether I had ever employed him about any of my Concerns, that should give me an occasion of trusting him with such Secrets?

L. H. Steward. What Business of Importance had my Lord Delamere ever employ'd you about before this time?

Saxon. I was never employed about any Concerns of my Lord Delamere's before that time, neither was I ever in his Company, but only then, and then as recommended by him to him; for they said, they must make use of such as me to make their Designs known to the Country, for the accomplishing what they did intend.

L. Delamere. Recommended by him, who does he mean?

Saxon. By my Lord Brandon.

L. Delamere. If your Grace please, I desire to know what the Business was that he was to do?

Saxon. I was to inform the Country concerning the time of the Rising, my Acquaintance abounded that way, and by their Discourse they had got Men in every Place to acquaint the Country when they should rise.

L. H. Steward. Were you acquainted with any great Number?

Saxon. My Lord, I was a publick Tradesman in Middlewich, and much acquainted with the ordinary sort of People.

L. Delamere. My Lord, he says he was sent for to my House, I desire to know who was the Messenger that was sent for him?

Saxon.

Saxon. My Lord, I did ask him his name, but he would not tell it me; he told me he was but a Tenant to my Lord Delamere; and had been employed in such Busineses for my Lord Delamere's Father, Sir George Booth, he was a lame Man in one Arm, for he had his Hand shot away at the Siege of Nantwich.

L. Delamere. It was Tom Long the Carrier, I suppose, or some such Fellow or other, that I sent for him; My Lord, I desire to know what time of Day or Night was it when he came to my House?

Saxon. It was just when it began to be Dark, the Messenger came to me in the Afternoon to fetch me thither, and I sent for a Man's Horse that lived near me, and when it was brought me, he asked me what made me go so late, I told him I had occasion to go late, and I should return late, and the Man stayed at my House for his Horse till it was late: but I not coming home, he left order for his Horse to be brought to him.

L. Delamere. Next my Lord, I desire to know when he came to my House, whether he did alight from his Horse at the Stables that belong to the House or no?

Saxon. I did alight just at the Old Buildings, and the Man's Horse that came with me and mine were taken into the Stables.

L. Delamere. Pray, my Lord, ask him who took his Horse from him?

Saxon. The Man that came with me, and he went into the House and brought out a Candle.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I would ask him whether the Door he was let in at was that which was nearest the Stable, or which Door?

L. H. Steward. Do you know what Door of the House you were let in at?

L. Delamere. My Lord, I ask him whether it were the next Door to the Stable?

Saxon. My Lord, I cannot very well give an account of that, for I never was at the House before.

L. Delamere. Pray, my Lord, let him recollect himself, whether it were the Door next the Stable or not.

L. H. Steward. Ay, with all my Heart, if he can.

Saxon. I did not see any other Door but that I came in at, and therefore I cannot tell which Door it was.

L. Delamere. These Questions, my Lord, I take to be proper for me to ask, and I believe I shall make it appear to your Grace to be so by and by.

L. H. Steward. Good my Lord, take your full Liberty, and ask what Questions you please; for I know my Lords here will be very well pleased that you have all the Scope allowed you that can be.

L. Delamere. I humbly thank your Grace, I desire to know of him, who let him into the House?

Saxon. The Man that came with me went with me just to the Door, and let me in within the Door, and I saw no other Man but that Man, till I came into the Room where my Lord and those two Gentlemen were.

L. Delamere. Was there no body else but we there?

Saxon. No, you were so wise, you would let no body be by.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I shall trouble this Witness no farther at present.

L. H. Steward. Then Mr. Attorney General, will you proceed?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we shall give no more Evidence at present, but shall rest here till we see what Defence this Noble Lord will make for himself.

L. H. Steward. Then, my Lord Delamere, your time is now come to make your Defence, you have heard what has been Evidenced against you, and my Lords now expect to hear what you have to say for your self.

L. Delamere. May it please your Grace, a great part of the Day is spent, and I would beg the Favour of your Grace, that I may have the Favour till to morrow Morning to review the Notes I have taken, and then I shall make my Defence.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I had this very thing in my Thoughts before I came hither this Day, because I did foresee that this was likely to be a long Cause, and the proceeding in it would take up much time: I have a little doubt, I must needs say, in my own Mind, whether it may be done by Law; I know very well, if this were a Tryal in full Parliament, there have been Precedents to warrant the Adjournment till another Day, though it be in the midst of a Tryal; and in the middle of the Evidence: But this Court I take to be of the same nature, though of a degree higher, with the other ordinary Courts of Judicature; and whether it be not obliged and tied up to the same Method of Proceedings with those other Courts, where all Capital Offences are Tried, is a thing I am in some doubt about: In those Courts it has not been usual to Adjourn the Court after Evidence given; nay, it has been sometimes a Question, whether the Judges in those Courts, after the Jury are gone from the Bar, to consider of their Verdict, could Adjourn themselves: I say, the Judges have sometimes made a Doubt of it, though I know, the Point is now settled, and the Practice is, that they may, and do: But this is most certain, after the Evidence given, the Jury cannot be Adjourned, but must proceed in their Enquiry, and be kept together till they are agreed of their Verdict; this has caused some Hesitancy in me, what the Law may be in this Case; therefore I think it may be proper to consult with my Lords the Judges; for I desire the thing may be considered and settled.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I humbly beg this Favour of your Grace, but to Adjourn till to morrow.

L. H. Steward. With all my Heart, my Lord, if it may be done by Law.

L. Delamere. I hope it may, my Lord, and I beg that Favour of your Grace.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I should be very glad to comply with your Lordship's Desires, but truly I have considered it, and do doubt whether I can by Law do it: In full Parliament it is clear it may be done, but upon this Commission, after my Lords the Peers are once charged, and the Evidence partly given, whether I can then Adjourn them till another Day, is with me a Doubt: My Lords, if your Lordships please, before such time as my Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, enters upon his Defence, I will with your leave propound the Question to my

Lords

Lords the Judges, and hear their Opinion what the Law is.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I shall hardly be able to finish all I have to say in any convenient time this Day.

L. H. Steward. But, my Lord, if an Adjournment cannot be by Law, I cannot help it.

L. Delamere. There has a great deal been said, and it will require a great deal of time to give it an Answer.

L. H. Steward. Ay, but if it cannot be done as you would have it, we must be contented to stay the longer together; for I would not abridge you of your Defence; therefore, my Lords the Judges, if you will please to go together and consider of it, and report your Opinions, what the Law is in this Case, and we will stay till you come again.

Then the Judges withdrew into the Exchequer Chamber.

E. Nottingham. My Lord High Steward, I do humbly conceive this is a Matter that concerns the Privilege of the Peers, and because it is a matter that doth so much concern the whole Peerage; I think my Lords here ought in some measure to concern themselves about it: Therefore, my Lord, I have a short Motion to make to your Grace, that, considering the Consequence that the Precedent of this Case may draw with it, since my Lords the Judges are gone together to consult of this Point, of which, I may say, they are not altogether the sole Judges: We may also withdraw to consider of this Matter with them, because it may not be proper for my Lords in Publick here, to offer what they may have to say, to incline my Lords the Judges in their Judgments one way or other?

L. Falconberge. My Lord, I humbly offer this to your Grace, upon the Motion that this Noble Lord has made, that, with Submission, I take this to be a thing that concerns the Privilege of Peerage only, and I conceive the Judges are not concerned to make any Determination of that Matter. I think therefore, my Lords here ought to retire with them to consider of it.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, I think, with Submission to your Lordships, that this is a Question naturally proper for my Lords the Judges to give their Opinions in, whether this Court, as a Court of Judicature for the Tryal of this Noble Lord, may, in the midst of the Tryal adjourn till another Day: And the Privilege of the Peerage cannot at all come in Question here as I conceive.

L. Falconberg. My Lord, that we conceive is a Point of Privilege which certainly the inferior Courts can have no power to determine.

L. H. Steward. If your Lordships have a Mind to withdraw, you may.

Lords. Ay, withdraw, withdraw.

Then the Peers withdrew, and after half an Hour the Judges returned and took their places as before, and after about an Hour the Peers returned to their former places.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, the Judges have you considered the Matter that has been proposed to you, and what is your Opinion?

L. C. J. Herbert. May it please your Grace, the Judges in obedience to your Graces Commands have withdrawn, and considered of what your Grace proposed to them, and with humble Submission they take the Question to be this.

Not, whether your Grace may Adjourn your Commission from one day to another, for that is clear you may, and has been practised, for that is the Case of the Earl of Somerset and his Wife.

But the Question is, Whether, after the Prisoner is upon his Tryal, and the Evidence for the King is given, the Lords being, as we may term it, charged with the Prisoner, the Peers Tryers may separate for a time, which is the consequent of an Adjournment to another Day.

And my Lord, the Judges presume to acquaint your Grace, that this is a matter wholly new to them, and that they know not upon recollection of all that they can remember to have read, that either this matter was done, or questioned, whether it might or might not be done in any Case.

My Lord, If the matter had been formerly done, or been brought into Question in any Case, where it had received a determination, and reported in any of our Books of Law, then it would have been our duty to contribute all our Reading and Experience for the satisfaction of this great Court: But being, as it is, a new Question, and a Question that not only concerns the particular Case of this Noble Lord at the Bar, but is to be a President in all Cases of the like nature for the future: All we can do is, to acquaint your Grace and my Noble Lords, what the Law is in the inferiour Courts in Cases of the like nature, and the Reason of the Law in those Points, and then leave the Jurisdiction of this Court to its proper Judgment.

My Lord, in the first place, where the Tryal is by a Jury, there the Law is clear, the Jury once charged can never be discharged till they have given their Verdict, this is clear; and the reason of that is, for fear of Corruption, and tampering with the Jury: an Officer is sworn to keep the Jury together without permitting them to separate or any one to converse with them; for no Man knows what may happen, for (though the Law requires honest Men should be returned upon Juries, and without a known Objection they are presumed to be probi & legales homines, yet) they are weak Men, and perhaps may be wrought upon by undue Applications.

This, My Lord, it is said, fails in this Case, because the Lords that are to try a Peer, are Persons of that great Integrity and Honour, that there is not the least Presumption of their being to be prevailed upon in any such way; and for that reason, because of the Confidence which the Law reposes (and justly) in Persons of their Quality, they are not sworn as common ordinary Jurors are; but are charged and deliver their Verdict upon Honour.

My Lord, in the Case of a Tryal of a Peer in Parliament, as your Grace was pleased to observe, and as is very well known by late Experience, there the matter has been Adjourned till another Day, and for divers Days; the Evidence being in several Parcels, and there the danger is as great (if any were to be supposed) of Tampering: But whether the Lords being Judges in that Case, and in this Case only in the nature of a Jury, makes the difference, though in both Cases it is but like a Verdict, for they give their Opinions Seriatim, whether the the Peer tryed be Guilty or not Guilty, that they submit to your Graces consideration.

Upon the whole matter, My Lord; whether their being Judges in the one, and not in the other instance; alters the Case, or whether the Reason of Law in inferiour Courts, why the Jury are not permitted to separate till they have discharged themselves by their Verdict, may have any influence upon this Case, where that reason seems to fail, the Prisoner being to be tryed by his Peers, that are Men of unquestionable unsuspected Integrity and Honour, we can't presume so far as to make any Determination in a Point that is both new to us, and of great Consequence in it self; but think it the properest way for us, having laid matters as we conceive them before your Grace and my Lords, to submit the Jurisdiction of your own Court to your own Determination.

L. H. Steward. My Lords; I confess I would always be very tender of the Priviledge of the Peers, wherever I find them concerned; but truly I apprehend, according to the best of my understanding, that this Court is held before me. It is my Warrant that conveys the Prisoner to this Barr. It is my Summons that brings the Peers together to try him, and so I take my self to be Judge of the Court.

My Lords 'tis true may withdraw, and they may call the Judges to them to assist them, which shews they have an extraordinary Priviledge in some Cases more before the High-Steward, than Juries have in inferior Courts in Cases of common Persons: For, if it be in a common Case, no Jury can call either Council or Judges to assist them, in the absence of the Prisoner, but if they will have advice, it must be asked in open Court in the presence of the party accused.

But now, My Lords, if you have a mind to consult with me in private, as I now sit by Virtue of this Commission, which is His Majesties Warrant for me to hold this Court, I could not withdraw with you, but you must ask all your Questions of me, in the presence of the Prisoner in open Court; whereas if it were in full Parliament, as were the Cases of my Lord Stafford, and my Lord of Rembroke, then he that were the High Steward might go along with you when you withdrew, and consult with you, and give his Opinion, which I cannot do in this Case; for I am bound to sit in Court, while you withdraw to consider of the Evidence, and am not to hear any thing said to me, but what is said in open Court in the presence of the Prisoner, except it be when you deliver your Verdict.

This I confess my Lords has a great weight with me, and I know your Lordships will be very tender of proceeding in such a Case any way but according to Law; For though you are Judges of your own Priviledges, yet, with Submission, you are not Judges of the Law of this Court; for that I take to be my Province.

Why then, Suppose my Lords, I should take upon me to do as my Lord Delamere desires and adjourn the Court, and suppose the Law should fall out to be that indeed I ought not so to have done, would it be any advantage to this Noble Peer, if he should be acquitted by your Lordships after such an Adjournment, might not the evil consequence of that be, that he might be Indicted for the same Crime, and tryed again?

For all the Proceedings after that would be Void, and lyable to be reversed.

And if on the other side your Lordships should think fit, upon the Evidence you have now heard, and what he shall say for himself, to convict him after I have adjourned as is desired, and I pass Judgment upon him, as it will be a Duty incumbent upon me to pass Sentence on him, if you convict him; what will become of the Case then? and how shall I be able to answer it, as having done my duty, when I pronounce a Judgment notoriously Erroneous and Illegal? for so it will be, if the Law prove to be against my adjourning: This, my Lords, is a matter of great Moment, and worth the Consideration.

But in the other Case of a Trial in full Parliament, the Lord that Sits where I do, is only as the Chairman of the Court rather than Judge, he gives a Vote in such Proceedings; and therefore my Lord the Prisoner did very well at the beginning to ask the Question, whether I had any Vote in his Tryal, as a Peer jointly with your Lordships: If I sat in full Parliament I should without all question give my Vote as well as any other Peer, but sitting here by immediate Commission from the King pro hac vice, High-Steward; I acquaint you as I did him, I have no authority to give any Vote: my Business is to see the Law observed and fulfilled as Judge.

Certainly, My Lords, your Lordships and I, and all Mankind ought to be tender of committing any Errors in Cases of Life and Death, and I would be loath, I will assure you, to be recorded for giving an Erroneous Judgment in a Case of Blood, and as the first Man that should bring in an illegal Precedent, the Consequence of which may extend I know not how far.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will your Grace give direction for my Lord to proceed?

L. H. Steward. Yes, he must proceed I think.

L. Delamere. May it please your Grace, and you my Lords, it is an offence of a very high Nature for which I am this day to answer before your Lordships; yet I thank God I am not afraid to speak in this place, because I am not only certain and well assured of my own Innocency, no such thought having as yet entred into my Heart; but I am also well assured of your Lordships Wisdom and Justice, which cannot be imposed upon or surprized by Insinuations and florid Harangues, nor governed by any thing but the Justice of the Cause.

My Lords, I can with a great deal of Comfort and Satisfaction say, that these Crimes where-with I am charged are not only Strangers to my Thoughts, but also to what has been my constant Principle and Practice; for I think that in matters relating to the Church and the things enjoined therein, few have conformed more in Practice than I have done, and yet do I confess, and am not ashamed to say it, that I have always had a Tenderness for all those who could not keep pace with me, and Charity for those that have outgone me, and differed from me, though never so far; nay, though of a different Religion: For I always thought Religion lay more in Charity than Persecution.

While I had the Honour to be a Magistrate in my Country, I did constantly duly and impartially execute the Laws, and in every publick trust I was very faithful in the Discharge of it, for I never voted nor spoke in any manner but as my Conscience and Judgment did dictate to me. I have always made the Laws the measure of my Loyalty, and have still been as Zealous and Careful to give the King his Prerogative, as to preserve to the People their Properties, and have endeavoured as far as in me lay to live peaceably with all Men.

This, My Lords, was not only the Dictates of my own Inclinations, but it was the Principle of my Father, and the Lesson that he taught me: I say my Father, who was so greatly Instrumental in snatching this Nation out of its Confusion, and restoring it to its ancient Government, by setting his late Majesty upon his Throne, and consequently was the means of his present Majesty, that now is, his coming so peaceably to the Crown: And this I may the more boldly speak, because I speak it by good Authority; because in the Patent that created my Father a Peer, his late Majesty is pleased to say, his Rising was mainly instrumental in his Restauration. I beg the Favour of your Grace and my Lords, that I may read you that Clause in the Preamble of the Patent, which I have here ready to produce.

Which was read, and then my Lord proceeded as follows, viz.

My Lords, I suppose most of your Lordships did know him, and whosoever did so, I dare say, did believe him to be a good Man: For my part I did not know a better Copy to write after than his Example, which I endeavoured always to imitate, and that I hope will go very far to vindicate me from the Imputation of being inclined to any such Crime as I stand charged with.

My Lords, it is now late, and therefore I shall cut off a great deal of what I had intended to say to your Lordships, that I may not take up too much of your time, and come immediately to my Defence, as to what I stand accused of.

And first, my Lords, I shall observe that here have been a great many Witnesses produced, and a great deal of Swearing, but little or nothing of Legal Evidence to affect me; for there is but one Man that saith any thing home and positively against me (and whom I shall answer by and by) all the rest are but Hearsays, and such remote Circumstances, as may be racked to any Evidence against any other Person, but are urged against me for want of greater matters to charge me with; and therefore I hope the producing and pressing of these things against me, is rather a strong Argument that I am Innocent, and that there have been mischievous and ill designs of some against me, than that I am Guilty; for if they had had other and greater matters, your Lordships would have been sure to have heard of them.

With your Lordships leave, I cannot but observe to your Lordships an excellent saying of that great Man my Lord of Nottingham (whose Name will ever be remembered with Honour in our English Nation,) when he sat in the same place that your Grace does now, at the Tryal of my Lord Cornwallis, which I will read to your Lordships. Speaking to the Peers he has this passage.

I know your Lordships will weigh the Fact, with all its circumstances, from which it is to receive its true and its proper Doom. Your Lordships are too just to let Pity make any abatement for the Crime, and too wise to suffer Rhetorick to make any Improvement of it: This only will be necessary to be observed by all your Lordships, that the fowler the Crime is, the clearer and plainer ought the Proof of it to be; there is no other good Reason can be given, why the Law refuseth to allow the Prisoner at the Bar Council in matter of Fact, when Life is concerned, but only this, because the Evidence by which he is condemned ought to be so very evident and so plain, that all the Council in the world should not be able to answer it.

My Lords, I think the Evidence that has been given against me this day does not come up to this. And I hope your Lordships will regard this saying of my Lord Nottingham's, as more worthy of your consideration, than the fine Flourishings and Insinuations of the Kings Council, which tend (if it be not so designed) rather to misguide your Lordships, than to lead you to find out the Truth.

My Lords, I shall now tell you the method that I shall proceed in, in making my Defence; and I begin with Saxon, for he I perceive is the great Goliath, whose Evidence is to maintain this Accusation, and if I cut him down, I suppose I shall be thought to have done my own business; therefore to that I shall apply my self first, and do it if I can; and I will in the first place examine several persons that are his Neighbours and have conversed with him, what they have heard and know of him; and first I desire Richard Hall may be called.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, if you begin that way to call Witnesses against Saxon, it is fit he should be here to know what is said against him.

L. Delamere. Ay, with all my heart, My Lord.

L. H. Steward. Then call Saxon agen.

Then Saxon and Hall came both in.

L. Delamere. Pray Mr. Hall tell my Lords here what you know of Thomas Saxon.

L. H. Steward. What is it you ask of this Witness?

L. Delamere. My Lord, I desire him to give an account what he knows of a Letter, that was forged by Saxon, in the name of one Hildage.

Hall. About the nineteenth of December in the year 1683, I received a Letter by Thomas Saxon from Richard Hildage, wherein he desired me to send him the sum of six pounds odd money which I owed him: I received the Letter and paid the money, and to the best of my knowledge some little time after I met with the said Hildage at Newcastle, who asked me to pay him the money I owed him: I replied I had paid the money, according to his Note, but he said he never gave any such Note, and threatned to sue me; thereupon I sent one Lord to Hildage, that is here now in the Court, and desired Hildage his forbearance for a while, till I could get the money from Saxon back again, and afterwards he sent again for his money, and I sent to Saxon for it, but still the money did not come.

L. H. Steward. Did you ever speak with Saxon himself?

Hall. No, but with his Wife, who came to me about it, but he acknowledged, he wrote the Letter before John Lord.

Saxon. Did not my Wife tell you that Richard Hildage lent me the money?

L. H. Steward. Nay, you must not Dialogue with one another, but if you have any questions, you must propound them to the Court: My Lord Delamere, have you any questions to ask him?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Lord

L. H. Steward. Then what is it you would have him asked, Saxon?

Saxon. I desire you would please to ask him whether or no, he did not lend me the money?

L. H. Steward. He, who do you mean?

Saxon. Richard Hildage did.

L. H. Steward. What say you, did Richard Hildage lend him the money?

Hall. No my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Look you, my Lord Delamere, the Objection carries a great deal of weight in it, to prove him a very ill man, if it be fully made out.

L. Delamere. My Lord, if your Grace please, I can prove that he owned the writing of the Letter to another man.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, he does own here, that he wrote the Letter and that he wrote it in Hildage's name, but he saith, the Letter, he so wrote in Hildage's Name was by Hildage's direction, and if so, that takes off the Objection made against him.

L. Delamere. I must submit that to your Grace, whether what he says in that matter be Evidence.

L. H. Steward. What Hildage did, or did not, is the main turn of the question in this Case; for he might lend him the money, and yet afterwards might say, when he thought he might lose it, that he did not send any such Letter, and all this be true, and Saxon in no fault: I must confess, if Hildage were here himself, and should deny the lending of the money, or the giving him Directions to receive it, you would have fixed a shrewd Objection upon him; but otherwise Hear-says and discourses at second hand are not to take off the Credit of any mans Testimony.

L. Delamere. But Hall says Hildage denyed the receipt of the money, or any Order for receiving of it.

L. H. Steward. That signifies nothing, being but by second hand.

Saxon. If it please your Grace, here is my Brother in Court will give you an account of it.

L. H. Steward. Well, well, hold your tongue; will your Lordship please to go on?

L. Delamere. The next Witness, my Lord, that I shall call, shall be Francis Ling (who came in.)

L. H. Steward. What do you ask this Witness?

L. Delamere. Mr. Ling, pray will you tell his Grace, and my Lords, what you know concerning Saxon's receiving any Money in the name of Mrs. Wilbrabam, without her Order.

Ling. He called at this same Hildage's at Newcastle, and received twenty five Shillings, and said it was for Mrs. Wilbrabam in her name, but she never received a penny of the Money, nor knew of his having received it, till he came to pay another Quarter.

L. H. Steward. Where is that Mrs. Wilbrabam, is she here?

Ling. No, my Lord, she is a Neighbour of ours, an Ancient Woman, fourscore years of Age, and cannot come so far.

L. H. Steward. This is the same Case with the other, you can never think to take off the Credibility of Witnesses by such Testimony; for this is only a Tale out of an Old Woman's Mouth: What if that Old Woman told him a false Story?

Ling. She said —

L. H. Steward. I care not what she said, this is no Evidence at all.

Vol. III.

L. Delamere. Then pray call Richard Shaw (who came in.)

L. H. Steward. Well, what says this Witness?

L. Delamere. Shaw, can you tell any thing of Thomas Saxon's writing a Letter, and sending it in the Name of one Pangston a Bayliff?

Shaw. He writ a Letter, as I understand, concerning some Money that I owed him; for I owed him a little Money, and being I did not pay it, he does forge a Letter, and puts William Pangston's name to it, so I got up the other Morning —

L. H. Steward. Where is Pangston? Is he here?

Shaw. No, my Lord, he is not, but he told me he did not write the Letter.

L. H. Steward. Why, this is just the same again, and we all know how easie a thing it is to hear a Bayliff tell a Lye.

Shaw. I cannot tell, but I called —

L. H. Steward. All that is nothing. It is a difficult matter to hear such Fellows speak truth, than any thing else, I am sure.

L. Delamere. The next Witness that I shall call, is Peter Hough (who appeared.)

L. H. Steward. There is your Witness: What say you to him?

L. Delamere. Pray acquaint his Grace, and my Lords, what you know of Saxon's cheating you in the making of a Bond.

Hough. My Lord, he had six Pound ten Shillings in money, and ten Shillings in work done, for which he was to give me a Bond, and hereof he made the Bond himself. I thought it had been right, and took it; but about the time when the money was become due, I looked upon it, and it proved to be but for 6*l*.

L. H. Steward. What should it have been for?

Hough. It should have been for six Pounds ten Shillings in money, and ten Shillings in work.

L. H. Steward. Did not he give thee a Bond for all thy money?

Hough. It should have been so, but I never had it.

L. H. Steward. Had you never the money?

Hough. No, I never had the money.

L. H. Steward. What did he say the Bond should be made for?

Hough. For seven Pounds.

L. H. Steward. What say you to it Saxon?

Saxon. My Lord, I had five Pounds ten Shillings of him, and Ten Shillings in work, for which I gave him Bond, there were the Witnesses names at it, the Bond was fairly read, and I sealed it, and he took it with him.

L. H. Steward. Ay, but he says it was to be for seven Pounds.

Saxon. I never had any more of him than six Pounds, and for that I gave him Bond.

L. H. Steward. Was the Bond read to you?

Hough. He read it himself, and he made it himself.

L. H. Steward. How did he read it? What did you apprehend by his reading it was made for?

Hough. I took it as he read it to be made for seven Pounds.

Saxon. He may say what he pleases, but I had no more of him but six Pounds; I was to give Bond for no more.

L. H. Steward. Now the Witnesses to this Bond would be very proper to be produced here: For, if he did make the Bond but for six Pounds, when the Debt that was to be secured was seven Pounds, tha

S s s s

that is a sign that he had an intention to cheat him of the Twenty Shillings.

L. Delamere. That shews what a kind of Man he is.

L. H. Steward. But this is but Witness against Witness, for he says he owed no more, and was to make the Bond for no more.

Hough. It was as I tell you, I assure you, my Lord.

Saxon. I had no more of him than six Pounds.

Hough. Did not I ask you afterwards one Question more, and told you it was a Cheat, and you said it should be mended?

L. H. Steward. Well, my Lords have heard it, they will consider what weight to lay upon it.

Lord Delamere. Pray call Edward Wilkinson (who appeared.)

L. H. Steward. What do you ask him?

L. Delamere. Wilkinson, pray tell my Lords, how Saxon dealt with you about your Horse?

Wilkinson. My Lord, he hired a Horse of me for three days, and was to give me twelve pence a Day, but he never came again, nor had I any satisfaction for my Horse, but I lost my Horse by the Bargain, and my Money too.

L. H. Steward. How long ago was it since he hired your Horse?

Wilkinson. My Lord, it was the Twenty third of June, to the best of my remembrance.

L. H. Steward. Did he not agree with you for 12 d. a day as long as he used your Horse?

Wilkinson. I expected to have my Horse in 3 days time.

L. H. Steward. But mind my Question, Did you agree that he should have him but 3 days? or, was he to give you 12 d. a day for so long as he kept him out?

Wilkinson. I was to have 12 d. a day for him.

L. H. Steward. What as long as he used him, or only for 3 days?

Wilkinson. He did agree with me to bring him again in 3 days.

L. H. Steward. I perceive by the time, he rid into the Rebellion with this Horse, and he was a very Knave for so doing, upon my Conscience.

L. Delamere. Call William Wright, (who came in) Pray will you give my Lords an account what Reputation this Thomas Saxon is of in his Country.

Wright. My Lord, this Thomas Saxon came to live at Sambige, and I had some dealings with him as well as other Men, and I never found him to perfect his word in any thing.

L. H. Steward. What didst thou never find him?

Wright. To perfect his word in any thing, My Lord.

L. H. Steward. That is, make good his word I suppose, but that is your Cheshire Phrase.

Wright. Whereupon I met with him one Evening after Evening Prayer, and said to him, Thomas Saxon, if I cared no more for keeping my word than thou dost, it were no matter if I were hang'd; for to be sure, if thy Mouth open, thy Tongue lyes; and he turn'd away from me, and would not answer me a word; and since that he owed me some Money, and when I asked him for it, he told me if I did trouble him for the Money it should be the worse for me; whereof all the Town knows as well as I that I cannot set him forth in words as bad as he is.

L. H. Steward. Can you instance in particular, Friend, of any Fraud, Cheat, or Cozenage that he has been Guilty of? for it is not what the Town says, but what can be proved, that we must take for Evidence; the Town that thou livest in may reckon thee but an idle Fellow, and yet thou may'st be a very honest Man for all that.

Wright. I trust, my Lord, I am so, and shall always prove so.

L. H. Steward. Well, what dost thou know ill of him?

Wright. He did not keep his word with me.

L. H. Steward. Wherein dost thou mean?

Wright. As to Money he owed me.

L. H. Steward. How much Money did he owe thee?

Wright. He owed me a deal.

L. H. Steward. How much dost thou call a deal?

Wright. I cannot tell how much exactly.

L. H. Steward. Does he owe thee any thing now?

Wright. Yes, but I cannot justly tell how much.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I would be very unwilling to interrupt the method of your defence, or abridge you in your Evidence; but really this objection that you endeavour to prove by this Witness, is not at all, as I conceive, for your Lordships Service: For it is a very hard case, if any one that owes Money and does not pay it, shall for that very reason lose the credit of his Testimony, this rather gives a countenance to what he says, that you know no other Objections but such trivial ones to make against him.

L. Delamere. Then, if your Grace please, I will make short work of it, and spare your time; I shall pass over this part of my Evidence though I have more Witnesses to this Point, and come to other matters, to matter of Fact to encounter this positive Proof that has been given against me. Your Grace and my Lords do observe, that this Man Saxon has testified, that about the third or fourth of June last (for there he fixed the time) this Man as an extraordinary Person that was fit to be trusted in an Affair of this Nature, being confided in, and recommended by my Lord Brandon, was sent for by me to Mere, where he found me and Sir Robert Cotton and Mr. Offley, who did imploy him to transact the matter of stirring up the Country, in order to a rising and joyning with the late Duke of Monmouth: Now I will first prove to your Lordship in general, that Sir Robert Cotton was not in Cheshire for many Weeks, nay several Months, both before and after the time he speaks of: And next in particular I shall prove, as to the time that he has pitched upon, by divers Persons that saw Sir Robert Cotton here then in London, and give you particular reasons for it: First to prove that he was here in Town so long in general: I shall produce his Servants that saw him every day; Call — Billing (who appear'd) Pray, Sir, will you give an account what time Sir Robert Cotton came to London, when he went out of London, and whether you were frequently in his Company and saw him here?

Billing. My Lord, to the best of my remembrance, Sir Robert Cotton came to Town the 10th of April last, and I was with him here in Town, at his House at the Horse Ferry till the latter end end of July, and saw him constantly more than once or twice every day for that time, I used to come into his Chamber most Mornings before he was up, I used to buy in his Provision for his House, I saw him a Bed, or heard he was in Bed every Night.

L. H. Steward. Did you belong to him?

Billing. I am his Servant.

L. Delamere. He lived with him in the House all the while he says?

Billing. Then about the latter end of July he went out of Town for three Days to Essex, and then he came to Town again, and continued here till the time he was committed to the Tower, and never was in Cheshire since the 6th of April last.

L. H. Steward. How came you to remember so punctually when he came to Town, and that he staid here all the while?

Billing. I know it by my Accounts for the Journey up, and by the Tradesmens Bills for the Provision of the House ever since.

L. H. Steward. In what Capacity did you serve Sir Robert Cotton?

Billing. I bought in all the Provision for his House, and paid the Tradesmens Bills.

L. H. Steward. Have you any Papers in your Pocket that will point to any particular time?

Billing. I have not the Tradesmens Bills here, my Lord, nor my own Accounts, but I have look'd upon them, and by that I am sure what I have testified is true.

L. H. Steward. Who do you call next, my Lord?

L. Delamere. Call Margaret Davis, (who appeared,) Pray will you give an account to my Lord, what time Sir Robert Cotton came to Town, and to the best of your remembrance when he went out of Town again.

Davis. He came to Town upon the Tenth of April last, or thereabouts, and he has not been out of Town any Night since, except it were in August.

L. H. Steward. What day did he come to Town do you say?

Davis. About the 10th of April.

L. H. Steward. And you say he did not go out of Town till August?

Davis. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. How do you know this?

Davis. I was constantly in the House with him.

L. H. Steward. But how came you to be so exact as to the time?

Davis. I saw him continually every day.

L. H. Steward. How came you to see him?

Davis. I live with him in the House.

L. H. Steward. Pray recollect your self as to the time he went out of Town, for I perceive the other Man says it was the latter end of July.

Davis. It was in August certainly, my Lord.

L. Delamere. My Lord, the other Witness saith it was the latter end of July, and that may be very well consistent, neither of them speaking to a day.

L. H. Steward. Well, are you sure he was in Town all the Month of June?

Davis. Yes, he was.

L. H. Steward. Well, who do you call next?

L. Delamere. Mrs. Sidney Lane, (who appeared.)

L. H. Steward. What do you ask this Gentlewoman?

L. Delamere. I examine her to the same Point: and I question not but I shall make it out to your Grace, and my Lords, none of us all three that he has named were there at that time.

L. H. Steward. I shall be very glad of it, my Lord.

L. Delamere. Pray Mrs. Lane will you give an account when it was Sir Robert Cotton came to Town, and how long he staid here?

Mrs. Lane. He came to Town the April before the Coronation, and never lay out of Town I am sure all those three Months of April, May and June after he came to Town.

L. Delamere. This Gentlewoman, my Lord, lived in the same House with him.

Mrs. Lane. I did so, My Lord, and saw him every Night and Morning.

L. Delamere. If your Grace please, I have two or three more Witnesses to the same purpose, but I would spare their Lordships time, if this point be fully cleared.

L. H. Steward. Pray, my Lord, do not abridge your self, for I know my Lords will not grudge the time, but are very desirous you should have full Liberty in what is pertinent.

L. Delamere. Then I desire Charles Reeves may be called, (who appeared) I pray, my Lord, that this Man may give an account what time it was Sir Robert Cotton came to Town, and how long he stay'd here.

Reeves. If it please your Lordship, he was in Town before the Coronation, and I saw him here every day from that time till after July, once or twice every Day.

L. H. Steward. Did you belong to him?

Reeves. Yes, and I do now.

L. H. Steward. In what Capacity, Friend?

Reeves. My Lord, I am his Footman.

L. Delamere. May it please your Grace, the next Witness I have to produce is Mr. Ashburnham; being he cannot easily remove, I beg he may be heard in the place where he is.

L. H. Steward. Ay, let him speak where he is, and let him speak out.

L. Delamere. Pray Sir, will you please to recollect your self what time you saw Sir Robert Cotton, and where the last Summer?

Ashburnham. My Lord, I being at Sir Robert Cotton's House at Westminster, he desired me to present a Petition of his to the House of Commons for him, and it was about the latter end of the time allotted for Petitions, I cannot exactly tell what day of the Week or Month it was, but I saw him that day I presented his Petition, and I saw him at the Committee of Elections two or three days after.

L. Delamere. Sir William Twisden I desire may be also heard what he has to say to the same Point. Who answered to the same effect.

L. Delamere. Mr. Heveningham is my next Witness, My Lord; who I desire that he would please to give your Grace and my Lords an account, when he remembers to have seen Sir Robert Cotton in Town.

Mr. Heveningham. My Lord, it was a more than ordinary occasion that makes me remember the thing and the time so particularly. I was engaged in a dispute in the House of Commons about my own Election, and that was upon the 2d of June, then was a Case debated in the House, whether a Mayor that was elected a Burgess for any Town could sit upon his own Return, it was then carried he should not, and the next day which was the third of June, another question came on, whether Sir Joseph Williamson was duly elected and returned, and I remember at that time I was walking with Sir Robert Cotton in the Court of Requests, and Mr. Neal came out of the House and told me, that it was carried by five, that he was not, and then Sir Robert Cotton was with me.

Sfff 2 on

L. H. Steward. So you speak as to the 2d and 3d of June?

Mr. Heveningham. My Lord, had it not been upon this particular occasion, I could not have remember'd the time so exactly.

L. H. Steward. You give a very good token for your remembrance, and my Lords hear what you have said.

L. Delamere. Will your Grace please that the Clerk of the House of Commons may be called, and examined to the Journal of that House, when it was Sir Robert Cotton preferred his Petition, and that will fix the time as to what Mr. Ashburnham and Sir William Twisden have said?

L. H. Steward. Call whom you please, my Lord.

L. Delamere. It seems he is not ready, but I hope I have given your Grace and my Lords sufficient satisfaction, that Sir Robert Cotton was not there at that time that this fellow speaks of. I will now go on and prove Mr. Offley was not there neither, and the first Witness I call to that, shall be Sir Willoughby Aston, whom I desire your Grace will be pleased to hear speak in his place.

L. H. Steward. Well, what do you say, Sir Willoughby?

Sir W. Aston. My Lord, I desire to be guided in what account I shall give by the Questions that shall be asked.

L. H. Steward. What is it you ask Sir Willoughby Aston?

L. Delamere. Pray can you remember, Sir Willoughby, what time it was, and whether about the latter end of May last, or when, that you know of Mr. Offley's being at your House, and how long he stayed there?

Sir W. Aston. I can give an account of his Motion for ten days together, but that perhaps may be more than is necessary.

L. H. Steward. It will not be improper, Sir, for you to give as exact and particular account as you can of the times.

Sir W. Aston. If your Grace please, I will do it.

L. H. Steward. Pray do, Sir.

Sir W. Aston. Upon the 26th of May, which was Tuesday, at Night Mr. Offley and his Lady, and some of their Relations, came to my House, upon Wednesday the 27th of May Mr. Offley was so sick that he kept his Chamber and his Bed all day, upon the 28th of May which was Thursday, he was so ill that he kept his Chamber all day, and rose about five at Night, and I then waited upon him, and sat with him three Hours in his dressing Room, on Friday the 29th of May he went to Church, that Day was employed a great part in Devotion, upon the 30th of May which was Saturday, Mr. Offley and his Lady went, and a great part of my Family went with them, to one Mr. Pickering's six Miles off my House, there they dined, and returned at Night to my House, upon Sunday the 31st of May, I have a particular remark whereby I remember that Mr. Offley went to visit Mr. Needham; upon Monday the first of June, Mrs. Offley and the Women of my Family went to visit my Lady Brooks, but Mr. Offley not being well staid at home: On Tuesday the second of June he was still at my House, there was a great deal of Company there, and he was in the Company all the day long: On Wednesday the 3d. I fell sick in the Morning about 4 of the Clock, but Mr. Offley was in the House all the Morning, but in the Afternoon he went to make a Visit two Miles from my House, at a place called the Ware-house, where the Ships ride at Anchor; and upon Thursday Morning which was the 4th of June, he went from my House: Now if your Lordship desire to know any thing about any particular time about this Compass, I'll give you the best account I can.

L. H. Steward. Can you tell where he went when he went from your House?

Sir W. Aston. He went directly home, as he said.

L. H. Steward. Did you hear at any time that he stay'd by the way, between his going from you and coming to his own House?

Sir W. Aston. My Son went with him two or three Miles of his way, and I heard that at Middlewich he staid to speak with some of the Militia Officers that he met with by the way there at a Muster, and afterwards went directly home.

L. H. Steward. Pray is the usual way from his House to yours by my Lord Delamere's?

Sir W. Aston. No, my Lord, directly another way.

L. H. Steward. Will you ask Sir Willoughby Aston any more Questions?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Grace please, I would ask Sir Willoughby Aston one Question. Sir, I desire to know how far it is from your House to my Lord Delamere's?

Sir W. Aston. Sir, it is about Eleven Miles.

L. H. Steward. Eleven Miles you say, Sir?

Sir W. Aston. Yes, my Lord, Eleven of those Northern Miles.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I have some more Witnesses to examine to this Point.

L. H. Steward. Call whom you please, my Lord?

L. Delamere. I call Mr. Gregory next, my Lord. (who appeared) Pray give my Lord an account, when Mr. Offley went from Sir Willoughby Aston's last Summer, and whither he went?

Gregory. My Lord, my Master went from Sir Willoughby Aston's House——

L. H. Steward. Who is your Master?

Gregory. Mr. Offley, my Lord. It was upon the 4th of June, at 9 of the Clock in the Morning, and went from thence to Middlewich, and was at home at his own House about five of the Clock in the Evening, as I was told, for I did not go directly home with him.

L. H. Steward. Was he at Mere that day at my Lord Delamere's?

Gregory. No, not that I know of, I was not with him.

L. Delamere. Then pray call Thomas Kidd. (who appeared) Pray were you that day with Mr. Offley when he went from Sir Willoughby Aston's?

Kidd. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. Delamere. What day was it?

Kidd. The 4th of June.

L. Delamere. Then whither went he?

Kidd. He went the direct Road to his own House, I never parted from him, nor did he stop any where till he came to Middle-wich, where the Country Militia were exercising, and he just alighted off his Horse, and spoke with Major Minshaw and some of the Officers, but never so much as drunk by the way till he came to his own House.

L. H. Steward. What to his House in Staffordshire?

Kidd. No, but to Crew Hall in Cheshire.

L. H. Steward. Does Mere lye in the Road between Sir Willoughby Aston's and Crew Hall, so that your Master might be there within that time?

Kidd. No, that he could not do.

L. H. Steward. Were you with Mr. Offley the whole Journey home?

Kidd. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. H. Steward. Were you no time from him?

Kidd. No, my Lord I was not.

L. H. Steward. What time did he come home?

Kidd. He came to his own House about 4 or 5 a Clock at night.

L. H. Steward. And did not he go from thence that night?

Kidd. No, my Lord.

L. Delamere. Now my Lord, I will prove as to my self that I was in London at the time as he speaks of. And First, I desire Sir James Langham may be heard to that:

He appeared, but gaye no Evidence.

L. Delamere. Pray call—Booth (who appeared)

L. H. Steward. What is this Gentleman's name?

L. Delamere. He is my Brother, my Lord, his Name is — Booth.

L. H. Steward. What do you ask him?

L. Delamere. Pray can you remember what time in June you saw me in Town here?

Mr. Booth. My Lord, I saw my Brother here in Town, the 3^d, 4th, 5th, 6th, and so on to the 10th of June, and the 10th of June I went out of Town my self, I saw him sometimes twice or thrice a day in that time, for I did not lodge above half a score doors from him.

L. H. Steward. Where was that?

Mr. Booth. In Great Russel-Street.

L. H. Steward. How come you to remember the time so particularly?

Mr. Booth. It was that day Sennight before I went out of Town, which was Wednesday the 10th of June, and had it not been for that particular Circumstance, I had not remark'd it so much as to be able particularly to remember it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Booth, did you know of your Brother's going out of Town the 27th of May?

Mr. Booth. I heard he was gone out of Town about that time.

L. H. Steward. Why then, when came he hither to Town again?

Mr. Booth. I cannot tell, but I saw him upon the 3^d of June in the Evening.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, it is not possible for him so to do in that time, if he rode Post.

L. H. Steward. He did make a great deal of haste backward, and forward, that is certain.

L. Delamere. My Brother does not know when I went, but as he heard, he says.

L. H. Steward. But pray my Lord, mind the Objection that has been made, for it carries a great deal of weight in it. It is plainly proved by two Witnesses, that you went out of Town the 27th of May at 9 of the Clock at Night, and rode to Hoddesden, and the next day came to Hitchin about Noon, then they left you and return'd back again to London that Night, and you told them you were going to see a sick Child of yours in Cheshire, how came you to make such Post-haste back again, that he should see you here in London the 3^d of June?

Mr. Booth. My Lord, I am certain I saw him that day in the Evening, and so on to the 10th.

L. H. Steward. Did my Lord then tell you how your Friends did in Cheshire?

Mr. Booth. I cannot remember the particular discourse we had.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, when did he tell you he came to Town?

L. H. Steward. You say you used to see him every day oncc or twice a day.

Mr. Booth. Yes, I did so.

L. H. Steward. Pray where was he the Second of June?

Mr. Booth. He was not come to Town.

L. H. Steward. How long time was it before that, that you had not seen him?

Mr. Booth. I had not seen him of several days before.

L. Delamere. If it please your Grace, here is another Brother of mine that saw me at the same time, and tho' he be my Brother I hope he is a good Witness.

L. H. Steward. Ay, God forbid else; what is his name?

L. Delamere. George Booth.

L. H. Steward. Well, what say you, Sir;

Mr. George Booth. My Lord, I saw my Brother Delamere here in Town the 4th of June, by this particular Circumstance which I cannot err in, that the next day, as I take it, I went down with him to the House of Lords, to hear my Lord Macclesfield's Cause, which was then there to be heard upon the Appeal of Mr. Fiston, and my Brother was in the House of Lords at that time, which was the 5th of June.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I think it not amiss to put you in mind of one thing, which it is fit your Lordship should give some answer to: Does your Lordship deny that you went out of Town the 27th of May?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord, I do not; I acknowledge I did so.

L. H. Steward. Then it will be fit for you to give an account where you were the 28th of May, and so all along till the 3^d of June?

L. Delamere. If your Grace please, I hope I shall give you full Satisfaction in that by and by, but I have one Witness more to this point of my being in Town at such a time, that I could not be in Cheshire, when this Fellow says I was; and that is my Lord Lovelace.

L. H. Steward. There is my Lord Lovelace, what will you ask him?

L. Delamere. Whether he did not see me at the Tryal of my Lord Macclesfield in the House of Lords?

L. Lovelace. I was in the House of Lords that day that my Lord Macclesfield's Tryal was, and I remember I did see my Lord Delamere there.

L. H. Steward. But we are as much at a loss now as ever we were, for what day that Tryal was was does not appear : What day was my Lord Macclesfield's Tryal?

L. Delamere. The Journal of the House of Lords proves that to be the 5th of June.

L. Lovelace. My Lord stood just by the Bar, and if I am not mistaken took Notes.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I hope now I have satisfied your Grace, and the rest of my Lords, that none of us three whom this Fellow has mentioned were there at that time at Mere, when he says we were: For my own part I do positively affirm, and I speak it as in the Presence of Almighty God, that I have not seen Sir Robert Cotton at my House that I know of these many Years, and I believe Mr. Offley was never in my House since I was Master of it: And I do likewise protest, that to my Knowledge, I never saw the face of this Man till now that he is produced as a Witness against me; I am sure I never spoke with him in all my Life, nor never sent for him to come to my House: And if your Lordship please to consider the Story that he tells, it will easily appear to be very improbable, for he neither tells you who the Messenger was that was sent for him, nor the way that he came into the House, which any body that has ever been at the House could not mistake. For when I asked him what door it was he came in at, it was for this reason, because he must needs have gone a great way about, if he had not come in at the usual Entry into the House, for I have but one door into my House except that by the Stables, which is a great way off the House? and it being about that time of the Year, if it were 8 or 9 of the Clock in the Evening, he must needs discern which way he came in: And, besides, My Lords, is it probable what he says, that he should see no body stirring about the House except it were this Man without a Hand, that he says was sent for him? I assure your Lordships, I have not, nor had my Father ever that I know of, any Servant or Tenant that was maimed in that manner that he speaks of; he saith, he was recommended to us by my Lord Brandon: But he cannot tell your Lordship any thing that ever he had done, to recommend him either to him or us: I did ask him what important Service he had ever done for me, that might give a credibility to my employing him in such a business as this. My Lord, I cannot help it, if People will tell false Stories of me, but I hope your Lordships will consider the credibility of it; is it to be imagined that I would take a Man I knew nothing of, upon another Man's Word, into so great a Confidence, as to employ him about a business of this Nature? I am glad that he was called in here again for your Lordships to view him. I beseech your Lordships to look at him; Is this Fellow a likely Fellow to be used in such an Affair? Does he look as if he were fit to be employed for the raising of ten thousand Men? Does he seem to be a Man of such considerable Interest in his Country? A Fellow, that though it be not direct Evidence, yet by several Witnesses, I have shewn to be a Man of no Reputation in his Country, nay of a very ill one; and could we have none else to employ in a matter of this Moment but such a Fellow as his Neighbours would not take his Word for any thing? It is an improbable Story upon these accounts, if I should say no more. Your Lordships likewise see, that he is so well thought of, that he dare not be trusted out of Newgate, but is kept still a Prisoner, and as such gives Evidence here: And I know your Lordships will not forget that he swears to save himself, having been a Rebel by his own Confession, and he would fain exchange his Life for mine; till he has a Pardon, which as yet, as I am informed, he has not; the Objection will still lye upon him, that he swears to save himself, which will render his Testimony not credible, and the Law requires the Witnesses in Treason, to be credible ones: And yet forsooth! this Man, that no body that knows him will believe a Word he says, must be taken to be the Man of Integrity, Zeal and Industry; the Man of Management and Dispatch, the Man of Interest and Authority in his Country, that nothing can be done, but he must have a hand in it. My Lords, I think I need say no more of him; your Lordships time is precious, too precious indeed to be spent upon such a Subject, and so I set him aside.

My Lords, there is a thing that I perceive the King's Council lay a great weight upon, and that is my going down upon the 27th day of May, and my frequent riding Post to and fro. I shall now satisfy your Lordships of the Reasons of my Journeys. The first time which was betwixt the Coronation and the sitting of the Parliament was upon this reason; I went down to take Possession upon a Lease of a considerable value which was renewed to me by the Bishop. I did not think of going down at that time so soon; but I had Word wrote me out of the Country that the Bishop was ill, and that obliged me in point of interest to make haste down. And this I shall prove by one that was Attorney for me, and another that was a Witness of my taking Possession: and for this, I first call Mr. John Edmonds (who came in) Pray, Sir, will you tell his Grace and my Lords, what you know of my coming down into the Country in the beginning of May, and upon what account, and what time it was?

Mr. Edmonds. May it please your Lordship, upon the 5th of May my Lord Delamere did me the Honour to come to my House, and he stayed there a little while, and desired me to be a Witness of his taking Possession upon a Lease of my Lord Bishop of Chester's, and we went into the House that was next to mine, which was and there did take Possession.

L. H. Steward. Where is your House?

Mr. Edmonds. At Boden, in Cheshire.

L. H. Steward. When was this, do you say?

Mr. Edmonds. The 5th of May.

L. Delamere. Pray Sir, will you satisfy my Lord, whether the Bishop was not ill at that time?

Mr. Edmonds. My Lord, I had been a little before at Chester, and hearing my Lord Bishop was not very well, I went to Mr. Allen, and told him I was desirous to see my Lord, and speak with him, if I might; he told me my Lord was so ill, that he would speak with no body.

L. H. Steward. Was it a Lease for Years, or a Lease for Lives?

Mr. Edmonds. It was a Lease for Lives.

L. H. Steward. Then that might require my Lord's taking Possession. Who do you call next, My Lord?

L. Delamere. Mr. Henry.

L. H. Steward. What do you ask this Man, my Lord?

L. Delamere. Pray will you give his Grace and my Lords an account, whether you were not Attorney, and delivered me Possession upon the Lease of my Lord Bishop of Chester?

Mr. Henry. My Lord, I was Attorney by Appointment, and the 5th of May last I delivered Possession to my Lord Delamere at one of the most remarkable places of the Land that belonged to that Lease of the Bishop.

L. Delamere. My Lords, I hope this is a satisfactory reason for my going down at that time, the Bishop being ill, and the Lease being worth 6 or 7000*l.* The next time that I have to speak to is, That of my going the 27th of May, and for that I give this answer; I did go out of Town the 27th of May, the occasion of my going was, I had taken up a Resolution before to go see my Child that was not well, but I had not taken my Journey so soon, nor with such Privacy, but that I had notice, there was a Warrant out to apprehend me, and knowing the Inconveniences of lying in Prison, I was very willing to keep as long out of Custody as I could, and therefore I went out of the way, and under a borrowed Name. When I came to my House in Cheshire, there were not above five of my own Servants that saw me all the while I was there, and I saw no body but them, but while I was there, my Wife sent me an Express, that as to the Warrant she hoped it was a Mistake, and there was no such thing; but my eldest Son was very ill, and if I intended to see him alive I must make haste up, this was the occasion of my quick return, and I shall satisfy your Lordships by Proof, that I came thither in that manner to avoid the Warrant, and for no other Reason.

L. H. Steward. You say you went to see a sick Child in the Country.

L. Delamere. May it please your Grace, my Mother that is here, wrote me word that my Child was not well.

L. H. Steward. Pray what made you come back again so soon?

L. Delamere. Because I had an Express sent me by my Wife that my other Son was like to dye.

L. H. Steward. Call your Witness, my Lord.

L. Delamere. Mrs. Kelsey, (who came in) Pray will you give an account what I said, when I came down, was the occasion of my coming so privately and changing my Name?

Mrs. Kelsey. My Lord heard he said, there was a Warrant for taking of him up, and he gave me that for a Reason; besides his little Son in the Country was ill.

L. H. Steward. What, she lived in the Country, did she?

Mrs. Kelsey. My Lord, I was in the House with him.

L. Delamere. If your Lordships please my Mother may be examined?

L. H. Steward. Yes, with all my Heart.

She sate by him at the Bar.

L. H. Steward. Pray Madam, will you lift up your Voice, that my Lords may hear what you say.

Lady Delamere. My Lords, This Child of his that was in the Country, was more than ordinarily precious to him, in regard it was born to him at that time, when he was an innocent honest Man, (as he is now a Prisoner in the Tower for High-Treason,) above two years ago, and I think it increased his Affection to the Child, that God had given it to him when he was in that Affliction. My Lord, I knowing the Affection that the Father and Mother both had to the Child, my Care in their absence I thought ought to be more exercised about him: The Child sucked, but I saw the Child decline, and therefore I was of Opinion that he should be weaned, and I sent up word that if they did not take care quickly and look a little after him, I was afraid he would go into a Consumption. Upon this my Son came down, I saw him not indeed, because he was very private all the while he was in the Country, but while he was there, it pleased God to visit his eldest Son with a dangerous Distemper, upon which my Daughter sent for him Post, if he intended to see his Son alive. And thereupon I think he made what haste back again he could.

L. H. Steward. Were you in the same House with him, Madam?

Lady Delamere. My Lord, I say, I did not see him all the time he was there, I only tell you what I heard.

L. H. Steward. How long was he in the Country?

Lady Delamere. I cannot tell exactly that, I think he was not above two days.

L. H. Steward. He must be but one day by Computation of time?

L. Delamere. Pray, my Lord, I will satisfy you in that point presently: Mrs. Kelsey will give an account what time it was that I came down, and when I went away.

Mrs. Kelsey. My Lord came down on the Sabbath-day night, and stayed there Monday, and went away the Tuesday Morning.

L. H. Steward. Look you, my Lord; the 27th of May was upon a Wednesday, that night you went out of Town, and went to Hoddesten. Thursday which was the 28th you came to Hitchen at Noon. Friday was the 29th, Saturday the 30th, Sunday was the 31st, then you came to your House, Monday the 1st of June, Tuesday the 2d, then you came away, and upon Wednesday the 3d you were in Town, so says your Brother.

L. Delamere. It was so, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Which way did you come back?

L. Delamere. I came Post through Coventry, my Lord, and that was the time that Hope speaks of, that I told him I had come another way into Cheshire, when I came down.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, you say you went down to secret your self from a Warrant that you apprehended was out against you, and that made you go a by-way, how came you then to come so publickly back, the ordinary Post-Road?

L. Delamere. If your Grace please, I have told you I had an Express came from my Wife, that told me it was a Mistake as to the Warrant, but that my Child was very ill, and I must make haste up.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Witnesses my Lord?

L. Delamere. Yes my Lord; I desire Mr. Kelsey may be called, (He came in.)

L. H. Steward. Well, what say you?

Mr. Kelsey. My Lord came down upon the Sunday night at eleven of the Clock, and stayed at home all Monday, and on Tuesday Morning at 3 of the Clock in the Morning, he took Horse for London, and I have Letters by me that are dated the 4th of June which was Thursday, that told me my Lord was come to Town the night before.

L. H. Steward. Whose are those two Letters?

Mr. Kelsey. They were from my Lady and Mrs. Vere Booth, and both came by the same Post.

L. Delamere. I shall call one Witness more, my Lord, to prove that my Child was sick here in Town, and the time, and that is Sir Thomas Millington, who was his Physician.

Sir Thomas was called, and came in.

L. Delamere. Pray Sir Thomas, can you recollect your self what time my Son was ill last Year?

Sir Thomas Millington. My Lord, I was sent for to my Lord Delamere's Son upon the 28th of May, and I found him then very ill, and he continued so for two days, insomuch as I told my Lady Delamere his Mother that I thought the Child would not escape. I told it likewise to Sir James Langham, who is my Neighbour in Lincolns - Inn - Fields; what they did upon it, whether they sent for my Lord Delamere to Town or no, I cannot tell, but I know punctually this was the time by reason the Bills I wrote are dated on that day, otherwise I could not have remembred the time, but the Bills being sent me from the Apothecary, I find that date to them.

L. H. Steward. Pray, Mr. Attorney will you call Edlin again, or Vaux, either of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is Edlin, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Where did you part with my Lord Delamere, and when?

Edlin. Upon Thursday the 28th of May at Hitchin.

L. H. Steward. What time of the day was it when you parted?

Edlin. It was about ten of the Clock.

L. H. Steward. He went forward Post into Cheshire, did he not?

Edlin. He did not go Post I suppose, for he went upon his own Horse.

L. H. Steward. Did he go upon his own Horse?

Edlin. It was the same Horse he went to Hitchin upon.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Witnesses, my Lord?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord. I hope I have given their Lordships Satisfaction in all Points, and need to give no further Evidence.

L. H. Steward. Have you any thing more then to say, my Lord?

L. Delamere. My Lords, I acknowledge I did go at that time privately a By-Road, and by the name of Brown, and as for Jones, who it is said came from Holland that day, I appeal to him himself, and I call God to Witness I never saw the Man before now in my Life; nay, till after I was made a Prisoner upon this account, I never so much as heard of his Name; and your Lordships see by the Proofs, that all that has been said against me, except what this Fellow Saxon has testified, is but hearsay, nay indeed but hearsay upon hearsay at the third and fourth hand.

My Lords, if People will make use of my name, and say this, and that and the other, and among themselves talk of Messages sent to me; can I or any Man in the World help it? at this rate who can be innocent, if a Man must be guilty because others intend to draw him into Treason? For there is no more in the utmost that this proof can amount unto. It is at the pleasure of any two men in the world, to take away the Lives, Honours, and Estates of any of your Lordships, if it be a proof sufficient to make you guilty of Treason, for them to swear you were intended to be drawn into Treason.

And, my Lords, as to the truth of the thing itself, that there was any Message or Correspondence between the late D. of Monmouth and me, I call God to witness I have neither wrote nor sent Letter or Message to him, or received Letter or Message from him, this 3 years: I cannot tell what expectation he might have concerning me or any body else. It is very probable he might have expectation of assistance from some body, and that without such expectations he would not have made the attempt he did: But, my Lords, all that is nothing to me, I had no correspondence either by Letters or Messages with him, so that all that has been said upon that point of his expectations, and what he declared, I must give the same answer to that I gave to the Evidence about Jones's Message, That admitting it to be true, he did declare so, yet, no proof being made of an actual correspondence, it is no more but only an intention in him to draw men into Commission of Treason; and if that be allow'd for proof of guilt, I must repeat it again, there's no man can be innocent.

Upon the whole matter, my Lord, I must leave my Case to the consideration of your Lordships: I am not Master of so much Law or Rhetorick as the Kings Council, to plead in my own Cause, and I have had but little time to recollect and apply my defence to my accusation, but I hope what Evidence I have offered has given your Lordships full satisfaction that I am not guilty of what I stand charged with.

And after all that has been said, my Lords, I would beg your Lordships to consider this, that if in case I were guilty of these things, and were conscious to my self of having been engaged in an Affair of this nature, can any man imagine I could have been so hardy as to have surrendered my self upon the Kings Proclamation, nay, if I with those other two Gentlemen that he has named, had had any transactions of this kind, with such a Fellow as he has been made appear to be by his Neighbours (that must needs be thought a man of no Faith, because of no Reputation, tho' he gives himself a great Character as a man of great Interest, of wonderful dispatch and dexterity in the management of such matters) so as at first sight to put this large confidence in him; Can it be imagined I so little regarded my own Life and all that is dear to me, as to have surrendered my self, were it not that I was certain of my own innocence and integrity: Life it self, my Lords, is to be preferred above all things but Honour and Innocence; And Job saith, Skin for skin and all that a man hath will he give for his life, and why should I be presumed to have so little a value for it, as voluntarily to deliver up my self to destruction, had I been conscious that there was any one, who could really testify any thing that could hurt me.

Besides, My Lords, this very Fellow Saxon is but one Evidence, and how far you will believe him, I must submit it to you, but surely one Witness will never be sufficient to convict a man of Treason, tho' thousands of hear-says, and such trivial trivial circumstances be tacked to it, especially when they are tacked to an Evidence, which I dare say your Lordships are far from thinking it deserves any Credit.

My Lords, I desire your leave to ask this one Question; Would not any of your Lordships think himself in a bad condition as to his Fortune, if he could produce no better Evidence to prove his Title to his Estate than what has been produced against me this day to take away my Life? and if such Evidence as this would not be sufficient to support a Title to an Estate, certainly it can never be thought sufficient to deprive a man of Life, Honour, Estate, and all.

My Lords, I am not the only Man that has been or may be falsely accused; God knows how soon the misfortune of a False Accusation may fall to the Lot of any of your Lordships; I pray God it never may, but since that may happen, I question not, but your Lordships will be very cautious, how by an easy Credulity you give encouragement to such a wickedness: For Knights of the Post will not end in my Tryal if they prosper in their Villany, and perhaps it may come home to some of your Lordships, if such practices be encouraged, as I cannot but firmly believe they will not.

My Lords, the Eyes of all the Nation are upon your Proceedings this day; Nay I may say, your Lordships are now Judging the cause of every man in England, that shall happen to come under like Circumstances with my Self at any time hereafter: For accordingly as you judge of me now, just so will inferior Courts be directed to give their Judgments in like Cases in time to come.

Your Lordships very well know, Blood once spilt can never be gathered up agen, and therefore unless the Case be very clear against me, you I am sure will not hazard the shedding of my blood upon a doubtful Evidence: God Almighty is a God of Mercy and Equity: Our Law, the Law of England, is a Law of Equity and Mercy, and both God and the Law require from your Lordships Tendernefs in all Cases of Life and Death, and if it should be indifferent, or but doubtful to your Lordships (which upon the Proofs that I have made, I cannot believe it can be) whether I am innocent or guilty, both God and the Law require you to acquit me.

My Lords, I leave my Self, my Cause and all the Consequences of it with your Lordships; And I pray the All-Wise the Almighty God direct you in your Determination.

Lord High Steward. Have you any thing more to say, My Lord?

Lord Delamere. No, My Lord.

Lord High Steward. Then Mr. Attorney, and you that are of the Kings Council, What have you to say more?

Mr. Soll. General. May it please your Grace, and you my Noble Lords the Peers of my Lord Delamere, the Prisoner at the Bar.

The Evidence that hath been given against this Noble Lord is of two-Natures, part of it is positive Proof, and part is circumstantial, and though it be allowed that there must be two Witnesses in Cases of Treason, and that Circumstances tho never so strong, and sufficient to fortify one positive Proof, do not nor can make a second positive Witness; Yet I crave leave to say, that there may be Circumstances so strong and cogent, so violent and necessary to fortify a positive Testimony, that will in Law amount to make a second Witness such as the Law requires.

My Lords, I do not say every Circumstance will do it, but such as is necessarily and violently tending to the same thing that was positively proved. As for Example,

If a Man comes and Swears against another that he said he will go immediately and kill the King, and another Man that did not hear those words, comes and testifies his lying in wait, that circumstance of lying in wait, that was an action indifferent in it self, yet, when applyed to the positive Proof, will be a second Witness to satisfy the Law, which requires two Witnesses in Treason.

I must confess, my Lords, when we will make Circumstances to be a second Evidence they must be such as are necessarily tending to fortify the positive Evidence that was given by the single Witness: Now whether that be so in this Case, I must, as becomes me, leave to your Lordships Consideration: It is not my business to carry the Evidence further than it will go, and I am sure it is not my duty to let it lose any of its weight; and if it have not that force it ought to have, I should be to blame, as, not having done what belongs to me to do: I will therefore state the Fact to your Lordships plainly as it stands upon the Proof, and submit the whole to your Lordships Determination.

My Lords, Our positive Proof with which I crave leave to begin, is but by one single Witness, and that is Saxon, and his Evidence is this, that being in Cheshire where he lives, he was sent for about the 3^d or 4th of June last to my Lord Delamere's House at Mere, and there he was brought into a lower Room, where he saw my Lord Delamere, Sir Robert Cotton, and Mr. Crew Offey: That my Lord Delamere told him he had received a Message lately by one Jones, that was sent from the Duke of Monmouth, whereby he understood that the Duke would speedily be in England, and that they must provide Men and Arms to assist him when he came; That he was a Man recommended to them by my Lord Brandon, and that upon his recommendation they had thought fit to intrust him in the matter, and withal told him, they were to raise 40000 l. and 10000 Men in that County: He tells you likewise, these Gentlemen gave him 11 Guineas and 5 l. in Silver to go of an Errand for them to the Duke of Monmouth, which he undertook to do, and hired a Horse to that purpose.

This, my Lords, is the positive Proof, and this, I must acknowledge, standing single and by it self, will make but one Witness; but whether the Circumstances that have been offered to your Lordships by the other Witnesses, be such violent Circumstances as necessarily tend to fortify and support that positive Evidence, and so will supply the defect of a second Witness, is the next question that I come to consider, and I shall take them into consideration in the same order that the Evidence was delivered.

The first Step, my Lords, that was made as to any Evidence that toucheth this Noble Lord at the Bar, was what was testified by my Lord Gray, for as to the other part of the Evidence that related to the Conspiracy in general, I need not trouble your Lordships with the repetition of it (that there was such an one is notoriously known) known) but I say that part of the Evidence in his History of the Conspiracy, which my Lord Gray brought home to my Lord Delamere was this,

That upon the first Meetings and Consultations, it was resolved upon, That the Duke of Monmouth should go into Cheshire to make an Interest there, and among the Persons that he was directed to go to, and to apply to for advice there, as Persons fit to be trusted, this Noble Lord was one.

That upon the Duke of Monmouth's Return out of Cheshire, he did give his Confederates here in Town an Account, how well he had been received, and that he liked all things very well there: This my Lords is the first Circumstance that has been offered to you, to shew that he had a Confidence in my Lord Delamere, as a Principal Support of his Designs at that very time.

The next thing that we offer, is this Message of Jones's, and for that, our Evidence has fully and plainly made it out to your Lordships, that Jones did go over into Holland, and his Business there was an Errand from Disney and Major Wildman, and the Confederates here. The effect of his Message was, That it was their Opinion, That the Duke of Monmouth should go for Scotland and joyn with my Lord Argyle; but upon the Receipt of the Message, he being angry, said, it was too late for such a Message now, and he would come into England, for he was ready to Sail, and thereupon he did send this same Jones back again into England upon a Message, to inform the Lords and others of his Party, among whom my Lord Delamere was one, that he would have them betake themselves into their several Countries, and not stay to be taken or clap'd up here, for that, he did understand, was the design; and this Message was delivered in Writing (now that the Duke of Monmouth did write a Note and give it to Jones, is verified by my Lord Gray's Testimony too) and this Sealed up, and he was not to open it till he came to Sea, and when he did open it, he found it containing a Signification of the Place where he was to Land, and where he was to Rendezvous, which was Taunton, and who were the Persons that were to have Notice of it, among whose Names we find my Lord Delamere's to be one; but he likewise tells you, he was not the Man that was to carry the Message to these Persons, but he was to deliver it to Matthews or Wildman, and they were to transmit it to the other Persons.

He tells you likewise, that when he came to Town, which was the 27th of May, he met neither with Matthews nor Major Wildman; whereupon being at a loss what he should do with his Message, for want of those other Persons, he acquainted Disney, that was Executed, with his Errand, who promised to take care that it should be delivered.

This, my Lords, is all Jones's Evidence, for Jones does not say that he himself acquainted, or that Disney did acquaint my Lord Delamere with the Message.

But here my Lords, is the main Circumstance that renders the matter suspicious, That very Night that Jones came to Town, and Disney being acquainted with the Message, had undertaken to get it delivered, does my Lord Delamere at Ten of the Clock at Night go out of Town, in the Company of two Friends under the Disguise of the Name of Brown, and a Bye Road, and so goes down to his own House in Cheshire; This I say, is the Circumstance that renders the thing suspicious.

Now my Lords, if we do prove by such sufficient Evidence, as may make the matter manifest to you, that my Lord Delamere had Notice of Jones's Message (for upon that Point the Case will turn, whether he had Notice such a Message was brought, that such things were in agitation, such Preparations made, and that they were all to go into the Country) then I say, his going down is a violent Presumption, he had an intent to comply with the Message, and joyn in the Design.

But now, my Lords, comes the Question; the main Question, How is it made out that he had Notice, Jones brought such a Message?

Jones indeed, my Lords, does not say that he himself imparted it to him, or that Disney told him he had Communicated it, but I think there is another Witness, and that is Storey, who saith, that Brand, one that knew of the Message, did acquaint him, that my Lord had received it at the Coffee-House, and that Night went out of Town.

It is true my Lords, this is but a Hear-say, but that which followed being matter of Fact, my Lord's going out of Town that Night, so late in the Night, and in such an unusual suspicious manner, gives more Credit to the Relation, than a bare Hear-say could have of it self.

For unless there be some good account given of my Lords thus going out of Town, it is a kind of necessary Presumption, that he was acquainted with the Message, part of which was, that he should go out of Town; and if so, it can have no other Construction, with Submission, than to be in pursuance of, and complying with the Directions that that Message brought him from the Duke of Monmouth.

My Lords, to carry this a little further, there were two Witnesses produced that went out of Town with him; they seem indeed unwillingly to give their Evidence, but I shall faithfully repeat what Testimony they gave: Their Names were Vaux and Edlin.

Vaux he saith he met my Lord Delamere at the Rummer-Tavern in Queen-street the 26th day of May, which was the day before Jones came to Town, and that then he appointed to go out of Town the next day, which was the 27th, and accordingly he did go.

Edlin he saith, he met Vaux at the Custom-House upon the 27th of May in the Morning, and being desired by him to go with him out of Town he did so, and there was with him a Gentleman whose Name was Brown, and who now appears to be my Lord Delamere; they went in Company with him as far as Hitchin, where they left him upon Thursday the 28th at Noon.

This Evidence is produced to shew, that my Lord did go out of Town at that time, and in that manner as has been alledged, and that these Persons went with him to conduct him a private way that he should not go the common Road. Your Lordships will consider what Answer hath been given to this, and what account my Lord Delamere has given of himself.

Another thing my Lords, that renders this matter suspicious, is the Name which my Lord was pleased to assume to disguise himself by, it being a Name by which the Party use to call call my Lord in their Discourses of him; and to prove that, we have likewise produced two Witnesses, Babington and Paunceford.

Babington, he says, That in their Consultations there were Discourses of my Lord Delamere under the Name of Brown, and once at a Tavern when my Lord Delamere was named by one in the Company, he was presently caught up for it, and replied to, You mean Mr. Brown; and so it seems that was the Canting Name under which they discoursed of my Lord Delamere.

The other Witness Paunceford, he tells you, That being at Disney's House, and concerned with him in the Printing the late Duke of Monmouth's Declarations (for the printing of which, Disney was Executed) one Lock came for some of those Declarations for Mr. Brown, and they were to be sent into Cheshire: so that though your Lordships observe the Witness saith, some body else was called by the Name of Brown, yet you have had no account given you, that there was any other Brown in Cheshire.

It is true indeed, my Lords, that these are only things that Disney said, and Lock said; But I must take leave to say, it is very suspicious, that if my Lord went out of Town into Cheshire under the Name of Brown, and some Persons shall on the behalf of Brown come for Declarations to be sent into Cheshire, and my Lord commonly in that Party go by the Name of Brown, that those Declarations were for my Lord, and that will be a great Evidence of his Correspondence with Monmouth.

But I confess, my Lords, all this while our Proof is Circumstantial, and indeed there is no positive Proof but that of Saxon, and in him our Proof must center, for without him I must acknowledge nothing that has been offered will be Proof against my Lord upon this Indictment, for bare Circumstances and bare Suspicions will be no Proof against any Man, but such as are violent and necessary, and those joyned to a positive Proof, such as the Law requires.

Now then, my Lords, I come to the Consideration of what weight and stress is to be laid upon this positive Evidence of Saxon: And here I must confess there are objections made to this Testimony, to which I cannot readily give an Answer; for Saxon has Sworn, that he was there at such a time, and that he was sent for and entertained as a Person recommended by my Lord Brandon, as fit to be intrusted with the Secret, and capable of being employed to stir up the Country, in order to the prosecution of a Design they had on foot to raise a Rebellion, and he does Charge Sir Robert Cotton and Mr. Crew Offley to have been there at the same time.

The Evidence, my Lord, that has been produced to falsifie this positive Witness, in the Point of Sir Robert Cotton's being there, has been by or five or six Witnesses, who testify Sir Robert Cotton's being in Town, and not elsewhere from the 10th of April to the latter end of July; and I do not see what we have to say in answer to their Testimony; I must agree the Proof to be full in that Point, and if the Evidence they give be true, I cannot say that Saxon's Evidence can be true in that Point.

Likewise as to Mr. Offley, Sir Willoughby Aston and others have testified, that he was not at my Lord Delamere's at the time Saxon speaks of: For he gives you an account where he was every day from the 26th of May to the 4th of June, and his own Servants bring him to his own House, upon the 4th of June in the Evening, which is quite another way than from Sir Willoughby Aston's to my Lord Delamere's; If this likewise be true, what Saxon says cannot be true, I must agree to it.

There is another thing that is offered on my Lord Delamere's part, that he was himself in Town at that time that Saxon says he was at Mere; But here indeed the matter seems to be a little more strange and dubious, that my Lord should make so much hast down, as to go out late at Night, and so cautiously as to go by a wrong Name, and yet to ride to Town again the Post-way to be here just the 3d of June, when Saxon swears he was in Cheshire.

I must confess there is the Proof of his two Brothers that say, they saw him in Town the 3d and 4th of June: There is likewise some account given of his going out of Town, that it was upon a Message received from his Mother; that his Child in the Country was Sick, and indeed he did go a By-way and change his Name, for fear of a Warrant in a Messengers Hands that was out against him to apprehend him.

Now, my Lords, I do not hear any thing that has been offered, that there was any such Warrant, or any discourse to ground that apprehension upon; my Lord had the first and only apprehension of a Warrant; but upon what Reasons he himself best knows: This apprehension made him go out of Town so privately, he says, because he would not be prevented of seeing his sick Child.

But how comes it to pass that my Lord makes such a speedy Return? By the Proofs it appears he did not get there till Sunday Night, and upon the Tuesday Morning comes Post for London.

The account that he gives of that, is this, his hast was to see another Child, that was here sick in Town: For he had received an express from his Wife upon the Monday to acquaint him, that the Coast was clear, and there was no Warrant out against him, but if he intended to see his Child alive, he must make hast up to Town; and accordingly upon the Tuesday Morning early he sets out, and upon the Wednesday in the Evening is here in Town again.

But, with submission, my Lords, there is no good Account given by this noble Lord, what reason there was for so many Post-Journeys backward and forward, as, had been testified, he to have made within a very little compass of time; for besides this of his return Post upon the 2d of June, there is only an Answer given to one of the rest, which is, that of the 5th of May, when he saith he went to take possession of the Land that he held by a Lease then renewed to him by the Bishop, which being of some Value and Consideration to his Lordship, and the Bishop being sick, he thought it necessary to go down Post himself, and would not be content to receive Livery by Attornment. This is the only answer that is given to all those times of his riding Post that have been given in Evidence.

These are matters of Suspicion that are offered to your Lordships, but I confess matters of Suspicion only, unless clear, positive, probable Proof be joyned with them, will not weigh with your Lordships to convict a Man of High-Treason where two Witnesses are required. But whether these matters of Suspicion be such violent and necessary Presumptions as tend to fortify the positive Testimony, I must leave that to the Consideration of your Lordships.

L. H. Steward. You do not call any more Witnesses then I perceive.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, it has not been usual of late, for those who have sat in the place where I now am, upon those Occasions to give your Lordships any trouble in repeating or observing upon the Evidence: In this Case the Evidence that hath been given has been very long, and it would be too great a Presumption in me, should I have any manner of doubt in the least, that either your Lordships have not well observed it, or the learned Council for the King have been defective in collecting or remarking upon it, so as to need my Assistance.

But my Lords, I confess there is something I cannot omit taking notice of, not for your Lordships sakes; but for the sake of this numerous and great Auditory, that one Mistake in point of Law might not go unrectified, which seemed to be urged with some earnestness by the Noble Lord at the Bar, that there is a necessity in point of Law, that there should be two positive Witnesses to convict a Man of Treason.

He seemed to lay a great stress upon that, but certainly his Lordship is under a great mistake; as to the Law in that Point; for without all doubt, what was urged in answer to this Objection by that learned Gentleman that concluded for the King, is true, There may be such other substantial Circumstances joyned to one Positive Testimony, that, by the Opinion of all the Judges of England, several times has been adjudged and held to be a sufficient Proof.

As for the purpose, in this Case, suppose your Lordships, upon the Evidence that has been given here this day, should believe Saxon swears true, who is a positive Witness, and shall then likewise believe that there was that Circumstance of Jones's coming over from Holland with such a Message upon the 27th of May (which is directly sworn in Evidence, you are the Judges of that Evidence) and what the other Witnesses have sworn likewise, and is not denied by my Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, that he went out of Town that Night, changed his Name, and went an indirect By-Road, certainly these Circumstances if your Lordships be satisfied he went for that purpose do necessarily knit the positive Testimony of Saxon, and amount to a second Witness.

That is, if Saxon's positive Testimony be true, then suppose all these Circumstances that gave the Jealousie do make up a strong Presumption to join with the positive Evidence of Saxon, then you have two Witnesses as the Law requires, especially if the answer given by the Prisoner to those Circumstances be not sufficient (as the slender account he gives of his so frequent Journeys in so short a compass of time) but that there still remains some Suspicion; I could have wished indeed, that matter might have been made somewhat more clear; that no shadow of Suspicion might remain.

Your Lordships are Judges: And if you do not believe the Testimony of Saxon, whose Testimony hath been so positively contradicted by divers Witnesses of Quality, the Prisoner ought to be acquitted of this Indictment: if your Lordships please, you may go together and consider of it.

Lords. Ay, withdraw, withdraw.

Then the Peers withdrew in their order according to their Precedency, with the Serjeant at Arms before them.

L. H. Steward. Lieutenant of the Tower, take your Prisoner from the Bar.

The Prisoner was taken into the little Room appointed for him at the Entrance into the Court.

The Peers staid out about half an hour, and then returned in the same Order that they went out in, and seated themselves in their places as before.

Cl. Crown. Serjeant at Arms, take the Appearance of the Peers. Lawrence Earl of Rochester Lord High Treasurer of England.

He stood up uncovered and answered.

Lord Treasurer. Here.

And so did all the rest.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, are you agreed of your Verdict?

Lords. Yes.

The Lord High Steward took their Verdict Seriatim, beginning with the puisne Peer in this manner:

L. H. Steward. How say you my Lord Churchill, is Henry Baron of Delamere guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted and hath been Arraigned, or not guilty?

The Lord Churchill stood up uncovered, and laying his Hand on his Breast answered, Lord Churchill. Not guilty upon my Honour.

And so did all the rest of the Peers.

L. H. Steward. Lieutenant of the Tower, bring your Prisoner to the Bar.

The Prisoner was brought again to the Bar.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I am to acquaint you that my Noble Lords your Peers, having considered of the Evidence that hath been given, both against you and for you, after they were withdrawn, have returned and agreed of their Verdict, and by that Verdict have unanimously declared, that you are not guilty of the High-Treason, whereof you have been indicted, and this day Arraigned, and therefore I must discharge you of it.

L. Delamere. May it please your Grace, I shall pray to Almighty God, that he will please to give me a Heart to be Thankful to him for his Mercy, and my Lords for their Justice; and I pray God deliver their Lordships, and all honest Men, from wicked and malicious, lying and false Testimony; I pray God bless His Majesty and long may he Reign.

L. H. Steward. And I pray God continue to him his Loyal Peers, and all other his Loyal Subjects.

Cl. Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes. My Lord High-Steward of England, his Grace straightly willeth and commandeth all manner of Persons here present to depart hence in God's Peace and the Kings, for his Grace my Lord High Steward of England now dissolves his Commission.

God save the King.

At which words his Grace taking the white Staff from the Usher of the Black Rod, held it over his own Head and broke it in two: Thereby dissolving the Court.

And further we do give full Power and Authority unto you, or any three or more of you as is aforesaid, whereof you the said Lord Chancellour to be one, by Virtue hereof, and in like Manner and Form as is aforesaid, to enquire, hear, determine, and punish all Incest, Adulteries, Fornications, Outrages, Misbehaviours, and disorders in Marriage, and all other Grievances, great Crimes or Offences which are punishable, or reformable by the Ecclesiastical Laws of this our Realm, committed or done or hereafter to be committed or done, in any place exempt or not exempt, within this our Realm, according to the Tenor of the Ecclesiastical Laws in that behalf: Granting you, or any three or more of you as is aforesaid, whereof you the said Lord Chancellour to be one, full Power and Authority to order and award such Punishment to every such Offender, by Censures of the Church, or other lawful Ways, as is aforesaid; and further we do give full Power and Authority unto you, or any three or more of you, as is aforesaid, whereof you the said Lord Chancellour to be one, all and every Offender and Offenders in any of the Premises, and also all such, as by you, or any three or more of you as is aforesaid, whereof you the said Lord Chancellour to be one, one, shall seem to be suspected Persons in any of the Premises, and them to examine, touching every or any of the Premises which you shall object against them; and to proceed against them, and every of them, as the nature and quality of the Offence, or suspicion in that behalf shall require. And also to call all such Witnesses, or any other Person or Persons that can inform you concerning any of the Premises, as you, or any three or more of you as is aforesaid, whereof you the said Lord Chancellor to be one, and them, and every of them, to examine upon their corporal Oaths, for the better tryal and opening of the Truth of the Premises, or any part thereof. And if you, or any three or more of you as is aforesaid, whereof you the said Lord Chancellor to be one, shall find any Person or Persons whatsoever obstinate or disobedient in their Appearance before you, or any three or more of you, as is aforesaid, whereof you the said Lord Chancellor to be one, at your Calling and Commandment, or else not in obeying, or in not accomplishing your Orders, Decrees and Commandments, or any thing touching the Premises or any part thereof, or any other Branch or Clause contained in this Commission, that then you, or any three or more of you, as is aforesaid, whereof you the said Lord Chancellor to be one, shall have full Power and Authority to punish the same Person and Persons so offending, by Excommunication, Suspension, Deprivation, or other Censures Ecclesiastical; and when any Persons shall be convicted or prosecuted before you as aforesaid, for any of the Causes above expressed, at the instance and suit of any Persons prosecuting the Offence in that behalf, that then you, or any three or more of you as is aforesaid, whereof you the said Lord Chancellor to be one, shall have full Power and Authority to award such Costs and Expences of the Suit, as well to and against the Party, as shall prefer or prosecute the said Offence, as to and against any Party or Parties that shall be convicted according as their Causes shall require, and to you in Justice shall be thought reasonable. And further our Will and Pleasure is, That you assume our Well beloved Subject William Bridgman Esquire, one of the Clerks of our Council, or his sufficient Deputy or Deputies in that behalf to be your Register, whom we do by these Presents depute to that Effect, for the Registering of all your Acts, Decrees and Proceedings, by virtue of this our Commission; and that in like manner, you, or any three or more of you, whereof you the said Lord Chancellor to be one, by your Discretion shall appoint one or more Messenger or Messengers, or other Officer or Officers necessary and convenient to attend upon you for any Service in this behalf. Our Will and express Commandment also is, That there shall be two Paper Books indented and made, the one to remain with the said Register, or his sufficient Deputy or Deputies, the other with such Person, and in such places as you the said Commissioners, or any Three or more of you, whereof you the said Lord Chancellor to be one, shall in your Discretions think most fit and meet; in both which Books shall be fairly entered all the Acts, Decrees and Proceedings made or to be made, by virtue of this our Commission. And whereas our Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and divers Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, Colledges, Grammar Schools, and other Ecclesiastical Incorporations, have been erected, founded, and endowed by several of our Progenitors, Kings and Queens of this Realm, and some other by the Charity and Bounty of some of their Subjects, as well within our Universities as other Parts and Places, the Ordinances, Rules and Statutes whereof be either imbraced, lost, corrupted, or altogether imperfect. We do therefore give full Power and Authority to you, or any Five or more of you, of whom

In Witness, &c.

The King's Letter.

Dated Monday, July the 14th.
Delivered at Fulham on Thursday, being the 17th of the same June in the Afternoon, by Mr. Atterbury the Messenger.

James R.

Right Reverend Father in God; We greet you well.
Whereas We have been inform'd, and are fully satisfied, that Dr. John Sharp, Rector of the Parish Church of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, and in your Diocese, notwithstanding our late Letter to the most Reverend Fathers in God the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, and our Directions concerning Preachers, given at our Court at Whitehall, the 15th of March, 1685. in the second year of our Reign; yet he, the said Dr. John Sharp, in Contempt of the said Orders, hath in some of the Sermons he hath since preached, presumed to make unbecoming Reflections, and to utter such Expressions as were not fit or proper for him; endeavouring thereby to beget in the Minds of his Hearers an Evil Opinion of Us and Our Government, by insinuating Fears and Jealous-ies to dispose them to Discontent, and to lead them into Disobedience and Rebellion. These are therefore to require and command you immediately upon Receipt hereof, forthwith to Suspend him from further Preaching in any Parish-Church or Chappel in your Diocese, until he has given Us Satisfaction, and Our further Pleasure be known herein. And for so doing this shall be your Warrant: And so We bid you heartily Farewell.

Given at our Court at Windsor, the 14th Day of June, 1686. in the Second Year of Our Reign.

By His Majesties Command.

Sunderland.

The Bishop of London's Answer.

Sent by Dr. Sharp to the Earl of Sunderland, then at Hampton-Court, upon Friday June 18. who could have no Answer.

To the Right Honourable the Earl of Sunderland, Lord President, &c.

My Lord,

I always have, and shall count it my Duty to obey the King in whatever Commands he lays upon me, that I can perform with a safe Conscience: But in this, I humbly conceive, I am obliged to proceed according to Law; and therefore it is impossible for me to comply; because, tho' His Majesty commands me only to execute his Pleasure, yet in the Capacity I am to do it, I must Act as a Judge; and your Lordship knows no Judge condemns any Man before he has Knowledge of the Cause, and has cited the Party.
However, I sent to Mr. Dean, and acquainted him with His Majesties Displeasure, whom I find so ready to give all Reasonable Satisfaction, that I have thought fit to make him the Bearer of this Answer, from him that will never be unfaithful to the King, nor otherwise than,

My Lord, your Lordships

most humble Servant;

H. London.

On Sunday after Dr. Sharp carried a Petition to Windsor, which was not admitted to be Read. Which is as follows.

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty,

The Humble Petition of John Sharp, Clerk,

Sheweth,

That nothing is so afflictive to Your Petitioner, as his Unhappiness to have incurred your Majesties Displeasure, which he is so sensible of, that ever since your Majesty was pleased to give notice of it, he hath forborn all publick Exercise of his Function, and still continues so to do.

Your Petitioner can with great Sincerity affirm, that ever since he hath been a Preacher, he hath faithfully endeavoured to do the best Service he could in his Place and Station, as well to the late King, your Royal Brother, as your Majesty, both by preaching and otherwise.

And so far he hath always been from venting any thing in the Pulpit tending to Schism or Faction, or any way to the Disturbance of your Majesties Government, that he hath upon all Occasions in his Sermons, to the utmost of his Power, set himself against all sorts of Doctrines and Principles that look that way: And this he is so well assured of, that he cannot but apprehend that his Sermons have been very much misrepresented to Your Majesty.

But if in any Sermon of his, any Words or Expressions have unwarily slipped from him, that have been capable of such Constructions, as to give Your Majesty Cause of Offence, as he solemnly professes he had no ill Intention in those Words or Expressions, so he is very sorry for them, and resolves for the future to be so careful in the Discharge of his Duty, that Your Majesty shall have Reason to believe him to be Your most faithful Subject.

And therefore he earnestly Prayeth, that Your Majesty out of Your Royal Grace and Clemency, would be pleased to lay aside the Displeasure
You have conceived against Your Humble Petitioner, and restore him to that Favour which the rest of the Clergy enjoy under Your Majesties Gracious Government.

So shall Your Petitioner ever Pray, &c.

In the Council-Chamber at White-Hall, &c.

Mercurii 4 die Augusti, 1686.

Present in Council, Lord Chancellour, Lord Bishop of Durham, Lord Treasurer, Lord Bishop of Rochester, Lord President, Lord Chief Justice Herbert.

Upon my Lord Bishops appearing before them, according to a Summons sent unto him, the Lord Chancellour Jeffreyes began, viz.

Lord Chancellour. MY Lord Bishop of London, the Lords here present have received Orders from the King to inspect all Ecclesiastical Affairs and Persons; and he hath commanded us to cite you before us; and I desire you would give a positive and direct answer to it: What was the reason you did not suspend Dr. Sharp, when the King commanded, and sent you express Order so to do, and told you what it was for, viz. for Preaching Seditiously, and against the Government.

Lord Bishop. I have received such an Order; and if what was done in that affair was done amiss, and contrary to my Duty, it was my ignorance and inadvertency, and not a wilful fault: I have been always ready to express my duty to his Majesty, and if in this particular I have not complied, it was because, as I was told, I could not. I was not so shallow as to go on my own Head, but took the best advice I could get: I consulted those whose business it is more perfectly to understand these proceedings, all told me I could not legally do it, but by way of Citation and hearing him.

Lord Chanc. Ignorantia Juris non excusat; you ought to have known the Law, and it was a wonder you did not: The King is to be obey'd, and if you have any reason to shew in this particular, we are ready to hear you.

Lord Bishop. I knew not what would be laid to my Charge, and therefore was not provided to make such a Defence as I might have done; but if your Lordships will give me a Copy of your Commission, and a Copy of my Charge, and allow me some time, I will endeavour to give your Lordships satisfaction.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, I would not misinterpret your Words, but shall desire you to explain their meaning: If by desiring a Copy of our Commission, you design to quarrel with the Jurisdiction and Legality of the Court, I have another answer for you; but till I know your meaning here my answer is, that no Copy of the Commission can be granted, and it is unreasonable to desire it, it is upon Record, all the Coffee-houses have it for a penny a piece, and I doubt not but your Lordship has seen it.

Lord Bishop. I have never seen it; nor have I desir'd it for such ends to dispute the legality of it: But your Lordship knows it is a thing altogether new to this Generation, and it may be something may be found in it whereby I may be instructed and directed in my answer, and behaviour in the matter: But, my Lord, if I may not have a Copy of it, will your Lordships please I may either read, or hear it read.

Lord Chanc. That is a thing I cannot grant of my self, I must ask my Lords Commissioners Judgment; and if you will be pleased to withdraw you shall hear it.

The Bishop and all the Company withdrew for a quarter of an Hour, then returning, the Lord Chancellour said,

My Lord, all the Commissioners are of opinion that your Request is not to be granted, and that it is unreasonable: Might every one that appears here challenge the sight of our Commission, and the Reading of it, all our time will be spent in the Reading, and we have something else to do.

The Proceedings of Courts in this kind are never by Libel and Articles: sapientem succinctim ore tenus, by word of Mouth only; and it is a short Question I ask, Why you did not obey the King?

Lord Bishop. It is a short Question, but requires more words to Answer it. I pray your Lordships to consider I am Peer, a Bishop, and have a Publick Trust, though unworthy, under a Publick Character; and I would behave my self as becomes one in these Capacities.

Lord Chanc. We know very well your Lordships Quality and Character, and are willing to shew all due respect to your Lordship, but yet we must have a due regard for the King and Government too: His Majesty must not be neglected.

Lord Bishop. My Lord, I suppose there is no Appeal from the Court; and when a Man is to be Condemned at one Bar, and is in danger of being knockt down at one blow, you would think it unreasonable he should not have some time to make his Defence.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, I suppose their Lordships will be willing to grant some time: I pray what time does your Lordship desire?

Lord Bishop. My Lord, it is the Assize time, and most of the Council, upon some occasion or other, (either business or diversion) are in the Country: I pray you, my Lord, I may have till the beginning of the Term.

Lord Chanc. Hah! That's unreasonable: His Majesties business cannot admit of such delays; methinks a Week should be enough: What say your Lordships, Is not a Week enough?

The Commissioners being asked, signified by the Chancellour that a Week was enough.

Lord Bishop. Since your Lordship will grant no more, I will ask no more.

Lord Chanc. Adjourn until Monday next, the Ninth of August, 1686.

Upon

Upon the Tenth day his Lordship came, attended with his Nephew, the Earl of Northampton, his Brother in Law Sir John Nicholas, and his Brother Sir Francis Compton, &c.

There being present in Council the same as before in the same Proceedings.

Lord Chanc. MY Lord, we are here to hear your Reasons.

Lord Bishop. My Lord, I have lost no time for preparing my Answer, but am not so ready as I might have been, because I could not light of the Commission your Lordship told me was upon Record, and in every Coffee-house, but imployed a whole Week to search for it, and could not have a sight of it until last Night; if your Lordship doubts the truth of this, I have the person ready to make Oath here of it.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, you are a person of Honour, and we will not question the truth of what you say, there needs no Oath: But my Lord I must tell you, that we will not admit of any quarrelling with our Commission, we are well assured of the legality of it, otherwise we would not be such Fools as to sit here.

Lord Bishop. My Lord, I have other Reasons why I desire a sight of your Commission; it may be it may not reach me, being a Peer and a Bishop; and it may be it may not reach this particular Case, and therefore I desire a sight of it, in regard I could not see it until the last Night. I have not had time to take advice what to answer; if your Lordship will not be satisfied, I must give such an answer as I have prepared, but it is my desire to have longer time for it.

Lord Chanc. Is this all you have to say?

Lord Bishop. This is the first thing: I do not desire to prolong the time, the necessity of the Case requiring it, the Council being out of Town in whom I think to confide.

Lord Chanc. If your Lordship will withdraw, we will give you an Answer.

He withdrew for a quarter of an Hour.

L. C. My Lord, as I formerly told you, we will not endure any quarrelling at our Commission; it will be an odd thing in us to give you time to pick holes in it, but we are willing to pay all due respect to your Lordship: What time do you require?

Lord Bishop. I shall submit to your Lordships; but I hope a fortnight will not be unreasonable.

Lord Chanc. Agreed: You shall have it until to Morrow fortnight in the Morning.

To which my Lord Chancellour added,

L. C. My Lord, when I told you our Commission was to be seen in every Coffee-house, I did not speak with any design to reflect on your Lordship, as if you were a hunter of Coffee-houses. I abhor'd the thoughts of it, and intended no more by it but that it was common in the Town.

Note, When the Bishop spake concerning the Commission, Sir Thomas Clarges spake with a loud Voice, saying, Well put, well put; my Lord speaks nothing but truth. There was also another Gentleman, Sir John Lowther, of Lincolnshire, who as he was coming away in the Crowd, said, There are some who have represented me as a Papist, but the contrary shall appear; I will not be afraid, nor ashamed, to Vindicate

Vol. III.

my Lord Bishops Cause, before the Commissioners themselves.

Tuesday, August 1686.

There being present in Council the same as in the former proceedings: The Lord Bishop attending, the proceedings were as follow.

Lord Chanc. MY Lord, we are now ready to hear your Lordships Answer.

Lord Bishop. My Lord, notwithstanding the time hath been very short, considering the weightiness of the matter, and the absence of many of the Learned Council; I have taken what advice I could, and have consulted those that are very Learned in the Laws. I hope there will be no Mis-interpretation of my Words, I do not intend any thing which is derogatory to the Kings Supremacy; that is undutiful to His Majesty, or Disrespectful to your Lordships. My Council tells me, that your proceedings in this Court, are directly contrary to the Statute Law, and are here to plead it if your Lordships will admit them.

Lord Chanc. We will neither hear your Lordship nor your Council in the matter; we are sufficiently satisfied of the legality of our Commission, as we often told you.

Lord Bishop. My Lord, I am a Bishop of the Church of England, and by all the Law in the Christian Church, in all Ages, and by the particular Law of this Land, I am, in case of offence, to be Tryed by my Metropolitan and Suffragans; I hope your Lordship will not deny the Right and Priviledge of Christian Bishops.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, you know our proceedings are according to what has been done formerly, and that we have an Original Jurisdiction; this is still questioning our Court.

Lord Bishop. It is partly.

Lord Chanc. Nay, it is absolutely so.

Lord Bishop. My Lord, I hope you will interpret every thing in your Commission in favour of the Person that is brought before you: I humbly conceive that your Commission doth not extend to the Crimes laid to my Charge, for you are to censure faults which are committed: This that I am accused of, was before the Date of your Commission.

Lord Chanc. I confess there is such a Clause; but those are general Clauses that take in things that are past, as well as those that are to come; hath your Lordship any thing more?

Lord Bishop. My Lords, protesting in my own Right, to the Laws of the Realm, as a Subject, and the Rights and Priviledges of the Church, as a Bishop, I shall, with your Lordships leave, give you my answer.

Which was accepted; and the Bishop withdrew, and left Dr. Sharp's Petition, which the King had refused to accept.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, we have read the Paper.

Lord Bishop. My Lords, it is Dr. Sharp's Petition to the King.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, be pleas'd to take it again, we are not concerned in it; will you please that your Lordships answer be read?

Lord Bishop. Yes, if your Lordship please. My Lord, I have this to say further, What I did

U u u u

in

in this matter was Jurisperitorum Concilio. I consulted my Council, who is the Judge of my Courts, as well as others; and the Law says, That what is done by the advice of Council, shall not be interpreted to be done maliciously, or obstinately. The Law, in this Case, requires, that if a Prince require a Judge to execute an order, which is not agreeable to the Law, he shall Rescribere & Reclamare Principi: Now, my Lord, I conceived I acted in this according to my Duty, for I wrote back to my Lord President, in as becoming words as I could; and acquainted him, that an Order to suspend before Citation and hearing the Person, is against Law, and expected his Majesties further pleasure.

In the next place, my Lords, I did in effect what the King commanded to be done, for I advised Dr. Sharp to forbear Preaching till His Majesty had received Satisfaction concerning him; and accordingly he hath forborn in my Diocess.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, will you have your Paper read?

Lord Bishop. Yes, if your Lordship please. Which contained the Kings Letter, and the Bishops answer thereto.

Lord Chanc. Hath your Lordship any more to say?

Lord Bishop. My Lord, I desire your Lordship would hear my Council, by whom you may have more clear and full Satisfaction concerning what I have said.

Whereupon the Bishop was desired to withdraw, and after half an Hour, he and his Council were called in; who were Drs. Oldish, Hodges, Price, and Newton. A brief Account of what they pleaded.

Dr. Oldish. My Lord, the question before your Lordship, is, whether the Bishop of London hath been Disobedient to the Kings Command; concerning which it must be considered,

First, What was commanded to be done.

Secondly, What he did in Obedience to it.

Thirdly, What Judgment ought to have been given by him.

It is apparent by the Letter, that the King did not take cognizance of the Cause, for the Words are (being inform'd) that Dr. Sharp, &c. so that it could not be an absolute Suspension, for that supposeth a Proof of the Crime charged upon him: Then let us consider the Words themselves:

That you Suspend him from Preaching. Now, my Lords, we have no such thing in our Laws, so that the meaning must be Silencing of him. Where there is an absolute Suspension, there ought to be Citation, form of Proceeding, Judgment and Decree; to act otherwise is contrary to the Law of God, of Nature, of all Nations in all Ages, and was never known in the World.

Lord Chanc. I am loth to Interrupt you, but I must tell you, this is an unnecessary Harrangue; we know that it was not an absolute Suspension, but the Question is, Whether the Bishop could Suspend him from Preaching?

Dr. Oldish. Then, my Lords, I have gained another Point; if it were only Silencing him, the Question is, Whether the Bishop did not execute the Kings Commands? I think he did, and in such a Method as is observed in our Courts,

When any eminent Person is accused, the Judges send to him by a Letter, and if he appears and complys with the Judges order, the Law is satisfied.

Judicium redditur in invitum non involentem: The Bishop did send for Dr. Sharp, shewed him the Kings Letter, advised him not to Preach till the King had received Satisfaction; in which he promised to observe his Lordships command, and hath not Preached to this day, so that His Majesties command was in effect fulfilled. My Lord, there is the like proceeding in the Common Law, for if an Attorney takes a Mans Word for his appearance, there lyes no Action against the Attorney.

Lord Chanc. Cujus contrarium: There lyes an Action of Escape against the Attorney —

Dr. Hodges. My Lords, the matter of fact hath been stated, and the Question is, Whether the Bishop hath been disobedient to the Kings Command? It appears that he has not: Because upon the receipt of his Majesties Letter, he requir'd the Doctor not to Preach, and he hath obeyed him in that which the King commanded. To suspend him the Bishop could not do, the Act of Suspension is a Judicial Act: The King writes to him as to a Bishop, to suspend as a Bishop and as a Judge, which could not be done without the hearing of the Cause. If the Prince sends to a Person that is not a Judge, that is only in a Ministerial Office, that Office is to execute his Commands: But when the King commands a Judge, he commands him to act as a Judge. This is no light matter the Doctor is accus'd of; it is for Preaching Sedition and Rebellion, which requires a severe Censure. And if the Bishop, as a Judge, had Suspended him, he had begun at the wrong end, for this had been Judgment before Process: In this Cause there ought to have been a Citation, our Books giving many Instances which would be too tedious to your Lordships — I will give this one: The Emperours proceedings against the King of Sicily, upon Information which he had received; and giving him no Citation, the King appealed to the Pope, who declared the Proceedings to be void; and that it was against the Law of Nature, which is above all positive Laws, to pass Sentence before Citation. This is the method of proceeding before all Courts, and I humbly conceive it is, and will be, the method of this Court; for otherwise, the Bishop need not to have been cited before you. The Bishop has done what was his Duty, he was bound to return his Reason to the King, why he did not do that which he commanded, and to expect his further answer; which was done. I affirm, that if a Prince, or a Pope, command a thing which is not lawful, it is the Duty of a Judge Rescribere; which is all he can do, Quoting his Author.

Dr. Price. The Question is ut supra: A Citation is Jure Gentium, and can never be taken away by any positive Command or Law whatsoever: The Bishop hath obeyed the King so far, as that he could not Rescribe, and expecting His Majesties further pleasure. If the Bishop could have Suspended him, it must have been done in Agnes; but in regard it was only silencing him, which was requir'd, it might be done in a private Room: The advice of a Bishop is in some sense an admonition, which is a Judicial dicial Act, and this was given by a Bishop, and obeyed by the Doctor.

Dr. Newton. My Lord, the Question is not ut supra, the Bishop hath not been disobedient. As in Nature no Man can be desired to do that which is impossible, so no Man can be obliged to do an unlawful Act. (Id non fit quod non legitime fit.) This Rule obliges all Men, at all places, and at all times. The charge against Dr. Sharp is of a very high Nature, and he desired to be heard before he was condemned.

My Lords, the Bishops are Custodes Canonum, and therefore must not break them themselves: I affirm, the Bishop was so far from being Disobedient, that he was Obedient to the King: For where he did Rescribere, and heard not the further pleasure of the King returned, he ought to conclude, the King was satisfied with what he had written, according to his Duty, and the King had altered his Commands. A Citation, as your Lordships have heard, is according to all Laws, in all Places; in all Judicial Acts; there is something to be done according to Law, and somewhat according to the Discretion of the Judges, and for that Reason as well as these, the Offenders ought to be cited before him; that which was in the Bishops power to do he hath done, and it was in effect what the King commanded to be done.

Lord Bishop. If through mistake I have erred in any circumstance, I am ready to beg His Majesties Pardon, and shall be ready to make any reparation I am capable.

The Bishop withdrew for half an Hour, then was called in.

Lord Chanc. We will be here again on Wednesday next, and I desire your Lordship to be here again about 10 in the Forenoon.

Lord Bishop. My Lord, I desire that care may be taken concerning the Minutes which are taken by the Clerks of what hath passed, and that I may not be misrepresented to the King by the mistake of the Pen-man.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, you need not fear it; I hope you have a better Opinion of us; there shall be no advantage taken by them or us.

Bishop Robt. There shall be no advantage taken, but all imaginable care taken concerning it.

Note, When the Councillors were Pleading, Dr. Pinfold, the Kings Advocate, stood at the Chancellors Elbow and took Notes; by which it was expected that he should make a Reply, but he said nothing; and 'tis supposed that he staid with the Council, when the Bishop withdrew, and gave them Reasons for his silence.

Die Lunæ, 6. Septemb. 1686.

There being present in Council the same as in the former proceedings.

Lord MY Lord, pray sit down: You were desired to appear this day to hear your Sentence, which (to prevent mistake) we have ordered to be put in writing.

Lord Bishop. My Lord, may I have leave to speak before Sentence is read?

Lord Chanc. My Lord, we have heard you and your Council already.

Then the following Instrument whereby the Bishop of London was Suspended, was, by the Commissioners order, read by Mr. Bridgman, their Lordships Register.

By His Majesties Commissioners for Ecclesiastical Affairs.

The Proceedings against the Vice-Chancellor and University of Cambridge. 3 Jac. 2.

ON the 9th. day of February, being Ashwednesday, came a Letter under His Majesties Signet Manual, dated the 7th of the same Month; the substance whereof, was, That hearing much in Commendation of one Alban Francis a Benedictine, the King was pleased to command the University, that they should admit him to the degree of Master of Arts, without administering to him any Oath or Oaths whatsoever, any Law or Statute, to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding, with which His Majesty was graciously pleas'd to dispence in the behalf of the said Alban Francis. On Monday the 21st the Vice Chancellor having summon'd a Congregation, read His Majesties Letter, purporting as before, and superscrib'd to our Trusty and well beloved Vice Chancellor of our University of Cambridge, to be communicated to the Senate there; on the Reading whereof the Senate, who made the best advantage they could of the Vice Chancellours delay in order to get advice, resolv'd to resist, their common and almost unanimous sence of the thing, and in a matter of such consequence and novel matter to interpose; accordingly there was a Paper, it is commonly call'd a Grace, the original Paper whereof I have seen drawn up in order to be put to the Vote of the House after the ordinary and usual way; but the constitution of that Body being such, that this must then of necessity have been first proposed to what we call the Head, which consists of six Persons, each of which has an Arbitrary Voice and Power, upon dislike to stop any proceedings finally, and hinder it being put to the House at all; this method was laid aside as impracticable upon that occasion, because Mr. Basset a declar'd Roman Catholick, and one that had openly asserted Mr. Francis's Cause, hapned to be one of the six who compose the Head for this Year; it was therefore presum'd, with great appearance of Reason, that he would put a bar to the proceedings, so the Grace not being suffered to be offered to the House, the Senates sence could never have been fully and particularly known thereupon.

This consideration constrain'd them to the use of another course, which was, without the formality of a Suffrage, voluntarily to testify their concurrence with the Vice Chancellor, and advise him to forbear the admitting Mr. Francis till the King had been Petitioned to revoke his Mandate; as soon as the Letter came to Town, the Vice Chancellor wrote a Letter to the Duke of Albemarle our Chancellor, to beg his Intercession with the King, which he returned word was tryed with none effect, but possibly such a body as the University concurring and signing a Petition, if that could be admitted, might prove better and more Successful. Now perhaps if every single Man present to the number perhaps of 150 or 200 should Address in Person to the Vice Chancellor, this might look tumultuary, and it was thought the more quiet, decent, and respectful way to send up their sence by Messengers from each House; to this purpose, Dr. Smoult Professor of Casuistical Divinity, was made choice of by the Non Regents, and Mr. Norris Fellow of Trinity Colledge by the Regents. The substance of what they delivered, was, That the House thought the admission of Mr. Francis without the usual Oaths, illegal and unsafe, and for that reason advis'd the King might be petition'd, in the doing which they were ready to joyn and make it their act. The Opinions were given freely to the two Messengers of each House, and the thing was so unanimously approved of, that the only Persons taking notice of it, were three Papists, and one or two besides; afterwards there was a Gentleman admitted Doctor of Physick, having first taken the Oaths; and the Esquire Beadles and Registers were sent to let Mr. Francis know, that the Senate were ready to admit him also, provided that he would swear as the Laws appointed; but he refused, insisting on the Kings dispensation: and this was the business of the first Meeting about this matter.

Immediately upon the Congregations breaking up, Mr. Francis took Horse for London, to represent at White-Hall what had been done, and the same Afternoon the Heads met in the Consistory, to consult what Letters should be sent, and to whom; they agreed upon one to the Duke of Albemarle, and another to the Earl of Sunderland, being the Secretary of State, through whose hands the Mandate pass'd: An Esquire Beadle was dispatched presently to London, who after having waited on the Duke of Albemarle, endeavoured several times to get access to the Lord Sunderland, but could not; at last having sent in his Letter, the main whereof was a most humble Submission to His Majesty, with very Solemn and unfeigned Protestations, that what was now done, proceeded from no Principle of Disobedience and Stubbornness, but a Conscientious sence of our Obligation to Laws and Oaths, and a respectful intimation that we were ready to Petition the King that it might be admitted, but not daring to approach Him without some significations, that it would be acceptable, we applyed our selves to his Lordship, desiring him to do the University the favour to mediate for them, &c. He was dismissed without any particular answer; within a few days came a second Letter, dated February 24th, which by reason of the Assizes and some other publick business intervening, was not read in the Senate till Thursday March the 11th; the University and the Vice Chancellor in the mean time received a Letter, wherein they found great Satisfaction by the Opinions of some Eminent Lawyers, who concurr'd in the approbation of what was already done, and for the future, could advise no better course than humbly to represent the Case to His Majesty, and entreat him not to think amiss of so Loyal a Body, as always the University has shewed her self self to be. The second Letter being read the day aforesaid, which was exactly the same as the former, excepting only the addition of a Clause, to do it at our own Peril: The Senate proceeded as before, to advise the Vice Chancellour to some expedient Form representing the Case fully and clearly to the King, as well with respect to the Illegality of such admission, as the many ill consequences that were likely to ensue from it; this the Non Regent House did by Mr. Billers, Fellow of St. John's Colledge (the Publick Orator), and Mr. Newton Fellow of Trinity Colledge (the Mathematical Professor,) the Regent House by Mr. Henry Finch, Son to the late Lord Chancellour, Mr. Burton of St. John's Colledge, and Mr. William Bowles of Kings Colledge; all which was done without the least hurry, or irregularity, without so much as asking an Opinion, but every Man went and gave it quietly and of his own accord, so that no manner of inducement was put upon any one to declare himself in the business, but what proceeded meerly from his own Conscience, and a due sense of things. Another large Letter being prepared for the Duke of Albemarle, wherein was every thing that could be thought of to prevail with His Majesty, and one likewise shorter and less particular to the Earl of Sunderland; that very Afternoon Mr. Braddock Fellow of Catherine Hall, and Mr. Stanbope of Kings Colledge, were desired by the Vice Chancellour to go to London with these Letters, and other Instructions to apply themselves to several Persons of Quality and Character, that they would joyn forces, and think it a common cause, for so addressing to the King, the success would be more probable, and the honour done to the University the greater. Sunday, March the 13th, the two Gentlemen waited on the Duke of Albemarle their Chancellour, who received them with all the goodness in the World, with assurance, that notwithstanding he had waited on the King before, and knew his Inclinations; nay, though he had been received with something of displeasure, yet considering the relation he bore us, he would make another attempt, and thought himself oblig'd to omit no endeavours for the Universities Safety and Advantage. Monday the 14th in the Evening the Duke of Albemarle waited on the King; and in the passage towards the Bed-chamber, took the two Cambridge Gentlemen into the Anti-chamber, that they might be introduced if occasion were; the King, on the Duke of Albemarle's acquainting him with the affair, told him he had not then leisure to talk, but he commanded the Letter, which the Vice Chancellour sent to the Duke of Albemarle, with which in his hands he passed through the Rooms; and making that Evening a visit to the Queen Dowager, gave the Duke no further opportunity of knowing his pleasure at that time. At the Dukes Return from the Inner Room, the Gentlemen desired him to give leave that they might use his Name to procure an easie admittance to the Earl of Sunderland; for they resolved to deliver their Letter to no hands but his own, if that might be: The Duke immediately sent one of his Gentlemen of the Horse to one of the Lord Sunderland's Secretaries, making it his desire that Mr. Braddock and his Companion might see the Earl, who accordingly appointed them to attend next Morning, and then conducted them to the Earl of Sunderland's Bed-side, who took the Letter, and after some further Application to him by Word of Mouth, he promised to acquaint His Majesty, and tell them his Pleasure. On Thursday, at that time when Mr. Braddock, and Mr. Stanbope came, the account they received was only this, That the King had seen the Vice Chancellours Letter, and was offended at the proceedings of the University; and would take care very shortly to give a further answer.

Saturday the 9th. of April, Mr. Atterbury came down with a Summons from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners to this effect; That whereas complaint to them was made against the Vice Chancellour and Senate of Cambridge, for having refused to comply with His Majesties Royal Letters in behalf of Mr. Francis; they were therefore commanded to appear, the Vice Chancellour in Person, the Senate by themselves, and their Deputies before the Lords Commissioners, in the Council Chamber the 21st. of April, to answer to such things as shall be objected against them in His Majesties behalf upon the premises, &c. Monday April the 11th. a Senate was called, and persons nominated to represent the University; together with the Vice Chancellour, all which being unanimously approved by the Senate, they impowered them by an Instrument under the Common-Seal, to answer in their behalf; and be their full Actors, Attorneys and Proctors, as to what should arise from the Commission upon the late Summons; and Mr. Atterbury having received private Instructions to stay, and cite every Man that was chosen personally: He came accordingly into the Senate House, and Summon'd as many as were present, waiting on the rest on a convenient time: The persons deputed by the Senate to Represent and Act were these.

- Dr. John Peachell, Vice Chancellour.
- Dr. John Eacherd, Master of Catherine Hall.
- Dr. Humphry Babington, Fellow of Trinity Colledge.
- Dr. Tho. Smout, Fellow of St. John's College, and Professour of Casuistical Divinity.
- Dr. Will. Cooke, Dr. of Civil Law, and Fellow of Jesus College.
- Mr. John Billers, Fellow of St. John's College, and the Publick Orator.
- Mr. Isaac Newton, Fellow of Trinity College, and Mathematical Professor.
- Mr. James Smith, Fellow of Queens College.
- Mr. George Stanbope, Fellow of Kings College.

Thursday, April the 21st, Council-Chamber.
Commissioners present,

L. Chancellour Jeffreys	}	L. Bishop of Durham .
L. President Sunderland .		L. Bishop of Rocheſter .
L. Mulgrave .		L. Ch. Justice Herbert .
Earl of Huntington .

L. Chancellour. I S Mr. Vice Chancellour here?—
Which is he? He standing over against the Lord Chancellour, bowed and shewed himself.

L. Chancellour. Is there any one come from the Senate to attend him?

Mr. Stanbope. Yes, my Lord, we are Eight of us here deputed by the Senate to answer what shall be objected against them, according to your Lordships Summons. (The noise and croud being being great, Mr. Bridgman the Register, was forced to repeat that again to the Lord Chancellor.

L. Chancellor. Read the Summons. — Which was done.

L. Chancellor. Now Mr. Vice Chancellor what have you to say why you did not obey His Majesties Command, in behalf of the Gentleman mention'd there?

Mr. Vice Chancellor. My Lord, you enquire of me why I did not admit Mr. Francis, according to the King's Letters?

L. Chancellor. Yes, that's the Question I ask you.

Mr. Vice Chancellor. Is this the only Question your Lordship is pleased to ask me?

L. Chancellor. Nay, Mr. Vice Chancellor, we will not Capitulate in the very beginning; pray answer the first, and then you shall know what we have to say more.

Mr. Vice Chancellor. It is but a little while since we met in Town, and this is a Question of great Concern; I am not prepared to answer it on a sudden.

L. Chancellor. Why, Mr. Vice Chancellor, my Lords specified it in their Summons what would be question'd, on purpose you should not come unprepared; but it may be Mr. Vice-Chancellor did not attend sufficiently to that part of the Summons, therefore let it be read to him once more — which was done.

Lord Chanc. Now, Sir, you hear it is for refusing to comply with the King's Commands.

Mr. Vice-Chanc. My Lords, I beg time to answer you; my Lords, I am a plain Man, not used to appear before such an Honourable Assembly, and if I should answer hastily, it may be I might speak something indecent or unsafe, which I should be afterwards sorry for, therefore I beg leave, my Lords, to have time allowed us, for giving in such answer, as may be both for our Safety and your Lordships Honour.

Lord Chanc. (Smiling) Why, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, as for your own Safety, my Lords are willing you should take all the care you can, but for what concerns our Honour, do not you trouble your self, we are able to consult that without any Interposition of yours.

Mr. Vice-Chanc. My Lords, I beg your Pardon if I have said any thing unbecoming, I mean only the Honour that is due to your Lordships Quality my Lord; and therefore being to answer before Persons of Quality, I beg leave to do it with Council and in writing.

Lord Chanc. Well, withdraw a little, and my Lords will consider of your Request.

Then all the Company withdrew, and about three quarters of an hour after the Vice-Chancellor was sent for into the Anti-Chamber, where Mr. Bridgman told him the Lords Commissioners had given him time till Wednesday next, till four in the Afternoon, and leave to put his Answer in writing and with Council; and by what Council he would.

When the Council had heard the Commissioners had granted it, they were something surprized, and loath to move in the thing without a Rule of Court, therefore on Friday Morning Dr. Eachard and Mr. Stanhope went to Mr. Bridgman's Office, to desire such an Order, or at least a Copy of what had been said to the Vice-Chancellor; but he told them he had no Power to give either: only he repeated the Words over again, for the Satisfaction of them and the Council, which was the same the Vice-Chancellor had related from his Mouth before.

Wednesday, April 27. In the Council Chamber, Commissioners present as before.

About a quarter of an hour before the Lords met, Mr. Bridgman came to the Vice-Chancellor, and desired to know of him whether he gave his answer in writing only, or whether any Council would appear to argue it; to which the Vice-Chancellor answered, that his Answer was drawing out in writing, and that he did not expect any Council there that day; Mr. Bridgman replied, the Lords had commanded him to ask these Questions, and would expect to know so much before they began to proceed. When the Delegates were call'd in, the Lord Chancellor said, Lord Chanc. Mr. Vice-Chancellor, the last time you were here you desired time to put in your answer in writing, my Lords have indulged you so far, now where is your Answer?

Mr. Vice Chanc. My Lord, here it is — and gave it to Mr. Bridgman; who after a Whisper put it round the Table.

Lord Chanc. Read it — to Mr. Bridgman.

The Answer of the University and Senate of Cambridge, to the Question: Why they did not admit Alban Francis to the Degree of Master of Arts in the same University, according to His Majesties Mandatory Letters under His Signet Manual. The Vice Chancellor and Senate of Cambridge, for, and in behalf of themselves, and the said University, Say,

THAT by the Statute made Primo Eliz. and Entituled, An Act to restore to the Crown the Ancient Jurisdictions over the State Ecclesiastical and Spiritual, and abolishing Foreign Power repugnant to the same; It is enacted amongst other things, That every Person that shall be promoted to any Degree of Learning in any University within this Kingdom, before he shall receive or take any such Degree, shall before the Chancellor or Vice Chancellor of the University, take the Oath in the Statute mention'd and appointed; purporting, that he doth thereby testify and declare in his Conscience, that His Majesty is the only supream Governour of this Realm, as well in all Spiritual and Ecclesiastical Things and Causes, as Temporal; That no Foreign State or Potentate, hath or ought to have any Jurisdiction, Superiority or Authority, Ecclesiastical or Spiritual within this Realm; and that therefore he doth renounce and forsake all Foreign Jurisdiction and Authority, and promise to bear Faith and true Allegiance to the King, his Heirs and Successors, and to his Power assist and defend all Jurisdictions and Authorities granted, united or annexed, to His Majesties Imperial Crown of England. That by the Statute made 5th Elizabeth, Entituled, An Act for the Assurance of the Queen's Royal Prerogative, over all Estates and Subjects within Her Dominions, it is likewise Enacted, That every Person that shall be admitted to any Degree of Learning in any of the Universities, before he shall be allowed or suffered to take upon him such Degree, shall take the aforementioned Oath before such Person or Persons, as shall have Authority Authority by common use to admit him to such Degrees.

That by the Statute made by His Majesties Royal Grandfather King James the 1st, in the 3^d Year of His Reign, Entituled, An Act for the better Discovering and Representing of Popish Recusants, another Oath is commonly prescribed, the Oath of Obedience; by which Oath, is the Person that takes it among other things enjoyned to Swear, that His Majesty is Lawful and Rightful King of this Realm, and all other His Dominions and Countries; and that the Pope, neither of himself, or by any other means, hath Power or Authority to depose His Majesty, or dispose of Him, His Kingdoms or Dominions; or to authorize any Foreign Prince to invade him or them, or to discharge His Subjects from their Obedience or Allegiance to His Majesty, or to give leave to bear Arms against Him; and that he with true Faith and Allegiance to His Majesty, will defend Him to the utmost of his Power. And afterwards, in the Statute made in the 9th Year of His Majesties said Royal Grandfather, Entituled, An Act for Administring the Oath of Allegiance; in it is enacted, That the said last mention'd Oath, shall be taken by the Vice Chancellour and Principal of Houses in the University, in the Convocation before the Senior Masters, and by every other Person that shall be permitted or promoted to any Degree in Schools, before the Vice Chancellour for the time being in the Congregation House.

That the Vice Chancellour, and every Member of the Senate have taken the said Oath, and the Vice Chancellour and Senate are intrusted to put them in Execution in the said University.

That the Vice Chancellour by his Oath of Office has also sworn duly to execute his Office according to the Laws, and cannot admit to any Degree without the Senate.

That the said Statutes were made for the Preservation of Doctrine and Religion, professed by the Church of England, and established by the Laws of this Realm, and of the Prerogative and rightful Power of His Majesty; that upon the Receipt of His Majesties Royal Letters Mandatory, the same were by the Vice Chancellour communicated to the Senate; and in order to the admitting the said Alban Francis to the Degree of Master of Arts, the said Oaths were offered to be Administred to the said Alban Francis, if he would take the same, but he refused.

That the admitting him without the said Oaths had been contrary to the said Statutes, and a Breach of the Trust in the Vice Chancellour and Senate reposed, and a Violation of their Oaths, and therefore they could not admit him to the said Degree of Master of Arts; and by humble Application to His Sacred Majesty, did, and now again do humbly desire your Lordships to represent this their Case to His Majesty, that they may not lye under His Majesties Displeasure upon any Misapprehension thereof; But, whether your Lordships will as a Court take Cognizance of this Matter, they humbly pray your Lordships Consideration, since that the taking a Degree of Master of Arts in the University, or the admitting and refusing to such a Degree, is not any cause or matter Ecclesiastical or Spiritual, but of Lay and Temporal Cognizance.

And they further offer to your Lordships, that in the Statute made in the 16th of the Reign of His Majesties most Royal Father King Charles the First, Entituled, An Act for repealing of the Branch of a Statute Primo Elizabethæ, concerning Commissioners for Causes Ecclesiastical; and whereby the said Branch is Repealed; it is enacted, That no New Court shall be erected, ordained or appointed within this Realm, which shall or may have like Power, Jurisdiction or Authority, as the High Commission Court then had or pretended to have; but that all and every such Commissioners and Grants, and all Powers and Authority granted or pretended to be granted thereby, shall be void and of none Effect, as in and by the said Statutes more fully appears.

Which being read, my Lord Chancellour said, Is it sign'd?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes my Lord.

Lord Chancellour. Read their Names——
Which was done.

L. Chancellour. Well, have you any more to say?

Mr. Vice Chancellour. No my Lord; not at this time.

L. Chancellour. Then withdraw.

All the Company withdrew, and about an hour and a half after the Court rose; and afterward Mr. Bridgman desired to speak with the Vice Chancellour and Delegates in the Council Chamber, to whom he said, That their Lordships had commanded him to tell them, they put off all further Consideration of this matter till Saturday come Sevensnight, and then they expected their Attendance: Again Mr. Vice Chancellour asked him, if Council would be expected to plead on their Answer; he replied their Lordships had given him no Commission to say any thing to that. So they all withdrew.

Saturday May the 7th.

This day it was publickly discoursed through the Town, that the Lords had received a new Commission; and immediately Lawyers were consulted whether it were proper to urge that at this Appearance: What could be gathered thereupon, was to this Effect: That it were a good Plea, if it could be well proved, for in receiving a new Commission in the midst of Process, especially, if there be any Alteration in it as to the extent of their Power, would at least be a good Pretence to begin the whole Cause again and gain time; but that it was by no means safe to alledge the thing, for a flying Report is no Evidence: And if that Report were false, it might be a great Prejudice to them and their Cause.

Council-Chamber——Commissioners present as before.

L. Chanc. MR. Vice-Chancellour, the last time you were here, you gave in a Paper to my Lords, signed by your self and several others coming from the University, which consists of several parts; but there is one thing I must crave leave of my Lords to Discourse you on, which concerns your self: The Lords took notice that you alledge an Oath, that Oath it seems hindred you from obeying the King's Mandate——Pray what was the Oath?

Mr.

Mr. Vice-Chanc. My Lord, this is a new Question which you were pleas'd not to put before, and I beg leave and time to answer it.

Lord Chanc. Why, Mr. Vice Chancellor, this requires no time; my Lords, I tell you, took notice of an Oath you pleaded for your self, and now they desire to know what the Oath is.

Mr. Vice-Chancellor. I beg I may not answer hastily, but that your Lordships would let me know what Questions you would ask me, and let me answer them in writing and by Council.

Lord Chancellor. Why did you not consult Council when you took your Oath? I am really concerned for the University of Cambridge, whereof I my self was once a Member, that the Vice-Chancellor, who is the Head, and the Representative of so learned a Body, should come here before the King's Commissioners, and not be able to give an account of the Oath he acted by all this time, but desires Council and time to tell him what the Oath is.

Dr. Cooke. My Lord, if your Lordship pleases, I think I remember the Words of the Oath.

L. Chancellor. Nay, good Doctor, how came you, who never were Vice Chancellor, and so never took this Oath, to know it better than one that is Vice-Chancellor, and hath taken it?

Vice-Chancellor. I cannot call to mind the very Words of the Oath, but the substance of it is this, That I should well and faithfully, præstare or administrare munus or Officium procancellarium.

L. Chancellor. Ay, Munus or Officium: Well, what then?

Vice-Chancellor. And my Lord, this Office I take to be stated by the Statutes of the University, and the Laws of the Land.

Lord Chanc. Well, and how long has this been the Vice Chancellours Oath?

Vice Ch. Indeed, my Lord, I am not able to tell you exactly.

Lord Ch. How long do you think? I will not tie you to any time.

Vice Ch. Ever since I knew what belonged to it; ever since I was Head of a Colledge.

Lord Ch. How long have you been Head of a Colledge?

Vice Chanc. Six or Seven Years, my Lord.

L. Ch. Have not other Vice Chancellours admitted to Degrees without Oaths, who have taken the Obligatory Oath as you have done?

Vice Ch. Indeed my Lord I cannot tell; I cannot remember every particular thing that has been done.

L. Ch. Well, because we will keep close the Question, don't you remember any Master of Arts made without Oaths?

Dr. Cook. Not under the Quality of an University Noble Man, my Lord.

L. Ch. Nay, good Doctor, you never were Vice Chancellor yet. When you are, we may consider you.

Vice Ch. The Answer to your Question will depend upon our University Book and Records, and if you'll allow us time to consult them, we can give your Lordship an Account.

L. Ch. Nay, look you Mr. Vice Chancellor, you have given in Answer in Writing already, and because there is something in that, my Lords would be further satisfied in, they have left it to me to ask you some Questions. I ask you therefore if you remember any Master of Arts, who hath been admitted heretofore without these Oaths?

Vice Ch. I cannot say I remember any, my Lord.

L. Ch. Did you never hear of one Dr. Lightfoot?

Vice Ch. I think, my Lord, I have heard of such an one.

Dr. Cook. My Lord, I beg leave to speak a few Words.

L. Ch. Well, Doctor, What is it you have to say?

Dr. Cook. My Lord, Dr. Lightfoot did Subscribe.

L. Ch. What Supercription do you mean?

Dr. Cook. To the 39 Articles; and the first of them is the Kings Supremacy.

L. Ch. Supercribing is Swearing, Doctor. But Mr. Vice Chancellor, how many have you admitted by Mandate?

Vice Ch. Never but one, my Lord, and he took the Oaths.

L. Ch. Do you never admit without Oaths them who have not such particular Letters Patent from the King?

Mr. Stanhope. Never, my Lord: And as for Dr. Lightfoot, they were aware before of this particular Persons being objected, and therefore provided an Answer to it.

Mr. Stanhope undertook it, because the Books and University Papers had been committed to his Inspection and Care: In Answer, had he been permitted to speak, he had this to offer, That the Register of Subscribers was then in Court, and had a Paper ready in his Hands to be produced, where Dr. Lightfoot Subscribed with his own Hands to the 39 Articles: The first whereof is the Kings Supremacy, and that he could not refuse the Oath upon a Principle, because the same must have hindred his Subscription: And as a farther Proof he did Swear, they were ready to offer this, That two Gentlemen, Roman Catholicks, Servants to the Queen Dowager, did by Virtue of the same Letters from the King, at the time of his coming to Cambridge, desire their Master of Arts Degree; their Names were Perara and Stevens. These Gentlemen were Proposed and Granted, but upon refusal to Swear, not admitted: Of this, they could have produced, First, A Testimony upon Oath of a Gentleman then in Court; and besides that, the University Papers and Graces, which shew these Gentlemens Names, among the Persons past in the House, but wanting in the List of Subscribers and Commencers. After which they would have referred it to the Court, whether it was probable that the University should admit one of the Queens Servants without Oaths, and yet refuse two more, who had the same Title every way, because they would not take the Oaths; but the Lord Chancellor would not bear him.

L. Ch. Nay, look you now, that young Gentleman expects to be Vice Chancellor too; when you are Sir, you may speak, but till then it will become you to forbear. Mr. Vice Chancellor, When was it pray that you received the Kings Letters? the first I mean.

Vice Ch. I do not perfectly remember, my Lord, I can't call to mind the day of the Month.

L. Ch. When were they dated, do you know? (to Mr. Bridgman) My Lord pausing.

Vice Ch. My Lord, I remember it was Asb-Wednesday.

L. Ch. And when was it these Letters were Published in the Senate?

Vice Ch. It was the Seven night after, my Lord.

L. Ch. What's the meaning of the delay, Mr. Vice Chancellor? the Kings business used to have a quicker dispatch.

Vice Ch. It was a Novel thing, and I was willing to give my self and others time to consider on it.

L. Ch. But when you had read the Letters, why was not the Gentleman admitted?

Vice Ch. My Lord, the Senate sent to me, to desire me, that I would forbear admitting Mr. Francis, till I had Petitioned the King to revoke the Mandate.

L. Ch. Why does the King's Mandate used to be disputed? Did you ever see a Mandate voted in the House, whether it should be obeyed or not?

Vice Ch. No, my Lord, usually they are not; but the House sent to me to forbear, for they have not had any of this nature before.

L. Ch. Did you ever know any Mandates of the Kings refused by the University before?

Vice Ch. After some pause—Yes, my Lord, several.

L. Ch. Pray, give us one instance.

Vice Ch. My Lord, one Tatnell.

L. Ch. When pray? How long was that ago?

Vice Ch. I cannot recollect just the time, but it was in His late Majesties Reign; I believe, about fourteen or sixteen Years ago.

L. Ch. How was that?

Vice Ch. My Lord, the Mandate was given to one Tatnell, a Non-conformist Minister, and he refused to Subscribe and take the Oaths; whereupon my Lord, the University Petitioned the King, and represented the matter to him, and the King was pleased to recal his Mandate.

L. Ch. Mr. Vice Chancellor, had not you a Mandate for another Gentleman at the same time with this, which you refused?

Vice Ch. Yes, my Lord, it was to make a Gentleman Doctor of Physick.

L. Ch. And he was admitted upon it, was he not?

Vice Ch. Yes, my Lord.

L. Ch. Did the Senate Vote his Mandate?

Vice Ch. No, my Lord, they did not.

L. Ch. Why should they interpose in the one and not in the other?

Vice Ch. They had no Dispensation, my Lord, for the Oath in it.

L. Ch. But however, if they did not Vote it, nor do any others of the Kings Letters, how do you know their Consent?

Vice Ch. My Lord, it is presumed upon their being silent, and offering nothing to the contrary.

L. Ch. Ay, we have a Proverb, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, Silence gives Consent, but it seems he was admitted immediately, was he not, before you could know whether they consented to both or no?

Vice Ch. No, my Lord, he was not admitted till the House desired me to forbear in Mr. Francis's Case.

L. Ch. But, as to this business of the Senate, desiring you (my Lords) I hope you will Indulge me to speak a little of that, for having been formerly a Member of that University my self,

Vol. III.

I think I have some small Remembrance of the manner of the Proceedings there: Pray, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, how was it that you knew their Minds in this Business?

Vice Chancellor. My Lord, the House sent up their Opinions.

L. Chancellor. How, pray? By whom?

Vice Chancellor. The Non-Regents by Dr. Smoult the first Day; and Mr. Billers the Orator, and Mr. Newton the Mathematical Professour, my Lord, the second Day.

L. Chancellor. By whom do you say the first Day?

Vice Chancellor. By Dr. Smoult, my Lord, from the Non-Regent House, and Mr. Norris from the Regent House.

L. Chancellor. Well: What said these two to you?

Vice Chancellor. My Lord, I don't know the very Words, but it was to this Effect, That I should forbear admitting Mr. Francis till the King was petitioned.

L. Chancellor. Is that Dr. Smoult in Court?

Vice Chancellor. Yes, my Lord, he is here—then he shewed himself.

L. Chancellor. Come, Sir, What was it, I pray you, that you told the Vice Chancellor?

Dr. Smoult. I have forgot, my Lord, the Words, but it was to the same purpose the Vice Chancellor told you just now; That the House desired me to acquaint him they were petitioning, that the Mandate might be recalled.

L. Chancellor. And pray, Sir, who are you, that you should be thought fit to represent a whole House? Why should they choose you rather than any Body else?

Dr. Smoult. My Lord, I suppose because I was one of the Seniors.

L. Chancellor. One of the Seniors! If you come to that, why was not the very Senior chosen?

Dr. Smoult. I cannot tell, my Lord, they came to me

Vice Chancellor. My Lord, he is one of our Professors.

L. Chancellor. Nay, when I ask you Questions they prompt you, and now you prompt them; but I must tell you Mr. Vice Chancellor, you ought to take an account of what is done in the House your self, and not from others.

Vice Chancellor. My place is at a great distance from the Non-Regent House, and I could not see what was done there.

L. Chancellor. But should you take the Sense of a whole House from one Man?

Vice Chancellor. He came and told me, my Lord, the House was of that Opinion, and I thought I had no reason to question what he said.

L. Chancellor. How loud did he speak when he told you this?

Vice Chancellor. Pretty loud my Lord.

L. Chancellor. Was it so loud that all the House might hear it?

Vice Chancellor. No my Lord.

L. Chancellor. Did you send afterwards to enquire whether he had told you their Opinions true or not?

Vice Chancellor. No, my Lords, I confess I did not.

L. Chancellor. But how came this new way of giving Opinions, are not the Proctors usually

X x x x

the

the Men that bring the Sense of the House to the Vice Chancellour?

Vice Chancellour. Not the Non-Regent; my Lord, they are not admitted into that House, nor have at all to do there.

L. Chancellour. Have you any thing else to offer to my Lords?

Dr. Cook. My Lord, if the answer that we gave in the last day be not satisfactory, we desire to have time allowed us to make a farther Defence, and to do it with Council.

L. Chancellour. Have you nothing to say besides?

Dr. Cook. No my Lord.

L. Chancellour. Nor you Gentlemen?—then withdraw.

After the Vice Chancellour, and three or four of the Delegates were gone off, and the Crowd was retiring. Mr. Billers, being a Person engaged in carrying up the Sense of the House, would have informed the Court (who seemed under a Mistake) more particularly of the Senates Proceedings; and how it came to pass that the usual way of Suffrages was impracticable at that time.

Mr. Billers. My Lords, I beg leave to speak one Word.

L. Chancellour. Who are you?

Mr. Billers. My Name is Billers, my Lord.

Mr. Bridgman. My Lord, he is one of the Gentlemen that sign'd the Paper in which was the Answer.

Mr. Billers. I am one of the Persons, my Lord, that Sign'd the Paper in which was the Answer.

L. Chancellour. Nay, hold Mr. Billers, give me leave to compare your Memory with Mr. Vice Chancellour's a little; Mr. Vice Chancellour tells me, Mr. Billers and Dr. Smout went up both of a Day; then comes Mr. Billers and says that Dr. Smout and he went up two several Days.

Mr. Billers. My Lord, I could not possibly go up from the House; I do not belong to the Regent House.

L. Chancellour. Indeed he said so, Sir; indeed he did, my Lords—did he not? [To Mr. Bridgman.]

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Stanhope, behind the Bishop of Rochester. My Lord, under favour, my Lord Chancellour is mistaken; the Person Mr. Vice Chancellour told your Lordship, went up from the Regent House the same Day, with Dr. Smout, was Mr. Norris.

Bishop of Rochester. My Lord, I think your Lordship forgets; it was Mr. Norris that went up from the House the same day with Doctor Smout.

L. Chancellour. Well, Sir, was this that you would say?

Mr. Billers. I was only just acquainting your Lordship what was done, and that there was no other way—

The thing Mr. Billers intended to urge, was, That the usual way of Suffrage could not be practised at that time; so the other was taken.

Earl of Sunderland. We heard that before.

L. Chancellour. Ay, Sir, we took both what was done, and what was not done; therefore withdraw.

Then all the Company retired, and after an Hour and a half's Attendance, they were call'd in again, and the Lord Chancellour pronounced the Sentence upon Mr. Vice Chancellour, in the following manner:

Lord Chanc. Mr. Vice-Chancellour, the Lords have commanded me to tell you, that they have taken some time to consider your Answer, and are at last come to a Resolution upon it; my Business is to tell you what the Resolution is, Mr. Vice Chancellour. My Lords consider you have been guilty of an Act of great Disobedience to the King's Commands, and other Crimes and Contempts, and such that now you appear before us, you have little to say in excuse of it; therefore as a mark of His Majesties and their Lordships Displeasure, they have thought fit to appoint, that you be henceforth deprived of the Office of Vice Chancellour of Cambridge. They likewise order, that you don't presume, at any time hereafter, to meddle with any of the publick Business of the University. Likewise, Mr. Vice Chancellour, their Lordships consider you have a Headship of a College, and because the Example of so ill a Man may be a pernicious Consequence to all under your Government, they have likewise thought fit that you be deprived of it, during His Majesties Pleasure; but because they have a Tenderness for the Colledge, for which all along you have shewed little regard, my Lords are pleased to appoint, that the Revenues of your Headship shall go to the benefit of the Society: This is their Lordships Pleasure, and to this they require your Obedience. There are likewise some other Gentlemen that have signed a Paper here, but my Lords expect their Attendance when they sit next, which will be on Thursday next; then we shall take them into Consideration.

On Monday, Dr. Peachell wrote by an Esquire Beadle, who attended him, to desire a Copy of the Sentence, but answer was return'd, The Sentence as yet was not committed to writing, but Verbal only, and so he could not have a Copy; but he repeated the Heads only with this Alteration, That he was suspended his Mastership and not deprived; which was an Error in the Lord Chancellours delivering it.

The beginning of the next Week was employed in making Inquiries after the new Commission, the Hannaper Six Clerks, and the Riding Six Clerks Office knew nothing of it, nor any Court of Record could be directed to: Mr. Bridgman did own there was such a thing, but did not instruct them how to come to the sight of it: those that spoke best of the Commissioners, urged the removal of the Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench to the Common Pleas, as a thing that made a new Commission necessary for rectifying his Title, but a Gentleman, who pretended to have read it, gave them private Intimations that there were very large Additions, and very considerable Alterations in it; at my Lord Chancellours own House, the Servants brought Word, that my Lord would speak with the Person himself that desired to see it, and appointed him a time; the Solicitor went at the Hour, but did not gain access to my Lord, and so they could not see it at all, for it was Wednesday Night, or Thursday Morning.

Thursday May the 12th.

Council-Chamber, Commissioners present as before, the Delegates appear with Dr. Peachell.

Lord Chanc. THE last time you appeared here before us, my Lords thought fit to set a mark of their Just Displeasure upon the the Vice Chancellor. Gentlemen, you cannot but be sensible, and so must all the World, how pernicious and obstinate the University has shown themselves in refusing the King's Commands, and such Commands, I must tell you, that ought to be obeyed.

There was a time, you may remember Instances, if you do not, I'll turn you to one in the Year 1667. when the Letters were so far from being disputed, that they passed for a Law among you, and do this day stand Recorded among the solemn Acts, and Publick Statutes of the University. Gentlemen, my Lords consider there is a Difference between the Vice Chancellor's Case and yours, and therefore did not conclude you, who represent the Senate with him, but have required your Attendance at this time; they impute the miscarriage of the Body to the Head Disease chiefly, though neither are you without Fault, for shewing so much as uneasie under the King's Commands. Gentlemen, I must tell you, my Lords understand very well, the sly Insinuations in your Paper, and have commanded me to tell you, That they know upon what Grounds they go, though they do not think fit to descend to particulars; they know too how far that Authority extends, not only to you of the University, but to the Societies within this Kingdom. Gentlemen, your best Course will be by a ready Obedience to His Majesties Command for the future, and by giving a good Example to others, to make amends for the ill Example that has been given you; therefore I shall say to you what the Scripture says, and rather because most of you are Divines; Go your way, and sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto you.

The late King's Letters, mentioned by my Lord Chancellor, Anno 1667. concern the Regulating some of the publick Exercises in the University; the meaning whereof is this, The King is their Visitor, and whenever there is any thing belonging to the local Statutes and Customs which they think ought to be altered, or any use which should be rectified and redress'd, their way is to beg the King's Royal Conjunction in the Case, which they keep upon Record, and obey as a Statute; how good an Argument is this against them, for not obeying a private Mandate contrary to four known Laws of the Land, and how parallel, the Case is easily discern'd.

As they were drawing off, he call'd them again, and said.

Lord Chanc. Hold, Gentlemen, I know something more to say to you. My Lords require, as a Testimony of your Obedience, that you, who represent the Senate, should take care they have the University Statutes brought to lye before them here.

Dr. Cook. My Lord, we do no longer represent the Senate, our Delegation is determined with the Vice Chancellor's Deprivation, my Lord.

Lord Chanc. Well, if your Commission be expired, we will give you a new one, we are able to give you a Commission; we suppose you had sufficient Authority for appearing here.

Dr. Cook. Does your Lordship expect that we should attend with the Statutes our selves?

Lord Chanc. No, no, send them up by a proper Officer; you are only to carry a Message from us to the Senate, and tell them what we expect.

Dr. Eachard. In what time does your Lordship expect them?

Lord Chanc. In a convenient time, we will not tie you up, but if you be tardy, my Lords will take care to quicken you by an Intimation; I mean only a Copy, not original Statutes: You are now discharged from any farther Attendance here.

The Delegates, upon the Vice Chancellor's Deprivation, being no longer capable of acting as publick Persons, and consequently of deriving any ill Consequence upon the Body they have represented, thought they might venture their own Persons more boldly; therefore, in order to satisfy the World, they were mighty desirous to bring about a Second hearing of the same Points, which before the Vice Chancellor's Sentence, they were not suffered to speak to, and which, when the Vice Chancellor was asking, they had not an Opportunity of answering so very particular as they could have wish'd, confining themselves to such Questions, all the while, as did not concern the Vice Chancellor solely and personally, but affected the whole Senate jointly with him; which Order they had likewise observed in interposing at the Tryal. This Answer they had ready to offer in Writing, if that could be admitted, but if not, resolved to argue it by Word of Mouth; the substance of it may be reduced to two Heads:

First, the Business of admitting others, and particularly Dr. Lightfoot, without Oaths: As to Lightfoot's Case, what they intended to have urged in Court, you have seen already; but as to others:

I. That Peers are by the very Act of Parliament 5to. Eliz. Exempted from the Oath.

II. That all such as the University calls Noblemen, have time out of mind, enjoyed the Privilege of Peers.

III. That under that Quality they never admit any without Oaths.

IV. That if at any time, upon the entertaining of a Prince, or any such Solemnity, any one has slipped out in the Croud, which they are not conscious of; this is to be imputed to hurry and inadvertency, and cannot be parallel to this Case, where the Senate acted with Leisure and Deliberation.

V. That even these Degrees, given to Noblemen and Strangers, are Honorary and Complemental, and so different from what the Statute calls Degrees of Learning, and Men use, exercise and make a Gain of their Profession.

VI. That supposing never so many to be admitted without Oaths, this they acknowledged to be irregular; and the Breach of a Law in one can be no Precedent for another to follow.

VII. That however they are very fully and particularly assured, no Man was ever admitted who positively refused the Oaths, which this Mr. Francis did.

I. That every Man who is a Member of that, or any other Senate, hath such a Right to propose, debate and advise, as occasion shall require, and protest against any irregular Proceedings in it.

II. That in a matter contrary to the Laws, and so highly concerning their University and Religion, as the opening such a Gap for the Men of any Perswasion to become Members of their Body and Senate (which every Resident Master of Arts is) it had been the greatest Infidelity and Negligence to have sat still.

III. That their Suffrage not being ask'd by the common way, ought not to have been a Bar, because every Man in his Matriculation Oath, obligeth himself to be assisting to the Chancellour and Vice Chancellour, and to defend the State, Honour and Dignity of the University, according to his Power and Capacity; and this to do Suffragio & Concilio, rogatus & non rogatus.

IV. That representing the whole Houses Opinions by a few, is a Practice common to all numerous Congregations; and usual in this, for any single Man, voluntarily to go and Address the Vice Chancellour in behalf of this whole College, or otherwise.

V. That the late King commanded, by His Royal Letters, that all Address to the Vice Chancellour should be made in the most quiet, decent, and respectful manner: and this way was thought more conformable to that Command, than the hurry of every Man applying himself personally.

VI. To give the better Reputation to the thing, and make it unexceptionable, the Persons sent from the Senate to the Vice Chancellour, were all Men either of publick Character in the Body, or the Seniors of their Houses, or some way eminently known in the University; but they being admitted, as you have seen, on Thursday, there was no Opportunity at all of offering a Dispute.

Animadversions on Wednesday, April the 27th.

THIS Day the Plea was given in, and the only thing needful to be remark'd, is, The usual way of demurring to the Courts Jurisdiction, which is commonly either the only, or first Plea, in such Cases; but the Delegates look'd upon themselves as oblig'd not only to defend their Cause, but to satisfy the World, therefore they were desirous that all People should be satisfied upon what Reasons they acted, and to this Purpose they first insisted upon them, which they did not at all doubt, but it would be patiently heard; whereas, if the Courts Jurisdiction had come first, that would, in all Probability have occasion'd the whole Plea to be stifled and over-ruled.

Saturday, May the 14th.

Mr. Atterbury came to Cambridge, with two Orders under the Commissioners Seal, one to the Proctors to proceed in the Choice of a new Vice Chancellour, and the other to Magdalen College Fellows; to each of which was annexed a Copy of the Sentence to be fixed upon the School Doors, and Magdalen College Gates; and on Thursday, May the 17th Doctor Balderston, Master of Emmanuel College succeeded in the Office of Vice Chancellour.

A Copy of Dr. Peachell's Sentence, as it was fix'd on the publick School Doors, and Magdalen College Gates.

By His Majesties Commissioners for Ecclesiastical Causes, and the Visitation of the University, and of every Collegiate and Cathedral Churches, Colledges, Grammar Schools, Hospitals, and other the like Incorporations, or Foundations or Societies.

WHEREAS John Peachell, Dr. of Divinity, Vice Chancellour of Cambridge, Master of Magdalen Colledge, in the said University, has been Convend before us for his Disobedience to His Majesties Royal Letters Mandatory, and other his Contempts; and the said Dr. John Peachell having been fully heard thereupon, we have thought fit, after mature Consideration of the Matter, to Declare, Decree and Pronounce, that the said Dr. John Peachell, shall for the said Disobedience and Contempts, be deprived from being Vice Chancellour of the said University, and from all Power of acting in the same: And also, that he be Suspended ab Officio & beneficio of his Mastership of the said Colledge, during His Majesties Pleasure; and accordingly we do by these Presents deprive him, the said Dr. John Peachell, from being Vice Chancellour of the said University, and from all Power of acting in the same. And we also Suspend him ab Officio & Beneficio of his Mastership of the said Colledge, peremptorily admonishing and requiring him hereby, to abstain from the Function of Master of the said Colledge, during the said Suspension, under pain of Deprivation from his Mastership. And we also farther Order and Decree, that the Profits and Perquisites belonging to his said Mastership, shall during the same Suspension, be apply'd to the Use and Benefit of the said Colledge.

Given under Our Seal, the 7th of May, 1687.

An impartial Relation of the whole Proceedings against St. Mary Magdalen College in Oxon, in the Year of our Lord 1687. containing only Matters of Fact as they occurred.

A Narrative of the Election of Dr. Hough, President to S. Mary Magdalen Colledge, Oxon, 1687.

HE Presidentship of St. Mary Magdalen College, in the University of Oxon, being void by the death of Dr. Henry Clerk, late President of the same, the Vice President gave notice to all the Fellows present in the Chappel, on Thursday the 31st of March, 1687. where it was unanimously agreed to proceed to the Election of a President on Wednesday the 13th of April following, at Nine of the Clock in the Morning, in the Chappel: And in order thereto, the Vice President caused a Citation to be fix'd on the Chappel pel Docr of the said College, signifying the Vacancy, Time and Place of the Election; according to the Direction of the Statutes. But before the Day of Election, being credibly informed, that His Majesty had been pleased to grant his Letters Mandatory in behalf of Mr. Anthony Farmer, they most humbly represented to His Sacred Majesty, in their Petition bearing Date April the 9th, That the said Mr. Farmer was incapable by their Statutes, of being President; and therefore did most humbly pray His Majesty to leave them to a free Election, or recommend such a Person to them, as was capable by their Statutes. Monday, April the 11th, His Majesties Letters Mandatory were delivered by the Hands of Mr. Robert Chernock, Master of Arts, and Fellow of the said College, directed to the Vice President and Fellows of Magdalen College in Oxon, requiring them forthwith to Elect the said Mr. Farmer, and admit him President: Which Letter the Vice President read in the Chappel of the said Colledge, between the Hours of four and five of the Clock in the same day, after Evening-Service, before the Fellows of the College, there present, and asked them, Whether they in Obedience to His Majesty's Letters, would forthwith Elect and Admit Mr. Farmer President? Who all agreed, in consideration to Mr. Farmer's not being qualified, and the danger of Expulsion to any of the Fellows that should be absent from the Election, and that the time of Election, according to the Citation, was so near, to defer their Answer till Wednesday following; whereupon the Vice President required all the Fellows to be present in the Chappel the said Wednesday Morning at nine of the Clock. All the Fellows being then met, the Vice President read the Statute De Electione Presidentis; and the Statute, 5 Eliz. against corrupt Elections was read also; after which the Vice President read the King's Letter in behalf of Mr. Farmer, and the second time demanded an Answer of the Fellows thereto. Their Answer was to this Effect: That having a Petition now lying before His Majesty, they ought not to proceed to Election, till they had received His Majesty's Answer to the same: And thereupon they all agreed, (except Mr. Charnock) that the Election should be deferred: which was accordingly done, until the next Morning nine of the Clock.

Thursday April the 14th, at nine a Clock in the Morning, all the Fellows being met, the Vice-President told them, That the Election of a President had been deferred upon account of their Petition to His Majesty, in answer to which, they had not then received His Majesty's Pleasure; that the next day was the utmost time they could defer the Election by the Statutes, and therefore it was necessary they should come to some Resolution: he told them farther, That the King had commanded them to Elect Mr. Farmer, and asked their Sense therein: Which was unanimous (except Mr. Chernock) that the Election should be deferred till the next Morning eight of the Clock; and in order thereunto, the Sacrament to be administered first; and accordingly it was adjourned.

Friday April the 15th, at eight a Clock in the Morning the Vice President and Fellows being met, Dr. Tho. Smith and Captain Bagshaw, two of the Fellows, acquainted the rest, from my Lord President of the Council, That in answer to their Petition, His Majesty having sent his Letter to the Colledge, expected to be obeyed. After which, the Vice President read again the King's Letter to them, and ask'd, whether in Obedience thereunto, they would elect and admit Mr. Farmer President? They answered, That they desired they might proceed to an Election. Then the Vice President having proposed, whether having received His Majesties Pleasure in answer to their Petition, they would make any further Address? The Vice President, Dr. Fairfax, Dr. Pudsey, and Dr. Tho. Smith, were for a second Address; but all the rest declared immediately for proceeding to the Election.

Then the Vice President proposed, whether they would go to an Election Viva voce, or by Scrutiny? The Vice President, Mr. Thompson, and Mr. Charnock were for proceeding to an Election Viva voce; all the rest were for going to an Election by Scrutiny, except Dr. Tho. Smith, who was not for going to Election, until the King should again be petitioned.

This therefore being their Sense, That they ought to proceed to the Election of a President according to the Statutes, and this the last day limited for Election: In order thereunto, the Holy Sacrament was solemnly taken by all, except Mr. Charnock. Then the Statute De Electione Presidentis, and 5 Eliz. against corrupt Elections was read by the Vice President. Every one took the Oath prescribed in the Statutes to be taken, in order to the Nomination of a President, (except Mr. Thompson and Mr. Charnock who refused it): And the two Senior Fellows were sworn Scrutators in the Scrutiny of the whole Society: For the Nomination of a President, Mr. Hough and Mr. Maynard had each of them the major part of all the Voices; and were accordingly pronounced by the Senior Scrutator, Nominati in Ordine ad Electionem Presidentis: Then the Thirteen Senior Fellows being met to elect one of these two President; and every one of them sworn according to the Statute; eleven of them elected Mr. Hough, who was accordingly pronounced President of St. Mary Magdalen College in Oxon, by the Senior Scrutator, in the presence of all the Fellows: and Mr. Maynard was appointed by the thirteen Senior Fellows to present the said President Elect to the Visitor, in order to his Admission. After this, Mr. Thompson and Mr. Charnock declared Viva voce for Mr. Farmer; according to His Majesty's Letter.

Saturday April the 16th, Mr. Hough, President Elect, was presented to the Visitor by Mr. Maynard, who at the same time delivered to his Lordship an Instrument under the College Seal, containing the Proceedings of the Election; after a sight whereof, Mr. Hough was sworn and admitted President by his Lordship, according to the Statutes.

Sunday April the 17th, Mr. Hough at his return to the College, took the same Oath again before the Society, and afterwards as President took his Seat in the Chappel, at four a Clock Prayers in the Afternoon.

James Rex.

TRusty and Well-beloved, We greet you well. Whereas we are well satisfied, of the Piety, Loyalty and Learning of our Trusty and Well-beloved Anthony Farmer, Master of Arts, of that your Colledge of St. Mary Magdalen, We have thought fit hereby effectually to recommend him to you for the place of President of our said Colledge, now void by the Death of Doctor Clark, late President thereof; willing and requiring you forthwith, upon Receipt hereof, to elect and admit him the said Anthony Farmer, into the said place of President, with all and singular the Rights and Privileges, Emoluments and Advantages thereunto belonging, any Statute, Custom or Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding, wherewith We are Graciously pleased to dispence with in this behalf. And so, not doubting of your Compliance herein, We bid you Farewel.
and

Given at our Court at White-hall, the Fifth Day of April, 1687. in the Third Year of Our Reign.

A Copy of Magdalen Colledge's Petition.

To the King's most Excellent Majesty.

The Humble Petition of the Vice President and Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge, in Oxon.

Most humbly sheweth,

WE have been credibly informed, That Mr. Anthony Farmer, who was not of our Foundation, has obtained Your most Excellent Majesty's Recommendation to be President of Your Majesty's College, in the room of Doctor Henry Clark, deceased.

We therefore, with all Submission, as becomes Your most Dutiful and Loyal Subjects, most humbly Represent to Your Sacred Majesty, That the said Mr. Farmer is a Person in several respects incapable of that Character, according to our Founder's Statutes: And do most earnestly beseech Your Majesty, as Your Majesty shall judge fittest in Your most Princely Wisdom, either to leave us to the discharge of our Duty and Consciences, according to Your Majesty's late most gracious Toleration, and our Founder's Statutes; or to recommend such a Person who may be more serviceable to Your Majesty, and to this Your Majesty's Colledge:

And Your Petitioners shall ever pray, &c.

A Copy of the Lord Sunderland's Letter to the Fellows.

Gentlemen,

THE King being given to understand, That notwithstanding his late Mandate, sent to you for Electing Mr. Farmer to be President of your Colledge, you have made choice of another Person; His Majesty commands me to tell you, He is much surprized at these Proceedings, and expects you should send me an account of what passed on that Occasion, and whether you did receive His Majesty's said Letters Mandate, before you chose Dr. Hough. I am,

Gentlemen,

Your Affectionate and Humble Servant,
Sunderland.

The Case of the Vice President and Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge in Oxon, in their late Election of a President.

UPon the Notice of the Death of Dr. Henry Clark, late President of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge in Oxon; the Vice President called a Meeting of the Fellows, in order to appoint a day for the Election of a new President. The 13th of April was the day prefix'd with Power to prorogue the Election to the 15th, as they should see Cause, beyond which time it was not in their Power to defer the same. This being agreed, a Citation, or Præmonition was fix'd upon the Chappel-Door of the College, signifying the same; and summoning all the absent Fellows to repair home to the ensuing Election, as the Statute in that Case directs. After this, upon the 11th of April, they receiv'd His Majesty's Letter in behalf of Mr. Farmer, requiring them to elect and admit him President: But he having never been Fellow of that Colledge, nor New College, in which are the only Persons capable of being chosen by the Statutes; and wanting likewise such personal Qualifications as are required in the Character of a President, they did not imagine it was, or could be His Majesty's Pleasure, that they should act so directly contrary to the express Words of their Statutes, to which they are strictly and positively sworn: But did humbly conceive they were bound in Duty to believe, that His Majesty had been mis-informed in the Character and Capacity of Mr. Farmer. And therefore on the 15th of April, the last of those days within which they were confin'd to finish the Election, they proceeded to a Choice, and having first received the Blessed Eucharist, and taken an Oath as the Founder enjoins, to choose a Person so qualified, as is there specified; they did elect the Reverend Mr. John Hough, Batchelor in Divinity, who is a Person every way qualified by the Statutes of the said College: And if it shall be objected that His Majesty did in His Letter for Mr. Farmer graciously dispense with all the Statutes that rendered him incapable of being elected; and that therefore they might have obeyed without breach of their Oaths: They humbly beg leave to represent, that there is an express Clause in that Oath, which every Man takes when he is admitted Fellow of the College; wherein he swears not to procure, accept, or make use of any Dispensation from his Oath, or any part thereof, by whomsoever procured, or by what Authority soever granted. As to their former Practice when they have elected in Obedience to the King's Letter heretofore; it has been always in such Cases where the Persons recommended have been every way qualified for the Office by their Statutes; in which Cases they always have been, and ever will be, ready to comply with His Majesty's Pleasure; it not being without unspeakable regret, that they disobey the least of His Commands. They know how entirely their Welfare depends upon the Countenance of their Prince; nor doth any thing more deeply affect and grieve their Souls, than when they find themselves reduc'd to this unfortunate Necessity, of either disobeying his Will, or violating their Consciences by notorious Perjuries.

A Copy of a Letter to the Duke of Ormond, April the 18th, 1687.

May it please your Grace,

WE the President, and Fellows of Magdalen College in Oxon, sensible of the Benefits and Honour we enjoy under Your Grace's Patronage, and how much it imports us to

to have your Advice in all the Difficulties where-with we are press'd; having as we fear, displeased His Majesty, in our Election of a President; do humbly beg leave to represent to your Grace, a true state of our Case, and hope you will please to inform the King how incapable we were to perform His Commands.

His Majesty was pleas'd on the Death of Dr. Henry Clark, President of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge, to Command us by His Letter, to Elect and admit Mr. Anthony Farmer in that Office, a Person utterly incapable of it by our Statutes, as we are ready to make appear in many Particulars; and since we have taken a positive Oath of Obedience to them, and that exclusive to all Dispensations whatsoever; we humbly conceive we could not obey that Command in favour of Mr. Farmer; unless he had brought those Qualifications with him, which our Founder requires in the Person of the President; and being confined as to the time of Election, we have been forced to proceed to the choice of one, who has approved his Loyalty in the whole course of his Life, and whom we think suitably qualified for the place.

May it therefore please your Grace to interpose with His Most Sacred Majesty for us, that we may not lye under the Weight of His Displeasure, for not being in a capacity for obeying his Commands. We know him to be a Prince of eminent Justice and Integrity, and cannot think he will value any instance of Duty to himself, which manifestly breaks in upon the Obligation of our Consciences. And your Grace's extraordinary unblemish'd Loyalty to the Crown; and that Regard which, we assure our selves, our Most Honoured Lord and Chancellor has to the Peace and Welfare of this Place, induceth us to presume your Grace will omit no Endeavours to set before His Majesty the true Reason and Necessity of our Proceedings. That God Almighty protect your Grace, shall be the daily Prayers of,

May it please your Grace, &c.

The Bishop of Winton's Letter to the Lord President of the Council.

My Honoured Lord,

TH E Obligation I have upon me as Visitor of St. Mary Magdalen College in Oxon, occasions this Address: For I am inform'd that great Endeavours are used with His Majesty to recommend one Mr. Farmer, who is not at present, nor ever was Fellow of the College, to be President of it; which is directly contrary to the Statutes of the Founder, (as I am confident some who promote Mr. Farmer's interest, cannot be ignorant of:) And were there not many Persons now actually Fellows, and several who have been (in particular the Bishop of Man, and Dr. Jessop) very eminent for Learning and Loyalty, and every way qualified according to the Statutes, I should not press your Lordship to lay the Concern of the College (which hath upon all occasions express'd its Zeal and Forwardness in Defence of the Crown, and (as I particularly know) in the great Affairs of the Succession) before His Majesty; who, I hope, will leave them to their Rules as the Statutes, which have hitherto (excepting in the times of Rebellion) been conscientiously observed, and which will be the highest Satisfaction to the truly Loyal University, and promote His Majesty's Service, which has always been the Endeavour of,

Your Lordships Most Humble Servant.

A Copy of the Citation to the Vice-President and Fellows, for to appear at White-Hall, June the 6th, 1687:

By His Majesties Commissioners for Ecclesiastical Causes, and for the Visitation of the Universities, and of all, and every Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, Colleges, &c.

Complaint having been made unto Us, that the Vice-President, and Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen College in Oxon, have refused to comply with His Majesties Letters Mandatory, for electing and admitting Mr. Anthony Farmer President of the same College, in the room of Dr. Clark deceased; and that notwithstanding His Majesties Letters they have elected Mr. John Hough President of the said College: You and either of you are hereby requir'd to Cite and Summon the said Vice-President and Fellows, requiring 'em, or such of the said Fellows as they shall depute in their behalf, to appear before Us in the Council-Chamber at White-Hall, upon Monday the 6th of the next Month of June, at four in the Afternoon, to answer to such Matters as shall be objected against them, concerning the Premises; and of the due Execution thereof, You are to certify Us then and there:

Given under our Seal the 28th of May, 1687.

To Thomas Atterbury,

and

Robert Eldows.

Or to either of them.

The Answer of the Vice-President, and other Fellows, of Magdalen College in Oxon, who were deputed by the said College, to the Question propounded by the Right Honourable, and Right Reverend the Lords Commissioners for Ecclesiastical Affairs, viz.

Why they did not obey His Majesties Letter, requiring them to Elect, and Admit Mr. Anthony Farmer President of the said College?

TH E said Vice President, and other deputed Fellows answered and said, That the said College of St. Mary Magdalen in Oxon is a Body Corporate, governed by Local Statutes, granted and confirmed to them by His Majesty's Royal Predecessor, King Henry the 6th, for Him and His Heirs and Successors, under the Great Seal of England, which are also since confirmed by several other Patents of others of His Majesties Royal Predecessors, under the Great Seal of England. That by the said Statutes of the College (to the Observation of which, each Fellow is sworn) it is ordered that the Person elected President thereof, shall be a Man of good Life and Reputation, of approved Understanding and good Temper, Discreet, Provident, and Circumspect, both in Spiritual and Temporal Affairs. And at the time of Election of a President, the said Fellows are bound by the said Statutes, to take an Oath that they shall nominate none to that Office, but such as are, or have have been Fellows of the said College, or of New College in Oxon: or if they are not actually Fellows at that time of Election; that they be such as have left their Fellowships in their respective Colleges upon credible accounts. And when two qualified Persons shall be nominated at the time of Election, by the greater number of all the Fellows, to the said Office of President; the thirteen Seniors also swear that they will Elect one of them, whom in their Consciences they think most proper and sufficient, most discreet, most useful, and best qualified for the Place; without any regard to love, hatred, favour or fear. And every Fellow when he is first admitted into his Fellowship in the said College, swears that he will inviolably keep and observe all the Statutes and Ordinances of the College, and every thing therein contained, so far as does or may concern him, according to the plain, literal, and grammatical sense and meaning thereof, and as much as in him lies will cause the same to be kept and observed by others; and that he will not procure any Dispensation contrary to his aforesaid Oath, or any part thereof, nor contrary to the Statutes and Ordinances to which it relates, or any of them; nor will he endeavour that such Dispensation shall be procured by any other, or others, publicly or privately, directly or indirectly. And if it shall happen that any Dispensation of this sort, of whatsoever Authority it shall be, whether in general or particular, or under what form of Words soever, it be granted, that he will neither make use of it, nor in any sort consent thereunto. That upon Notice of the Death of Dr. Clark, late President of the said College, the Vice-President called a Meeting of the said Fellows, in order to the appointing a day for the Election of a new President, and the 13th of April was the time prefix'd, with power to prorogue the same as they should see Cause, till the 15th, beyond which time they could not statutely defer their Election, and in pursuance thereof a Citation or Premonition was fix'd upon the Chappel-door of the said College, signifying the same, and by which the absent Fellows were Summoned to repair home, as the Statute in the Case requires. And the said Vice President, and other deputed Fellows farther say, that on the 11th of April aforesaid, they received His Majesties Letters Mandatory, to Elect and Admit the said Mr. Anthony Farmer President of the said College: But forasmuch as the said Vice-President and Fellows, apprehended the right of Election to be in them, and believed His Majesty never intended to dispossess them of their Rights: And forasmuch as the said Mr. Farmer had never been Fellow either of Magdalen or New College in Oxon, and had not those Qualifications which in, and by, the said Statutes of the College are required in the Character of a President, as they in their Consciences did, or do verily believe; and in regard that they could not comply with His Majesties Letter, without the Violation of their Oaths, and hazard of their legal Interest and Property, wherewith they are by their Statutes possessed, and which by their Oaths they are bound to maintain, they represented the same by their humble Petition to His Majesty. And having deferred their Election of a President to the last day limited by their Statutes, then they proceeded to Election, and having first received the Eucharist, and taken the said Oaths, as the Statutes enjoin, to choose a Person so qualified as before expressed, they did Elect the Reverend Mr. John Hough, B.D. and one of the Fellows of their College, a Person every way qualified to be President, who has been since confirmed by the Bishop of Winton their Visitor; as the Statutes of the said College direct.

And that they might not lye under His Majesties Displeasure by their Proceedings, they did on the 18th of April make an humble representation thereof to His Majesty, by his Grace the Duke of Ormond, Chancellor of the University of Oxon, setting forth their indispensable Obligations to observe their Founder's Statutes.

All which Matters the Vice President, and other deputed Fellows, do humbly offer to your Lordships, and pray to be dismissed with your Lordships favour.

The Fellows Reasons why they Elected not Mr. Farmer, &c.

Whereas the Vice President, and other deputed Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge in Oxon, have in their Answer to your Lordships, set forth, that by the Statutes of the said College, it is ordered, That the Person to be elected President thereof, should be a Man of good Life and Reputation, and of good Manners and Temper; and likewise, that Mr. Anthony Farmer hath not those Qualifications which in and by the said Statutes are requir'd in the Character of a President, as they in their Consciences did and do verily believe. They humbly crave leave to represent to your Lordships some of those Reasons which induced them to such belief, viz.

That Mr. Farmer did mis-behave himself in Trinity College in Cambridge: That he received Admonition from the Master of the College, in order to his Expulsion; which remains in the Register of the said College, under his own Hand.

That having left Cambridge, he taught School at Chippenham in Wiltshire, under a Nonconformist Minister, without License.

That in September 1683. the said Mr. Farmer was entred into St. Mary Magdalen Hall in Oxon, where such frequent Complaints were brought against him to the Principal, for his troublesome Humour and unquiet Temper, that to preserve the Peace of the Society, he was desired to leave the said Hall.

That after his leaving Magdalen Hall, he was admitted into Magdalen College, where discoursing about Religion, he declared, That there was no Protestant but would cut the King's Throat: notwithstanding which, at other times he declared to some of the Fellows of the said College, That whatsoever he pretended, he was really a Member of the Church of England; and that he made an Interest with some Roman Catholicks, only to get Preferment by their Means, and for that reason was willing to be thought of their Religion.

That at the very time when His Majesty's Letter came to the College in his behalf, the said Mr. Farmer was at Abington in very ill Company, where he continued drinking to excess two or three days and Nights together; and amongst other Disorders, was one of those that then in the night time threw the Town-Stocks into the River:

River: and that in general the said Mr. Farmer hath had the Unhappines to lie under an ill Fame, as to his Life and Conversation, as by several Letters and Certificates, ready to be produced, will more largely appear.

Copies of Letters and Certificates delivered to the Lords Commissioners for Ecclesiastical Affairs, June 27. 1687.

I. Anthony Farmer, Batchelour of Arts, and Scholar of this College, do confess, That I have behav'd my self very unlike a Member of this College, and even a Christian, at the Dancing-School: for which I humbly ask Pardon, and do acknowledge before the Seniority, that I have deservedly received of the Master my first Admonition in order to Expulsion.

II. These are to certifie, That Mr. Anthony Farmer was Usher to Mr. Benj. Flower, a Nonconformist Preacher in the Town of Chippenham in the County of Wilt, for the space of half a Year or upwards, the said Mr. Flower keeping School without License from the Bishop, and the said Mr. Farmer continuing his Usher for the time mentioned, without any License also. Witness our Hands,

III. MR. Anthony Farmer was entred of St. Mary Magdalen Hall in Oxford, Septemb. 1683. Where, after he had been some time, frequent Complaints were brought to me by some of the Masters, that he raised Quarrels and Differences amongst them; that he often occasioned Disturbances, and was of a troublesome and unpeaceable Humour. Whereupon, that Love and Friendship might be preserv'd and continu'd in the Society, as it used to be, I advis'd the said Mr. Farmer to make tryal if he could live more easily and quietly in some other House. Accordingly he did voluntarily leave the Hall, July the 13th, 1685. and got himself admitted into Magdalen College.

William Levett, Principal.

IV. I Do certifie, That Mr. William Bambrigg, Gentleman Commoner of Magdalen Hall, Oxon, did say, That Mr. Anthony Farmer, Master of Arts, did intice him from his Studies in the University to go to London, where he the said Mr. Farmer did attempt to draw the said Mr. Bambrigg into several Debaucheries both at Taverns and Bawdy-houses. Witness my Hand,

John Ryland, Mr. of Arts of Magd. Hall,

V. I Do certifie, That Mr. William Bambrigg, Gentleman Commoner of Magdalen Hall, did say, That Mr. Anthony Farmer, Master of Arts of the said Hall, did receive Money of him and other Gentlemen, publickly to expose unto him a naked Woman; which he accordingly did. Witness my Hand.

Richard Clerk, Mr. of Arts of Magd. Hall

June 9. 1687.

VI. I Am very willing to justifie any thing I have formerly said, relating to so serious a matter as this is you enquire after.

Mr. Farmer, one Night in the Cloyster, asked me why I did not get a Commission: I told him truly, I had not Friends to do it for me. He then asked me, what I would do for one: I told him, I would fight for my King, and whatsoever he should command me. He then ask'd me; if I would fight for the King's Religion: I told him, there would be no occasion for that, nor would it ever be required of me. He ask'd me of what Religion I was: I told him a Protestant. And then he said, There was no Protestant but would cut the King's Throat; and that he should lose Three Thousand Pounds, for being of that Religion heintended to be of; which he said was a Papist. This, to the best of my Remembrance, is the full of what he said. If I have omitted any thing, it is my care not to write more than I would honestly and justly swear to. I am,

S I R,

Your most Obliged and most Humble Servant,
John Brabourin.

VII. IN or about January last, 1687. Mr. Anthony Farmer declared before us, That the Report of his being a Papist was false; but that he was willing to be thought so, because it might do him a Kindness: That the reason of his Acquaintance with Mr. Brent and Mr. Walker, was to get Preferment by their Interest: That he had not forsaken the Protestant Religion; adding, we should call him Rogue, if ever he did: That he would not make any publick Declaration of this, but would declare it amongst Friends, when and where he pleased.

VIII. I Do hereby certifie, That Robert Gardiner, Porter of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge, did tell me, that Mr. Farmer did very often come into the College late at Night, so much in drink, that he could scarce go or speak. Witness my Hand, this 9th day of June 1687.

George Fulham.

IX. UPon Monday April the third, Mr. Farmer came to the Lobster in Abington with Mr. Clerk, Mr. Gravener, and Mr. Jennyfar, about eight in the Morning, and staid some time in the House, and went from thence to the Tavern; return'd again about eleven at Night, and sat up till one in the Morning: The next day they went to the Bush Tavern and sent for a quarter of Lamb for their Supper, and there Mr. Farmer, Mr. Clerk, Mr. Gravener, and two Troopers and others, continued till past eleven at Night, and so return'd to the aforesaid place, and sat up till past three in the Morning.

This

This I do assert, was the Company that the said Mr. Anthony Farmer kept, and these were the unseasonable Hours. In witness whereof, I am ready to swear, whenever a Subpoena shall be sent to me.

George Mortimer.

X. Mrs. Mortimer is ready to assert, That when Mr. Anthony Farmer return'd to the Lobster about eleven at Night, he came much concern'd in Drink, and was for kissing the said Mrs. Mortimer, which, he being a Stranger, she permitted him to do; but in doing of it, he the said Mr. Anthony Farmer put his Tongue in her Mouth, which was such a Rudeness, that she immediately went out of his Company and would not come nigh him any more.

Martha Mortimer.

XI. Being in Company with William Hopkins of Abington, the 12th of June last 1687. I heard him declare, That himself, with one Mr. Farmer of the University of Oxon, and some others, did in a Frolick, at an unseasonable time of Night, take away the Town-Stocks from the place where they constantly stood, and carried them in a Cart a considerable way, and threw them into a Pool commonly call'd Mad Hall's Pool. Witness my Hand, the Day and Year above written.

Some Clauses of particular Statutes to which the Case relates.

IN their Statutes concerning their Election of a President, his Character is thus described: That he must be a Man of good Reputation, and good Life, and circumspect both in Spiritual and Temporal Affairs.

In the same Statutes the Oath which every Fellow is obliged to take, before he can give his Vote in the Nomination of a President, is this: viz.

That he will name one or two of St. Mary Magdalen College, or of those who have been Fellows there, or have left their places upon a legal and credible account: Or that he will name one or two of the Fellows of St. Mary Winchester College, commonly called New College in Oxon, or of those who have been formerly Fellows there, and have left their places upon a credible account. After this, the thirteen Senior Fellows swear, That out of the two thus nominated, they will with all speed, Elect one to exercise the Office of a President, whom in their Consciences they think most proper and sufficient, most discreet, most useful, and best qualified for it, either without any regard to Love, Hatred, Favour, Fear, &c. as in the forementioned Statute is more largely expressed. —

Part of the OATH which every Fellow takes when Admitted.

Item. I Do Swear that I will not procure any Dispensation contrary to my aforesaid Oath, or to any part thereof, nor contrary to the Statutes and Ordinances to which they relate, or any one of them; nor will I endeavour that such Dispensations be procured by any other or others, publickly or privately, directly or indirectly: And if it shall happen that any Dispensation of this sort shall be procured, or freely granted or obtain'd, of what Authority soever it be, whether in general or particular; under what form of Words soever it be granted; I will neither make use of it, nor in any sort consent thereunto.

So help me God.

WHereas it appears to us, that Mr. John Hough, B. D. hath been unduly Elected President of Saint Mary Magdalen College, in the University of Oxon, we have thought fit, upon mature Consideration thereof, That the said Election be declared void, and the said Mr. John Hough be amoved from the said Presidentship; and accordingly we do hereby declare and decree, That the said Election is void; and do amove the said Mr. John Hough from the place of President of the said College.

A Copy of Dr. Aldworth's and Dr. Fairfax's Suspension.

WHereas Charles Aldworth, Doctor of Laws, Vice President of St. Mary Magdalen College Oxon, and the Deputies, Fellows of the same House, have been conven'd before Us for their Contempt in not obeying His Majesty's Letters Mandatory, for Electing and Admitting Mr. Anthony Farmer President of the said College; and the said Dr. Aldworth and Deputies having been heard thereupon, We have thought fit to declare, pronounce and decree, That the said Dr. Aldworth shall for the said Contempt be suspended from being Vice President of the said College: And that Henry Fairfax, Doctor of Divinity, one of the Fellows of the said College, shall for the said Contempt be Suspended from his Fellowship; and accordingly We do hereby Suspend Dr. Charles Aldworth from being Vice President of the said College, and the said Dr. Henry Fairfax from his Fellowship in the said College.

S. I. R.

YOU will receive herewith His Majesty's Mandate to Admit me President of your Colledge of St. Mary Magdalen, in Oxon, together with a Letter of my Lord Sunderland, pursuant to His Majesty's Commands. I am indisposed, as I have been for some time, and not in a condition as yet to Travel; and therefore my request to you is, That upon receipt of the King's Pleasure, you would do me the Favour to Admit me by Proxy, (i.e.) Either the next Senior Fellow under your self, resident, or either of my Chaplains, Mr. William Wickins, or Mr. Thomas Collins, whom I depute in my stead, which is as valid in Law, as if I were present my self; and is the most usual and customary Practice. And by so doing, you will oblige

Your Very Loving Friend and Brother,

Vol. III.

OXON, September 4th, 1687.

The Lord Sunderland sent an Order to the Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge, to attend the King at Christ-Church, at three in the Afternoon. They attended accordingly.

King WHat's your name, are you Dr. Pudsey?
Dr. P. Yes, may it please your Majesty.

K. Did you receive my Letter;

Dr. P. Yes, Sir, we did.

K. Then you have not dealt with me like Gentlemen. you have done very uncivilly by me and undutifully.—Here they all kneeled, and Dr. Pudsey offered a Petition, which His Majesty refused to receive: And said

K. Ye have been a stubborn turbulent Colledge, I have known you to be so these 26 years: You have affronted me in this. Is this your Church of England Loyalty? One would wonder to find so many Church of England men in such a business. Go home and shew your selves good Members of the Church of England. Get you gone; know I am your King, I will be obey'd; and I command you to be gone: Go and admit the Bishop of Oxon Head, Principle; What d'ye call it of the Colledge.—? (One stood by said President) I mean President of the Colledge. Let them that refuse it look to it; they shall feel the weight of their Sovereign's Displeasure.

The Fellows going out of the Lodgings were call'd back.

K. I hear you have admitted a Fellow of the Colledge, since you receiv'd my Inhibition; Is this true? Have you not admitted Mr. Holden Fellow?

Dr. P. I think he was admitted Fellow: But we conceive—

Mr. Cra. May it please Your Majesty, there was no new Election or Admission, since Your Majesty's Inhibition; but only the Consummation of a former Election. (They always Elect to one years Probation) then the Person Elected is received, or rejected for ever.

K. The Consummation of a former Election; 'twas downright Disobedience, and 'tis a fresh aggravation. Get you gone home, I say again; go, get you gone, and immediately repair to your Chappel, and Elect the Bishop of Oxon, or else you must expect to feel the weight of my hand—

The Fellows offered again their Petition, on their Knees.

K. Get you gone, I will receive nothing from you till you have obey'd me, and admitted the Bishop of Oxon.

Upon which they went immediately to their Chappel, Dr. Pudsey proposing whether they would obey the King, and elect the Bishop of Oxon? They answered in their turns; They were as ready to obey His Majesty in all things that lay in their power, as any of the rest of His Subjects: But the Electing the Bishop of Oxon, being directly contrary to their Statutes, and the positive Oaths they had taken, they could not apprehend it in their power to obey Him in this Matter.

A Copy of the Petition offer'd at Oxford,
September 4. 1687.

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty, &c.

Humbly sheweth,

That upon the 27th of August we receiv'd Your Majesty's Letters Mandatory, Dated August 14th, requiring us to admit the Right Reverend Father in God Samuel Lord Bishop of Oxon, to be our President; and dispensing with all Statutes and Constitutions to the contrary. It is an unexpressible Affliction to us, to find our selves reduced to such an extremity, that either we must disobey Your Majesty's Royal Command, contrary to our own Inclinations, and that constant course of Loyalty which we have shew'd in all instances hitherto upon all occasions whatsoever; or else break our Founder's Statutes, and deliberately perjure our selves.

For our Founder hath obliged us under Oath, when we came in Fellows, inviolably to observe his Statutes, and one Clause therein enjoyns us never to admit, or make use of a Dispensation granted by any Authority whatsoever, whereby we may be absolved from the same. In this Statute for the Election of a President, he commands us upon Oath to Elect such a Person into the place of President, within 15 days after the vacancy, who either is, or has been Fellow of our own, or New-Colledge: Which we represented to Your Majesty in our humble Petition, sign'd April 9th, wherein we offered our selves ready to Elect any Person capable of the same, who Your Majesty should be pleased to recommend, and having waited the utmost time limited by our Statutes, and receiv'd no Answer to that effect, we did then according to the exigence of our Statutes (having first taken the Holy Eucharist, and our several Oaths to that purpose) nominate and Elect such a Person, as we in our Consciences did believe to be every way qualified for the Place: By which Act of ours we have conveyed all that right to him, which our Founder hath intrusted us with, and it does not lie in our power to admit any other. Our Founder in another Statute obligeth us under the pain of Perjury, a dreadful Anathema, and eternal Damnation, not to suffer any of his Statutes to be altered, infringed, or dispensed with, and commands us under the same Sacred Obligations, not to execute any Orders or Decree whatsoever, contrary or repugnant to the said Statutes; by which said Statutes, and Oaths, we are utterly incapacitated to admit the said Reverend Father in God to be our President.

May it please Your Sacred Majesty, to give us leave to lay this our Case, and our selves, with all submission, at Your Royal Feet, most earnestly beseeching Your Sacred Majesty, to extend to us Your humble Petitioners, that Grace and Tenderneſs which Your Majesty hath vouchsafed to all Your other Subjects; and not to believe us guilty of any obstinacy or undutifulness, Crimes which our Souls abhor; but to receive us into Your Majesty's Grace and Favour, the greatest temporal Blessing which our Hearts can wish.

And your humble Petitioners shall always (as in Duty bound) pray to Almighty God, to bless Your Majesty with a long and happy Reign over us, and afterwards to receive you to an immortal Crown of Glory.

A Copy of the Address which the Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen gave to the Lord President of the Council, Sept. 6. 1687; and which was delivered his Majesty at Bath.

WE Your Majesty's most humble, and most dutiful Subjects, the Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge in Oxon, being deeply afflicted with the late sence of Your Majesty's heavy Displeasure; grounded, as we in all reason humbly presume, upon a most unkind misrepresentation of our Actions, in relation to an Election of a President, into Your Majesty's said Colledge: Do humbly beg leave to prostrate our selves at Your Royal Feet, offering all real Testimonies of Duty and Loyalty. And as we have never fail'd to evidence both our Principles and Practices to be truly Loyal, in obedience to the Commands of Your Royal Brother, and Your Sacred Self, in matters of the like Nature: So whatsoever way Your Majesty shall be pleased to try our readinesſ to obey Your Royal Pleasure, in any instance that does not interfere with and violate our Consciences, which Your Majesty is studious to preserve, we shall most gladly and effectually comply therewith: A stubborn and a groundless resistance of Your Royal Will and Pleasure, in the present, and all other Cases, being that which our Souls eternally abhor, as becomes,

Your Majesty's most Loyal and most Obedient Subjects, &c.

A Copy of a Letter directed to Dr. Bayly, Fellow of Magdalen Colledge, Oxon; supposed to be Writ by Mr. W—— P——

Sir,
UPon an inquiry made of your present Fellows of Magdalen Colledge, I am inform'd that you are a person eminent in that Learned Body, for your Temper, Prudence, and good Conduct in Affairs; and therefore very fit to be address'd to by me, who do not send you this to trapan you, and your Brethren; but out of a passionate concern for your interest, to persuade you, either to a compliance with his Majesty's Letters Mandatory; or to think among your selves of some Expedient to prevent the ruin of your Colledge, and your selves: And to offer it to His Majesty's Royal Consideration, that the Order for the Quo Warranto against the Colledge may be recall'd, before it be too late; for you cannot be sensible how highly His Majesty is incens'd against you, neither can you give one instance whether ever that sort of proceeding was judged against the Crown. Your Cause most think it very hard; but you are not in Prudence to relye on the goodness of your Cause; but to do what the present instant of Affairs will permit, and in patience to expect a Season that will be more auspicious to Persons of your Character. Every Mechanick knows the temper of His present Majesty, who never will receive a baffle in any thing that he heartily espouseth, and that he doth this, your selves have had too late and manifest an instance, to doubt of his zeal in the Affair.

Where there are so many Statutes to be observed, 'tis impossible but some must be broken at one time or another; and I am informed by the Learned of the Law, that a failure in any one point, point, forfeits your Grant, and lays your Colledge open to the Royal disposal.

I could give many other prudent Arguments, that might possibly incline you to a speedy endeavour of putting an end to your Troubles, almost, at any rate; but I shall suggest this one thing to you, that your fatal overthrow would be a fair beginning of so much aimed at Reformation, first of the University, then of the Church, and administer such an opportunity to the Enemy, as may not perhaps occur in His Majesty's Reign. I am

Your affectionate Servant, &c.

The Answer to the aforementioned written Letter, Dated Oct. 3d. 1687.

THE inclosed Paper is a Copy of a Letter, which by the charitable purpose of it, seems to be writ by you, who have been already so kind as to appear on our behalf, and are reported by all that know you to imploy much of your time in doing good to Mankind, and using your Credit with His Majesty, to undeceive him in any wrong impressions given him of his conscientious Subjects, and where his Justice and Goodness have been thereby abused, to reconcile the Persons injur'd to His Majesty's Favour, and secure them by it from Oppression and Prejudice. In this confidence, I presume to make this application to you, desiring your excuse for not subscribing it: For if you did write the Letter, you know to whom it was directed; and if you did not, I hope your Charity will induce you to make such use of your light you have by it, into the Affairs of our Colledge, as to mediate for us with His Majesty, to be restored to his good opinion, as the only thing which is desired by us, who are zealous, above all earthly things, for his Felicity and Glory.

We are not conscious of ever giving His Majesty any just offence, as it will appear with you, when you shall have perused the enclosed Papers; and have therefore no reason to fear the issuing out of a Quo Warranto against us. And though you are pleased to apprehend it, no instance can be given of a Judgment against the Crown, upon the process of that Writ: The Learned in the Law tell me, there is nothing more common, and whereof many Cases are reported by Kellaway, from Page 128, to Page 152, of his Book of Reports: And I think I have heard of a Case in Coke's ninth Report of the Abbess of Prata Marcella, which evinces the same; wherein also there is a recital of Judgment given against Roger Mortimer for the King, upon a Quo Warranto in Court of Eyre, revers'd for Errour in the King's Bench. We hope though we have many Statutes, it will be found that we have not wilfully transgress'd any of them, for all our present Troubles are derived to us from our adherence to them, and our fear to offend God, and blemish our Consciences, by departing from them.

His Majesty is intentionally righteous and just in all his Proceedings, He will never knowingly invade any Man's Property, as He was solemnly pleased to declare in his Excellent Speech made in Council, on the 6th of February, 1684, at his Accession to the Government; which is again repeated in His gracious Declaration for Liberty of Conscience, of the 4th of April last past. It is upon His sacred, inviolable, and Royal Word and Promise, we must depend; not doubting but when His Majesty shall be rightly inform'd of our Case, in reference to both His Mandatory Letters to our Colledge, His Anger towards us will be totally extinguished. Our compliance to the first (which was Mr. Farmer's Election) would have involv'd us in the guilt of manifest Perjury, and the wilful violation of our Statutes: And we are confident his Majesty would never have granted the second on the behalf of my Lord Bishop of Oxon, if he had known we were then possess'd of a President duly Elect'd according to our Statutes, and confirmed by the Bishop of Winton, our Visitor (as the Statutes require); and if he is thereby invest'd with a Lay-Freehold under the protection of his Majesties Laws; which we cannot undo or attempt to invade, without subjecting our selves to Suits at Law, and doing an apparent injury to the President; who doth not conceive himself to be affected with the Sentence of the Lords Commissioners, (to which he was no Party) whereby his Place is declared void, without any Citations, Summons, or hearing of him

I believe no instance can be given of a Quo Warranto brought against a Colledge or Hall in the Universities, from the first foundation of them to this day, or any other Ecclesiastical Corporation: for the Abuses of some Constitutions or Franchises in them, and the Misdemeanours of particular Persons will not destroy a Colledge: And if the Corporation of a Colledge should be dissolv'd, the Revenues therefore will return to the Founders Heirs, and not devolve to the Crown. And if our Colledge must be the first Example of that kind, we shall be better justified by the strict Observation of our Statutes, (at least to God and our own Consciences) than we could have been by a voluntary and deliberate Breach of them.

It was Loyalty and Conscience, that in the Reign of King Charles the First, made thirty four of our forty Fellows, and most of the Scholars of our Foundation, rather quit their Places, and embrace Misery and Ruine, than to submit to the Government of the Usurpers of the Crown. And in Monmouth's Rebellion, the same Inducements prevailed on us to raise a Company at our own charges, under the command of one of our Fellows, to engage against him. And we hope that these and many other the like instances, which may be given of the Loyalty and Zeal of our Society to the Royal Family, will be received as Evidences thereof, and that our good and gracious Sovereign will not exclude us from that Liberty of Conscience, which he was pleas'd to extend to all his Subjects.

SIR, I am your most Affectionate Servant.

Some QUERIES sent to the Fellows of Magdalen Colledge from Windlor, September 15. 1687.

First, WHether, waving your Election of the Bishop of Oxon, you cannot, without violence to your Conscience, signify to his Majesty, or the above Reverend Bishop, your willingness to admit the Lord Bishop President of your Colledge?

Secondly, Whether it be not more Interest to the Protestant Religion, to have a suspected Popish President, than to have all the places of the Colledge refiled by the Kings sole Authority with Popish Novices and Priests?

Thirdly

Thirdly, Whether you are not under a mistake, in thinking you should render your selves more acceptable to the Protestant Nobility and Gentry, by your being turned out of your Fellowships by Injustice and Violence, as you conceive; or rather will not they be very cautious how they receive you into their Families, for fear of giving of Offence?

Fourthly, Whether his Majesty, as Supream Visitor of the University, cannot place or displace there ad libitum; or whether you have a right notion of the Proceedings which have been practised against you? Whether you suppose that the Lords Commissioners proceeded against you as Lords Commissioners, or Visitors? Which Notion, I am sure, will overthrow some bodies Plea and exception against their Authority.

Fifthly, Whether you acted like men skilled in business, when you refused Mr. Pen's Mediation, who you may be sure had good Authority for what he did? You could not but know that man, and therefore must needs be forearmed against any Wiles that could be offered to you. Whether an unanimous Subscription for an Expedient, (which indeed I think you ought not to refuse in good manners, since the King was pleased to propose it) presented to his Majesty by Mr. Pen, or another Favourite, would prevent the destruction of the best Foundation in Europe?

Lastly, Whether you be not drawn beyond your Knowledge, by some hotheaded Advisers, which never consider the present state of his Majesty's Court of Justice?

An Answer to several Queries to the Vice-President and Fellows of Magdalen Colledge in Oxon, sent from Windsor, dated the 25th of September, 1687.

To the First. WE cannot, without violence to our Consciences, and deliberate Perjury, admit any person to be President of our Colledge, that is not elected thereunto, and qualified according to our Statutes; whereby the Bishop of Oxon is in no sort capable; nor is there any Memorial in all our Register of any admission of a President without Election, but of one Dr. Nicholas Bond, whose case was as followeth, (viz.) Upon the death of Dr. Lawrence Humphreys, about the 30th or 32th of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, the Queen recommended Dr. Bond (being a Fellow of our Colledge) to be Elected President. Many of the Fellows inclin'd in their judgment to Elect one Smith (another of the Fellows) and at their meeting for Election, the Contention was so great, that they rose without Electing, and the Obstinacy continued till the place became laps'd: And there being no provision in our Statutes to direct us what to do in such a Case, the Queen, by her Letters Patents, Constituted the said Dr. Bond to be President; and therein declared, That her Majesty being inform'd that the Fellows had neglected to make Election of a President in due time, (as their Statutes required) and those Statutes having made no provision for such an Omission, She, out of her Princely care for the place, and indulgence for those persons who had been guilty of that neglect, did by advice of the Bishop of Winton, their Visitor, constitute Dr. Bond their President; with protestation nevertheless, that She did not thereby pretend to supersede their Statutes, or invade their Right of Election, which was thereby invested in them, but took this course as the only means left to supply their Defect of Election.

To the Second. We must not make our selves guilty of deliberate Perjury, for any considerations whatsoever, both in respect to our Consciences, and that we may not by such a Breach upon our Statutes, expose our Constitution to a Forfeiture, nor do Evil that Good may come on it.

To the Third. We conceive we shall be more acceptable to all good men, for acting honestly according to our Consciences, than for voluntarily and unjustly departing from our Right.

To the Fourth. We pretend not to make it a Question, whether his Majesty, by his Authority Royal as Supream Visitor, can grant a Commission for Visitation of any Colledge that has a Local Visitor by their Statutes, and are not Royal Foundations: But we are advised, that no Commission can be granted under the Great Seal to Visitors, to place and displace Members of Colledges (whose places are Freeholds) ad libitum, or discretum; but they must proceed according to legal discretion, that is, by the Laws and Statutes of the Land, and the Local Statutes of the Colledge. And places concern'd for the Headships and Fellowships of Colledges, are Temporal Possessions and cannot be impeach'd by Summary Proceedings. One Dr. Thomas Loweney President of our Colledge, was deprived in Queen Elizabeth's time, by the Bishop of Winton the Legal Visitor thereof Establish'd by Royal Authority, and he appeal'd to the Queen; but by the advice of all the Judges, it was held, that that the Queen by her Authority, as Supream Visitor, could not meddle in it, but he must bring Westminster-Hall, because Deprivation was a Cause merely temporal. The King has a great Authority Spiritual as well as Temporal; but no Commissioners can be authorized by the Crown to proceed in any Commission under the Great Seal or otherwise, but according to Law; in Spiritual Causes by the Canon Law, in Temporal by the other Laws, and Statutes of the Land. And wherein the proceedings in some Commissions are directed to be summariæ & de plano, &c. those words are to be applied to shorten the Forms of Process, and not formatter of Judgment: for Magna Charta provides for our Spiritual Liberties, as well as our Temporal.

An Account of the Visitation of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge in Oxon.

ON October 19th, Mr. Atterbury the King's Messenger fix'd a Citation on the Colledge and Chappel-Doors, requiring the Pretended President and Fellows, and other Members of the Colledge to appear before the Lords Commissioners, Bishop of Chester, Lord Chief Justice Wright, and Mr. Baron Jenner, in the Chappel, at Nine of the Clock on Friday Morning, November 21.

On Thursday the Lords Commissioners came to Oxon, attended with three Troops of Horse which Quarter there.

On Friday-Morning at Nine they went into the Chappel; the President and Fellows thinking they had design'd to sit in the Quire, made no preparation of Seats in the outward Chappel; upon which their Lordships adjourn'd to the Hall, where their Commission was then read, which which in general was the same with the former: These three being added to the other Lords Commissioners, and particularly empower'd to visit Magdalen Colledge only.

This done, the Names of the President and Fellows were called over, Dr. Hough being first called. All in Town appeared, (except Dr. Fairfax) and excuses were made for the absent.

Then a Speech was made by the Bishop of Chester, and in it his Lordship was Severe against Disloyalty and Disobedience. He urg'd that the Church of England taught an unconditionate and unlimited Obedience; He spake of the Kings Gracious Promises to Arch-Bishops and Bishops, &c. which had deserved thanks on bended Knees, notwithstanding the Oxon Reasons to the contrary, which they knew best who was the Author thereof. He told them that it could not be expected, but that the King would give all encouragement to those of his own Religion, which could be done without severity and cruelty which His Majesty abhorr'd, and without injuring the Church of England, which was at present establish'd by Law: He told them that this Corporation as well as others were the Creatures of the Crown; and that it was insolence in their Local Statutes to spurn against their Maker.

That their Distempers had brought this Visitation upon them, the Consequences of which might beill to the Church and Universities: That however they might escape in this World, these Sins were to be accounted for above their other Sins in the next. He Exhorted them by the Bowels of Christ to consider these things: He told them, that the Eyes of the World were upon them, and they ought to take care that their Practices might not influence their deluded admirers. In short, the whole design of the Speech seem'd to be promises and threats, to aim at the inducing them to a compliance.

The Court was then Adjourned till Two in the Afternoon.

In the Afternoon were called over the Names of the Demys, Chaplains, Clerks, Choristers, and Colledge Servants. The President then interpos'd, desiring leave to speak before they proceeded any further, which being granted, he told their Lordships: That President. THE time betwixt your Citation and Appearance was so short; that the Society had not time to advise with the Council how to behave themselves on this Occasion: Therefore desired of your Lordships a Copy of the Commission, and time to consider of it.

Bishop Ch. 'Tis upon Record, you may have it above.

Pr. Is it the same the other Lords Commissioners had?

Bish. Ch. Yes for the most part it is.

Pr. Then my Lord, I do assure you (and will make Oath if you please) that I have often endeavoured to get a Copy of it, and could not procure it.

L. C. J. Have you not heard it Read, or will you hear it again?

Pr. I am not capable of making a Judgment of it my self, but it is possible there may be Errours and Defects in't, such as the Society may make use of to their own advantage, and I am confidant it is neither his Majesties intention nor your Lordships we should be debar'd from it.

A Copy was then denied.

Bish. Ch. Dr. Hough, will you submit to this Visitation?

Pr. My Lords, I do declare here in the name of my self, and the greater part of the Fellows; that we submit to the Visitation, as far as it is consistent with the Laws of the Land, and the Statutes of the Colledge, and no further. I desire your Lordships that it may be Recorded.

This was twice Repeated.

L. C. J. You cannot imagine that we Act contrary to the Laws of the Land, and as to the Statutes the King has dispensed with them: Do you think we come here to act against Laws?

Pr. It does not become me (my Lords) to say so, but I'll be plain with your Lordships; I find that your Commission gives you Authority to change and alter the Statutes, and make new ones as you think fit: Now my Lords we have an Oath, not only to observe these Statutes (laying his hand on the Book) but to admit of no new ones, or alterations in these; This must be my behaviour here, I must admit of no alteration from it; and by the Grace of God never will.

Bish. Ch. Do you observe all these Statutes?

Pr. Yes, my Lord, I hope we do.

Bish. Ch. You have a Statute there for Mafs, why don't you read Mafs?

Pr. My Lord, the matter of this Oath is unlawful; and in such a Case, no Man is oblig'd to observe an Oath: Besides, the Statute is taken away by the Laws of the Land.

Bish. Ch. By what Law?

Dr. Stafford. By that which obliges to say Common-Prayer.

Bish. Chester. What, the Act of Uniformity? I have often considered it, and don't remember one word of Mafs in it.

Dr. Staff. But that obliges us to use the Liturgy of the Church of England, in all Collegiate Churches and Chappels. And, I hope, my Lords, you do not imagine that we can say Common-Prayer and Mafs together.

Bish. Ch. Do you allow that Act of Parliament can free you from the obligation of a Statute?

Pr. I do not say, but that his Majesty may alter our Statutes, nor do I know but a Parliament may do the same; I dispute not their Power: only this, my Lord, I say, that I who already have taken an Oath to observe these Statutes as they now stand, and am sworn not to admit of any change or alteration by any Authority whatsoever, [And then turning to the Oath where they were to observe those Statutes and no other, according to the Literal and Grammatical sense, &c. and reading it to their Lordships.] can obey none: But then those who come after such Limitations and Restrictions are made, are not oblig'd to observe 'em; and that, my Lords is our Case as to the Statutes of the Mafs.

Then the Decree of the 22d of June was read, declaring the President's Election Null and Void.

Bish. Ch. Did you know of this Commission, &c?

Pr. Yes, my Lord, I have heard of it.

Bish. Ch. Why then did you not obey it?

Pr. I was never Cited before their Lordships, nor was either heard by them in Person or Proxy; and I think I am the only instance that is extant, of any Man that was ever depriv'd of a Freehold, wherein he was legally invested, and of which he was quietly possess'd, without being Summon'd or Heard.

Here mention was made of Dr. Fairfax's Suspension.

Pr. My Lord, he is absent, and if your Lordships give me leave, I have somewhat to say on his account; your Lordships may please to observe in that Decree, that the reason given, why Dr. Fairfax was Suspended from his Fellowship, was, because had not obeyed his Majesty's Command, in not Electing Mr. Anthony Farmer President of the Colledge: Now the Charge of Immorality given in against Mr. Farmer by the Colledge-Delegates was made out, and their Lordships fully satisfied in it, on the 29th of July, notwithstanding which, this Decree for Suspension of Dr. Fairfax, was fix'd on the Colledge Gates, August 2d.

Bish. Ch. The King hath for the most part recommended to the Presidentship of this Colledge.

Pr. I am the Twentieth President, and only four of that number have been recommended by the Kings and Queens of England, whereof three were every were qualified for that Office.

Bish. Ch. Who were those?

Pr. My Lord, there was one in the time of Edward the Sixth, one in Queen Elizabeth's, and two in the late King's Reign.

Bish. Ch. Was there never a one in King Charles the First's Reign?

Pr. Not that we know of.

Bish. Ch. What think you of Dr. Oliver?

Pr. It doth not appear to us, my Lord, that he ever had a Mandate.

Bish. Ch. But it appears to us, and that I will bring you one to swear, that he had a Mandate.

Pr. The truth is, we have lost the Register of Dr. Oliver's Election and Admission; the Register betwixt the Year 1640, or thereabouts, and 60. being taken away by those who were turn'd out of the Colledge at that time; but I believe, my Lord, we are able to prove that he was Elected and Admitted according to the Statute.

Bish. Ch. Was Dr. Clarke a Statutable Person?

Pr. Yes, my Lord.

Bish. Ch. Do not the Statutes require that he should be in Orders? was he in Orders?

Pr. My Lord, the Statutes only require that he should be Doctor of Divinity, Physick, Law, or Master of Arts: There is indeed one Statute which says, The President or Seniour Fellow should Read Prayers upon such certain Days; from whence we conclude, that the Founder suppos'd we might have a President that might not be in Orders; and in such a Case he takes care that the Seniour Fellow should do his Duty.

Mr. Char. My Lord, will you be pleased to ask Dr. Hough, whether Dr. Clark was Married or not?

Pr. No, Sir, he was a Widower.

Then a Petition was read from the Society to his Majesty, signed the 9th of April, and presented the 10th to the Earl of Sunderland, by the hands of Dr. Thomas Smith and Captain Bagshaw, wherein 'twas set forth, that having heard that his Majesty would recommend Mr. Farmer to them, a Person incapable; they did humbly beseech him; either to leave them to a free Election, or to recommend a qualified Person.

Bish. Ch. Was this the Petition?

Answer. Yes.

Bish. Ch. Why then did you not stay for his Majesty's Answer?

Pr. My Lord, We did till the very last Day wherein we are limited to finish the Election; and my Lord Sunderland returned in the King's Name, this Answer, that His Majesty expected to be obeyed. Now, my Lord, we did no longer defer the Election, because our Statutes enjoin us within such a time, and we staid to the utmost. Nor could we chuse the Person his Majesty did recommend, knowing him to be so unfit, as we afterwards made him appear to be. The Society was therefore to proceed to the Election of another Person, and did agree on such as you see.

Bish. Ch. A Mandate always implies an Inhibition.

Pr. My Lord, I cannot conceive that.

Bish. Ch. But I can; and if you question it, here's the King's Council ready to argue it.

Pr. My Lord, Whilst the Person his Majesty recommends appears duly qualified for the place, it seems indeed to imply that we should not proceed to the Election of another; but when he is known to be utterly incapable, it seems to be the same as if there were no Letter at all.

Some other things and questions less material were put, and then the Court was Adjourned to Saturday the 22d. at Nine in the Morning, to the common Room, the Hall being (as they said) too publick and incommodious.

Saturday, October 22d. 1687.

As soon as their Lordships met in the common Room, and the Society before them, the first Word was Withdraw; and after a little time, the President was called in alone.

Bish. Ch. DO you submit to the Decree of the Commissioners, whereby the Election is declared Null?

Pr. As to that Decree of the Lords above, it is a Nullity in its self from the beginning to the end, as it relates to me, I never having been Cited, nor having ever appeared before them, either in Person or Proxy: Besides, my Cause it self was never before them; their Lordships never inquiring or asking one question concerning the Legality or Statutableness of my Election: for which reasons (as I am informed) that Decree was of no Validity against me, according to methods in the Civil Law: But if it were, I am possessed of a Free hold, according to the Laws of England, and the Statutes of the Society, having been Elected as Unanimously, and with as much Formality as any one of my Predecessors Presidents of this Colledge, and afterwards Admitted by the Lord Bishop of Winton, our Visitor, as the Statutes of the Colledge require; and therefore I can't submit to that Sentence, because I think I cannot be depriv'd of my Free hold, but by course of Law in Westminster Hall, or by being some ways incapacitated by the Founder's Statutes.

Bish. Ch. Will you deliver up the Keys of the President's Office and Lodgings, to the use of that Person whom the King has appointed your President, as the Statutes require?

Pr.

Pr. I will immediately do it, if that appear.

Bish. Ch. Turn to that part of the President's Oath where he promifeth to submit quietly if he fhall be Expelled, either for his own Fault vel ob aliam Causam.

Pr. My Lord, that Statute only concerns me, if I am Expelled for any fault committed by me.

Bish. Ch. Vel ob aliam causam?

Pr. Then, my Lord, to be fhort, here is no caufe at all.

Bish. Ch. I ask you again, Will you deliver up the Keys to the President whom His Majesty hath appointed?

Pr. There neither is nor can be a President fo long as I live, and obey the Statutes of the Colledge; and therefore I do not think fit to give up my Right, the Keys and Lodgings.

Bish. Ch. We may demand them of you as Visitors.

Pr. My Lords, we never deliver up the Keys to the Bishop of Winton; and we own no greater Vifitatorial than his, he hath the King's Authority. 'Tis by Vertue of a Royal Charter that we live together, and enjoy the benefit of this Place; that impower'd our Founder to give us a Rule, and obliged us by Oath to act fuitable unto it: and the Bishop of Winton is hereby constituted to be our Vifitor; and all this we own from the King's Authority. The Bishop of Winton is our ordinary Vifitor; the King (I prefume) our extraordinary. But your Lordships know it hath been controverted, whether the King can vifit a private Colledge or not? The Authority of the President is made by delivering up the Statute-Book, and Keys; and therefore I look upon them as an effential Badge of my Office.

But I humbly beg that I may ask your Lordships one Queftion.

Your Lordship is pleas'd to demand of me to give up thefe things: Does your Lordship own my Right? For if not, what is it your Lordships would have me give up?

Bish. Ch. No, we look upon you as an Intruder.

Pr. If I am an Intruder, the Bishop of Winton made me one, and I thank God for it. My Lords, the time we have been allowed for this appearance, has been very fhort, but one day betwixt it and the Citation: We are Men ignorant in the Laws, and I muft confeß it of my felf in particular, that I have endeavour'd to give your Lordships a plain fatisfactory Reply to fuch Queftions as your Lordships have been pleas'd to put to me. It is very probable that through ignorance and inadvertency I may exprefs my felf unwarily: If fo I befeech your Lordship let no advantage be taken of it, my intention has been always to exprefs my felf with all imaginable Duty to the King, and Refpects to your Lordships. If I have done otherwife, I befeech your Lordships Candour in a favourable Interpretation of what I faid, that nothing may be taken amifs, where all was dutifully intended. And now my Lords, thus far have I appear'd before you as Judges; I now address to you as Men of Honour, and Gentlemen, I befeech you to represent me as dutiful to His Majesty to the laft Degree, as I always will be, fo far as my Confcience permits me, to the laft Moment of my Life; and when I am difpossest here, I hope your Lordships will interceed, that I may no longer lie under His Majesty's Difpleasure, or be frown'd upon by my Prince, which is the greateft Affliction can befall me.

Upon this the President was ordered to withdraw, and after a little time, he and the Fellows were called in again. Then the Bishop repeated this Queftion.

Bish. Ch. Dr. Hough, Will you deliver up the Keys, and quiet Poffeffion of the Lodgings, to the Perfon whom His Majesty has appointed President? To which no Answer was return'd. The Bishop repeated a fecond time.

Pr. My Lords, I have neither feen nor heard any thing to induce me to it.

Bish. Ch. Dr. Hough, Will you deliver up the Keys and quiet Poffeffion of the Lodgings, to the Perfon whom His Majesty has appointed President?

Whereupon the King's Proctor flood up and accus'd Dr. Hough of Contumacy; then the Bishop of Chefter admonish'd him in thefe Words, three times.

Bish. Ch. Dr. Hough, I admonish you to depart peaceably out of the Lodgings, and to act no longer as President, or pretended President of this Colledge.

Which being fo done, they fuck his Name out of the Book, and admonish'd the Fellows, and others of the Society, that they fhould no longer submit to his Authority.

Saturday, October the 22d, 1687. Oxon.

Dr. Fairfax's Cafe before the Commiffioners.

AT the firft Sefßions Doctor Fairfax purpofely abfented himfelf; but Mr. Asterbury making Affidavit he was in Town, and that he advis'd him to appear, the Doctor accordingly did fo the next day. The Doctor being called in alone, and the Doors immediately fhut, he beg'd of their Lordships fome Company might be let in; becaufe, as all had obferv'd, the Bishop in his Speech, at the opening their Commiffion, promis'd to tranfact every thing in the Face of the World. The Bishop complain'd of the Crowd. The Doctor then desired to fetch in but Two or Three, at length but One, and him at the Door, viz. The Colledge Steward, a Publick Notary.

Bar. Fen. You muft not think to prefcribe to the Court.

Bish. Ch. What's the Caufe of your Contempt, in not appearing at either Sefßions Yesterday?

Dr. Fair. No Contempt, my Lord, but for thefe enfuing Reafons.

First, I thought my Suspension above had eafed me of that trouble. The Doctor tendring a Copy of it, which was read by the Commiffioners. The Doctor infifted very much on the Reafons their Lordships at White-Hall gave for his Suspension, (viz.) For not obeying His Majesty, in Electing Mr. Farmer, he tendring a Copy of Articles made good againft him; and yet their Lordships order'd his Suspension to be fix'd on the Colledge-Gates five Days after that famous Hearing. Second Reason for his Non-appearance, that upon the firft day of the enfuing Term, he intended to meet the Lord Chief Juftice, at his Court of King's Bench, for relief againft the Sentence, his Fellowship being a Freehold; witneß Coveny's Cafe.

Bish. Ch. You will find but little Favour there.

Dr. Fair. My Lord, in Courts of Judicature, I only expect Justice, and turning to the Lord Chief Justice. I have my self said he, been above four Years in all the Courts of Westminster-Hall, and found excellent Justice, and I will see how it is now.

L. Ch. Just. You shall have Justice.

Dr. Fair. But your Lordship may save me the labour of two Journies and my Charges, by improving your Lordships deserved Interest with my Lords Commissioners there, and get them now to take off my Suspension: It is ill travelling at this time of Year; and besides I am not rich.

Bar. Jen. To sue in Westminster-Hall requires a Purse.

Dr. Fair. My Lord, I did not say I was poor.

L. Ch. Just. You must make your Supplication and Submission to the King.

Dr. Fair. My Lord, they tell me that this business lyes in your Lordship's Court, and only there, (besides the trouble I am otherwise to give your Lordship) What a noise will the cause make that Dr. Fairfax is suspended for this very reason, (viz.) not obeying the King in Electing Anthony Farmer, such a Virtuoso, and under Correction, your Lordships are obliged to take off my Suspension, to take off the shame from that Body, whose number by a common Adjunct you your selves have lately increas'd.

Bar. Jen. We must not endure these Reflections on the Court.

Bish. But will you submit to this Visitation?

Then Dr. Fairfax read a Paper subscribed by him, Dated October the 22d, in these Words: 'My Lords, I have been Summon'd, and appeared in this Cause before the Lords Ecclesiastical at White-Hall, with whom your Lordships are now joyn'd in Commission; and then gave in my Answer: I have nothing to add to it, and find no reason to retract it.'

Henry Fairfax.

Bish. Will you admit of the Bishop of Oxford?

Dr. Fairfax. I am suspended.

Bish. Have you done no Collegiate Act since your Suspension?

Dr. Fair. My Lord, I have gone into the Hall, and laid in my Chamber: I did not think their Lordships, when they suspended me, ever intended that I should not eat, drink or sleep.

Bish. If your Suspension was off, would you submit to the Bishop of Oxford?

Dr. Fair. Truly my Lord, I cannot do it. Then all the Fellows were called into Court.

The President being withdrawn, the Bishop put the Question to all the Fellows, (viz.) Whether they would assist at the Admission of the Bishop of Oxford to be installed President by virtue of the King's Mandate? To which was answered by all the Fellows, to this Effect: (except Dr. Pudsey, and Dr. Tho. Smith, who answered doubtfully, and Chernock that he would assist) That they were under Oaths to the contrary, and therefore could not do it.

Then all were ordered to withdraw; and Dr. Pudsey being called in alone, they asked him concerning the Manner and Form of Installing a President; which he instructed them in.

The Court Adjourn'd till Two in the Afternoon.

AS soon as they met, a Letter from the Earl of Sunderland to Dr. Pudsey, was read, dated the 2d of August, signifying, That the Society in answer to His Majesty's Letter commanding them to admit the Bishop of Oxford, agreed unanimously in this Answer, That the place was full. Their Lordships were pleased to ask the Fellows singly, Whether that was their Answer? And as many as were there, owned that it was.

During this Examination, the President came into Court, and having waited until it was ended, and their Lordships at a Pause, he made his Application to them: 'My Lords, if your Lordships please to give me leave, I would gladly speak a few Words'. They were all pleased to put off their Hats, and say he might. Whereupon he said, 'My Lords, you were pleased this Morning, in pursuance to a Decree of the Lords Commissioners at London, to deprive me of my place of President of this College, and to strike my Name out of the Buttery Book: I do hereby protest against all your Proceedings, and against all that you have done, or hereafter shall do in Prejudice of me and my Right, as illegal, unjust and null: and therefore I appeal to my Sovereign Lord the King in his Courts of Justice'. Upon which the Strangers and young Scholars in the Room gave a Hum; which so much incensed their Lordships, that notwithstanding all the Protections the President and Fellows could make, the President in particular offering to purge himself by Oath, that he was no way accessory to or abetting of it, and declared that he was heartily ashamed and troubled at it; yet the Lord Chief Justice was not to be pacified, but charging it upon the President, bound him in a Bond of 1000 l. and Security to the like value, to make his Appearance at the King's Bench-Bar, the 12th of November.

After this, was read the Answer the Fellows returned to His Majesty upon his Command to them upon the 4th of September, to elect the Bishop of Oxford: the Answer was under the hand of a publick Notary, subscribed by all the Fellows then present, except Mr. Chernock. The Bishop of Chester was pleased to charge the Fellows of Unmannerliness, for sending such an Answer to their Prince after such a manner.

So they Adjourned till Tuesday the 25th, at Eight in the Morning.

Tuesday the 25th of October.

WHEN the Court met, Dr. Stafford offered a Paper in answer to what was objected on Friday, that a Mandate implied an Inhibition; which their Lordships having perused, would not suffer to be read publicly, but askt the Fellows whether they would sign it, bidding them to do it at their Peril.

Then the Fellows had leave to withdraw into the Hall, and not being satisfied that it was necessary to sign a Plea, which their Lordships refused to have argued, they returned the Paper into the Court, subscribed only by Dr. Fairfax and Dr. Stafford. The latter after some debate, desired to withdraw, but Dr. Fairfax stood to it.

A Copy of Dr. Stafford's and Dr. Fairfax's Plea.

To the Right Reverend and Right Honourable His Majesty's Commissioners for the visiting of S. Mary Magdalen College in Oxford.

May it please your Lordships,

ON Friday last in the Afternoon, you seem'd to insitt very much on this, (viz.) That His Majesty in commanding the Fellows of the said College to Elect Mr. Farmer President, did thereby inhibit them to Elect any other Person whatsoever; which has not yet been made appear to be Law, either out of the Books of Civil; Canon or Common Law. Neither is it agreeable to Reason, that a Command to Elect a Person incapable, should include in it an Obligation not to Elect a Person capable, that being a kind of Contradiction in terminis. Yet this being granted, it cannot in the least affect the said Fellows, or invalidate their Election of Dr. Hough, notwithstanding His Majesty's Mandate in behalf of Mr. Farmer, who being incapable of the place, the Fellows cannot be said to be guilty of any Disobedience or Disloyalty, in proceeding to the Election of another Person who was qualified according to Statute, being forced to make an Election. For they are obliged by the Statutes of their College, (when call'd together) to Elect a President, or any Officer under pain of perpetual Expulsion from the College, to meet and make an Election; which Punishment they incur ipso facto, who either refuse to meet when so call'd, or being met, to nominate or elect a Person into the Office void, as appears by the Statutes of the said College: Titulo de numero Scholarium & electione Presidentis. Now according to the Founders direction in the said Statute, on the 15th of April last, the Fellows were call'd together by the Vice President to Elect a President in the place of Dr. Clark deceased, and the Oath desired to be taken before the Election was administred by the Vice President to them, whereby they are oblig'd to nominate and Elect a Person that either is or has been Fellow of Magdalen College or New College in Oxon; which Oath when the Fellows had taken, it was not in their Power to Elect Mr. Farmer; and yet they were then oblig'd to make an Election, under pain of perpetual Amotion from the College, as appears by the forecited Statute. And it cannot be imagin'd that his most Sacred Majesty did expect that the Fellows should be either perjur'd, or forfeit their Right to their Fellowships, rather than disobey his Command; His Majesty having most graciously declar'd, that Conscience ought not to be forced, and that none of his Subjects should be molested in the Enjoyment of their Rights and Privileges, &c. Now that our Proceedings at the Election cannot lay any Imputation of our Disobedience or Disloyalty upon us, will thus be made appear: Either we had the Power to Elect a President, or we had not; if we had not, to what end or purpose did His Majesty command us to elect one? if we had, our Power was either restrain'd to Persons so and so qualified, or we were at liberty to chuse whom we pleas'd; but we could not do the latter, as appears by our Statutes: and therefore we could not Elect Mr. Farmer, being not invested with any Power to Elect a Person unqualified. And if we had so done, our Election would have been null and void in it self, and the Person elected liable to be turn'd out by our Visitor.

As for the Decree of His Majesty's Commissioners (in pursuance of which your Lordships have admonish'd Doctor Hough to recede from the place of President, and quietly to resign the Keys of his Office, and have struck his Name out of the College Book) we humbly conceive it to be null and void in it self, to all intents and purposes, Dr. Hough being thereby depriv'd of Freehold for Life, (of which he was duly and legally possess'd) without ever being call'd to defend his Right, or any Misdemeanour objected against him. Wherefore we humbly beg leave of your Lordships, that Dr. Hough may be permitted to defend his Right and Title to the Presidentship at Common-Law, before any other Person is put in Possession of the place.

Thomas Stafford.

Hen. Fairfax.

After this Mr. Wiggins, Chaplain to the Bishop of Oxford was called in, who delivered a Paper impowering him as Proxy, to be Installed President for his Lord; which being read, together with the King's Mandate for the Bishop of Oxon. The Question was put to two or three of the Seniors, Whether they would assist at this Instalment? which they refusing, the Court Adjourned to the Chappel, where the Bishop of Chester put Mr. Wiggins into the President's Stall, where he took the Oath which the Statutes enjoyn the President at his Admission; and the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy; the latter of which he was ordered to take upon his Knees, which he accordingly did. Then their Lordships conducted him to the Door of the President's Lodgings, where knocking three times, and the Door not being opened, they returned to the Common Room, and Commission'd Atterbury and a Tipstaff, to fetch a Smith to force it open, which was done, their Lordships being present all this while. None of the Fellows except Mr. Chernock assisting, or being so much as present at either of these Performances. Then the Commissioners being returned to the Common Room, Dr. Fairfax desired leave at their leisures to speak; which was granted.

Dr. Fair. My Lords, your Lordships have been doing of what I can by no means consent to.

Bish. Ch. You are big to be delivered of your own Destruction. Will you submit to the Bishop of Oxon, as now installed President, by vertue of the King's Mandate?

Dr. Fair. I will not; I cannot; because we have a Statutable and legal President already.

Then the same Question was put to the Society, which being a business of Moment, they desired time till the Afternoon to consider it.

Then the Court Adjourned till Three a Clock; at which time the Answer was given in by the Society, (except Dr. Fairfax, who had given his in the Morning) 'That whereas His Majesty hath been pleased by his Royal Authority to cause the Right Reverend Father in God, Samuel Bishop of Oxon, to be Installed President; we whose Names are hereunto Subscribed do submit, as far as is lawful and agreeable to the Statutes of the College, and 'no way prejudicial to the Right and Title of Dr. Hough'.

This Answer was accepted, except the last Clause; which the Lord Chief Justice, and Baron Jenner declared, as Judges, to be insignificant, since nothing they could do, could any way invalidate Dr. Hough's Title, but left them still at liberty to be Witnesses for him, or any other way be serviceable to him in the recovery of his Right. Upon this Assurance, the Society was prevailed with to leave out the last Clause.

Then all were commanded to withdraw: And Dr. Fairfax being called in, the Bishop asked him what he meant by his Paper abovementioned, dated October the 22d; and whether he did submit to the Authority of the Court?

Dr. Fair. As I have denied it above, so I do here.

Then the Court was opened; and the Doctor complained before them all, that he was twice cloistered, and being asked Whether he would obey the Court and Bishop of Oxon? he plainly denied both. Upon which the Buttery-Book was called for, and the Bishop of Chester commanded his Name to be struck out: And this Sentence passed, viz.

Forasmuch as you have denied the Authority of the Court, and refused to obey the Bishop of Oxon, whom the King hath made your Prebendary; and taken Commons after your Suspension: We declare your place void, and command you quietly to depart the College within Fourteen Days.

Dr. Fair. My Lords, all the huge Calamities that have befallen me, are on the sole account of a religious and conscientious Observation of our pious Founder's Statutes; whose Bread I have eaten almost this Thirty Years.

L. C. J. No Speeches: besides, if you have any Papers, instead of reading them, leave them in the Court.

Then with much ado, the Doctor prevailed with them to let him read his Protestation, which he left in the Court. —

I Henry Fairfax, Fellow of St. Mary Magdalen College, do under my former Answer heretofore made, and to the intent it may appear that I have not consented, nor agreed to any thing done against me, and to my Prejudice, I protest that your Sentence given here against me, is Lex nulla, and so far as it shall appear to be aliqua; I do say it is iniqua & injusta, and that therefore I do from it, as iniqua & injusta, appeal to our Sovereign Lord the King, in his Courts of Justice, as the Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances of the Land will permit in that behalf. Subscribed October 25, 1687.

Henry Fairfax.

This Protestation was over ruled, and a Copy of the Sentence denied, though most earnestly desired at the instance of Dr. Hedges, and Mr. Vice Chancellor, two days after.

At the close of the Sessions, their Lordships declared, that they were very well satisfied with the Answer the Society had given them; and though before they had laid a Libel to their charge, yet that Night they declared, they had met with nothing from them but Civility, and that they should receive the same from them; that they had shewn themselves Men of excellent Tempers this day and before; and that they would represent it faithfully above to their advantage, and that if it any way lay in their power to serve them, they should be very ready to do it.

Then they Adjourned till Wednesday Morning, ordering them to bring in their Answer to the following Questions:

I. What Gifts and Provisions have you for Entertainment of Strangers?

II. What is the Value of it?

III. How is it applied?

IV. And where is the Place of Entertainment?

Wednesday, October the 26th, 1687.

IN the Morning they made it appear to their Lordships very satisfactorily, that they were obliged to give in Charity-Money, 2 l. 3 s. 4 d. and that besides that, they gave communibus annis, almost 100 l. as appeared by a Paper they then delivered in. Upon this their Lordships were pleased to expatiate upon their generous Bounty and Liberality, saying the Complement of this account was groundless, and that it would induce the King to a better belief of them in all other matters.

Then a Petition of Dr. Rogers, late Organist, was given in, desiring to be restored, which was read; but several Misdemeanours being proved against him, it was thrown out; and he advised to rest satisfied with 30 l. per annum, which the College had bestowed on him when they turn'd him out of his Place.

Thursday, October the 27th, 1687.

THIS Morning they received a List of Leases, &c. which had been renew'd two Years last past: Mr. Chernock, the new Convert, asked their Lordships, whether those Leases stood good, which had been sealed since Dr. Hough's Election? The Lord Chief Justice answer'd, Yes; for Corporations always stick by their Seals. Then their Lordships perused the College Registers, and finding nothing in them to object against, they were returned, and the Court Adjourned till the Afternoon: At which time their Lordships told them, That having received no Express from above, as they expected, they would Adjourn till Friday at Eight in the Morning.

Friday, October the 28th, 1687.

THE Commissioners being seated, all were commanded to withdraw: then only the Fellows were called in, and the Bishop of Chester said they had represented them fairly to the King, but His Majesty expected some farther Submission, which they advised them to make, by acknowledging their Contempt to His Sacred Majesty in Person, and to His Letters; and that they should promise to behave themselves Loyal for the future; and that they should some ways own the Proceedings and Legality of the Court, and implore His Majesty's Pardon, and lay themselves at His Feet.

The Fellows making a little Pause, the Bishop of Chester told them, they might word it themselves; or if they thought fit Mr. Tucker should assist them in a Form. Then all the Fellows withdrew into the Hall, and drew up the following Answer.

May

May it please your Lordships,

WE have endeavoured in all our Actions, to express our duty in all humility to His Majesty, and being conscious to our selves, that in the whole Conduct of the Business before your Lordships, we have done nothing, but what our Oaths and Statutes indispensably oblige us to, we cannot make any Declaration, whereby we acknowledge that we have done any thing amiss, having acted according to the Principles of Loyalty and Obedience, so far as we could, without doing Violence to our Consciences, or Prejudice to our Rights, (one of which we humbly conceive the Electing a President to be) from which we are sworn upon no account whatsoever to depart. We therefore humbly beg your Lordships to represent this favourably, with our utmost Duty to His Majesty, whom God grant long and happily to Reign.

Upon their Lordships perusing of the Answer, they expressed their dislike of it, saying, It did not come up to the Address sent to His Majesty at Bath which was read; to this it was replied, That they hoped their Behaviour since, had been every way answerable to what they had therein promised. Then their Lordships said, that it did not come up to what they delivered in on Tuesday.

Dr. Bayly. My Lords, we have acted conformable to our selves; and truly my Lords, I cannot possibly confess any Crime.

Bish. We do not expect of you to confess any Capital Crime, only to make some Acknowledgement.

Mr. Fulham. My Lord, We were ordered to address our selves, as having acted in Contempt of His Majesties Authority, which my Lord, I look upon as so great a Crime; that on no account I would be guilty of it. My Lord, We have endeavoured to obey His Majesty to the utmost of our Power, and seeing your Lordships were pleased to accept our Answer on Tuesday, I humbly conceive your Lordships Honour is engaged, that nothing further be required of us.

Bish. You are a very forward Speaker, and abound in your own Sense.

Mr. Fulham. My Lord, I hope your Lordship will give me leave to speak, when our Fortunes are so considerably at Stake.—

Then Dr. Bayly desired of their Lordships, to give him leave to explain what he meant by the word submit in his Answer on Tuesday; because (saith he) I hear your Lordships understood more than was meant, and least your Lordships should go away under a Mistake, by the word submit in the former Answer, I did not intend any future Obedience to the Bishop of Oxford; but meant it in reference to the King's Authority, inasmuch as I did not oppose or resist the Bishop of Oxford's Instalment.

Upon this, a fresh Question was put to the Fellows, whether they would obey the Bishop of Oxford as their President in licitis & honestis; to which all except one or two answered; They could not obey the Bishop of Oxford as their President.

Then Mr. Fulham was particularly asked the Question.

Mr. Fulham. Dr. Hough being duly Elected and admitted President, doth thereby obtain a right, which I am not satisfied he hath any way forfeited, and therefore can obey no Person as President.

Bish. Ch. Will you obey the Bishop of Oxford as in Possession?

Mr. Fulham. I cannot, because the Bishop hath not lawful Possession.

Then he was ask'd wherein?

Mr. Fulham. He hath not Possession in due form of Law, nor by proper Officers: I am informed that the proper Officers to give Possession of a Freehold, is the Sheriff with a Posse Comitatus.

L. C. J. Pray, who's the best Lawyer, you or I? Your Oxford Law is no better than your Oxford Divinity: If you have a mind to a Posse Comitatus, you may have one soon enough.—

Mr. Fulham. My Lords, I intended nothing but respect to your Lordships, and have endeavoured to speak and behave my self with due Reverence, and I hope your Lordships will put a favourable Construction on what I said.—

Then all were commanded to withdraw, and the Buttery-Book was called for, and after that, Mr. Fulham was sent for in; and by the Bishop of Chester suspended as followeth.—

Bish. of Ch. Mr. George Fulham, We have thought fit to suspend you from the Profits of your Fellowship during His Majesties Pleasure, for your Contempt and opprobrious Language.—

Then they Adjourned till Wednesday the 16th of November, ordering the absent Fellows to be sent for home against that time. So they immediately went for London.

Wednesday November the 16th, 1687. at Nine in the Morning.

THE Lords Commissioners being sate, the first thing they did, sent for the Buttery-Book; then called for Mr. Feyner and Mr. Allibone, and entered them actual Fellows. The former in the room of Dr. Fairfax whom they had Expelled; the latter in place of Mr. Ludford lately deceased: All Oaths being dispensed with, besides that of a Fellow. That done, the Fellows being called, and Reasons given in for those that were absent. The Bishop of Chester spoke a Speech to this Effect.

Gentlemen, your many Contempts and wilful Disobedience, have occasioned this Visitation, which will end at last in your Ruin. This Society of yours has been long exercised in the Methods of quarrelling; has always been troubled with factious Spirits, and testy Mutineers, ever since the Restoration of the late King: You have encourag'd Quarrels among your selves; Quarrels between your selves and President; Quarrels, at length between your selves and Visitor. For I have often heard your late Visitor complain, that this Society was ever stocked with an unquiet and turbulent Generation. By these Steps from quarrelling with the President and Visitor, you have at last advanced to the highest pitch of Insolence, to quarrel with your Prince, and affront His Sacred Majesty. I endeavour'd before, at the opening our Commission, to make you sensible of the Scandal that your Disobedience will bring upon your Religion; how much you stain and dishonour your liberal and ingenious Education, in this Society.

You cannot but know His Majesty is your Supreme Ordinary. You cannot but have read in Bracton, who was twenty Years Lord Chief Justice under King Henry the Third: Nemo presumat de factis ejus disquirere, ne dum contra factum ejus venire: All Disobedience employs Pride: For no Man can disobey his Governor, but he who thinks himself wiser. The Reputation and Honour of a Prince at home, and his his Respect abroad, are chief Standards of a Government. But these Pillars as much as in you lies, you have endeavour'd to shake. And unless His Majesty's Honour and Right be vindicated by us, He can neither be feared at home, nor observed abroad. Your Punishment must be as publick as your Crime. It cannot be conceived but His Majesty in Justice, in Honour, in Clemency, and in His Royal Tenderness, could have proceeded otherways than he has done. On the first of April it was published that Dr. Clark was dead: On the Eleventh a Mandamus was directed to you, for choosing Mr. Farmer. On the Ninth you presented a Petition to the Lord President: wherein you laid your selves prostrate at His Majesties Feet, representing to him the Incapacity of Mr. Farmer, desiring the Benefits of His Gracious Declaration for preserving your Rights and Properties, and beseeching him to Nominate another Person qualified according to your Statutes, in the Election of wh^m you would shew your ready Obedience. So said and so done, Gentlemen, had been very well.

But immediately after the delivery of the Petition, you not waiting His Majesties Answer, proceeded on April the 15th to an Election of Dr. Hough; so that by this Act, which was plainly contrary to His Majesty's Authority, whose Mandate did certainly imply an Inhibition; you directly confronted your former Promises of ready Obedience, and were resolved to give the King nothing but good Words; when you had done this, as Men of ill Designs are always in haste, for a Confirmation of it, you immediately went and surprized your Visitor, and by that means perswaded him to confirm Dr. Hough, that very day he received an Order from the Lord President to the contrary.

Upon this News the King was much amazed, and required an account of your Proceedings; therefore the Lords Commissioners issued out a Citation; and after hearing the Plea, upon mature Consultation with the Learned of both Laws, judged the pretended Election of Dr. Hough to be void and null, and him to be removed, by an Instrument dated the _____ which was affixed on the Gate. After this a Mandate was sent on the _____ to you to Elect the Bishop of Oxon; upon which terms His Majesty was graciously pleased to dispence with your Disobedience hitherto. But this being disobeyed, His Majesty in Person on the 4th of September sent for you to Christ Church, and required you immediately to Elect the Bishop of Oxon President. You went strait to the Chappel, a place one would think should have inspired more Devotion and Awe of His Sacred Majesty in you; and there contemptuously subscribed and signed a Paper, directly thwarting His Majesties Command. The ground of your Disobedience you pretend that you could not Elect him, whereas you could not but know by a written Mandate that lay by you, that Admission would have satisfied His Majesty. Conscience the stale Topick of Rebellion was here brought to vindicate your petulant and contumacious behaviour. You pretended that you were obliged by Oaths, and I am sorry that at the same time you forgot that of Allegiance. And indeed there is not a greater sign of Hypocrisie, than partial Obedience. Had you any respect to the Father of your Country, and your Mother the Church, you would have sacrificed your pretended Scruples, as a Peace Offering to the King. The best of us, I am sure, have reason to beg God and the King's Pardon. But you, as if His Majesty reigned by Courtessie, would have a King under you, but none over you. You urged the Observance of your Statutes, of which as it hath appeared, you have not been so constant Observers, when your own Humour prompts you to a Dispensation, then you can readily embrace it; by witness but that of being served per Masculos; by which great Scandals have come to this Society by reason of Bastards.

But when the King interposed, in whose Power alone it is to dispence with them, then you presently affected according to such Methods as these. None of these Pretextes will ease you with wise and sober Men.

This was the only Opposition His Majesty in his Progress received: Where-ever His Sacred Majesty came, he worked a miraculous Conversion, except in Oxford; and so far satisfied every one with the Equity of His Proceedings, that none went away discontented from His Presence, unless it was for this Reason, that they could not enjoy it any longer.

October the 20th. We came down, and upon opening our Commission, I took care to represent to you the Heinousness of your Offence, and to perswade you to a serious Repentance; but all in vain.

For on Saturday Morning we required you to Admit and Instal the Bishop of Oxon; which all, except three, refused: In the Afternoon Dr. Hough having been deprived, and by us commanded to depart the College, came unto us without any leave, but not without great Attendance; Circumstances I think, much unbefitting a Man pronounced Expelled; and there entered a Protestation against all that we had done, or hereafter should do, as illegal, unjust and Null; which he delivered not in Writing, but by Word of Mouth: a thing repugnant to the nature of all Appeals: and which was worse, without the usual Salvo to His Majesty's Supream Power. When he had spoken it, there followed such a Tumultuous, Seditious and Insolent HUM, which if you your selves had not applauded, or at least consented to, it was impossible but that you would have discovered some of those Mutineers. However, since his Carriage and Language gave occasion to it, 'twas thought fit that he only should be obnoxious; and accordingly he was bound over.

On Tuesday we our selves caused the Bishop of Oxon to be Installed by his Proxy; after which we proposed to you, whether being now Installed, you would submit to him in licitis & honestis? To which you gave an Answer under your Hands in the Affirmative. You then also desired of us to represent your Case favourably to His Majesty, giving all assurance of your Loyalty and Obedience. But this assurance of Submission lasted not long; for on Thursday, being required of us to subscribe such a Submission to His Majesty as we thought agreeable to your Duty, you required time to consult of it; and after Deliberation, sign'd such a Paper, which seem'd rather to be a Protestation against your former Submission, than an Acknowledgment of your Crime. Upon this we might justly then have proceeded to an Expulsion: but we thought fit, in Compassion to you, to take a Journey to London, and acquaint His Majesty with your disobedience and ungrateful Behaviour. His Majesty was extremely amaz'd that His Clemency should be despised; but yet, to your Comforts be it spoken, His Patience and Goodness extends as far as your Provocations can: But if you still persist in your Obstinacy, those that are too Tall to Stand, and too Stubborn to Bend, deserve to be Broken. And now I think, I have said enough to let you know, that the Figg-leaves you have so artificially stitched together, are not sufficient to cover your Nakedness. I wish to God you had the same Tenderness for your Concern, as His Majesty's Commissioners have for you. But if you still persist to oppose the Royal Power of the King, we who are come to vindicate the Right and Honour of His Majesty, resolve to discharge our Consciences and Duties to God and the King, without any respect of Popularity; that's but the Paradise of Fools, and Scorn of Wise Men: and therefore as for us, we have no more regard regard to Peoples dislike, than what they dream: By reason therefore of your late Hypocritical Submission, the Commissioners have thought fit, upon mature Consideration, to draw up an Instrument which shall be read to you, to which, if you shall immediately subscribe, before you leave the Room, we shall leave you to His Majesty's Pardon, And this we expect from you all, except Dr. Tho. Smith and Mr. Charnock, with whose Behaviour the King is so well satisfied, that he expects no more from them.

Then all the Fellows being called in, their Lordships tendred a Form of Submission to them to be sign'd. Which take as followeth:

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty:
The Humble Petition and Submission of the Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen College in the University of Oxon, whose Names are subscribed.

WE Your Majesties most humble Petitioners, have a deep sense of being justly fallen under Your Majesties Displeasure, for our Disobedience and Contempt to Your Majesty; and to the Authority of Your Majesties Commissioners and Visitors; We do in all Humility prostrate our selves at Your Majesties Feet, humbly begging Your Pardon for our said Offences, and promising that we will for the future behave our selves more dutifully, and as a Testimony thereof, we do acknowledge the Authority of Your Majesties said Visitors, and the Justice of their Proceedings; and we do declare our entire Submission to the Lord Bishop of Oxon as our President.

To which Paper all (except Dr. Thomas Smith, and Mr. Charnock) refused to subscribe.

Dr. Aldworth as Vice President was first call'd in to sign the Paper which had been read to all the Fellows.

Vice President. My Lords, we desire time to consider of it, and to give our Answer in Writing.

Bish. Ch. No, you must every one sign, or refuse as you are called.

Bar. Jenner. There is no answer to be given, but ay or no.

They all moved again for time, but 'twas refused.

Vice President. My Lords, this is the first time of my Appearance before your Lordships since your sitting here, and therefore I pray to be heard.

My Lords, I am as ready to comply with the King's Pleasure, as any Man living; neither do I know, that we have ever in this place been disobedient to the King, where it was in our Power to obey His Commands: Our Founder in the first Clause of the Oath we take at this Election, has provided, that no one shall be President of his College, but who was bred in it, or in the College where he himself was bred. Now for us who have Elected Dr. Hough, a Person qualified according to our Statutes, who has been Installed, Sworn, Confirm'd and Approv'd of in all the ways and manner prescribed in the Statutes for us. My Lords, to accept and admit of a Stranger, and a Forreigner in his place, is to the best of my Understanding, a giving up the Rights of the College to other Uses than the Founder designed it. Here he was interrupted.

Bish. Ch. Your Statutes are over-rul'd by the King's Authority.

Vice President. My Lords, Your Lordships sit here as the Visitors; which implies, there are certain Laws and Statutes we are bid to observe, and by which we are to be govern'd; and if it shall appear to your Lordships, that we have acted conformably to these Statutes, I hope we shall neither incur the King's Displeasure nor your Lordships. The whole Tenour of our Statutes run, That we should inviolably maintain our Rights, and observe the Rules of our Founder; he has laid his Curse upon us if we vary from them. (Here he repeated the Words of the Founder) Ordinamus sub pœnâ Anathematis, & indignationis Omnipotentis Dei, &c. Item sub interminatione Divini Judicis interdicimus.

Bish. Ch. Are you not to obey the King as well as the Founders Statutes?

Vice President. My Lord, I ever did obey the King, and ever will: Our Statutes which we are sworn to observe, are confirm'd by several Kings and Queens before and since the Reformation, and as we keep them, are agreeable to the King's Laws both Ecclesiastical and Civil, and so long as we live up to them, we obey the King.

Bish. Ch. Your Statutes were never confirm'd by His Present Majesty.

Dr. John Smyth. My Lord, Neither have they been repealed by His Majesty, and what is not repeal'd is confirm'd.

Then their Lordships pressing to sign or refuse; the Vice President said,

Vice President. My Lords, I'll then deal plainly, in regard to my Oath and the Statutes, to the right of all our Successors and of Dr. Hough, whom I believe to have been as fairly Elected, and as legally possessed as ever any since the Foundation of the College: I cannot submit to the Bishop of Oxon as President. So he was ordered to withdraw.

Then the same Question was put to all the other Fellows singly, who all refused to sign the Submission, (except Dr. Thomas Smyth and Mr. Charnock, who were not prest for the Reasons above.)

Mr. Thompson being called in to sign the Paper said,

Mr. Thompson. My Lords, I have been always obedient to His Majesties Commands, I was not concerned in the Election of Dr. Hough; I voted for Mr. Farmer, and am ready to submit to the Bishop of Oxon.

Bish. Ch. Did you not put your Hand to this Petition? Is not this your Hand—Read the Petition—It was Read—In which the Fellows desired His Majesty, to nominate any qualified Person, and to retract His Mandate granted for Mr. Farmer.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, I conceive the Petition not to be disobedient. We had not yet receiv'd the Mandate, as soon as it came, I humbled my self.

Bar. Fen. Then why can't you humble your self again; is there any hurt in it?

Mr. Thompson. This Paper requires me to own my Disobedience to His Majesty; I am not conscious of any, and therefore I cannot subscribe.

After a short time, all who refused to sign the Submission were called in, and by Sentence of their Lordships, expell'd the College for Contempt, &c. (except as before)—After Sentence, all that were expell'd spoke to this Effect:—'My Lords, we profess all Duty to the King, and Respect to your Lordships, but must beg leave to declare; That we think our selves injur'd in your your Lordships Proceedings, and therefore protest against them, and shall use all just and legal ways of being Relieved.—

After a short time, an Instrument was fix't on the College-Gates, in these Words.

By His Majesties Commissioners for Ecclesiastical Causes, &c. particularly authorized and impowered to visit St. Mary Magdalen College in the University of Oxon.

WHereas in our Visitation of the said Colledge, it appeareth unto us, that Doctor Charles Aldworth, Dr. Alexander Pudsey, Dr. John Smith, Dr. Tho. Bailey, Dr. Tho. Stafford, Master Robert Almond, Mr. Manwaring Hamond, Mr. John Rogers, Mr. Richard Strickland, Mr. Henry Dobson, Mr. James Bailey, Mr. John Davies, Mr. Francis Bagshaw, Mr. James Fayrer, Mr. Joseph Harwar, Mr. Tho. Bateman, Mr. George Hunt, Mr. William Cradock, Mr. John Gillman, Mr. George Fulham, Mr. Charles Pennyston, Mr. Robert Hyde, Mr. John Yerbury, Mr. Robert Holden, and Mr. Stephen Wilks, Fellows of the same College, have been severally guilty of Disobedience to His Majesty's Commands, and obstinately contemn'd His Royal Authority, and do still persist in the same: We have thought fit, upon mature Consideration thereof, to Declare, Pronounce and Decree, That the said Dr. Charles Aldworth, &c. and every of them, be Deprived and Expelled from their respective Fellowships: And we do by this our Sentence and Decree, Deprive and Expel them and their said several and respective Fellowships.

Given under our Seal, this 16th day of November, 1687.

Judges.

HIS being the first day of the Term, His Majesties Attorney General, (as soon as the Court of Kings Bench was sat) moved on the behalf of the King for a Habeas Corpus, returnable immediate, directed to the Lieutenant of the Tower, to bring up his Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishops of St. Asaph, Ely, Chichester, Bath and Wells, Peterborough and Bristol; which was granted.

And with great dispatch, about Eleven a Clock the same Day, the Lieutenant returned his Writ, and brought the said Lord Archbishop and Bishops into Court, where being set down in Chairs set for that purpose, Mr. Attorney General moved the Court, viz.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray
Sir Tho. Powis. that the Writ and Return may be read, by which my Lords the Bishops are brought hither.

L. C. J. Read the Return.

Clerk reads the Return, which in English is as follows, viz.

I Sir Edward Hales, Baronet, Lieutenant of the Tower of London, named in the Writ to this Schedule annexed, To our Most Serene Lord the King do most humbly certify, That before the coming of the said Writ, to wit, the Eighth day of June, in the Fourth Year of the Reign of our Lord James the Second, King of England, &c. William Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, William Lord Bishop of St. Asaph, Francis Lord Bishop of Ely, John Lord Bishop of Chichester, Thomas Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Lord Bishop of Peterborough, and Jonathan Lord Bishop of Bristol, mentioned in the aforesaid Writ, were committed and delivered to, and are retained in my Custody; by Virtue of a certain Warrant under the Hands and Seals of George Lord Jefferies, Baron of Wem, Lord High Chancellor of England, Robert Earl of Sunderland, Lord President of the Privy Council of our Lord the King, Henry Lord Arundel of Warder, Keeper of the Privy Seal of our said Lord the King; William Marquess of Powis, John Earl of Mulgrave, Lord Great Chamberlain of England; Theophilus Earl of Huntingdon, Henry Earl of Peterborough, William Earl of Craven, Alexander Earl of Moray; Charles Earl of Middleton, John Earl of Melfort, Roger Earl of Castlemain, Richard Viscount Preston, George Lord Dartmouth, Sidney Lord Godolphin, Henry Lord Dover, Sir John Earnly, Knight, Chancellor of the Exchequer of our said Lord the King; Sir Edward Herbert, Knight, Chief Justice of the Common Bench of our Lord the King, and Sir Nicholas Butler, Knight, Lords of His Majesties most Honourable Privy Council, to me directed, the Tenor of which Warrant follows in these Words; viz.

TH E S E are in His Majesties Name, and by His Command to require you to take into your Custody the Persons of William Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, William Lord Bishop of St. Asaph, Francis Lord Bishop of Ely, John Lord Bishop of Chichester, Thomas Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Lord Bishop of Peterborough, and Jonathan Lord Bishop of Bristol, For Contriving, Making and Publishing a Seditious Libel in Writing against His Majesty and His Government, and them safely to keep in your Custody untill they shall be delivered by due Course of Law; for which this shall be your sufficient Warrant. At the Council Chamber in White Hall, this Eighth day of June, 1688. And this is the Cause of the taking and detaining, &c.

L. Ch. Just. Well, what do you desire, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray for the King, that the Return may be filed.

L. C. J. Let it be filed.

Mr. Att. Gen. By this Return your Lordship observes, what it is my Lords the Bishops were committed to the Tower for; it is by Warrant from the Council Board, where, when their

Lordships

Lordships appeared, they were not pleased to give their Recognizances to appear here, as they were required by the King to do; and thereupon they were committed to the Tower, and now come before the Court upon this Return of the King's Writ of Habeas Corpus, and by the Return it does appear, it was for Contriving, Writing, Framing, and Publishing a Seditious Libell against His Majesty and the Government; my Lord, it is our Duty, who are the King's Council, pursuant to our Orders, to prosecute such kind of Offences, and when the proper time shall come for us to open the nature of the Offence, your Lordships will then judge, what reason there is for this Prosecution; but in the mean time, what we are now to offer to your Lordship is, The Officer of this Court has an Information against his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the rest of my Lords the Bishops, which we desire may be read to them, and pray that they may plead to it, according to the Course of the Court.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. If it please your Lordship, to spare us a Word for my Lords the Bishops.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, We pray for the King the Information may be read.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We desire to be heard a word first.

* Sir Will. Williams. * Mr. Soll. Gen. We oppose your speaking any thing, till the Information hath been read.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But what we have to offer is proper before it be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your time is not yet come, Sir Robert.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Yes, this is our proper time, for what we have to say, and therefore we move it now, before there be any other Proceedings in this matter.

Mr. Soll. Gen. It is irregular to move any thing yet, pray let the Information be read first.

Mr. S. Pemberton. If your Lordship please to spare us, we will offer nothing but what is fit for us to do.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. And now is our proper time for it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Gentlemen, You do know the way of Proceeding in such Cases better than so, I am sure, as for you, Sir Robert Sawyer, you have often oppos'd any such Motion as irregular, and I hope the Case is not alter'd, however you may be; the course of the Court is the same.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. With Submission, if your Lordship please to spare me a Word, that which I would move, is, to discharge my Lords the Bishops upon this Return, and from their Commitment upon this Warrant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Surely these Gentlemen think to have a Liberty above all other People; here is an Information, which we pray my Lords the Bishops may hear read, and plead to.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Certainly, Sir Robert Sawyer, you would not have done thus half a Year ago.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. What would not I have done? I move regularly (with Submission) to discharge my Lords the Bishops from their Commitment; if they are not here legally imprisoned, now they are before your Lordships upon this Writ, then you will give us leave to move for their Discharge, before any thing else be said to them; and that is it we have to say, to demand the Judgment of the Court upon this Return, whether we are legally imprisoned?

Mr. Att. Gen. Under Favour, my Lord, neither the Court, nor they, are ripe for any Motion of this Nature yet.

Mr. S. Pemberton. If we do not move it now, it will afterwards (I fear) be too late.

Mr. Soll. Gen. These Gentlemen are very forward, but certainly they mistake their time; this is a Habeas Corpus that's brought by the King, and not by the Prisoners; and therefore they are too soon, till they see what the King has to say to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordship cannot as yet be moved for your Judgment about the Legality of this Commitment, because this Writ was granted upon our Motion, who are of Council for the King, and upon this Writ they are brought here: and what is it we desire for the King? Certainly nothing but what is Regular; we have here an Information for the King against my Lords, and we desire they may plead to it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Good my Lord, will you please to hear us a little to this Matter.

L. C. Just. Brother Pemberton, we will not refuse to hear you by no means, when you speak in your proper time, but it is not so now; for the King is pleased, by his Attorney and Solicitor, to Charge these Noble Persons, my Lords the Bishops, with an Information, and the Kings Council call to have that Information read, but you will not permit it to be read.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray my Lord spare us a word: if we are not here as Prisoners regularly before your Lordship, and are not brought in by the due Process of the Court, then certainly the Kings Council, or the Court have no Power to charge us with an Information; therefore we beg that you will hear us to that, in the first place, whether we are Legally here before you?

Mr. Soll. Gen. These Gentlemen will have their proper time for such a Motion hereafter.

Mr. Pollexfen. No, Mr. Solicitor, this is, without all Question, our only time for it, we shall have no time afterwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, you will, for what do we who are of Council for the King now ask of the Court, but that this Information may be read? when that is done, if we move to have my Lords the Bishops plead, then they may move what they will; but before we make that Motion, they cannot break in upon us with their Motion; and with Submission to your Lordship, whether my Lords the Bishops were duly Committed, is not yet a Question.

Mr. Finch. But it is, and this the fittest time for it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray will you hear us quietly what we have to say, and then answer us with Reason, if you can; I think we are in a proper way, but they are not my Lord; for (as I said,) my Lords the Bishops are brought by the Kings Writ upon our Motion for the King, not upon theirs, and now we have them here before the Court, We for the King would charge them with an Information; which Information, that they and the Court may know what it is they are charged with, we pray it may be read to them by the Clerk; and when it is read, let these Gentlemen say what they will for them, they shall have their time to speak; but certainly they ought not to obstruct the Kings Proceedings, nor oppose the Reading of the Information to these these noble Lords, who are brought here in Custody into Court, to this very purpose, that they may be charged with this Information.

Mr. S. Pemberton. But we have somewhat to say, before you can come to that, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You ought not to be heard as yet.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Under favour we ought to be heard.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, Mr. Solicitor has opposed our being heard, but we now desire he would hear our answer to it, and that which we have to say, is this, That my Lords the Bishops are not here Regularly in the Court to be charged with an Information; and if the Law be not with us in this point, as we doubt not to make appear it is, no question but when your Lordship has heard what we have to say, you will give a right Rule in it: My Lord, we say, that by the Rules of Law, no man ought to be Charged with an Information or Indictment, by the Express Statute of Edward the Third, unless he come into the Court by Legal process; that is a standing Rule, and the practice of this and all other Courts is pursuant to it; Now in this Court you have several processes that go out of this Court, and he that comes as taken by virtue of a Capias, or an Attachment after a Summons, or by Venire in the nature of a Subpoena; I say, he that comes in upon these processes, may be charged with an Information; but where a person is in Prison, committed by another Jurisdiction, and another Authority, than that of this Court; when the Prisoner is brought here by Habeas Corpus, the first thing the Court has to do, is to enquire whether he be Legally Committed; to that end the Return is filed, and the party has leave to make his Exceptions to it, as we do in this Case. My Lords are brought here upon a Habeas Corpus, the Return of which has been read, and now the Return is filed, we are proper to move, that my Lords may be discharged; for you now see what they are Committed for, it is for a Misdemeanour in making and publishing a Libel, that's the matter for which they are committed; and it appears by the Return likewise, that they who are thus committed are Peers of the Realm, for so my Lords the Bishops all are, and for a Misdemeanour they ought not by Law to have been committed.

L. C. J. You go too far now, Sir Robert Sawyer, I would willingly hear you whatsoever you have to say; but then it must be in its due time.

Mr. Att. Gen. This very discourse (indeed I have heard) has pass'd up and down the Town for Law; We may see now whence they had it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I know it has heretofore been urged by me, but denied by them who now urge it, and I am glad that they now learn of me to tack about.

L. C. J. Look you Gentlemen, do not fall upon one another, but keep to the matter before you.

Mr. S. Pemberton. So we would, my Lord, if the Kings Council would let us; First, we say, we being brought here upon a Return of a Habeas Corpus, there was neither at the time of the Commitment Cause to Imprison us, nor was there by the Warrant any Cause to detain us in Prison; and for that, besides what has been hinted at, we say further, that here it is returned, that we were Committed by such and such Persons, Lords of the Privy Council; but the Return doth not say, that it was done by them, as Lords of the Privy Council, which must be in Council; for if it be not in Council, they have not power to make such a Warrant for the Commitment of any Person, and that we stand upon; here is a Return that is not a good Return of a Legal Commitment, and therefore we pray my Lords may be discharged.

Vol. III.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, spare me a word, that is the thing we humbly offer to your Lordships Consideration; and under Favour, I think we are proper both as to the Matter, and as to the Time; the Return is now filed before you: if by this Return there appears to have been such a Cause to commit these Lords to Prison, as is Legal, then we acknowledge they may in a Legal course be brought to answer for their Offence; but with Submission, it appears not by any thing that is in this Return, that my Lords the Bishops were committed by the Order of the Privy Council. All that is said, is, That they were Committed by my Lord Chancellor, and those other Persons, named Lords of the Privy Council; which we conceive is not a good Return, for they can do nothing as Lords of the Privy Council, except only as they are in Council, and by order made in Council; except that do appear, they have no Power to commit; then take the Case to be so; here is a man committed by one that has no Authority to commit him, and he is brought by Habeas Corpus into this Court, what shall the Court do with him? Shall they charge him with an Information? No, it does appear that he was never in Custody, but under a Commitment, by those who had no Legal Power to commit him; and therefore he must be discharged; and that we pray for my Lords the Bishops. What the Kings Council may have to say to them afterwards, by way of Information or otherwise, they must take the Regular Methods of the Law to bring my Lords the Bishops to answer; but as the Case stands here before you, upon this Return, it does appear, they had no Authority to commit them, by whose Warrant they were committed; and therefore this Court has nothing to do but to discharge them.

Mr. Finch. I beg your Lordships leave to say one word farther on the same side, I think with humble Submission, this is the most proper time for us to make this Motion, for here is a Habeas Corpus Returned, this Return is filed, and then the Kings Council move to charge my Lords the Bishops with an Information, that Motion of theirs (we say) is too soon, unless my Lords are here in Court; I mean Legally in Court; for no man is in Court so as to be liable to be charged with an Indictment, or Information, that is not brought into Court by Legal process, or as a prisoner upon a Legal Commitment; then, my Lord, with humble submission we say, that it doth appear by this Return, that my Lords the Bishops are not here Legally in Court, because this Commitment of theirs was not a Legal Commitment; and two Objections we have to it, The one is, that the Persons committing had no Authority to commit, for the Return says, that it was by Vertue of a Warrant under the Hands of such and such, being Lords of the Council, and they (we say) have no Authority to do this; The other Objection is, that the Fact for which they were committed, they ought not to have been Imprisoned for: the Fact charged upon them is in the nature of a bare Misdemeanour, nour, and for such a Fact it is the Right of my Lords the Bishops (as Peers of the Realm) that they ought to be served with the usual Process of Subpœna, and not to be committed to Prison. These are the two Objections that we have to this Return, and this is (under favour) the proper time for us to make this Objection, before the Kings Council can charge my Lords the Bishops with an Information.

A a a a a 2

L. C. J. What say you to it, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. With submission, my Lord, these Gentlemen have out of course, and preposterously let themselves into this Discourse, and when all is done, we must recur to that which we moved to your Lordship before, to desire that your Lordship would order the Information to be read, and when we call my Lords to plead to the Information, then will be their proper time to make this Objection; for 'tis a strange thing certainly for Men to make Objections before they know what it is they are charged with; They say, the ground of their Motion is, because my Lords the Bishops are here in Court upon the Return of an Habeas Corpus, and therefore they come in upon a Commitment (as they say) for that which they ought not to be committed for at all, and we cannot charge them unless they be properly in Court. Now for that, it is true if that Commitment of theirs were the only thing that was here before the Court, then the Court would, if that Commitment were illegal, discharge them of that; but when a Man is present here in Court, brought into Court, let him come how he will, he is not to have any longer time than that Instant to appear to, and be charged with the Information; 'Tis true, upon a Subpœna, which is in the Nature of a Summons, there a Man hath (as it were) an Essoyn, and may make his Excuse, and he shall have time; but when he is present in Court, either as a Person privileged, as an Officer, or as a Prisoner, he shall be charged presently; and these Gentlemen are not to let themselves into Invectives against the Commitment, thereby to keep off their being charged with the Information. Besides that, it is strange these Gentlemen should know the Privilege of my Lords the Bishops as Peers, better than all the Lords of the Council, who are most of them themselves Peers, and they that make the Objection should have considered, whether these Lords that made the Commitment, did not think themselves concerned in all the Privileges of Peerage, as well as these seven Noble Lords?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is this an Answer to our Objection, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. I say, it is a strange Objection, and I answer, 'tis out of due time; for this we say, that my Lords the Bishops being now here in Court as Prisoners upon a Commitment, and we desiring to charge them with an Information, you are not to examine the matter of their Commitment, and therefore I do insist upon it, that the Information should be read, and then you will consider, whether they are not bound to plead to it.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I hope Mr. Attorney General will not think Legal Objections to be Invectives.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly I know not what you call Legal Objections, I do not think yours are so, nor do I think Legal Objections are Invectives, but I used that Expression, as very proper for what you urged against the Commitment.

L. C. J. Nay, Gentlemen, don't quarrel about words.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we would not willingly have Words given us to quarrel at.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, the Question is, whether we are in the right Method of Practice, as to the course of the Court, or they? It may be these Gentlemen think to make us angry, and take Advantage of our being in a Passion.

Mr. Finch. Mr. Solicitor, we desire to have our Objections answered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Nay, if you begin to be angry, Gentlemen, we can be angry too.

L. C. J. I would have neither of you be angry.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It seems they would have an Answer to their Objections, but will not suffer us to give it; they would first examine whether my Lords the Bishops have been duly committed, that (we say) is not to be done by the Court as yet; your Lordship sees they are actually in Custody, by a Commitment of the Lords of the Council, that appears by the Return before your Lordship, and for what they were Committed; what do we now pray for the King? First, we move for a Habeas Corpus, then that this Information may be read, and all is in Order to bring this Fact, (for which they were Committed) to a Trial; 'tis said upon the Return, they were sent to the Tower, for Contriving, Writing, and Publishing a Seditious Libel against the Kings Person and Government, which (I think) is Crime enough for a Man to deserve to be committed for; they would have you to discharge these Lords from this Commitment, (the Return as they say, being not Legal) before the Information be read: But we think their Motion is Irregular, for here is a Crime charged in the Commitment, and upon that Commitment they are here now as Criminals before your Lordship; and Mr. Attorney has exhibited an Information for the King, which is in the Nature of a Declaration at the Kings Suit; and that in this Court, which is the Supreme Court now in being for the Trial of Matters of this Nature. We will come to that Question, whether they were legally committed, when there is a proper time for it; but now we find my Lords the Bishops in Court, upon a Commitment for a great Crime; I repeat it again, it is for Contriving, Writing, and Publishing a Seditious Libel against the Kings Person, and against the Kings Government; and whether the Kings Council shall not have leave to make out this Charge by an Information, sure can be no Question at all in this Court; I hear them mention the Statute of Edward the Third. But that is not at all to the purpose, that is but what was offered in another Case that may be remembered, and offered by way of Plea, and pressed with a great deal of Earnestness, but Rejected by the Court; and now what could not be received then by way of Plea, these Gentlemen would by their Importunity, have you receive by way of Parole at the Bar; I suppose the Design is to entertain this great Auditory with an Harrangue, and to persuade the weak Men of the World, (for the Wise are not to be imposed upon) that they are in the Right, and we in the wrong; under Favour my Lord, we are are in the Right for the King, we desire this Information may be read, and let them plead what by Law they can to it, according to the course of the Court; but that which they now urge, is untimely, and out of Course.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we offer this to your Lordship —

Mr. Att. Gen. Why, Gentlemen, you have been heard before your time already.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, my Lord, give us leave to answer what the Kings Council have objected.

L. C. J. The Kings Council have answered your Objections, and we must not permit Vying and Re-vying upon one another; if you have no more to say, but only as to the Matters that have been urged, you have been heard to it on both sides already.

Mr. S. Pemberton. I would, if you please, answer what has been objected by the Kings Council, and state the Case aright.

Mr. Just. Allybone. Brother Pemberton, I do not apprehend that the Objection you make against this Commitment has any weight in it. The Objection (as I take it) is this, that these Lords were not legally committed, because they were committed (says the Return) by such and such Lords of the Council particularly named, and it does not specify them to be united in the Privy Council; now truly, with me that seems to have no weight at all; and I will tell you why. If my Lord Chief Justice do commit any Person and set his Name to the Warrant, he does not use to add to his Name, Lord Chief Justice, but he is known to be so, without that Addition; and would you have a different Return from the Lieutenant of the Tower to a Habeas Corpus, than the Warrant it self will justify? the Lords do not use to write themselves Privy Counsellors, they are known to be so; as well as a Judge, who only writes his Name, and does not use to make the addition of his Office.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray, my Lord, give me leave to be heard to this, I think truly it is a weighty Objection, for, under Favour, we say, it must upon the Return here appear, that they were legally committed, before you can charge them with an Information; I do not take Exceptions to the Warrant, because it is subscribed by such Lords, and they do not write themselves Lords of the Council, they need not do that; and the Return has averred that they are so; but the Return ought to have been, that it was by the Order of the Privy Council, and so it must be, if they would shew my Lords to be legally committed, that they were committed by Order of the Privy Council, and not by such and such particular Persons, Lords of the Privy Council; so in the Case put by Mr. Justice Allybone, of a Commitment by your Lordship, or any of the Judges; it must be returned to be by such a Warrant, by such a One Chief Justice, for that shews the Authority of the Person committing, and then your Lordships Name to it indeed is enough, without the Addition; But if it does not appear by the Return that there was sufficient Authority in the Person to commit, your Lordship cannot take it to be a Legal Commitment; but now in this Case, they could have no Authority to commit but in Council; and this Return seems to make it done by them as particular Persons, and that's not a good Return (with your Lordships Favour) upon which these Reverend and Noble Lords can be detained in Prison; But what do they on the other side say to this? Why, we shall be heard to it anon: but, my Lord, they very well know, it would be too late for that Effect which we desire of our Motion, and therefore we lay the Objections before you now in its proper time (say we) you ought not to read any Information against us, because we are not legally here before the Court; and sure, that which was said by the Kings Council, that your Lordship may charge any One that you find here in Court, which way soever he comes in, cannot be legal.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who ever said so?

Sir Robert Sawyer. I apprehend you said so, Mr. Attorney, or else you said nothing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Robert Sawyer, You of that side have a way of letting your selves in to say the same things over again, and of making us to say what you please.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Truly I did apprehend you laid down that for Doctrine, which I thought a very strange One; for we say, with your Lordships favour, he that is in Court without a Legal Process, is not in Court so as to be charged with an Information.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, It is not the Body being found here that intitles the Court to proceed upon it, but the Person accused is to be brought in by Legal Process: Then if we be not here by legal Process, the Information cannot be charged upon us; and if we suffer it to be read, it will be too late for us to make this Objection.

L. C. J. That you have all said over and over, and they have given it an Answer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Serjeant, will you make an end; you have repeated your Objection over and over, I know not how often, and will never be contented with our Answer.

Mr. J. Allybone. Sir Robert Sawyer, that which you said in answer to the Case I put, methinks does not answer it: For if the Return be as good, that it was by a Warrant from such an one, Lord Chief Justice; as if my Lord Chief Justice had added the Title of his Office to his own Name, when he subscribed the Warrant: Then this Return, That this was done by such and such Lords of the Council, must be as good, as if they had added that to their own Names.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That is not our Objection.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Objection has been heard, and answered; we pray the Information may be read.

Mr. Serjeant Pemberton. No, we are not come to that yet.

Mr. J. Allybone. Pray, would you have an Averment by the Lieutenant of the Tower, in his Return to an Habeas Corpus, that it was done by them in the Council Chamber?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, The Difference is this, with Submission; a Commitment by Sir Robert Wright, Ch. Justice, is a good Commitment, and a Return of that Nature, were a good Return, because he is Chief Justice all over England, and hath Authority to commit wherever he is; but a Commitment by such an one, or such and such Lords of the Privy Council, cannot be a good Return of a Commitment; because, though they be Lords of the Council, yet neither single, or apart, nor all together, have Authority to do such an Act, unless they be assembled in the Privy Council; there their Authority is circumscribed; scribed; so that that must needs be a great difference between a Commitment made by a Judge, who is always so, and a Commitment by a Lord, or so many Lords, by the Name of Lords of the Privy Council, who carry not their Authority about with them, but are limited to their Assembly in Council.

Mr. F. Allybone. Mr. Finch, Indeed your Objection is worth something, if my Lord Chief Justice could not act but as under the character of Chief Justice; for you are now arguing, that these Lords could not do this Act, but as Lords of the Council, in Council; the same (say I) may be said of a Commitment by the Lord Chief Justice; he cannot do it but under the formality of his Authority, as he is Chief Justice, unless you will make it impossible for him to do any thing, but as Chief Justice, or unless you make it impossible to separate his Person from his Authority.

Mr. Finch. Sir, the difference lies here; the Authority of the one is general and universal, and goeth with him wherever he goes; the other's Authority is limited to a particular sphere.

Mr. F. Allyb. Why, would you have it averred, That they did it being assembled in Council?

Mr. Finch. Under favour, they cannot justify any thing that was done by them as Lords of the Council, but in the Privy Council.

Mr. F. Powell. Truly, my Lord, for my part, I think there is no such great necessity of haste in this matter; Here are Exceptions taken to this Return; and the matter transacted now before us, appears to me to be of very great weight, peradventure a greater, or a weightier, has not been agitated in this place in any Age; it concerns these Noble and Reverend Lords, in point of Liberty: it comes suddenly upon us, and therefore, my Lord, I think it very fit we should consider a little of this matter, and consult the Precedents of Returns, how they are; for there are multitudes of Returns of Writs of Habeas Corpus in this Court; therefore it were requisite, that we did consult the Forms of other Returns, and how the Precedents, as to this matter, have always been: if they are according as this is, then all is well, but if they be otherwise, it is fit we should keep to the usual Forms.

L. C. J. What's your Opinion of it, Brother Allybone?

Mr. F. Allybone. I am still of the same mind I was, my Lord, That he could make no Return, but this Return he has made; and if his Warrant was insufficient upon this Account, that these particular persons, Lords of the Privy-Council, did this Act without saying, that they did it in Privy Council, then 'tis not his Return that could mend it; and truly I do not know that there does need any Precedent for this; for every one knows where the Lords of the Council are; and 'tis a sufficient Averment, this, that is in the Return.

Mr. Pollexfen. They are Lords of the Council every where, but they do not act as Lords of the Council any where but in Council.

Mr. F. Allybone. So my Lord Chief Justice is Chief Justice every where.

Mr. Finch. And he can do Judicial Acts, as such, every where; but the Lords of the Council, cannot act but in the Council.

Mr. F. Allyb. Nor is it to be presumed that they did do it.

Mr. Finch. It is not a presumption that is to make any thing in this case, but the Question is, whether here be a legal Return of a legal Commitment?

Mr. F. Allyb. Such publick Persons, in such publick Acts, can never be presumed to act in their separate private capacities.

Mr. Finch. But, with submission, your Lordships can judge only what is before you in this Return, whether it be a good Return, and whether here be a good Authority asserted in the Persons that did commit my Lords the Bishops.

L. C. J. Truly, as to this Objection and Exception that has been made by them, I have considered of it, and what has been said on all sides, and I think 'tis the usual way of Commitment; I never saw any other; all the Warrants that ever I saw, are of this Form; if there were any Precedents, they should be shewn of that side.

Sir Robert Sawyer. There are multitudes of Precedents otherwise, and none of this Form.

L. C. J. I confess, 'tis a Case of great Weight, and the Persons concerned are of great Honour and Value; and I would be as willing as any body to testify my Respects and Regards to my Lords the Bishops, if I could see any thing in it worth considering of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There's no colour for it, if they do but look upon the Statute of the 16th and 17th of the late King, which arraigns the Proceedings of his Privy Council; that tells you what things belong to the cognizance of the Privy Council, and what not; and there you have all the Distinctions about Commitments by the King and Council, and by the Lords of the Council: And that Act will shew, that this is a Commitment according to the usual Form: they know very well what the common Style of the Orders and Commitments of Council is, as in other places, and other Commitments; By such an one, Chief Justice, that is the Style that is very well known for such Warrants: So a Commitment by such and such, naming them particularly, Lords of the Council, that's an Order made by the Lords in Council; and that Statute distinguishes between Commitments of one sort and the other; and it does it, because sometimes Warrants run in one Form, and sometimes in another; but they all come within the Direction of that Statute. My Lord, we are in a plain Case, my Lords the Bishops come Regularly before you, upon a Commitment by the Council; and therefore we pray they may be charged with this Information.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray, will your Lordship give us leave to have that Statute lookt into, which Mr. Solicitor speaks of; and then we shall see whether it be to his purpose.

L. C. J. Let the Statute be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If it be Keeble's Book, it is the 16th of Charles the First; if it be the Old Book, it is the 16th and 17th of Car. towards the end.

Clerk reads. Provided always, and be it enacted, that this Act, and the several Clauses therein contained, shall be taken and expounded, to extend only to the Court of Star-Chamber; and to the said Court holden before the President and Council in the Marches of Wales, and before the President and Council in the Northern parts.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is the Paragraph before that.

Clerk reads. And be it also provided and enacted, That if any person shall hereafter be Committed,

Committed, Restrained of his Liberty; or suffer Imprisonment; by the Order and Decree of any such Court of Star-Chamber, or of other Court aforesaid, now, or at any time hereafter, having, or pretending to have the same, or like Jurisdiction, Power, or Authority to commit, or imprison, as aforesaid; or by the Command or Warrant of the King's Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, in their own Persons; or by the Command or Warrant of the Council-Board, or of any of the Lords; or others of his Majesty's Privy-Council, that in every such Case, every person so Committed, Restrained of his Liberty, or suffering Imprisonment, upon demand—

Mr. Sol. Gen. That is all: Your Lordships sees these several Distinctions of the Style of Commitment.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, pray favour us a little: My Lord, I think these Gentlemen will not deny, but that the Lords of the Council can commit; I must confess, they ask that which was pretty reasonable; if the Case was as they would make it; They would have my Lords the Bishops discharged, because there is not a Return of a good Commitment, and that stands upon this presumption, that what is here said to be done by all these Lords, at the end of whose Names this is added, Lords of the Privy Council, was done by them out of Council, which, I suppose, your Lordship will not presume, but will take it, that they did this as Lords of the Council in Council; And no Man can say, but the Lords in Council can Commit.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You may as well presume upon a Warrant made by my Lord Chief Justice, because it is not said where he did it, and therefore he did it in Scotland.

Mr. Att. Gen. I say again, unless your Lordship will presume that which is not to be presumed, this must needs be a very good Return.

Mr. J. Allyb. Truly (as Mr. Solicitor says) you may as well desire us to presume, that my Lord Chief Justice would commit a Man in Ireland or Scotland; I can see no imaginable difference.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, that which we pray, is, not that your Lordship would presume, but that you would not presume, but take the Return as 'tis before you; and then see whether it can be thought to be a Commitment by the Lords in Council?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, my Lord, spare us a little in this matter: Here has been the Clause of a Statute read to you, from whence Mr. Solicitor would conclude, that all Commitments by several sorts of Persons there named, are legal; or else the Enumeration of the several sorts of Commitments, signifies nothing to this purpose. But I pray your Lordship would consider this, that the very scope and end of that Act of Parliament is, to relieve against illegal Commitments and Oppressions; then the several Commitments therein named, can never all be called legal; so that this signifies nothing to our purpose; My Lord, they tell us we stand upon Presumption, no, we do not so; we say your Lordship ought not to presume the One or the other, but to judge upon what is before you, but here is nothing before you but this Return of a Commitment of these Noble Persons, my Lord the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, and the rest of the Bishops which is said to be by these particular Lords. Now if your Lordship will please to give us time to look into it, (for this is an Exception we take at the Bar upon hearing the Return read) we would shew the constant way has been quite otherwise than this Return makes it; therefore we desire leave to satisfy your Lordship concerning the usual Form of Precedents, and thereby it will appear, that it ought to have been, that they were committed by Order of the Privy Council, and then he should have set forth the Warrant it self which would have shewn the Names of the Privy-Councillors, and he needed not to have put their Names in the Return as the particular Persons that committed them; but now, my Lord, this does not appear to be an Order made in Council, as it ought to be, and the Return is that which is before you, and you are to judge only upon what is before you.

L. C. J. So we do.

Mr. Justice Allybone. Pray Sir Robert Sawyer, would the saying of a Governour of the Tower in his Return to a Writ of Habeas Corpus alter the Nature of the Commitment?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we are in your Lordships Judgment.

Mr. Just. Allybone. I say, Brother Pemberton, would any collateral Saying of the Lieutenant of the Tower alter the Nature of the thing, his Return in this Case is only an inducement to the Warrant of Commitment, and his Saying one way or t'other would neither vitiate nor mend the Commitment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Your Lordship cannot take notice of the Commitment but from the Warrant.

Mr. Pollexfen. The Return is the Fact upon which you are to judge

Mr. Just. Powel. Certainly we must judge of the Record, and nothing else, and the Return is the Record now, being filed.

L. C. J. The Return is as certain, I think, as can be.

Mr. Sol. Gen. By the Return it appears, the Bishops were Committed by the Warrant of such and such Lords of the Council; and that which is before you now is, whether you will not intend it to be done by them in Council.

Mr. Just. Powel. We can intend nothing, but must take the Return as 'tis.

L. C. J. The Warrant is good enough, I think truly, and so is the Return.

Mr. Pollexfen. I think in all the Habeas Corpus's that have been since the King's Return, of Persons committed by the Council, the Returns have been quite otherwise than this Return is; We do all pretty well agree (for ought I can perceive) in these two things; We do not deny but the Council Board has Power to commit; they on the other side do not affirm, that the Lords of the Council can commit out of Council.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, they may, as Justices of the Peace.

Mr. Pollexfen. This is not pretended to be so here.

L. Ch. Just. No, no, that is not the Case.

Mr. Pollexfen. Then, my Lord, with submission, I will compare it to any thing else of this nature. I deny not but that the Council may commit, but the Question is, whether this Return of their Commitment be right; Suppose there should be a Return to a Habeas Corpus, that such a one was committed by Sir Robert Wright, and three others by Name, Justices of this Court, for for a Contempt, without saying, that it was done in Court, this would be an ill Return; although they had Power in Court to commit for a Contempt, yet it must appear, that it was done in Court, or it cannot be a good Return: If I had thought or foreseen that such a Return would have been made, I could easily have made out our Objection, but we could not foretell what they would return, and therefore we can only make this Objection now upon the hearing of it read. In all the Debates that have been heretofore in the great Case of the Habeas Corpus concerning my Lord Hollis, and those other Gentlemen who were in Prison upon Commitments by the Privy Council, the Returns are, that they were committed by Order of the Privy Council, as near as I can remember; I will not take it upon me to be positive in it, but I believe, if your Lordships thought fit to give us a short time to look into it, we should be plainly able to shew you, that all the Returns of Commitments of this nature, are said to be by Order of the Council Board, and never any of them naming the Lords, for that may be true, and yet not a legal Commitment.

L. C. J. I have seen several Precedents of Commitments in this Form, and if you make no Exception to the Warrant, you can make no Exception to the Return, because that only sets forth the Warrant.

Mr. Pollexfen. The Commitment you are to judge of, is upon the Return, with Submission, and supposing the Warrant to be right and good, yet the Return is not Legal.

Mr. Att. Gen. We say, in common Understanding, it cannot be but a Commitment in Council.

Mr. S. Pemberton. But common Understanding and legal Understanding are two things, and we pray the Judgment of the Court.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And so do we, my Lord, and pray your Rule in it.

Mr. Just. Allyn. You may by the same reason say, That upon all Commitments by Warrant from Justices of the Peace, that the Commitment was out of the County, if the Party does not alledge in the Warrant or Return, that the Commitment was in the County. 'Tis an Objection that would put us upon presuming, what we have no reason to presume.

L. Ch. J. If you would have our Opinions, let my Brothers declare theirs, I will soon tell you my mind.

Mr. J. Holloway. Pray let the Return be read again. (which was done.)

Mr. Att. Gen. So that the Return says, they were committed by vertue of a Warrant of such and such by Name, Lords of the Council, and whether this be a Warrant of the Council is the Question, and we think it is plain enough, that 'tis a good Return.

Mr. J. Powell. I have given you my Thoughts already, I think we ought to consult Precedents in a Case of this Weight and Nature; and truly I will not take upon me to say, whether it be a good Return or not a good Return, without looking into Precedents.

Mr. J. Allyn. For my own part, it does not stick at all with me, for the Reasons I gave before; when any Man that has an Authority to commit, does commit a Person to an inferior Officer, and that Officer has an Habeas Corpus brought to him, it is enough for him to return his Warrant, by which the Party was committed, and whatsoever he says by the Bye, cannot have any Influence one way or other, to alter the nature of the thing; now unless you would make every Man that is a Justice of the Peace write his Name and stile himself Justice of the Peace, this must be a good Commitment. Every Commitment shall be presumed to be pursuant to the Power of the Person committing, and I am sure, take these Lords separately, and they had no Power to commit, and consequently such a Warrant would be no Authority to the Lieutenant of the Tower to receive them; But when they send such a Warrant as this, we shall presume it to be according to the Power they have, and not according to the Power they have not; this Warrant is returned by the Officer, and I cannot but presume that it is all very well.

Mr. J. Holloway. My Lords, I am very desirous and willing your Lordships should have all the Right and Justice done you that can be, and by the Grace of God, I will endeavour it all I can: I see in this Case it is agreed on both sides, that the Council have a Power to commit, and the Commitment is here certified in the words of the Warrant, and the Lieutenant has made his Return, that they were committed by vertue of this Warrant; if the Lieutenant of the Tower had returned any other Commitment, you would have blamed him for a false Return; but now you find fault with his Return, because he does not say, the Warrant was made by the Lords of the Council, and in Council; That is a thing so notoriously known to all the Kingdom, that my Lords were sent to the Tower by the Council, that no body doubts it; and being thus sent by this Warrant, I do not see but that this is a very good Return, and my Judgment is, that the Information ought to be read.

L. C. J. I told you in the beginning, after you had made your Objections, that I thought it was as all other Returns are, and I am of the same Opinion still, I find no fault with the Warrant, nor with the Return.

Mr. S. Pemberton. There is no Objection to the Warrant at present upon this Question.

L. C. J. Neither do I take upon me to say any thing, nor is there any thing now to be spoken of touching the Fact for which these Noble Lords were committed.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray, my Lord, the Information may be read.

Mr. J. Holloway. There is no question about the Fact, but whether this be a good Return which is here made, that they were committed by such and such Lords of the Council.

L. C. J. I would do as much to give my Lords the Bishops ease, and set them at liberty, as I could possibly by Law; but we must not break the Rules of Law for any one.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray read the Information.

Mr. Finch. No my Lord, we oppose the reading of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why! Will not you be satisfied with the Opinion of the Court?

Mr. Finch. We have another thing to offer, which we must have the Opinion of the Court in, before this Information can be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray let us hear it what it is?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we did humbly offer one Objection more to your Lordship against the reading of the Information, the former Objection was concerning the Persons committing, in in that it does not sufficiently appear upon the Return, that they were committed by the Lords in Council; the Court have given their Opinion in that. But the other Objection still remains, whether they ought to have been committed at all, and therefore when they now appear upon this Habeas Corpus, we say they were not legally committed to Prison, because a Peer ought not to be committed to Prison in the first instance for Misdemeanour.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If you please you may speak to that by and by, but that is not proper now for you to offer, or for the Court to determine, whether a Peer may be committed upon an Accusation for a Misdemeanour?

Mr. Finch. With Submission, that is such a difficulty that lyes in the way against the reading of the Information, that you must get over it, before you can come at the reading of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. You will have your time for all this matter by and by, but certainly you cannot be admitted to it yet.

L. C. J. Truly I think you are too early with that Exception.

Mr. Finch. With Submission, we think this is the proper time, and I will tell your Lordship the reason why.

L. C. J. Mr. Finch, certainly every thing in the World that can be said, you will say for your Client, and you shall be heard; for we are very willing to deliver these Noble Lords, if we can by Law, and if the Exceptions you make be legal.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we do not doubt your Justice, and therefore we desire to offer what we have to say in this Point; the only Question (now it seems) is about our time of making our Exception. Mr. Attorney, (we apprehend) did say one thing which was certainly a little too large; that however any Man comes into Court, if the Court find him here, they may charge him with an Information.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who says so? I said no such thing.

Mr. Finch. Then I acquit Mr. Attorney of it, he did not say so: Then both he and I agree the Law to be, That a Man that does come into Court, if he does not come in by legal Process, he is not to be charg'd with an Information; then since we do agree in that Proposition, certainly we must be heard to this Point, whether we are here upon legal Process, before you can charge us with this Information?

Mr. Att. Gen. You think you have said a fine thing now, and take upon you an Authority to make me agree to what you please.

Mr. Finch. Certainly the Consequence is plain upon your own Premises.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you undertake to speak for me?

Mr. Finch. I am in the Judgment of the Court, and to them I leave it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I know you thought you had got an extraordinary Advantage, by making me say what you please; but there has been very little said, but what has been grounded upon Mistakes all along: This is that I do say, if a Man comes in voluntarily upon any Recognizance, though he be not in Custody; or if he comes in upon any Process, if the Court find him here, though that Process be not for the thing charged in the Information, yet the Court is so much in Possession of the Person, that he shall plead to any Information, and that I do say; and will stand by.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we are here in a very great Auditory, and this Court is always a very great Court, (but here is a greater and nobler Assembly, than usually we have here) and these Gentlemen to shew their Eloquence and Oratory, would, by converting Propositions otherwise than they are delivered, put another meaning upon them, and so draw strange Inferences from them; but these Arts we are sure will not prevail here; we say plainly, and we are sure the Law is so, (let them apprehend what they will) that your Lordship cannot exhibit an Information to any Man that you find accidentally here in Court; then says Mr. Finch, we are agreed; but withal (say I) take my other Proposition, If a Person be brought into Court by legal Process, or upon any Contempt whatsoever, by an Attachment or Warrant, or upon a Habeas Corpus after a Commitment, being thus found in Court, your Lordship may certainly charge him with an Information; when these Gentlemen who are so eager on the other side, did preside here, and stood in the places where Mr. Attorney and I now are; I can name them abundance of Cases of the like nature with this, when men have been compelled to appear to Informations, and plead presently; they are the Persons that made the Precedents; they made the Law for ought I know: I'm sure I find the Court in Possession of this as Law, and we pray the usual Course may be followed.

Mr. Finch. Pray my Lord spare us a word in this matter: I do agree with Mr. Attorney in this matter, but I do not agree with Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do not agree with your self.

Mr. Finch. I hope I do, and always shall agree with my self, but I do not agree with you, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do not in 1688. agree with what you were in 1680.

Mr. Finch. Says Mr. Attorney, a Man that comes voluntarily in, cannot be charged with an Information; with him I agree: Says Mr. Solicitor, a Man that comes in, and is found in Court by any Process, may be charg'd with an Information: I say no, if the Process be wholly illegal, for he cannot be said to be legally in Court: Suppose a Peer of the Realm be taken upon a Capias, and is committed to the Marshalsea, and is brought up upon a Habeas Corpus, I would fain know whether you could declare against him.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, we cannot.

Mr. Finch. And why is that, but because the Process is illegal, and he is not truly in Court: Then is it a proper time now to make this a Question, Whether my Lords here were legally committed, before you can lay any thing to their charge by way of Information; for if the Commitment be illegal, it is a void Commitment, and if the Commitment be void, the Process is void, and then my Lords are not legally in Court.

L. C. J. That sure is but returning again to the same Question that has been determined already.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If your Lordship will permit them to go over and over the same things, we shall never have an end.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we pray these Gentlemen of the King's Council may be a little cool with us, and then they will find, we do not talk the same things over and over again, nor meddle with that which the Court have given their Judgment in.

L. C. J. Well, go on Sir.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we say it is the Privilege of the Peers of England, that none of them shall be committed to Prison for a Misdemeanour, especially in the first Instance, and before Judgment; this (we say) is the right of my Lords the Bishops, and that which they claim as Lords of Parliament. Now it appears upon this Return and the Warrant, that the Council-Table hath committed them, (for your Lordship and the Court hath rul'd it, that this Commitment must be taken to be by Order of the Privy Council, and we meddle not with that further) but we say that the Council Table may commit a Man unjustly, that is certain: There has been relief often given in this Court against Commitments by the Council Table: And that they were unjustly committed, depends upon that point of their Privilege as Peers.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, we say, that the Lords of the Council have illegally committed these Noble Persons, who are Peers of the Realm, and ought to have the privilege of their Peerage, which is not to be committed for a Misdemeanour; that the Council ought not to have done: For the Peers of England ought no more to be committed for a Misdemeanour, and to be imprisoned, especially upon the first Process, than they may be in a Case of Debt. It is true, in the Case of Treason, Felony or the Breach of the Peace, the Peers have not such a Privilege; they may be committed; but for a Misdemeanour (as this does appear to be in the Warrant of Commitment) they ought not to be committed; but they were committed by the Lords of the Council, and we now complain of this to your Lordship as illegal, and therefore pray my Lords may be discharged.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Will your Lordship be pleased to favour me a Word on the same side for my Lords the Bishops. It must be agreed to me, that if a Peer be brought into Court, as taken by a Capias, he cannot be charged with a Declaration; and the reason is, because the Process is Illegal: Then, my Lord, with submission, When a Peer comes upon a Foreign Commitment, and is brought in Custody upon a Habeas Corpus, this is either in the nature of a Process, or a final Commitment, as a Judgment; they will not say, that this is a good Commitment so as to amount to a Judgment; for the Council-Board could not give a Judgment in the case; besides, the Commitment is Illegal because it is not a Commitment till they find security to answer an Information here, but 'tis a Warrant to keep them for a Misdemeanour; besides, there is another thing we have to say to this Warrant, (for I am making Objections against the Validity of this Commitment) it does not appear that there was any Oath made, and therefore the Court must adjudge that there was no Oath made; and then no man ought without an Oath to be Committed, much less a Peer; but that which we chiefly rely upon, is, That my Lords ought not to have been Committed for this, which is but a Misdemeanour at most: And if they use it, as Process to bring my Lords the Bishops to answer an Information, we say, By Law no such Process can be taken out against the Persons of Peers for bare misde-
